A FEATURE offering that more than fulfils the expectations sown by an enthusiastic press agent, is the Bosworth Inc. five-reel release "Captain Courtesy," featuring Dustin Farnum in the title role. Mr. Farnum is credited with the statement that his best screen work, to date, is that of the captain and there is little doubt but that the film public will endorse this sentiment.

For the stage star who made a wonderful stagewesterner, fits the type even better in the screen work that calls for reality in depicting the dangers to life, in the early days of California, when the missions were a general place of refuge from the cruelties of the Mexicans, who had the golden state under their rule. It was in the days of this period that Captain Courtesy, after the murder of his father and mother by the Mexican, Granville, rode the highways with his mask and gun and took from those who abetted the Mexican rule whatever they had of gold and other valuables. As Captain Courtesy, Dustin Farnum receives the sympathetic liking of his spectators, and his supporting cast shows in the respective roles an especial fineness of character delineation.

Maybe it is because the role of Eleanor, the orphan girl who grows to womanhood at the mission, particularly suits the petiteness of Winnifred Kingston; at any rate, it can be said to be her best screen characterization. Courtney Foote makes a Mexican commander of so cruel a caliber that he succeeds in centering the dislike of Mexican rule, in his own person, while Herbert Standing is so typical a monk in character of Father Reinaldo that it is difficult to imagine him in any other role. Carl Von Schiller and Winona Brown are names that identify the well-interpreted roles of Jocoso and the Indian girl servant.

While good photography is a common asset these days, Bosworth Inc. has put into the making of "Captain Courtesy," sufficient of the unusual in the way of night scenes and interior lighting to make the photography of this picture subject for comment. The settings are praiseworthy, that of the interior of the mission being one of remarkable depth. It is into the big room of this mission that Captain Courtesy walks his horse, as careful of its safety as he is of his own during the beseiging of the mission by the Mexicans.

Though a highwayman, the story makes of the captain a man of charming manners, ever courteous. He falls in love with Eleanor, saves her from unjust Mexican imprisonment by confessing to his identity as Captain Courtesy, thereby transferring the attention of the Mexicans upon himself. He outwits them in a chase and, influenced by Eleanor's love, renounces his adopted calling and shows mercy to the Mexican, Granville, when about to take the life of the latter. He looks into a rosy future with Eleanor as his mate.

Cosmofoto's "O-18"

Reviewed by Mabel Condon.

THE unusual treatment of a rather ordinary subject, makes of the four-reel feature "O-18," or "A Message From the Sky," a film of exceptional merit. It has the likeable person of Jane Gail, in the role of secret service agent "O-18," to further recommend it, as Miss Gail is one of the film stars whose work does not tire her public, no matter how often she is seen. Frank Fowell and George Loan Tucker managed the production with a skill that makes of it an exceptional film, and the cast, in addition to Miss Gail, is strong in the work of Douglas Munroe, Lewis Gilbert, Wyndham Guise and Gerald Ames. The picture was made in London, and is being exploited by the Cosmofoto-film Company.

The story concerns the Bergman brothers, who supposedly are importing chemists of simple life and habits. Their real mission is that of government secret agents. "O-18" is their stenographer and a secret service agent. She is caught in the act of listening to their conversation by means of a dictograph and is spirited away. Her fellow-worker has difficulty in tracing her, but does so in time to allow of her saving a trainload of soldiers who were to have been the victims of the Bergmans. There is intresting action throughout the story's four reels and satisfaction in the fate of the spys, whose message, received from an aeroplane, had been to destroy human life. There is further relief at the escape of the courageous "O-18."

Marion Leonard Busy

Miss Marion Leonard, the popular star who has not been heard from for some time now, is again at work.

Miss Leonard has been ill for a long time. In fact peritonitis, aided by a complication of other ills, caused an involuntary retirement of seven months. She is now back at work at her Brooklyn studio, where she is producing "Mrs. Dane's Defense" under the direction of Stanner E. V. Taylor and the company is having great success so far with the big six-reeler. Miss Leonard is supported by an acting cast of 63 players and at least six hundred extras. Following the present work, Miss Leonard will produce "Zira," "Hearts Aflame," "The Great Divide" and Clyde Fitch's "Truth."

New Companies for Picture Playhouse

Kenneth MacDougall, vice-president and general manager of the Interstate Feature Film Company, with headquarters in Middletown, Conn., was in New York a few days ago and signed a contract with the Picture Playhouse Film Company of 71 West Twenty-third street, to release the productions being made by his company through that well known distributing agency. The first picture is a four-reeler entitled "Bulldogs of the Trail," a sample print of which has already been prepared.

Mr. MacDougall produces and plays leads with the company, calling to his aid wide experience as a vaudeville actor, cow puncher, press agent, circus rider, deputy sheriff, and managing editor of a big daily newspaper. Miss Sydney Shields, leading lady in the first release, spent all of last season at Providence, R. I., as leading lady with the Albee stock company.

The Interstate people plan to make two features a month. The capital interested—and it is said to be considerable—is that of New England business men who have great confidence in the ability of Mr. MacDougall to make a success in the feature film field.

Contracts have also been signed within the past few days between the Terriss Feature Film Company and the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., whereby the former company engages to make all of its releases for the United States and Canada through the latter.

Johnson-Willard Fight Slides

From the ringside at Havana to 67 West Twenty-third street, New York is a big jump, but the Novelty Slide Company was fortunate in securing authentic photos of the big championship battle fought on April 5. The slides are wonderful views of the big moments of this fistic battle and will prove a big feature for any theater. There are twenty big scenes in the set; the views are all beautifully hand-colored and attractive posters are furnished.

Run Still Continues

D. W. Griffith's production "The Birth of a Nation" continues the sensation of the season in New York. With the matinee Sunday afternoon, April 11, this motion picture spectacle began its seventh week in the Liberty theater. The weekly receipts it is said have averaged $14,000, which is the absolute capacity of the theater. Last Friday's presentation of the story took on an added interest, it being the fiftieth anniversary of Gen. Lee's surrender to Gen. Grant at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. When the reproduction of this scene was flashed upon the screen the audience rose and stood impressively quiet as the historic event passed before its vision. When Grant and Lee clasped hands, after signing the terms of surrender, a great cheer was given.

New Distributing Medium

L. Rosengarten, formerly president of the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation; M. H. Blackwell of the Favorite Players Film Company, and J. Charles Groshut, formerly sales director of the Ambrosio Company, have organized a new company, named the Herald Film Corporation. The new concern will operate in the United States and Canada, as well as in foreign fields, buying, selling and distributing feature films of a high-grade character, made by well-known manufacturers and with well-known stars as head-liners. The executive offices of the corporation will be located on the eleventh floor of the Leavitt building, at 130 West Forty-sixth street. Work has already been begun by the corporation on an extensive scale.

J. C. Groshut.

The Foreign Film Corporation

A producing company known as the Foreign Film Corporation has established its offices at 251 North Thirteenth street, Philadelphia, Pa.

G. Guattari, the president, formerly of Rome, Italy, is a man of wide experience and knowledge as director and manager, gathered in the studios abroad. Under his skillful management the corporation has opened a studio of its own, and under the name of "O-K Comedy Company" produces at least one single-reel comedy a week. In addition to these wholesome laugh makers, the corporation is well equipped to produce educational and advertising subjects.

Prof. J. Th. Arntz, Jr., manager of advertising department, aside from being an educator and social worker of merit, is convinced that the motion picture is the most efficient of all present-day advertising mediums, and his practical knowledge of commerce and industry at home and abroad ensure the success of his plea to the American manufacturers for the cause of the screen.

The Foreign Film Corporation represents in the United States, Canada and South America some of the foremost European companies. Among these are the "Vera Film" of Rome and "La Film Grafica" of Naples. They will release two imported features every month. Chevalier Guattari, a member of the firm, remains in Rome to look after the company's interests on the other side. He is now closing contracts for productions abroad.

H. H. Swartz, who is secretary and treasurer to the new concern, contributes with his technical abilities and inventive genius towards the success of this new enterprise.

A Field for Industrials

That there is a real field for the popular showing of industrial motion pictures seems to be conclusively proven by a letter received by the Industrial Motion Picture Company of Chicago, of which Watterson R. Rothacker is general manager, and in which that concern takes considerable pride.

The letter is signed by W. B. Reynolds, principal of the Armstrong School of Chicago, and relates the reception which the industrial film entitled "From Spruce to Paper" made by the Industrial Motion Picture Company for Peabody, Houghteling & Company some time ago, was given. The letter reads as follows:

We are very grateful to you for the suggestion of the Peabody Houghteling film for last Friday. We know now that the sort of drama that holds our audience best is the drama of real work. We shall never be at a loss again if all industrial films are as fascinating as "From Spruce to Paper." We were told by many producers that an educational program would not hold an audience—that we must have the punch. Therefore, it was very interesting to watch our audience grow quiet and absorbed when the industrial reels began to tell their story. One group of young men were especially interesting to me, for, for the first time since we have had entertainments here, they sat quiet and absorbed for a half hour. Our audience in the afternoon was composed of about four hundred children and a few adults. In the evening there were about five hundred adults and a few children. Our neighborhood is a comfortable one of workers,—manual, business and professional—and their families. We shall be very much interested to look over the list of films which you are to send us for we hope to make "industry" a part of every program.

Lubin's Ranch Superintendent

Tom H. Glaze, superintendent of the Lubin ranch at Betzwood, Pa., is a splendid type of the English out-of-doors man who, to find contentment, must get out into the wide places of the earth where life is rough and hard, and where a man must be a man in every sense of the word if he wants to exist. Glaze has charge of the cowboys at the ranch—a band of men with splendid reputations as riders, ropers and gunmen, and is well qualified for the job, for he has been a gentleman adventurer in many parts of the world, and there is little he doesn't know when it comes to questions of riding, handling a lariat or Colt's 45 and judging range cattle and horses. Had the spirit of adventure not have kindled early in Glaze's life, he would probably have been a physician in England today with a comfortable income from his estates. Destiny, however, ruled otherwise. Glaze was born in Worcestershire and after attending school at Harrow-on-the-Hill, he went to St. Bartholomew's hospital in London to complete his education. It was there that the spirit of adventure flared up, bringing down upon him the wrath of his family, and Glaze "hit out" for the U. S. A. to win his own way.

Another Griffith Star

Teddy Sampson, whose talents have been developed at the Mutual's Hollywood studio by the master hand of D. W. Griffith, is said to be one of the rising stars of the motion picture world. During the last few months this winsomely youthful girl has been given more and more prominent parts and finally established herself firmly by her impersonation of Villa's little sister, who was set upon by Federal officers, in the four-reel Mutual Master-Picture, "The Outlaw's Revenge in the Dawn of a New Republic." She possesses a screen personality of unusual strength and this, coupled with her grace and beauty, will doubtless endear her to those who see her in future pictures now being made at the Mutual studios. Her greatest ambition is to do something which will be remembered by her audiences.

Teddy Sampson.

Harry Weiss to Celebrate

On April 29, Harry Weiss of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation celebrates his first anniversary with that firm. Invitations have been issued for what promises to be some blow out. Every one of the employes of the Chicago office have been cogs in the wheel of success that Mr. Weiss has achieved. From office boy up to division manager, every one connected with the Chicago office will on Saturday evening, May 1, forget business and take part in the celebration. An invitation will be sent to Mr. Selznick, as well as the department heads of the home office. It is Mr. Weiss' hope that they may be able to attend.

Save Money; Ride with Selig

The rate of $128 for the round trip aboard the Selig Film Special, which leaves Chicago on Thursday, July 8, for California is cheaper than one could alone take such a sight seeing tour. Those planning to go should not be deceived by advertisements offering round trip transportation to California for $65, since this rate does not include Pullman reservations, hotel accommodations, side trips, admission to the expositions, etc. Pullman accommodations to California and return and extra parlor car reservations which will be found essential, alone total over $30 extra. Hotel accommodations will also total quite a large sum. The rate aboard the Selig Film Special, a Pullman train de luxe, includes everything excepting meals; two scenic routes going and coming; side trips to the Garden of the Gods; the Royal Gorge; the heart of the orange groves; into Mexico; a visit to the Selig Jungle-Zoo; a ride on 'Frisco Bay; stop-overs at Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, San Diego, etc. The Selig Special will arrive in San Francisco on July 11 in plenty of time for the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and there will be free entertainments aboard the train both going and coming. Write the Selig Movie Special Editor, care Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago, Ill., for an artistic booklet called "We Want You With Us in California."

Vitagraphers Dance

Though it takes an unusually large number to tax the capacity of Stauch's dancing pavilion at Coney Island, this was easily accomplished on the night of April 7, which was the occasion of the first annual dancing party given by the employes of the Vitagraph company. Mr. and Mrs. William Rock headed the host of Vitagraphers present, and the salary list of the company would be almost a complete roster of the Vitagraphers present. There was a program of fancy dancing, and at midnight Maurice Costello and Estelle Mardo headed a grand march at the breaking of which a huge American flag suspended above the dance-floor, electrically sprang into red, white and blue life. The great success of the event was largely due to the energetic work of the officers and committees, comprising the following:

A. Victor Smith, president; Dick Leslie, treasurer; Sam Spedon, vice-president; Pete La Grasse, secretary; Jack Brawn, recording secretary.

Arrangement committee—Dick Leslie, M. Hall, P. La Grassa, P. Lally, F. Nelson, F. Young, H. Waldron, J. Evans, W. Dornan, Al. Herman, J. Upton, W. Leota, W. Lally.

Masters of ceremonies—Al. Herman, F. Nelson, J. Upton, M. Hall, P. Young.

Reception committee—H. Waldron, P. Lally, W. Leota, W. Dornan, W. Lally.

The Downtown Office

The National Waterproof Film Company has opened, for the convenience of its friends and the trade in general, an office at 19 South La Salle street, Chicago, in the center of the business district. Its factory is now located at 21 South Ashland boulevard, and is equipped with every facility for giving prompt service and for doing first-class work in preserving and renovating moving picture films.

The following are the new officers of the company: Benjamin W. Beadell, president; Ray Palmer, vice-president; Charles W. Carroll, secretary-treasurer.

"The Gunners Mate"

The Fox Film Company has purchased through the National Play Bureau, picture rights for the famous old melodrama, "The Gunner's Mate," by Wm. J. McKiernan, and will make an elaborate five-reel production. Special permission has been given by the navy department to photograph scenes aboard warships and in navy yards.

Metro Issues News Bulletin

The Metro Pictures Corporation is the latest to contribute a news bulletin to the trade. It is entitled Fortnightly News Bulletin and, as its name suggests, is issued every two weeks. Volume 1, number 1, made its first appearance the latter part of March and contains much that is of interest to exhibitors who are using or thinking of using Metro service.

This Book Will Interest You

Picture Play Photography by H. M. Lomas, F. R. P. S., is a splendid 169 page book giving some very practical hints and suggestions to the manufacturer of motion picture films with the idea not to lay down any serious rule-of-thumb laws, but to consider the conditions underlying the work so that one is best able to get a comprehensive grasp of the subject and to draw inference and deduct practical working rules to suit all cases.

The book goes into the work of the photographer, who represents the branch of pictorial art in the manufacture of motion pictures, in a very thorough manner and is one that should be read by every one in this branch of the motion picture industry.

Various methods of lighting are discussed with diffusing and dispersing screens. Camera, film and possible troubles are outlined, the photographic lens is described with its action; and texture and surface reflections are reviewed carefully, with a chapter on light and shade.

We recommend the book as an instructive work in this field.

To Feature Willie Ritchie

Willie Ritchie, lightweight champion of America has been engaged to play the lead in a new six-reel film to be released within the next sixty days by the Gotham Film Company, 225 Fifth avenue, New York City. The picture is entitled "The Man Who Beat Dan Doland" by Helen Van Campen and the story has appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The scenario is being written by Junie McCree and is to be produced by Mr. Mahony, late of the Mutual Film Corporation, and various other well known concerns.

The feminine lead will be played by Miss Betty Marshall, late understudy to Stella Mayhew in "High Jinks" and now appearing with Trontini at the Forty-fourth Street theater. Miss Marshall's theatrical experience reaches over a period of five years and is a versatile one.

The Gotham Film Company is owned by M. W. Taggart and Bernard Levey. Mr. Taggart is president of the Brunswick Advertising Agency of 225 Fifth avenue, and has had years of experience in the advertising and theatrical circles while Mr. Levey has been connected with the western Vitagraph company and is a well known New York newspaper man.

That Selig Movie Special

It is expected that guests of the Selig Movie Special, which will leave Chicago on Thursday, July 8, will greet President Wilson and members of his cabinet, who are also to journey to the Pacific Coast at that time. It has also been officially announced that a great squadron of fighting ships will appear off the San Francisco coast at that time. The National convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will also be held at 'Frisco, following the arrival of the Selig Movie Special.

The work of filming the story of "The Millionaire Baby," from the novel of the same name written by Anna Katherine Green, is progressing at the Chicago studios of the Selig Company.

World Comedies Going Big

It was an out-of-the-ordinary, as well as a promising idea, that resulted in Phil Gleichman's renting the Willatt studios over in Fort Lee and setting his directors at work over there with material that could not fail to add to the box office receipts and to the entertainmen of screen patrons. For never before had famous stage stars been given the public in one-reel comedies—and since the demand had been, and still is, for one-reel comedies, how much more acceptable are they when featuring a well-known stage favorite.

Phil Gleichman

Both the idea and the opinion belonged to Mr. Gleichman, but they are shared by other producers and filmgoers since the release of two one-reel comedies, in which Jeff de Angelis and Richard Carle respectively appeared; the former in "Health by the Year," and the latter in "The Dancing Beetle," both films having been written by Mark Swan. Among others to make of the World Comedy Stars Film Corporation an institution to be known by the novelty of its output are Katryhn Osterman in "Housekeeping Under Cover," Thomas Wise in "The Magic Bottle" (these two to be released in the order of their naming), Lulu Glaser, Florence Tempest, Paula Edwards and Lew Fields.

These star comedy one-reel films are being released through the World Film Corporation, and both Lewis J. Selznick and Mr. Gleichman are enthuiastic regarding the successful outlook.

To Eliminate the Flicker

The widespread interest that attaches to motion pictures and the constant advances made in apparatus for their projection is a subject of universal concern. The elimination of the disturbing flickering has largely been accomplished, and now there has been perfected a device for controlling the arc lamp so that the source of light is maintained not only constant as regards its position, but also constant in its intensity, says a recent issue of the Scientific American. This is accomplished in an invention made by H. N. Baker and originally patented in 1909, but since that time developed and put on so practical and efficient a basis that it has found application in moving picture apparatus of the highest grade, and also for arc projectors used in photo-engraving and searchlights.

Previously with the hand feed by which the carbons in an arc-lamp were brought together and maintained at the proper distance so as to produce an effective arc, it was not possible to preserve uniformity in illumination, and, as the distance between the carbons varied there was a corresponding variation in the intensity of the arc as well as a general diffusion of light. Even with a watchful operator, constantly adjusting and feeding the carbons properly, the results were far from satisfactory, while automatic apparatus, in which by some magnetic or other system the carbons were fed mechanically, failed to give the desired results, and even when such mechanism was new there were sufficient variations to interfere with the effectiveness of the projection.

The new device is available for practically any form of hand-fed lamp, and maintains the arc constant so that there is practically no variation in voltage across the terminals. This is secured by means of a motor driven controller where a 1/16 horse-power electric motor is connected directly across the arc and is so wound that it will respond to a wide range of potential. The main axis of the armature carries a centrifugal switch, so that when a certain speed is exceeded the weights moving out from the center throw into operation a system of gearing, which connects with the lamp mechanism and moves the carbons together. The speed of the motor depends upon the voltage across the arc and this naturally depends upon the separation of the carbons. If the carbons are separated widely the voltage naturally is greater and more current passing through the motor increases the speed of revolution. This affects the centrifugal governing device and communicates the motion, suitably reduced, to the regulating mechanism. This brings the carbons together until the normal voltage is restored, when the speed of the motor falls and the centrifugal mechanism ceases to operate.

Instead of a variation from two to six volts ordinarily encountered, the potential difference across the arc can be held to less than one-tenth volt and the arc maintained for several hours absolutely constant and in the position set at the first adjustment. The shaft connecting the centrifugal governor with the regulating mechanism is telescopic and mounted on universal bearings at either end, so that the lantern may be shifted from ordinary projection apparatus to that for moving pictures, and the whole control system is regularly connected and housed so that it gives very little trouble and can run for hours without adjustment or attention. Not only is the arc maintained constant, but uneven and unnecessary wear of carbons is prevented and stopping for renewal or adjustment of carbons during the course of a performance is obviated. By means of an adjustable spring against which the centrifugal governor acts, regulation can be effected to any desired voltage or length of arc, and the control will act surely and automatically.

The gearing of the governor.

As used with the projection apparatus of several of the large motion picture companies, the new speed controller has served to decrease the flickering and variations in intensity of illumination to a marked degree, and as a result of experimental installation other machines are being equipped with this device. It has also been used to control the arc of a large projection lantern in the photo-engraving laboratory of a bank-note company, where an arc is maintained between carbons 1¼ inches in diameter for the upper carbon and 1 inch in diameter for the lower. The speed controller also has been applied to searchlights, so that it is possible to maintain constant the beam of light emitted and regulate its direction by operating gear from some distant point, such as a bridge or observation platform, without the presence of an operator at the searchlight itself.

The motor of the arc controller is so small that the consumption of current is inconsequential, and the increased economy at the arc itself more than compensates for the small amount shunted through the motor. The latter is so wound that it will respond to any amount of current at the arc, whether it be five or more than one hundred amperes. The important additional consideration is the fact that the attention of the operator is released from the lamp and he can devote himself entirely to the control of the films and thus secure the best results. The entire mechanism has been so well arranged and developed that it promises to have a striking effect upon motion picture projection, and especially where high power lamps are produced. The accompanying diagrams indicate in a general way the operation of the apparatus and the construction of the centrifugal governor.

"The Darn Fool"

One of the most unique advertising booklets that has come to MOTOGRAPHY's office for some time is The Darn Fool, by One, which is entirely devoted to Universal Billie Ritchie, leading man of the L-Ko comedies on the Universal program, and billed as "The funniest man in the world."

Unfortunately the Universal Company has neglected to credit the author of the various bits of copy scattered throughout the book, though he, whoever he is, has undoubtedly put over something entirely new in the way of an advertising booklet and one which, no doubt, will be read with interest by every exhibitor.

Brevities of the Business

Arrangements have been made by the members of the Static Club of America, located in Los Angeles, Cal., to permanently continue their publication, Static Flashes. It will become an eight instead of a four-page paper on April 24, and will endeavor to cover the west coast even more thoroughly than it has done in the past.

Burton King has completed the twelve-reel serial "Under the Crescent," featuring Princess Ibrahim Hassan. The princess is now in San Francisco visiting the Exposition.

The new studio of the Fiction Pictures, Inc., Louis Joseph Vance's successful organization, has recently been completed in the western section of Los Angeles, and the company is now working in its new home.

Zena Keefe, one of the old time Vitagraph stars who, after a year's absence in vaudeville, has returned to pictures and is now at work at the Vita studio in Brooklyn. This company has also secured Joseph Gallomb, formerly of the Eastern Universal scenario department.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard are now at work on "The Broken Chain," the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's new serial. It will consist of fifteen two-reel episodes and will be released on Mondays following the close of "The Black Box," which is now running.

The Features Ideal Company, located at Hollywood, Calif., plans to add a brand of pictures devoted to juvenile players to the list of films they are now turning out.

Julius Stern has announced that Mary Fuller will be cast in only three-reel features written by famous authors in the future. It is understood that a number of well known writers have signed contracts with Universal to turn out these and other stories.

The first picture to be made under the direction of Lois Weber and Phillip Smalley, who recently joined the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will be a four or five reel production featuring J. Warren Kerrigan of the Victor brand. Later Pauline Bush will be featured in one of the Weber-Smalley pictures.

Harry Brooks, formerly of the Orpheum circuit, is now playing with the Keystone Company.

A change in the casting of stars for feature films was made at the Majestic-Reliance studios in Los Angeles last week. Henry B. Walthall will make his re-appearance in Mutual pictures in the film version "Ibsen's Ghosts," instead of in "The Yankee From the West." Wallace Reed has been selected to play the leading role in the latter production and work on it is now under way.

Mary Pickford, the Famous Players star, and Al Kauffman visited San Francisco last week for the purpose of looking over Peter B. Kyne's stories with the object of selecting one fitted to the little actress.

Margaret Gibson, for some time past a star of the Western Vitagraph Company, has joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation and will appead in Ince Masterpieces and in films released under the Kay-Bee, Domino and Broncho brands.

Virginia Kirtley, late of the Beauty brand of the American Film Manufacturing Company, has been added to the list of Griffith players at the west coast Reliance-Majestic studios.

After a serious illness which kept her in the east, Bess Meredith, formerly of Universal, has arrived in Los Angeles to take up her work as scenario editor of the Fiction Pictures, Inc.

The Oliver-Morosco Photoplay Company has purchased the motion picture rights to the famous play "Barbara Fritchie," and it will soon be put into production, under the direction of Oscar Apfel, with Marjorie Rambeau in the title role.

Fred Mace, who was so prominent in the Havana arena during the Willard-Johnson fight, has wired friends in New York that he secured some wonderful pictures of the fight in the interest of H. H. Frazee and Lawrence Weber.

The Charles Chaplin Essanay comedy company has left Niles, Calif., and gone to Los Angeles, where they will work in the future.

Stella Razeto. the clever Selig actress, has been so ill with appendicitis for the past few weeks that she has been forced to give up work for a short time. Vivian Reed is taking her place as leading lady with Ed J. Le Saint Company.

Rumors from the coast indicate that Charles Richman is seriously considering an offer from Thomas H. Ince of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, to appear in a number of feature productions.

A. M. Kennedy, who was recently elected president of the Kriterion Program, suffered a painful injury last week in which his leg was thought to have been broken. He is unable to visit his company's offices, the work being in charge of Charles Ver Halen.

One more star has been added to the forces of the Western Lubin Company at Los Angeles, this time in the person of Jack Holt, who for several seasons toured the country in various successful roles on the legitimate stage.

The Smallwood Film Corporation has moved its studios from Yonkers, N. Y., to Cliffside, N. J., near Fort Lee, where it will continue producing photodramas for the United Program.

The new lighting system lately adopted by the producing directors of the American Film Manufacturing Company's studios at Santa Barbara, Calif., has greatly facilitated the work at this more than busy producing center. With the improved method of lighting, it is now possible to supply an abundance of light, even at night, and Jacques Jaccard, director of the film novel company, recently was found making scenes for "The Diamond from the Sky" long after the usual closing hour.

General Film Company—In an attempt to answer many inquiries from General Film stockholders as to the possible effect on the stock of the new arrangement through which feature films are to be distributed, we believe that any idea that this constitutes a break in any way with the General Film should be immediately dissipated. As a matter of fact—it is generally understood that the General Film Company felt that the four companies—Lubin, Vitagraph, Selig and Essanay—could better distribute their six and seven-reel features through the establishment of their own facilities than to rely upon distributing channels which were not accustomed to handling these higher priced feature productions.

Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc.—There have been a number of inquiries for stock of this company. It is almost impossible to quote with any degree of accuracy and we believe very little of the stock will appear on the market as it seems to be very closely held.

Thanhouser Film Corporation—Announcements have been made that, under the new management, three new additions have been made to the force within the last week. Lorraine Hulting—who has already achieved considerable fame through her work in the "Bachelor's Romance"— "Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch" and "The Straight Road" in the movies and through "Help Wanted" and "Prunella" on the legitimate stage; and George Foster Platt and Frederick Sullivan have been added to the staff of directors. It is reported the "Falstaff" brand is the name under which some of the new releases will appear.

New York Motion Picture Corporation—We have just been advised the directors took action and resumed the payment of dividends, at the expected 1% per month rate. At the present writing 74 is bid for the stock with 76 asked.

Jesse L. Lasky, who has been spending some weeks at the New York executive offices of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is soon to return to the studios in California. During the current week the offices in New York will be moved from the old 48th street address to a new building with special accommodations at 120 West 41st street.

Nick Cogley, the veteran director who has been with the Keystone and other companies, has joined the Mutual organization at Hollywood, Calif.

S. J. Berman, formerly New York manager of the World Film Corporation, has been appointed eastern division manager of that company, with headquarters at 130 West 46th street, New York City. His territory includes Boston, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Washington, Philadelphia and New York. Mr. Berman is ably fitted for his important position and his successes with the local exchange has demonstrated his executive ability. Succeeding Mr. Berman, as New York manager, is Ben S. Cohen, who has won a reputation in Kansas City and San Francisco.

Courtenay Foote has arranged to appear in one or two special features to be made at the Reliance studios at Hollywood, Calif. The first one is a five-reeler from "Up from the Depths" by Robert Stodart and Battel Loomis.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Philip Mindil has resigned from the Serial Publication Corporation where he handled the early advertising, and all of the publicity on the Reliance serial, "Runaway June."

B. W. Babcock, a member of the publicity department of the Alco Film Corporation during its rugged infancy, and since the first of the year, one of the Mutual staff, now reigns at the desk vacated by Mr. Mindil in the office of the Serial Publication Corporation in the Masonic Building.

That Bill Barry has fathered some of the most novel ideas in advertising in recent days is evidenced by the numerous comments aroused by the Nicholas Power advertising of late. Possibly the best of his ads is the 6A sun which radiates theaters, churches, studios, schools, prisons, institutions such as the Y. M. C. A., and the army and navy as its beneficiaries. Following close upon this are the Powers-Everyday calendar, the factors of progress, the motion picture record book, and a number of other distinctive, dignified ads.

Tarleton Winchester, formerly of the New York Morning Telegraph, will act as director of special publicity of the Paramount organization, keeping the trade and daily papers throughout the country posted on whatever Paramount happenings may be of general and particular interest.

"Poverty Flat," the Bret Harte mining camp, pictured in the California Motion Picture Corporation's April feature film release, "The Lily of Poverty Flat," was the setting of a surprise dinner, given on April 4 in the Italian ballroom of the Hotel St. Francis in San Francisco by Beatriz Michelena, the screen star, to her sister, Vera Michelena, the singing star of "Ziegfeld Follies," then playing at the Columbia theater of that city.

A company composed of eleven of the leading players for the Superba Film Company, headed by Miss Edith Thornton, leading lady, and directed by Charles Hutchinson are at present in Savannah, Georgia, where they are making a series of out-of-door comedies for the United Film Service.

Pearl Sindelar, leading woman of "Potash and Perlmutter," journeyed out to the Morosco-Bosworth studio in Los Angeles, while playing in that city, to renew an acquaintance of the old Pathe days with Director Oscar Apfel and Alfred Gandolfi, the head camera man.

Tarleton Winchester, formerly a member of the Telegraph staff and the author of a number of scenarios, is a late addition to the publicity and advertising department of the Paramount Corporation.

Owing to the illness of Director Frank Cooley, of the American "Beauty" Company, Mrs. Cooley, (Gladys Kingsbury) was compelled to cut short her visit to the Exposition last week and return to Santa Barbara to nurse her husband through a siege of grippe.

Miss Kathlyn Williams, the Selig star who recently returned from Panama where scenes from the forthcoming Selig Spectacular Special, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," were staged, is building a beautfiul home on Bryan street, Los Angeles.

Herman Rifkin, the general manager of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, was a visitor in New York during the early part of the week. Mr. Rifkin's firm is the New England representative of the Alliance Films Corporation, and he reports that he is getting his share of business in this territory.

Pete Schmidt, the ever-happy publicity man for Bosworth, Inc., is responsible for getting out the clever little leaflets which have taken the especial fancy of Bosworth exhibitors. The Fritzi Scheff leaflet, the outside pages of which bore the query "A question for the Ladies," was the first one issued and was followed by one on "Captain Courtesy," the laughing countenance of Dustin Farnum showing through a round opening in the cover. The company's only complaint is that they are finding it difficult to supply the demand.

Mildred Walker was the winner of the popularity contest held by Manager Dollinger of the Claremont theater, New York City, ending April 1, in conjunction with the Edison Company. She will now enjoy the fruits of her victory—by posing in an Edison picture, this giving her the opportunity to become a motion picture player.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay and one of the best all round athletes of filmdom, has just formed a baseball team of Essanay actors. Mr. Travers, who is captain of the team, is now at work getting the men into training for late spring and summer play. A diamond now is being made at the studio grounds.

Dick Brady, formerly in charge of the Greater New York Film Rental Company's poster department, has been engaged to reorganize the poster department of the United Film Service's Forty-sixth street exchange, of which Fred Holderman recently assumed the management. His brother Arthur, of Brady Lithograph Company fame, has also joined the United forces and will manage the department for the supplying of banners, signs and novelties to New York theaters.

Sally Crute, of Edison led the grand march at the Friars' Club, Springfield, Mass., Friday evening, April 9, at which Gladys Hulette, Harry Beaumont, and Scenario Editor Arthur Leeds were also present.

YOU'RE NOT MIKE!

¶ You know the story of Mike—asked which is correct, "eether" or "eyether," he answered, in a thick Ould Sod brogue, "ayther!"

¶ You can't be "ayther." You are one of those who used Edwinthanhousermade film a few years ago, or else you were not an exhibitor at that time.

¶ You're one of those two—you can't be "ayther."

¶ If you've used them before, you know what Edwin Thanhouser's work meant to you, but if not, you are reading this with a cynical wink in your eye.

¶ That's right!—Be cynical—Be a "show-me!"—Don't take our word! Go ask the other fellow, and you'll find that he is booking up the new Thanhousers while you're thinking about it!

¶ And that Friday "Falstaff," a comedy release, is the new Thanhouser brand that they're all waiting for with open arms, for they know that Edwin Thanhouser always made good!

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 29—Selig—April 12.—William H. Thompson elected Mayor of Chicago after a bitter campaign; Vice-President Marshall reviews marines at the San Diego, Cal., Fair; latest fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff-Gordon; the racing season on Metropolitan courses opens at Bowie, Mass.; fashionably dressed crowds join Easter parade at Atlantic City; barge Ruth driven aground off Revere, Mass.; views from the war zone taken by Photographer Wallace.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 30—Selig—April 15.—Ten thousand advocates of local option visit Pennsylvania state capitol at Harrisburg; Officer Carney regulates traffic over Manhattan bridge, where more vehicles pass than at any other point in the world; Grace Darling continues her adventures in California; children aid in campaign to destroy mosquitoes at New Highland, Mass.; Easter Sunday at the San Diego California Fair; the annual children's frolic at the White House, Washington; the opening of the 1915 baseball season; war section containing latest news from the front.

The Ebbing Tide—Biograph—April 19.—Few in the fishing village noted that the old shipbuilder's little bare-legged girl had become, almost over night, a wonderful woman, beautiful and shy as a sea bird. One who delighted in the transformation was the young fisherman who never looked at other girls. Another was Tarrant, the ship owner, who coveted her with all his crooked soul. He took to dropping in of evenings at the little cottage beside the shipyard, and the things he whispered turned the old man's head. "If she marries me——" was his theme, with a world of promises, which he may have intended to keep. But the girl would have none of him, even after her father, in fury, ordered her to receive the ship owner as her betrothed. Separated from her fisher lad, she became ill. The old doctor, wise in the ways of women, declared that one thing alone could save her life. Panic-stricken, her father ran and brought the fisherman. With a cry of joy she felt her lover's arms once more about her, and in that rapture her spirit passed. When they would have come near her, the grief-stricken lover turned furiously upon them and they slunk away, leaving him with his dead.

The Mystery of the Silent Death—Essanay—April 19.—Edward T. Lowe, Jr., has constructed a clever one-reel mystery story in which Albert Roscoe and Beverley Bayne have the featured roles. Adene Maitland, some five months after the mysterious death of her mother, is shocked to learn that her father has also died from a mysterious cause. Her stepfather at once becomes the object of suspicion, and Adene confides her fears in her friend Lewis Courtland, who one night takes her place in her room and awakens to find himself being suffocated. Investigation discloses the fact that carbon monoxide is escaping from the fireplace. Wainwright being the cause, the latter is arrested and turned over to the police. N. G. C.

The Face of the Madonna—(Three Reels)—Kalem—April 19.—Jane, a girl of the slums, marries a gangster and is widowed on her wedding day. She becomes an accomplice of her husband's father, who is a burglar. Wallace, a wealthy artist, quarrels with his wife and forces her to leave him. He places their little child in an orphan asylum and sets out to find a model for the Madonna which he has been commissioned to paint for a cathedral. Jane, pursued by the police, hides in the orphanage grounds and plays nurse to Wallace's child. He discovers her when he visits the place and sees in her his ideal of a Madonna. By threatening to expose her to the police he forces her to pose for him. The picture proves a masterpiece and its beauty causes both to realize what worthless lives they have been leading. Wallace falls in love with her, but she tells him he must find his wife and care for her. She then goes to the orphanage and becomes a nurse. Wallace seeks his wife, but is too late; she dies before he reaches her. He determines to devote his life to his child, and when he calls to get it he finds it in Jane's arms. Alice Joyce and Guy Coombs featured.

Road o' Strife—(Episode Three)—Lubin—April 19.—Alene slowly becomes used to the conventions of the world and begins to consider her personal appearance, hoping that this will attract the attention of Robert Dane, who is still convinced that she does not know what love is and keeps his distance. Dr. Duncan and Dane visit a mineral spring, beside which a silver cup is hung. The popular belief is that all those who drink from the cup in its position will be cured of any ailment they have, but anyone who dares remove it will be poisoned. Alene, upon learning of the cup, says that Professor Gershom placed it by the spring when she was a child, but can remember nothing more about it. Abner Gray, a young villager, meets and falls in love with Alene. She treats him with frank kindness, and Dane, seeing this, thinks her to be in love with Gray. At this time Gilbert Jerome arrives in the village to destroy the documents which will dispossess him of the fortune which has been stolen and to take Alene's life if necessary.

The Great Experiment—(Two Reels)—Selig—April 19.—John Morning, a rich bachelor, is present when the mother of a girl of the slums dies, and he decides to give the girl an education as an experiment. Years pass and the girl grows up to be a refined young woman, but does not know who her benefactor is. Morning meets her in Egypt, where she is traveling, and they fall in love. He determines not to tell her what he has done for her, for he feels he is too old to marry her. She learns the true conditions and, by a clever plan, convinces him that her love for him was not born of gratitude. A review appears on page 607 of the April 17th issue.

The Taming of Rita—Vitagraph—April 19.—Rita is a tomboy. When her mother learns that a young millionaire is to visit them she plans to "catch" him for Rita's sister, Laura. The tomboy is sent to the country, where she meets the young farm hand, with whom she falls in love. When the millionaire writes that he will be unable to visit them, Rita's mother orders her to return home. This she does, but does not forget the farm hand, and when the millionaire pays his visit and she finds that her poor lover was really the rich millionaire in disguise, she agrees to become his wife. Margaret Gibson featured.

The Quicksands of Society—Biograph—(Two Reels)—April 20.—John Thorpe inherited his uncle's fortune and began to worship the gods of society, thereby neglecting his wife and son. When Nina Carlton, a social parasite, crossed his path, it was a foregone conclusion that she would ruin him. But more bitter even than the loss of John's honor was the discovery by his mother that society had fastened its clutches upon her son. Reproached, the boy wept and threw himself into his mother's arms. She thanked God for that. After his divorce John married Nina, but was not happy with her. Her position secured, she flirted openly with young Scott. Upbraided by her husband, she eloped with her lover. Their automobile was wrecked and Nina was brought home dead. That was the day when Thorpe, utterly lonely, received a visit from his son, whom after years of silence he had begged his former wife to send to him. In the clean-limbed, honest boy he saw himself as he once was and groaned over the dead past. At his son's instance, though never hoping for forgiveness, John Thorpe, a humble and contrite man, returned to the scene of his former happiness. But women are always ready to forgive when they know that love is not dead. John Thorpe knelt at his wife's feet and her bitterness melted. One victim of society had escaped its quicksands.

Martha's Romeo—Edison—April 20.—William Wadsworth and Jessie Stevens occupy the center of the limelight in this semi-slapstick comedy, supported by a quartet of fun-makers led by Arthur Housman. Martha occupies much space but little importance in the boarding house, and elicits little, if any, consideration from the four ravenous boarders with whom she eats in the mornings and evenings. She conceives the idea of writing herself a letter purporting to come from the executor of a wealthy relative's estate. The "caressly" dropped letter is scanned by the boarders and they lose no time in showering attentions upon Martha. Waddy outdistances his closest rival, Artie, and his proposal is accepted. After the marriage Martha tells her husband of her little deception, but assures him that it is all right—she will not have the marriage annulled. C. R. C.

The Snow-Burner—Essanay—(Three Reels)—April 20.—Richard C. Travers and E. H. Calvert are featured in this three-reel adaptation of the story of the same title by Henry Oyen, which appeared in the Adventure Magazine "Toppy" Treplin, a wealthy young man, arrives at the logging camp of "Hell Camp" Rievers, and finds that Rievers, a thoroughly unscrupulous man, is endeavoring to trick Helen Pearson, bookkeeper at the camp, though Rievers is already married to Tillie, a half-breed. "Toppy" and Rievers eventually come to blows, and in this fight Rievers is shot in the arm by Helen. The loggers, who admire and respect "Toppy," are aroused to madness and pursue Rievers to a cave, from which he stands them at bay with a revolver. One of the other workmen hurls a stick of dynamite into the cave, blowing the rock to pieces, and "Toppy," who has bought the camp, gets Helen to remain as his wife. N. G. C.

Lotta Coin's Ghost—Kalem—April 20.—Ham and Bud become burglars to secure the billion-dollar necklace owned by Lotta Coin. They break into the house and are discovered by Lotta's father, Wadda Coin. A fight follows, in which Wadda is disposed of, but Lotta frightens the would-be burglars away by appearing as a ghost. Bud, in making his get-away, gets mixed up in a sheet, and Ham, running in front of him, believes that the ghost is still following him. When he discovers that the white-robed figure is no other than his side-kick, however, things begin to happen. Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan featured.

Mixed Flats—Lubin—April 20.—Jack's wife is on her vacation when Jack moves into their new apartment. Minister Blake, whose wife is also on her vacation, rents the apartment upstairs. Mrs. Blake returns home and gets into the wrong flat. The new servant employed by Jack thinks Mrs. Blake is her mistress and proceeds to make her at home. Jack's wife returns home and, finding Mrs. Blake in her husband's apartments, accuses him of duplicity. The quarrel which follows brings the minister down stairs to see what the trouble is and matters are explained.

The Conversion of Smiling Tom—Selig—April 20.—Tom Mix appears as typical outlaw of the West in this picture and is ably supported by Louella Maxam, as the girl who reforms him. These two players and the others appearing in the supporting roles make the film a convincing one by their acting. The settings and photography are praiseworthy. A miser is about to foreclose a mortgage on Widow Wilson's ranch. Maude, the widow's daughter, meets "Smiling" Tom, an outlaw, and his pal when they stop at Widow Wilson's for dinner, and Tom and the girl fall in love. The widow tells Tom of the miser's threat and he gives her enough money to pay off the mortgage. After the miser has been paid, "Smiling" Tom holds him up and takes the money away. A posse pursues Tom and his pal and they flee to the hills and prepare to give battle to the officers of the law, but Maude arrives in time to prevent bloodshed. She persuades Tom to surrender, serve his time and then come back to her, a better man. C. J. C.

The Closing of the Circuit—Vitagraph—April 20.—The boy is brought up by his father in total ignorance of the fact that he is blind and believes that the world is dark to all others as it is to him. He meets Mary and she, feeling sorry for him, treats him kindly, but before they part he learns that he is different from other people. He determines to find her again and wanders away from home. He is found by strangers, and because he mentions "Mary" continually he is placed aboard the ship "Mary" in the harbor. The ship sails out to sea, and when the boy is discovered by the crew he is treated roughly and forced to work. One day he is sent to the top of the mainmast during a storm and while he is up there the mast is snapped off by lightning. The shock restores his eyesight, and when the steamer "Franklin" picks him up and he learns that it is owned by Mary's father and that the girl herself is aboard, happiness at last comes into his life.

Sleep, Beautiful Sleep—Edison—April 21.—Taken altogether, this is a good slapstick comedy, but if it had held throughout the style of action it contains in the first few hundred feet it would be 100 per cent better. A young man on the verge of losing his position for coming late to work tries out innumerable schemes for waking up, with varied and amusing results. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Two Unfettered Birds—Essanay—April 21.—Royal Douglas and Charlotte Mineau appear as two high-brows in this amusing George Ade fable, though both are about as romantic as a cold hot water bag, and endeavor to convince themselves that life consists only of musty books and an air of refinement. They eventually become interested in babies and, after rescuing a forlorn orphan, marry, that they may give it a home. N. G. C.

Mike Donegal's Escape—(Two Reels)—Kalem—April 21.—An episode of the "Girl Detective," series in which Cleo Ridgeley is featured. Warden Craven is puzzled as to what means Mike Donegal used to break prison. Jean and her new assistant, Talcott, are called on the case, and Jean at once goes to the fire room of the prison, where she discovers the fireman bound and gagged and Donegal taking his place. The escaped prisoner throttles her into insensibility and is about to thrust her into the furnace when the fireman frees himself and comes to her rescue. His cries attract the attention of Talcott and the prison officials. Donegal is overcome by them, and he then tells, in a bragging way, how he made his escape. He says that he hid under his cot and when the guard found the cell apparently empty he rushed out, leaving the door open. Donegal then hurried to the fire room, where he overpowered the fireman. On the next shift of firemen he planned to make his get-away.

The Terrible One—(Three Reels)—Lubin—April 21.—Poncho Gonzales wins Felicia from Captain Pireida, thereby incurring the enmity of the latter. Pireida misrepresents facts to his superior officer in Mexico City and obtains power to place Gonzales in prison. He then lets his rival escape in order that his soldiers may shoot him down. The course of the rebellion brings Pirieda to the fore. He is rapidly promoted and finally is ordered to the capitol. Before leaving he tells Felicia of Gonzales' death and she, desiring the social position he can offer her at the capitol, becomes his wife. Years pass and Pireida becomes dictator of Mexico. Constant outbreaks in the North bother him and he determines to dispose of the rebel leader, who is known as "The Terrible One." All attempts fail, however, and the insurrectos push on toward the capital. Pireida realizes that the "Terrible One" is determined to secure the position held by him and, though his cowardly nature almost overcomes him, he braces himself and leads his troops in a desperate defense of the capitol. His forces are routed and he takes refuge in a fortress which the rebels batter down over his head. The "Terrible One" rushes in and Pireida recognizes in him Gonzales, the man whom he wronged.

He knows that he will receive no mercy at the hands of the outlaw and ends his own life. W. E. Parsons, George Routh and Velma Whitman featured.

The Face at the Window—Selig—April 21.—A single-reel drama which holds one's interest from start to finish. The photography is exceptionally clear and the acting, especially that of Lamar Johnstone and Edith Johnson, will attract attention. As the story opens the ill-tempered millionaire quarrels with his son, George, because the latter wishes to become an artist. George is in love with Hester Graham, who is secretary to his father, and she witnesses the quarrel. That night a face appears at the window and a short time later George is found kneeling over his father's dead body, the old man having been murdered. Everything points to the young man's guilt, but the detective who works on the case traces the crime to John Duncan. The latter attempts to escape and is fatally injured, but confesses that years before the millionaire duped him and that he killed him for revenge. The son, it is discovered, was walking in his sleep and unconsciously came to his father's body. C. J. C.

The Guttersnipe—Vitagraph—April 21.—The lost treasure chart of the Van Nuys family is concealed some place about the old mansion, where Peter Van Nuys and his blind son, Victor, lives. Peter's nephew, Edgar, is determined to secure the chart for himself and attempts to buy the mansion from Peter without success. One day Peter meets the "Guttersnipe," a ragged, but beautiful girl, and takes her to his home to live. She and Victor fall in love, and this arouses the jealousy of Edgar, who desires the "Guttersnipe" for himself. In repulsing Edgar's advances one day she throws a book at him and the chart falls from within. Edgar attempts to secure it, but the "Guttersnipe" is too quick for him, and old Peter and Victor at last secure the wealth they sought. Later Victor marries the "Guttersnipe." Lillian Walker, Charles Kent, Darwin Karr and Harry Northrup have the leads.

To Have and to Lose—Biograph—April 22.—Lost in the brush and looking for water, the husband becomes separated from his young wife and friend. The latter, going to look for him, also loses his bearings after finding the husband's coat. Left alone, the girl wanders on and is found by a lone prospector, who takes her to his cabin and, on learning her story, sets out to seek her husband. He meets two prospectors who tell him they have recently buried a dead man whom they found at the foot of a cliff. They have his coat, which the girl recognizes as her husband's. Still she cannot believe that he is dead. Unwillingly the prospector goes again to seek him, for he has learned to love the girl and wishes her husband dead. After finding him he is sorely tempted to let the exhausted man die, but his better nature triumphs, and for her sake he saves him.

Done in Wax—Essanay—April 22.—Wallace Beery and Bobby Bolder, in a one-reel comedy concerning Professor Dub, possessor of a wax figure of King Woof, an eastern potentate, who had died in the long ago, but whose image has been preserved. When the wax figure is destroyed by a fire on shipboard the professor induces a hobo, who somewhat resembles the ancient King Woof, to play the role of the dummy, and succeeds in selling it to a restaurant keeper as the center figure of a fountain. Unfortunately, the figure proves so life-like that the guests catch it eating food, when, the restauranteur, getting wise, nails the king in a box and throws him into the lake. N. G. C.

A Delayed Reformation—(Two Reels)—Lubin—April 22.—In shielding her brother, Sid, a crook, from justice, Bess, the wife of John Sterling, a magistrate, places herself under obligation to Norton, a money lender. Sid marries Nell, a country girl, and settles down to a straight life, but in time this wearies him and he determines to spend one week in the city living his old life. He secures entrance to the club of which Sterling is a member and steals many valuables. His conscience overcomes him, however, and he voluntarily returns them. Sterling and a criminologist, who have been discussing whether a criminal given an opportunity to steal after going straight will take it or not, decide to use Sid as an experiment. Sterling contends that a criminal can never go straight and takes Sid to his home that night to test him. Norton, who has been forcing his attentions upon Bess, comes to the house, and Sid finds him and defends his sister, taking the money which she had given the money lender away from him. Sterling enters and, finding Sid with the money, believes that he attempted to steal it. He is sent to prison and Bess, her conscience getting the better of her, runs away, seeking comfort at Nell's home on the farm. Sterling discovers, through Norton, the real state of affairs and frees Sid, who explains what his sister did for him. Together they search for Bess, and when they find her with Nell a double reconciliation takes place. Jack Standing, Joseph Smiley, Lilie Leslie and Ann CarMichael have the leading roles.

Feminine Wits—Mina—April 22.—An old Westerner wishes one of his nieces to come and keep house for him. Amy and May, the nieces, draw straws to see which will go, and the former wins. She arrives at the camp and causes such a flurry that it is decided that no more women shall take up their residence there. May, however, has started for the camp and Amy cannot warn her. She disguises her sister as a man upon her arrival and the sheriff's posse mistakes May for a crook they are after. Comical situations develop, but in the end the two girls capture the real crook and the camp decides that women are all right after all.

Sonny Jim and the Valentine—Vitagraph—April 22.—Sonny Jim and his little comrade, Dick, wish to buy valentines for little Esther Anne, but neither have sufficient funds. Dick secures his money before Sonny Jim can see Daddy Jim, and, therefore, Esther Anne receives his gift first. When Sonny Jim goes to buy his valentine he finds that little old Miss Tabitha, who conducts the store around the corner, is about to be ejected because she cannot pay the rent, he tells Daddy Jim of the old lady's trouble, and the latter, remembering how he used to buy valentines there when he was a boy, takes up a collection among the other men of the neighborhood and, as a valentine present to Miss Tabitha, they give her enough money from the "big and little boys" to pay all she owes. When Sonny Jim gives Esther Anne his valentine he is pleased to see that she likes it even better than the one Dick gave her.

When Hearts Are Young—Biograph—April 23.—While his motherless girl was growing up, Silas Ross had remained a widower, without thought of marriage. But soon Adeline would be leaving the nest and he would be alone. With so sweet a woman as Mrs. Prentice for his next-door neighbor, it is not to be wondered at that he lost his heart a second time. On her part, the gentle widow found him irresistible, although she wondered what Jack would say when he came home from college. "Let's keep them in the dark," suggested Silas. Adeline brought home her chum, Letty, who promptly fell in love with Jack. But he had eyes only for Adeline. So the jealous Letty discovering their parents' plot to bring them together by pretending to object to their marriage, spitefully told what she knew. Jack and Adeline eloped. Letty, furious on discovering that her plot had failed, departed in high dudgeon. Old Mike, the widower's gardener, brought word of the elopement, in which he had assisted, and took advantage of the romantic atmosphere to capture the heart of the stubborn Arabella, who kept house for his mistress. The plot having succeeded, Silas easily persuaded the widow to make him the happiest man on earth.

Out of the Ruins—(Three Reels)—Edison—April 23.—Miss 318 in the department store and Mr. 37 of the fire department, after a little romance, become engaged. One day, while passing near the store, the fireman sees smoke pouring out of it. Knowing that it is a veritable firetrap, he makes his way through the flames and smoke to his sweetheart. She insists on his first saving her girl friend, a patron. He does not return, and she is rescued by someone else. Both think the other dead. A happy reunion takes place in the hospital.

His Wife's Secret—Essanay—April 23.—The young wife is sewing baby clothes in expectation of the great event when a burglar enters the home. The husband returns suddenly and the burglar, hearing him coming, hides in the closet. The wife, excited, opens the closet door and throws the little clothes within in an effort to hide them. The husband notes her actions and believes that another man has replaced him in her affections and at the point of a gun he forces the burglar to come from within the closet. The wife cannot explain matters, as the burglar's presence is a surprise to her. The housebreaker, however, takes matters in his hands and tells what his real mission was. The husband allows him to escape and he is reconciled to his wife. G. M. Anderson featured.

Willie Whipple's Dream—Kalem—April 23.—Whipple is bossed by his wife and, when she tells him to go over to the Fossil home and quiet a fight, he dare not refuse. Upon arriving at the Fossil home, however, he finds Mr. Fossil to be an excellent companion and takes him to a cafe. An umbrella attracts Willie's attention. He takes it and leaves the cafe hurriedly. On returning home he passes the Fossil residence and flirts with Mrs. Fossil. She appears to return his smiles and he enters the house, but is knocked down by her. Willie's wife sees him enter the Fossil house and follows. The owner of the umbrella and Mr. Fossil also follow the culprit. The latter receives a blow which knocks him senseless and, while recovering, he dreams that Mrs. Fossil and he elope, but that his wife catches them and throws them into a lake. He recovers to find everyone in the room dowsing him with water.

Indiscretion—Lubin—April 23.—While buying flowers for his sweetheart, Helen Barnes, Jerome Howard, son of a millionaire banker, flirts with pretty Agnes Murray. She takes his attentions seriously, and when his engagement to Helen is announced is persuaded by her brother to sue for breach of promise. This causes Helen to break her engagement and turn to another admirer. When Agnes learns how much harm she has done she is heartbroken, for she really loves Jerome. He sees this and realizes that unconsciously he has grown to love her and that his marriage to Helen would have been an awful mistake. She will not believe him when he tells her at first, but when he repeats that he wants her to become his wife she finds happiness in his arms. Edgar Jones and Louise Huff featured.

The Idol of Fate—Selig—April 23.—Elsie Greeson, Marion Warner and William Scott keep the interest alive in this single-reel comedy by their clever antics. The plot deals with the smiles and frowns of an idol of fate in the home of a young woman. Her favorite suitor displeases the idol and suffers thereby. The girl gives her attention to another young man, until the latter also displeases the idol. The real lover then manages to win favor in the eyes of the idol and is reconciled with his sweetheart.

Whose Husband?—Vitagraph—April 23.—Captain Scruggins and his wife Kate and Captain Sniffen and his wife Flora are neighbors. Both the women lost their first husbands in a shipwreck twenty years before. Jake, an escaped convict, finds a bottle on the seashore with a note and a photo inside which convinces him that he looks like the man who said in the note that he was about to drown and that the widow of the man is immensely wealthy. In turn the convict convinces both Kate and Flora that he is their husband. This leads to many comical mixups, until the village constable finally recognizes Jake and leads him off to jail.

Jean the Faithful—Biograph—April 24.—Odette, the lacemaker, preferred Pierre above all her suitors. Jean, hopelessly in love with her, kept his bitter secret to himself. When Odette's sight began to fail, through bending too closely above the lace, a pang shot through him at the thought of those lovely eyes dimmed forever. Pierre showed his real character when his sweetheart became totally blind. He soon found another bright-eyed maiden and ceased to visit Odette. Jean, bringing his little gifts of the wild flowers she loved, was startled one day when she called him Pierre. Her mother begged him to keep up the deception. He heard the doctor say that the great specialist alone could restore his darling's sight, so he took his savings and went to the famous man. After an examination the specialist gave hope that Odette might see again. The day came when she saw—and Jean dared not go near her. But she learned the truth on seeing Pierre with his other sweetheart. He came back and would have wooed her again, but she disdained his shallow pretenses and turned to the faithful Jean.

The Heart of a Waif—Edison—April 24.—Jane, a waif, is adopted by Joshua Jenkins, because it is cheaper to keep the girl and have her help with the housework than to hire a girl. Consequently, the poor little child is nearly worked to death. One night she runs away. Breathless, she stops for a moment in the woods, and overhears two tramps plotting to rob the farmer's house. She makes haste to the village and summons help. The realization of how near he came to losing his savings, lately drawn from the bank, causes Jenkins to cease his relentless grind for money, and he employs a girl to assist his wife and sends Jane to school.

The Conspiracy at the Chateau—Essanay—(Two Reels)—April 24.—Albert Roscoe and Beverly Bayne featured in a romantic love story that has its finish in a millionaire's northern home in the United States, and its beginning in the Franco-Prussian war. See review page 603, issue of April 17. N. G. C.

A Race for a Crossing — Kalem — April 24.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series, featuring Helen Holmes. Helen's road makes a trial run to decide whether it is to land the mail contract. Sharky, a rival road's agent, plots to spoil the run and secure the contract for his own road. He opens a waste valve on the tank of the engine and, when nearing Lone Point, the water tank runs dry. Helen comes to the rescue by mounting the new gasoline speeder and starting off with the mail for the end of the run. The plotters open a drawbridge which she must cross, but Helen outwits them by enlisting the aid of a track gang. She crosses the drawbridge and, after driving the speeder under the very nose of an express train over a crossing, she reaches the end of the run in time to secure the contract.

The Haunted Attic—Lubin—April 24.—John Edwards, a traveling salesman, arrives in coontown during the celebration and finds that all the hotels are crowded. He secures a garret room which is reputed to be haunted and, during the night, has many strange and comical experiences. He gathers his nerve toward break of day, however, and discovers that the suspicious ghost is nothing more than a parrot. On the same reel is:

The Fresh Agent—Lubin—April 24.—Scott, a fresh agent, is detailed by Martin & Company to sell a consignment of junk razors. He goes to the village in which Mazie, his sweetheart, lives, and disposes of all the implements at $5 each. A week later the rubes are found wearing court plaster on their faces and when Scott again visits Mazie he finds himself very unpopular in the town. Mazie, however, manages to square matters for him, and her father agrees to their wedding, after insisting that Scott accept one of the safety razors as a gift.

The Tyrant of the Veldt—Selig—April 24.—Peter Van Havelaar, a wealthy Boer farmer living in South Africa, demands payment from James Rutherford, an Englishman who has purchased a farm from him. When Rutherford is unable to meet the demand Van Havelaar says that if the Englishman's daughter, Helen, will marry him he will cancel the debt. Helen is in love with Robertson, also an Englishman, but sacrifices her own love that her father and mother may secure their home. Robertson, not knowing of her marriage, leaves for the diamond mines. A year passes, in which Van Havelaar proves to be a stern husband. Robertson returns and persuades Helen to take her little child and elope with him. Van Havelaar discovers what has happened and pursues them. A leopard attacks the child and Robertson proves a coward. Van Havelaar arrives in time to see his wife bravely save the child from the animal and, when she denounces Robertson, he takes her into his arms and agrees to be more considerate of her in the future. Thomas Bates, Marian Warner and Lamar Johnstone have the leads.

Pawns of Mars—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—April 24.—Dr. Lefone, a celebrated chemist, perfects a new explosive of tremendous power. Rizo Turbal, a spy to the emperor of a foreign country, visits him and determines to secure the secret of the invention. Florence Lefone, daughter of the chemist, upsets a portion of the explosive while in her father's laboratory and is blinded. Lefone makes up several bombs and Rizo steals most of them. John, Florence's sweetheart, invents a wireless apparatus for exploding the bombs. Rizo receives orders from his emperor to destroy the Secretary of War's camp and, after securing Lefone's bombs, soars above it in an aeroplane. He drops one of the bombs on an armored motor truck and blows it to atoms. John arrives with his wireless apparatus and counteracts a bomb which has been dropped above a company of infantry. Finally he gets the range of the aeroplane itself and it is destroyed in midair. The danger over, John returns to Lefone and Florence and all realize that they are but Pawns of Mars.

Mutual Program

Just Kids—Falstaff—April 9—Uncle Ned volunteers to care for little Helen and Lawrence while his sister is away. The children lead their dignified relative a lively chase. The climax comes when the children call in the police on seeing Uncle Ned open his safe. When the tangle is at last straightened out the children are packed off to their mother.

The Castle Ranch—American—(Two Reels)—April 19.—Lord Hickey buys "Castle Ranch" in America for his son, Algy. When the young man arrives he finds that the land agent has swindled his father and that the castle is nothing but a cabin with a painted mansion in front. He determines to get even with the agent, and this feeling is augmented by the fact that the agent and he both fall in love with the same girl. The agent discovers oil on the ranch and repurchases it from Algy at the original price. Algy then gives him the laugh and tells him that he "planted" the oil himself. A review appears on page 655 of this issue. C. J. C.

The Stain of Dishonor — Reliance — April 19.—Among the guests at the dance given by Colonel Lane in honor of his daughter, Bess, are Paul Greer and Frank Barton. Bess listens, bored, to Greer's protestations of love, and inwardly wishes that Barton, whom she loves, would declare his affections. Later on in the evening Barton does, and his proposal of marriage is quickly accepted. He explains to Bess that he is on a dangerous mission and tried to conceal his love for her until his work was accomplished, but could not. An hour later a masked man steps through the French windows of the darkened library and forces open the desk containing the plans of the new coast fortification, of which Colonel Lane is to be in charge. Barton follows him and covers him with a revolver. They struggle, arousing the rest of the guests. When the light is turned on Barton is found laying unconscious on the floor. He is accused of theft at first, but the imprint of an ink-stained hand on the desk blotter vindicates him and leads to Greer's arrest.

Oh, Daddy — Beauty — April 20. — A thoroughly enjoyable one-reel comedy, filled with laughable situations. Virginia Kirtley appears as an attractive widow, who moves into a house next to the one occupied by a sporty father and his two rattle-brain sons. Fred Gamble assumes the role of the father, and his acting is more than delightful, while Joseph Harris and Webster Campbell are ideally cast as the sons. The three men fall in love with the widow and seek to win her hand, but the father appears to have the inside course. The sons do not realize this, however, and when the father brings the widow home to introduce her to her new sons he finds them fighting to see which shall propose to her. C. J. C.

The Story of a Story—Majestic—April 20.—An author with ideals has trouble in disposing of them. Another author writes from purely mercenary motives, and his trashy, misleading stories are eagerly devoured by the sensational-seeking class of people. Times become so hard that the poor author sacrifices his principles, and writes a book dealing with the underworld. Exhausted, he falls asleep, and dreams that his published book has fallen into the hands of a girl who is weary of working and eager to join in the world's gaiety. Out of the pages step the characters of the story. They take the poor girl, May, out to see life (as the author has portrayed it). She is ruined and disgraced by the man and is denied refuge by her mother. She blames the author and his book for her downfall. The author awakens just as his daughter picks up the manuscript to read it. He snatches it from her, his dream still vivid in his mind, and burns it. That suggests a strong moral ending for his story, and he sits down at his desk to rewrite the manuscript, giving it an ending which teaches a lesson.

The Song of the Heart—Thanhouser—(Two Reels)—April 20.—Arthur Von Bauer, son of a German composer, puts his sorrow at the loss of his father and mother into music and calls it "The Song of the Heart." Stephen Richards, a piano player who lives in the flat below Von Bauer's, steals the melody and has it copyrighted under a different name. Mignon Ober, who lives over the young German, hears him working on his composition, and is charmed by it. She and Von Bauer are employed in the same cabaret. One night he saves her from the manager's insults, and after that they become firm friends and lovers. Just as Von Bauer finishes an operetta in which Mignon is prima donna, singing "The Song of the Heart," Richard comes forward with his copyrighted song, making the German an outcast in the musical world. Mignon tries in every conceivable way to establish Von Bauer's rights to the song, but in vain. Richards, shot in a brawl, confesses before dying. Von Bauer is reinstated as one of the leading musicians of the day and marries Mignon.

The Undertow — Thanhouser — April 20.—On arriving in the city, Jack, a country boy, falls in with bad companions, and becomes a member of a desperate band of crooks. In a fight with the police the band is cornered on the roof of an apartment house. Jack seeks refuge in one of the apartments. It happens to be one occupied by Detective Sergeant Gray and his sister, May. Jack makes a favorable impression on the girl, and she hides him during the search led by her own brother. He promises her to reform and breaks with Mabel and Bill, denizens of the underworld, who are responsible for his circumstances. Finding that they have lost their influence over Jack the pair plan revenge. After committing a safe robbery Bill leaves a piece of Jack's coat on the floor, throwing suspicion on him. May begs her brother to clear up the mystery of the robbery for which Jack is held. He, too, believes the young fellow innocent, and they lay a trap for Bill and Mabel. The latter taunt Jack, supposedly escaped from jail, with the story of how they framed up the case against him. The police, in hiding, hear the confession, and arrest the gang. His innocence proven, Jack becomes engaged to May.

She Walketh Alone — American — April 21.—Vivian Rich appears as a nurse in this production and gives a delightful character for portrayal. Early in life the nurse, then a country girl, fell in love with a young lawyer (David Lythgoe), and he returns her affections, though he was engaged to a society belle (Charlotte Burton) who was untrue to him. The girl sent him back to his fiancee, saying that he must keep his word to her. In later years she is called to his home to care for him when he is ill and discovers that his wife cares but little for him. She tells the wife that she is never understood. A year later, when a child blesses the union of the society girl and the man whom she now loves, the nurse is happy to think she has done the right thing. C. J. C.

The Disillusionment of Jane—Broncho—(Two Reels)—April 21.—Jim Norton, a good-looking young city crook, is caught in a burglary and forced to flee town. He takes refuge in a country village where, under an assumed name, he wins the confidence of the people. He elopes with Jane Ellis. Their horse becomes unmanageable and they are hurled into the ravine. Bradley, Jane's jilted lover, finds Norton dead and Jane unconscious. Revived, Jane picks up a wallet lying near Norton, which she recognizes as her father's. A search of his pockets reveals a letter proving that Norton was taking Jane away to place her in a resort. Realizing the fate she has so narrowly escaped Jane begs forgiveness of Bradley and gratefully accepts his assistance home.

Rose Leaves — Reliance — April 21.—Mildred's love for roses is second only to her love for her fiance, Harrison. Two years after their marriage Rose dies. Harrison finds consolation in their little daughter, Rose. Twenty years later sees him occupying a high government office and his daughter a society belle. Vera Deracq, a European diplomatic agent, gains Harrison's attention by her charms, and he soon becomes infatuated with her. Several times she all but wins him, and each time it is the sight of rose leaves and the memories they arouse that cause him to hesitate. Rose is in love with Dick Charlton, a clerk in the state department, but her father disapproves of the match because of Dick's small salary. The latter suspects Vera's designs and has Miller, a secret service man, investigate. Vera agrees to elope with Harrison if he will furnish her with certain state secrets. Rose leaves Dick and later interferes at the psychological moment and saves Harrison by causing Vera's arrest.

The Artist's Model—Domino—(Two Reels)—April 22.—While Marie was posing for Richard Kenton she was safe, but her wonderful beauty attracts the attention of Di Dion, another artist, with whom she is not so safe, as Kenton warns her, but she poses for him, anyway. At first she has no trouble and begins to think Kenton prudish. She sees her mistake when, on being lured to Di Dion's apartments by a message stating that her mother is there, ill, she is attacked by the artist. Kenton arrives on the scene just in time and rescues her. Violet Macmillan featured.

The Handicap of Beauty—Falstaff—April 23.—A pretty young stenographer finds her beauty a great handicap because all of her employers make love to her. She succeeds in obtaining a position with an elderly lawyer, who remains true to his wife and consequently unconcerned as to her good looks, but the wife happens to be of a jealous disposition and has the stenographer discharged. The lawyer recommends the girl to one of his friends who is in need of a stenographer. Mignon dons spectacles, dresses up to look as unattractive as possible, applies for the position, and is accepted. Boyd appreciates her efficiency, but pays little attention to her. Circumstances cause her to discard her disguise one day, and Boyd loses no time in convincing her that he is "the right man." Mignon Anderson and Boyd Marshall featured.

The Reformation of Peter and Paul—Falstaff—April 23.—Peter and Paul delight in teasing Betty and Bessie who live next door. The girls go away to boarding school. When they return Peter and Paul, struck with their beauty, make advances and propose. They are put on probation and, on serving their terms to the girls' satisfaction, are accepted. Morris Foster, Mignon Anderson, Arthur Ashley and Miss Hurley comprise the cast.

The Riddle of the Wooden Leg—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—April 23.—Sauntry, secretary to John Graydon, a wealthy banker, commits many burglaries in the city, avoiding suspicion by wearing a wooden leg while on his night raids. The Graydon diamond disappears. The chain to which it was attached is found by Limpy Fisher, a wodden-legged boy, who unknowingly sells it to a "stool pigeon." Limpy is arrested for the theft. Edith Lee, a noted scientific detective, obtains employment in the Graydon household as a maid and has no trouble in exposing Sauntry. The famous diamond is found and Limpy is set free. Leona Hutton, Jack Nelson and Harvey Clark featured.

God Is Love—Reliance—(Two Reels)—April 24.—While traveling across the continent little Virginia becomes separated from her father's party and wanders to the shack of Dad Bartlett, an old recluse and unbeliever. He grows to love her, and a sign on the premises reading, "God is nowhere," is changed to "God is now here." Five years later Robert Warren and his wife, with Warren's younger brother, an artist, travel through the region. The artist chances upon Virginia and sketches her. The Warrens recognize their lost child in the drawing and Bartlett gives her up. The old man spurns the proffered money, but accepts the pencil sketch of the little girl. Soon after he is found dead in his cabin, clasping the picture of Virginia, under which he has written, "God is love."

Hungry Hank at the Fair—Royal—April 24.—Hungry Hank wanders into a county fair and tries to climb the greased pole. Later, the Knock Out Kid, failing to show up, Hank takes his place. By means of electric plates fastened to the soles of his shoes Hank's gloves are charged, and everybody he hits he knocks flat. At last, however, the man who operates the switch falls asleep. The fighting then goes against Hank, but he ends up by getting even with the manager.

For the Honor of Bettina—Majestic—(Two Reels)—April 25.—Old Guiseppi makes plaster statues, and his granddaughter, Bettina, sells them. Above them in the tenement lives Antonio, violinist in a cheap cafe, who loves Bettina, but has never declared himself to her. Across the hall lives Marina, a sophisticated type of girl. She induces Bettina to accompany her to the cafe one night, where she has an engagement to meet two men. Antonio is more hurt than jealous at seeing the girl in the place, and on her return home reproaches Marina for leading Bettina into bad ways. The latter resents his interference and a coolness arises between them. The next day Antonio is horrified to see Bettina and her companion ushered into a private room. Assisted by an Italian detective, he forces the door and rescues his sweetheart. Her companion is killed in the quarrel and the detective saves his friend by arranging things to appear as though the man was a suicide. Bettina and Antonio become reconciled.

Fashion and the Simple Life—Thanhouser—April 25.—A model in a fashionable department store is greatly worried about her position. She knows that the inroads of time and the increasing plumpness of her figure will some day cause her dismissal, and she is in constant fear of being "discovered." At last the dreaded day arrives. A salesman for a wholesale house has paid the model many attentions, and she attributes it to her stylish appearance rather than to her personality. On leaving she tells him that she is going to Florida for a vacation. Later he decides to take a trip to Florida, but on the way changes his mind and alights in a little country town instead. It happens to be the same town

Wild Blood—Imp—April 19.—Walt Hiller, a young mountaineer doctor, kills Lester Browne in a feud fight, in which Lester fired first. The latter dies and his sister, Bess, vows to "have the blood of Hiller." He goes to the city and enters a hospital as interne. Bess also goes to the city and becomes a nurse. Five years later Bess is injured in a railway accident and taken to the hospital where Hiller is head surgeon. A quantity of blood is needed to save her life, and Hiller gives his. Later Hiller performs a dangerous operation; his assisting nurse is Bess. She does not know the doctor's identity until the latter has removed the bandage from his head. She aims a revolver at him, saying she intends to have his blood. He informs her that his blood is running in her veins. She surrenders the revolver, also herself, and the feud is at an end.

The Fatal Kiss—Joker—April 19.—Trixie, the Gaiety theater beauty, purchases a few articles in Schultz's store, and asks to have them delivered to her dressing room. Shultz intends to attend to the matter personally, but his wife interferes, locking him in the back room. Daylight Luke, a burglar, enters the store. Terrified, Mrs. Shultz dashes into the back room. Luke follows. Mrs. Shultz manages to obtain possession of his revolver, and holds Luke at bay while her husband goes to the front of the store to call up the police. Foxy Luke remembers his date with Trixie, and hurries off to keep it. She rewards him with a kiss on the cheek. He returns home with the imprint of Trixie's freshly made-up lips on his cheek. Things begin to hum when his wife spies it, and during the confusion Luke makes his escape. When the police arrive, Mrs. Shultz turns her husband over to them as the burglar, and poor Shultz is sentenced to ninety days on the rock pile.

The Stool Pigeon—Victor—April 19.—Jason, out of work, is befriended by Trumble, who is planning the robbery of the home of Mrs. Moore. Jason and Mildred Moore become friends, and through Trumble's urging, Jason accepts an invitation to the fancy-dress ball given by Mrs. Moore. Trumble has conceived a plan whereby Jason is called from Mildred's side while walking on the veranda, Mildred is abducted and a substitute left in her stead. The absence of a mole on the arm of the substitute, which mole Jason had particularly noticed earlier in the evening, causes him to warn the detectives. The substitute is unmasked and forced to confess the plot to steal Mrs. Moore's jewels. Trumble and his gang are arrested and made to reveal the whereabouts of Mildred. Jason rescues her and confesses to his having been an instrument, though an unwilling one, to the partial carrying out of Trumble's plan. He is forgiven and the engagement of Mildred and Jason announced.

The Whirling Disk—Gold Seal—April 20.—Dr. Beldon, associated with Prof. Dale, is in love with Aida, the professor's daughter. But the latter is affianced to Dr. Dyer, and before leaving on a trip into the mountains with her father, is subjected by Dr. Beldon to hypnotism by means of a whirling disk. She receives the autosuggestion that she is to feel the personality of Dr. Beldon every hour and gradually to forget that of Dr. Dyer. In the mountains Aida is told the strange story of a big dog that runs loose and sometimes assumes human form. She meets such a dog and makes of it a companion. Gradually the personality of Dr. Beldon seems to dominate her, and one day the dog assumes his likeness. The professor notices a change in his daughter; her meeting with the dog one day causes him to doubt the stability of his daughter's mind. Dr. Dyer is summoned and suspects Dr. Beldon of having submitted Aida to the autosuggestion induced by the whirling disk. Dr. Beldon confesses to this and is forced to undo the injury he has wrought, after which Dr. Dyer and Aida marry.

Eddie's Awful Predicament—Nestor—April 20.—Eddie, broke, receives a telephone call from his girl, Vic, who wants him to take her to the fair. Of course Eddie agrees, and, luckily, he meets a friend who owes him $5. There is just one quarter left out of the five when Vic decides that she is hungry. With a desperate grin Eddie agrees. The situation becomes even worse when Vic spies Mrs. Sponge and her daughter, whom, she insists, must dine with her and Eddie. As the dinner nears an end Eddie excuses himself and goes out and tries to sell his watch. A policeman takes him for a thief, relieves him of the watch, and orders him to move. A blind man's cup proves too great a temptation for Eddie, and he grabs it and runs. The policeman overhauls him again. When the blind man sees poor Eddie's position he gives him a roll of bills and tells him to enjoy himself.

The Affair of the Terrace—Rex—April 20.—Jasimine Roberts and her mother are guests at the Terrace, where also are Van Amkin and Baron Rosbaum. The former pays attention to Jasimine and is snubbed by Mrs. Roberts. The following morning the body of Mrs. Roberts is found dead at the bottom of the Terrace. Xavier Queer, a scientist, comes to the Terrace, fall in love with Jasimine and helps her to solve the mystery of her mother's death. He enacts the part of the murdered woman, late one night, and a man in monk's garb steals up behind him and is discovered to be the baron, at whose door the murder lies.

The Fear Within—Big U—April 22.—Brother Gregoire, a monk in a Mexican monastery, is deeply devoted to Pedro, a village boy. Much against his mother's and the monk's wishes, Pedro enlists at the first call for volunteers. He is stricken with terror by the sound of the firing in his first battle, and deserts. His mother realizes his desperate position and accompanies him to the monastery, where they intend asking Gregoire to hide him. A cry of astonishment bursts out from both Pedro's mother and the monk on sight of each other. Years before they had been lovers. Gregoire enlisted in the army, and was later reported dead. His sweetheart married Manuel, who was killed in the war just before Pedro's birth. While in the hospital, Gregoire heard of the girl's marriage, and took the vow in an effort to forget her. As Pedro's mother finishes the story a squad of militia is heard approaching. Gregoire hides the boy behind the altar, and tells the soldiers that he has not seen the deserter. Hearing the monk's sacrifice, Pedro loses all fear, and comes out and returns to the field of battle with the squad. Murdock MacQuarrie featured.

The Ladder of Fortune—(Two Reels)—Rex—April 22.—Louis D'Angelo, a wandering minstrel, becomes Signor Romana's protege and his daughter's lover. Another of Delicia's suitors, Colonel Navarro, forces Louis into a duel. The latter wins, but flees to America, thinking that he has killed his opponent. After some difficulties, he obtains employment and rises to a position of trust quickly. His employer receives a letter stating that one Louis d'Angelo has inherited a fortune from a Bowery recluse whom he at one time befriended. The employer schemes to marry Louis to his daughter. In the meantime, Delicia, not hearing from Louis, whose mail is being intercepted by Navarro, sails for America. She and Louis meet in a restaurant. Explanations follow, at the end of which they vow never to part again.

Mavis of the Glen—Laemmle—April 21.—Robert Graham marries Mavis, foster child of Old Peter, who has lived long in an out-of-the-way spot. Mavis' ignorance, when Graham brings her to his home, is embarrassing to him and his fashionable sister, Mrs. Nainby, induced him to go away and forget his ignorant wife. Graham does so, and Mavis improves her time by employing tutors and becoming a society favorite. As such she is introduced to Graham on his return. Her reception of him is cool. Mavis claims a note sent to Mrs. Nainby by the latter's lover, and thereby clears the latter of suspicion in her husband's eyes; but Graham has overheard Mavis and refuses to receive an explanation. Mavis returns to Old Peter and is sought out by Graham shortly, who seeks and obtains her forgiveness.

The Mystery of the Yellow Curl Papers—(Two Reels)—Imp—April 23.—Finding Flo too despondent over the poor business of her stock company to pay any attention to his thirteenth proposal of marriage, Ted determines to enliven business with some shrieking press agent stunt. He has Flo place a hundred-dollar bill in one of her curl papers, and stages a fake robbery, intended to get unlimited space in the newspapers with the story about the leading lady who curls her hair with hundred-dollar bills. Everything runs smoothly until Ted reaches the ground after taking the papers. Here he is pounced upon by the constable, who is on the watch for chicken thieves. Ted breaks away from him, and finds it pretty difficult keeping out of the way of detectives. He is saved from arrest by the apprehension of the real thief. Incidentally, the advertising has drawn attention to Flo's company, and, out of gratitude, she marries Ted.

The Artist and the Vengeful One—Victor—April 23.—Featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. Helen Adams leaves her hunting lodge to avoid Dr. Toms, whom she dislikes. In the woods she meets Felix Grim, a young artist, who falls in love with her at first sight and proposes. She rejects him, but accepts a painting of his as a parting gift. Learning that Dr. Toms has left the city, she returns home. Snowie, a criminal who was sentenced to Sing Sing by Helen's father, determines to kidnap the girl, intending in that way to get even with the judge. Learning one night that Helen and the butler are the only ones at home, Snowie storms the house. The butler is easily overpowered, and the men are about to go up for Helen when Felix arrives in answer to a telephone invitation from her. Both he and the girl are made prisoners, but Felix manages to escape, and is the means of rescuing Helen. Helen's mother and father soon after announce the young couple's engagement.

The War of the Wild—Bison—April 24.—Wallace, his daughter Marie and his animal trainer, Larson, go to Kronjze to replenish the Wallace circus menagerie. Plymton, a local hunter, helps Wallace and falls in love with Marie, thereby incurring the wrath of Larson, who also loves her. Larson attempts in various ways to effect the injury of Plymton, but is unsuccessful. His treachery is reported to Plymton and Larson is driven from the camp. He urges a band of Arabs to attack the Wallace party. They do, and Larson is about to escape with Marie when the latter's trained elephant rescues Marie and injures Larson. Wallace and Plymton and Marie are reunited and happiness seems in store for the young lovers.

When War Threatened—Joker—April 24.—Dinner guests of Mrs. Van Smithers go dinnerless for a considerable time, owing to the infatuation of the French cook and German butler for the English maid. The latter is discharged, but dispute still holds sway, this time over the war. Then Jack, a chauffeur, appears and helps himself to dainties put on the window ledge to cool. The cook and butler start after him, but find him and the English maid eloping in the chauffeur's car. They follow in a junk wagon, but arrive at the parsonage too late to prevent the marriage ceremony of Jack and the maid. They return to the kitchen, where the cook makes a cake and decorates it with the words "War Is Hell." It appeals to the guests, who had started to get their own dinner, and the junkman's revenge is satisfied by his appropriating the kitchen furniture.

Love and Handcuffs—Powers—April 24.—Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn featured. Dick Fuller, a secret service man, receives orders to investigate the report that Case Saunders is running an illicit still. Dick is greatly attracted by Elsie Saunders' beauty. Her brother, Red, shoots Dick and leaves him for dead. The officer is only injured in the arm, however, and Elsie bandages it and cares for him. Later Dick captures Elsie's father, but, by a clever trick, the girl outwits him, effecting her father's escape. Red Saunders falls from a cliff and is killed. The father and other son, Jack, make their escape, and Dick and Elsie become married.

The Grim Messenger—(Two Reels)—Big U—April 25.—Edna, a pet of society, tires of city life and visits the Canadian Woods. Here she meets and fascinates Jules, a French-Canadian trapper, who lives with his mother in a little cabin in the woods. Unused to the ways of a coquette, Jules takes Edna's smiles and kisses as evidences of love. For many weeks he mysteriously neglects his law studies. The reason is that he has built and furnished a little log cabin, which he expects to be his and Edna's home after their marriage. She laughs cruelly when he escorts her to it, and tells Jules that she was only amusing herself with him. The next day Edna leaves for home. Jules receives a letter from her just as he is about to leave for the far North with his gun and pack. Some distance out he opens it and finds a check and a note telling him that she is as free with her money as she is with her love. That night the trapper shoots himself. The day for Edna's marriage to a millionaire society man arrives. A gift box, marked "To be opened by the bride," arrives. In it Edna finds her note and check, and, wrapped up in paper, a grinning skull. In one of the eye sockets is a note which reads: "He belonged to you in life. He belongs to you in death. (Signed) His Mother." With a scream the bride throws the skull from her. The closing scene shows her hopelessly insane.

Poor Policy—L-Ko—April 25.—Billie's insurance policy is good for a loan of $3.75 or $5 in case of fire. He tries to collect on both clauses, but finds that he should have considered rivals and sweethearts in his plans. A rival extinguishes Billie's insurance blaze, and an ostrich swallows the bracelet which he has intended giving his girl. An unkind note which Billie has written falls into hostile hands, and when the fire department and hoses have had their turn Billie is ready to admit that he is through with insurance policies forever. Billie Ritchie, Henry Bergman and Peggy Pearce featurned.

Two Hearts and a Ship—Nestor—April 23.—Eddie, a barber, and Lizzie, the beautiful fruit vendor, are lovers. Tony takes Lizzie's flirtations seriously, and, incensed at her preference for Eddie, hires two gangsters to kidnap her. Eddie hears her scream and sets out in pursuit. He rescues her and takes her aboard a steamer. The villains follow, and again abduct fair Lizzie. Eddie misses her and a long chase ensues, in which Eddie is mistaken for the villain by the boat's sailors. The captain and Lizzie come to his rescue and the real villains are put in irons. Featuring Victoria Forde, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

The Tramp—(Two Reels)—Essanay—April 12.—Another Charlie Chaplin picture, in which the inimitable comedian appears as a tramp who saves a farmer's daughter from other tramps who attempt to rob her and is hired by her father as a farm hand. He tries all the different varieties of work which can be found on a farm and these efforts supply many laughs. The tramps attack the farm house and Charles proves a hero by driving them away. When he is injured and the girl nurses him, he falls in love with her. He is about to propose when her other lover arrives and claims her. Charlie then takes to the road. The Heart of a Painted Woman—(Five Reels)—Popular Players.—Selma, the daughter of poor parents, goes to New York to become a singer. Being unsuccessful, she secures a position as a model in the studio of a wealthy artist, and eventually becomes his mistress. Later the artist deserts her to become the husband of a prominent heiress, while Selma sinks lower and lower in the human scale until she meets "Young Spendthrift," who, attracted by her beauty, suggests to the artist a game of cards, the stake to be Selma herself. Disgusted at the affair, Selma flees, but is followed by "Spendthrift," who offers her large sums of money. Selma tells him if she had his opportunities in life she would have accomplished things instead of being the sort of woman she is. Struck with an inspiration, "Spendthrift" presents her with $100,000. Later "Wealth," father-in-law of Selma's former lover, covets the fortune of "Spendthrift" and brings about his ruin. Selma has devoted her money and time to creating a hospital for the care of abandoned children. "Spendthrift," learning the artist was responsible for his downfall, plots revenge, and invites all his friends, including "Wealth," the artist, and Selma, to a banquet, where they are to see him bury his past life. At the banquet—but words fall short of describing the allegorical ending of the picture, as one must see it in order to appreciate it.

Captain Courtesy—(Five Reels)—Bosworth.—Dustin Farnum featured in this thrilling love story of early California days, the scenes of which are laid in and about the Mission San Gabriel, which is thrown into ruin and decay through the Mexican rule of 1844. Outrages are perpetrated by the Mexicans, led by George Granville, a renegade American holding a commission in the Mexican army. The Davis family, consisting of Hugh Davis, his half-Spanish wife and their son, Leonardo, is broken up when Davis and his wife are killed by Granville and the Mexicans in the absence of their son. When Leonardo returns home he launches into a career as a masked highwayman, to avenge the death of his parents, though his whimsical politeness and unfailing courtesy soon earn him the title of "Captain Courtesy." On one of his rides he meets, rescues and falls in love with Eleanor, a ward of Padre Reinaldo. While calling on Eleanor, Captain Courtesy prevents Granville from stealing money and dispatches which have been hidden under the hearth stone, and for his love of Eleanor renounces his vow of vengeance and enlists with the California Riflemen, who are seeking to drive Granville and the renegades back into Mexico. After the mission has been set afire by the battle, Granville rescues Eleanor, and then in the doorway encounters Captain Courtesy and boldly proclaims himself as the murderer of the latter's parents. A struggle for life ensues, but Eleanor begs Granville's life, and when the latter yields, Granville slinks away, while Eleanor and Courtesy renew their love. See review on page 661, this issue.

Pathe News No. 28—Pathe.—This issue of the topical shows future policemen and firemen preparing for the civil service physical tests in a New York gymnasium; a demonstration of a new railway mail transfer device at Bloomington, Ill.; the arrival of the United Fruit Company's liner, Herodia, at New Orleans, after a collision with another boat at the mouth of the Mississippi; the annual Easter egg rolling contest on the White House lawn; the Republican parade following the election of William Hale Thompson as mayor of Chicago; the Easter parade in New York City and at Atlantic City on the board walk; scenes of recent fighting in Mexico just across the border from Brownsville, Tex.; and in the war section, scenes taken at Toul and Luenwlle, France, with the Russians in the Carpathian mountains and with the Australian troops in Egypt.

The Pursuit of Pleasure—Pathe—(Three Reels).—Rita, the pretty and vivacious daughter of the Reverend Cyrus Deane, revolts against being caged in the house and yearns to see the world outdoors. James White becomes acquainted with her and they plan to elope. Their scheme is successful, and a year later we see them married and living in nice surroundings—but childless. This latter is the cause of more than one quarrel between White and his pleasure-loving wife. Rita's father reads of the fast life she is leading, and, calling on them, blames White for leading his child astray and attempts to choke him. The realization that he, himself, is the cause of the girl's seemingly insatiable love of pleasure, because of having starved her craving for pleasure while at home, proves a bitter one. Through curious circumstances, Rita is taken with a longing for children, but before her prayer is answered she meets with an accident which deprives her forever of the joys of motherhood. Who pays?

Runaway June—Reliance—(Episode Fourteen)—April 14.—June is taken from her husband on the raft and carried away in a boat by Gilbert Blye. On the mainland, Gascon, the leader of a band of Apaches, sees them, and details some of his band to capture June. They succeed, and she is compelled to don the Apache dress and perfect herself in their famous dance. Marie, Pierre's sweetheart, becomes jealous of the newcomer and betrays the band's headquarters to the commandant of the military guard. A fierce fight ensues, in which the Apaches are routed. Pierre's suspicions as to the betrayer's identity are confirmed and he throws Marie off of the cliff into the sea. June is found in hiding by Gilbert Blye, who leads her away.

Paramount Companies Sign Long Contract

Other News of the Week

WITHIN the past week new contracts between the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Plays Corporation, Bosworth, Inc., and the Paramount Pictures Corporation for a period of twenty-five years were signed, this resulting in even closer affiliation between these concerns than they have enjoyed in the past, and assuring that all of the parties to the contract will work with a more united effort to improve the quality of productions on the Paramount program.

By the new contracts all differences that might arise in the conduct of the affairs of the company will be eliminated and it is further provided that all releases must measure up to a certain standard if they are to find a place on the program, thus giving the producer every incentive to make the very best pictures it is possible to make.

The Paramount Pictures Corporation is now entering on its third quarter, and it seems likely that the success which has attended its growth in the past will be materially advanced through the increased harmony between the manufacturers and the distributing organization.

Coincident to the signing of these new contracts, the executive offices of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Plays Company were moved from the Longacre Theater Building at 220 West Forty-eighth street, New York City, to a beautiful new office building at 120 West Forty-first street, where the entire fifth floor will be occupied by this concern. The old quarters having proven totally inadequate for the needs of the company, care was taken in the new building to provide ample space for the executive departments of the growing business. The fifth floor is divided into ten offices and is said to contain all the latest devices of modern office construction. On the ground floor a private theater with one hundred and fifty seats has been arranged, which will be used by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Company for the showing of its productions to the press and invited guests.

It is rumored that the expansion of the Lasky offices in New York will be reflected soon in the establishment of a special London branch for producing foreign episodes of Lasky features. The London director will have at his disposal artists and cameramen, and with London as a center will travel to the various locations required. This branch, for which Mr. Goldfish made initial preparations when abroad last year, will be established immediately upon the conclusion of the present European war.

Gustav Melies Dead

News has just been received in America of the death from typhoid fever of Gustav Melies, president of the Melies Film Company. Death occurred at Ajaccio, Corsica, and brought to an end one of the most interesting careers in the film industry. Mr. Melies is survived by a son, Paul Melies, who is now active head of the Melies Manufacturing Company.

Gustav Melies came to America from France in 1903 and established an office for the handling of Star films, produced by his brother, George Melies, in Paris, and some of the most famous old Star trick pictures such as "A Trip to the Moon" and "Cinderella" have not been forgotten even to this day.

The gradual changing and spreading out of the industry resulted in the trick films giving place to more dramatic productions, so in 1909 Mr. Melies organized the Melies Manufacturing Company, became the licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Company, and a director and shareholder in the General Film Company when that concern was organized. In the fall of 1910, Mr. Melies took charge of his producing forces in Texas and then in Santa Paula, California, where western subjects were being made. Following his resignation as a director of the General Film Company, Mr. Melies in 1912 took a stock company to the Society Islands, Australia, Java and Japan, but the hardships of this trip proved too much for his health and on his return to America in 1913 he was but the shadow of his former self. Late that year he retired from business, and spent his last months in France and Corsica.

Release Dates Announced

Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig, Essanay, Inc., announces this week the release dates for its first few months, and exhibitors the country over will be interested in knowing that the multiple reel subjects will be available in the following order and on the following dates: For the week of April 12, Lubin's "The Eagle's Nest" will be released, while Vitagraph's "The Juggernaut" will go to the exchanges on April 19. The offering for the week of April 26 will be Essanay's "Graustark" and the week of May 3, the Selig Company will offer "The Carpet From Bagdad."

Thereafter the releases are as follows: Week of May 10, Lubin's "The College Widow"; week of May 17, Vitagraph's "The Island of Regeneration"; week of May 24, Essanay's "The Slim Princess"; week of May 31, Selig's "The Millionaire Baby"; week of June 7, Lubin's "The Sporting Duchess"; week of June 14, Vitagraph's "The Sins of Mothers"; week of June 21, Essanay's "The Crimson Wing"; week of June 28, Selig's "The Rosary"; week of July 5, Lubin's "The Valley of Lost Hope"; week of July 12, Vitagraph's "Crooky Scruggs"; week of July 19, Essanay's "The White Sister," and week of July 26, Selig's "The Texas Steer."

The Baltimore Ball

Saturday evening, April 10, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Baltimore held its second annual ball at the Lyric in that city, thousands attending, and the occasion being declared one of the most enjoyable that has ever been staged in that city.

The ball was a success from every standpoint; more than fifty screen stars, representing a large number of companies, were on the floor, and all declared themselves as delighted with the reception accorded them and expressed the hope that they might at some future date again visit Baltimore.

"Pop" Lubin, one of the pioneer motion picture men of the country, was the first notable to be introduced from the platform and he received a tremendous ovation. Though his physician had warned him against any social activities, Mr. Lubin declared he felt amply repaid for deciding to attend the ball, and President Marion S. Pearce then proceeded to introduce, one after another, the famous stars.

Autograph collectors were busy throughout the evening, and nearly every player went home with cramped fingers from having signed his name so frequently. Each player as he was introduced made a short talk, and following a program of dances, a banquet was served in the concert hall of the Lyric shortly after midnight, covers being laid for more than two hundred. Many of the stars remained in Baltimore over Sunday, and Sunday afternoon were lavishly entertained at various resorts about the city.

According to a Baltimore paper the complete list of players who attended the ball is as follows:

From the Edison studios—Miriam Nesbit, Marc McDermott, Gertrude McCoy, Augustus Phillips, Viola Dana, Herbert Prior, Edward Earle, Mabel Trunnelle, H. G. Plimpton.

Lubin—Siegmund Lubin, Ruth Bryan, Ormi Hawley, Crane Wilbur, Earl Metcalfe, Howard Mitchell, John Ince, Florence Hackett, Mary Charleson, Lily Leslie, Joseph Smiley, George Spencer, Alan Quinn, J. Alan Boone, Harriet Hunt, Mrs. Crane Wilbur.

Vitagraph—S. M. Spedon, Mr. and Mrs. Vic Smith, Lillian Walker, Norma Talmadge, Edith Storey, Flora Finch, Mary Maurice, Dorothy Kelly, Wally Van, Maurice Costello, James Morrison, "Hughie" Mack, Mrs. F. M. Connolly, "Bobby" Connolly, Tefft Johnson and Kate Price.

Universal—King Baggott, Ben Wilson, Rosemary Theby and Harry C. Meyers.

Essanay—Francis X. Bushman.

World—Vivien Martin, Clara Kimball Young and James Young.

The success of the ball is largely due to the earnest work of the committee on arrangements, which consisted of the following: J. Howard Bennett, chairman; F. A. Hornig, Frederick Clement Weber, William Fait, Jr.; Frank A. Hornig, Chester A. Hicks, Nat B. Keen, E. B. McCurdy, Guy L. Wonders and Marion S. Pearce.

Dyreda with Metro

Inspired with a new ambition, the equipping of its new, magnificent, big studio at Fifty-eighth street and Broadway, New York, the Dyreda Art Film Corporation, formerly releasing through the World Film Corporation, will, in the future, release on the program of the Metro Pictures Corporation, inaugurating the new affiliation with the release of A. E. W. Mason's highly sensational fiction work "Four Feathers" with Howard Estabrook in the leading role.

The Dyreda Art Film Corporation, through an arrangement made with the directors of the Metro concern, is given a flexible arrangement whereby a sufficient amount of money will be allowed it per production to permit of its engaging absolute, qualified stars and securing the biggest and best picture material procurable.

Vitagraph Serial Soon to Begin

The Vitagraph Company is about ready to launch its new fifteen part serial "The Goddess," on which Director Ralph W. Ince has been working for the past two months. When "The Goddess" was contemplated it was definitely decided by Messrs. A. E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, heads of the Vitagraph Company, that the first episode would not be released until six were ready, so there would be no break in the continuity of the releases. Director Ince has just turned in the negative for the first episode that will start the first part of the serial, which will have its initial showing about the first of May. "The Goddess," which, when completed, will be the greatest achievement of the Vitagraph Company, was written by Gouveneur Morris, and will be presented by Anita Stewart, Earle Williams and Paul Scardon, portraying the principal characters in every episode. Extreme care in photography, direction, scenic effects, individual and ensemble acting, powerful dramatic scenes, thrilling moments and sequence in the action of the story will characterize "The Goddess" and stamp it as a Vitagraph masterpiece.

Slater Bill Killed

The California Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously reported "do not pass" on the Slater bill to prohibit a trainer from entering a wild animal's cage, according to messages received at the Chicago offices of the Selig Polyscope Company. Attorneys representing the Selig Polyscope Company stated that wild animals were trained by kindness and not by fear, and produced a number of pictures of animals and humans in affectionate attitudes to prove the contention. The committee laughed the bill to death.

Chaplin Alone Moves

Within the past week the Charles Chaplin company of the Essanay western studios at Niles moved down to Los Angeles with their full equipment, and Mr. Chaplin and his associates immediately began work in the new location.

A Los Angeles newspaper made the statement that very shortly G. M. Anderson and the other Essanay companies would also shift to Los Angeles, but Homer A. Boushey, general manager of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, denies that such a move is even contemplated, and asserts that the Chaplin company is the only one which will operate in Los Angeles, Mr. Anderson and his associates remaining at Niles, where the Essanay Company has a studio second to none.

"Who Pays?" Novelist Dies

Edwin Bliss, well known as a novelist and writer of short stories, died suddenly in the Vanderbilt Hotel in New York on April 14. Mr. Bliss' last work, and one which he had only just finished before his death, was the novelization of the Pathe motion picture series, "Who Pays?" These stories had been syndicated and are being published in leading newspapers all over the country. Mr. Bliss was thirty-six years old. Those who have read his "Who Pays?" stories greatly regret that he did not live to enjoy the increased fame and popularity which these stories were destined to bring him as time went on.

E. W. Bliss.

Blackwell to Join Lasky

Carlyle Blackwell, it is understood, is soon to become a Lasky star, and upon the arrival of Jesse Lasky in Los Angeles, will immediately sign a contract for a long period covering his appearance in many Lasky productions on the Paramount program. Mr. Blackwell, it is reported, is already at work in the Lasky studios under George Melford's direction in Harold MacGrath's story, "The Puppet Crown," with Ina Claire playing the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Blackwell.

To Open London Office

Announcement has been made that within the next thirty days the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., with main offices at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City, will open a branch office in London. The company already has about a dozen offices in the more important cities in the United States.

Starting primarily as the American distributing agency for the Pasquali Italian films, the Picture Playhouse people have recently been branching out until at the present time they are not only handling Pasquali productions but also the productions of the Terriss Feature Film Company and the Interstate Feature Film Company, both American producing companies, and have other important connections in immediate prospect.

Reading Exhibitors Busy

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Reading, Pennsylvania, is already hard at work preparing for the state convention to be held in Reading on June 7, 8 and 9.

According to present plans, Governor Brumbaugh will be present, also Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark, together with several other celebrated stars, and it is expected that the dance which will be held at the Auditorium will be one of the most elaborate affairs of the kind ever staged by exhibitors. Several hundred delegates are expected at the convention, and numerous film magnates, exchangemen and other visitors are also looked for.

At a meeting held last week at which Ben H. Zerr presided, the following committees were chosen:

Entertainment—J. G. Hansen, Frank D. Hill, Hen Johnson, H. J. Schad, F. A. Gould, Charles T. Miles.

Reception—C. L. Carr, Ben H. Zerr, L. B. Reinert, C. C. Keeney, all of Reading; G. C. Miller, of Plymouth; W. E. Peters, of Beaver Falls; George W. Benethum and Charles L. Snyder, of Reading.

Actor Wins Point

Henry B. Walthall, moving picture actor, can engage himself to whatever company he pleases, at least until after the trial of the suit brought against him by the Balboa Producing Company. This was the meaning of the decision last week of Judge Myers, when he refused to grant a temporary injunction restraining Walthall from acting with another concern.

The Balboa company alleges that Walthall contracted himself to it and then jumped to another company. Walthall denied he had made a contract, and since the facts in the case were in dispute the court denied the injunction.

Thanhouser Stars Wedded

Residents of New Rochelle, N. Y., especially those who daily assist Edwin Thanhouser in making motion pictures at his studio in that city, took a day off last week to attend the wedding of two real honest-to-goodness screen stars. The players who took the "leads" in this little romance of real life were Mignon Anderson, the charming leading lady who has been with the Thanhouser Company since it was formed and who has appeared in hundreds of roles, and Morris Foster, the handsome leading man who has been in pictures about two years.

Friday, April 16, was the date on which the knot was tied, and because all the Thanhouser players had watched the love affair of the two and because everyone in New Rochelle knew them, it was one of the gala events of the season in the town that is forty-five minutes from Broadway. Mr. and Mrs. Foster will spend their honeymoon in Florida.

Little Doris Baker, who was formerly with the Universal in stock, will play with Gene Gauntier and also with the De Grasse west coast company.

Bushman with Metro

Francis X. Bushman is to leave the Essanay Company and become a permanent star on the Metro program. Arrangements have been going forward for five weeks looking to the agreement which was entered into last week when Mr. Bushman, one of the most popular leading men in filmdom, agreed to appear exclusively on the Metro roster for a long period. The deal was consummated by Richard A. Rowland and Joseph Engel of the Metro Company, through Frederick J. Balshoffer, acting as intermediary, and Mr. Bushman representing himself. Just what salary arrangements were made cannot now be gleaned but the fact that Metro controls twenty high class plays and books, all calling for the Bushman type of leading man, establishes the fact that Mr. Bushman will be presented in big Broadway plays with a supporting cast of Broadway players and with women stars playing opposite him.

"Quality Films' will be the title of the company under which the Metro Pictures Corporation will release all Bushman productions. Mr. Bushman will appear, at regular intervals, on the program in all probability every six weeks.

Rolfe in Centaur Studios

The Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., is producing at the studios of the Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, N. J., a multiple reel dramatic subject to be called "The Flaming Sword," in which Jane Grey, late star of "Kick In," and Lionel Barrymore, who has been seen in many screen successes, are featured. Miss Diestel, late of the Edison Company, is cast for the heavy leads. Mrs. E. Middleton and Glenn White also have principal parts. The company, which is directed by E. Middleton, with F. Champury as technical director, has just returned from Portland, Maine, after several weeks' work taking outdoor scenes.

Giegerich Lands Big Job

Charles J. Giegerich, for a long time identified with the motion picture industry, has been appointed press representative of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc. From the fact that each of these companies has a large publicity department at its own plant, it would seem that Giegerich, representing all four at once, is going to be kept pretty busy.

Selig's First Spectacular Special

The Selig Polyscope Company has selected "The Carpet From Bagdad" as the first release to be made through the new Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Incorporated. This wonderful story in five reels, adapted from the popular novel written by Harold MacGrath, was produced by Colin Campbell and features Kathlyn Williams who is supported by an all-star cast including Wheeler Oakman, Guy Oliver, Eugenie Besserer and others. "The Carpet From Bagdad" will be released on Monday, May 3, and exhibitors should book direct from the general offices of the V-L-S-E. at 1600 Broadway, New York City.

Harold MacGrath tore a page from "The Arabian Night's Entertainment" and, in the atmosphere of oriental mysticism he wove the warp and woof of fatalism. It is a story of ancient Bagdad and of how a precious prayer rug, boldly stolen from the innermost shrine of a sacred mosque, passed from hand to hand and, in its travels imperiled the lives of two men and a beautiful young woman. There is a conspiracy on the part of a band of international crooks and it remained for Fortune, an innocent young girl, to finally circumvent the intrigue. Wonderful oriental atmosphere with streets in Cairo, Bagdad and Damascus, a sand storm in the great Sahara desert and a tale of how Mahommed, a guardian of the sacred carpet, is finally resigned to the inevitable, is realistically portrayed. Other Selig Spectacular Specials soon to be released through the V-L-S-E., Inc., include "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Millionaire Baby." "A Texas Steer," "The Circular Staircase," "The Garden of Allah," and "The Rosary."

Cort Comedy Films

The Harry Cort Comedy Film Company, of which Harry Cort, son of John Cort, is president, has announced the first line of comedy films which are to be issued by the concern. Work has already started on them in spite of the fact that the studio which the company is to have in upper Manhattan has not been completed. The first films which will be made are a series of episodes in which the principal character will be "Daffy Dam," a popular comic conceit by Knute Erickson, who has been on the stage in such style of buffoonery for many years. The scenarios for these comedy films have been written by George E. Stoddard, who wrote "The Isle of Spice" and "The Royal Chef," popular comic operas.

Knute Erickson.

Knute Erickson is well known in the West, especially for his impersonation of comedy characters of the Scandinavian sort. He made a big success in "Yon Yonson" and other serio-comedies of the same kind. He has had twenty years of experience on the stage.

Heffron Comes to Chicago

T. N. Heffron, the well known director of feature pictureplays, arrived in Chicago this week to join the Selig Polyscope Company as producer of Selig Spectacular Specials. Mr. Heffron has directed many of the Famous Players productions and has also produced in the past, many notable successes for Thanhouser, Biograph-Klaw and Erlanger Motion Picture Company, etc. Mr. Heffron will succeed Lawrence Marston, who has been producing multiple reel dramas at the Selig Chicago studios.

Mack to Star

Willard Mack, author and star of "Kick In," is said to be the new star chosen to appear in the Melies releases of three-reels which are to be known as Knickerbocker Star Features, and the first of which is to be released on May 12.

Thanhouser Ideals Realized

Eight feet-swinging individuals perched on a rail fence plus a man busily engaged in diagnosing the troubles of an auto stalled in the street was the rare sight which greeted the travelers on a certain road in the Bronx on the morning of Monday, April 12. Had those same travelers been interested enough in the identity of the knights of the wayside to linger on the scene until eleven o'clock they would have heard L. J. Rubenstein of the Thanhouser publicity department call the roll as the seven trade-paper representatives settled themselves in the auto's five back seats, preparatory to continuing their journey out to the New Rochelle studio.

Pepperday Inn and lunch was reached at twelve-thirty, and the Thanhouser studio, across the street, an hour later. Here Edwin Thanhouser greeted the seven press men, and, while the new Thanhouser brand cigars filled the office with smoke, the founder of the Thanhouser Film Corporation revealed a policy which will make Thanhouser and Falstaff pictures representative of the best one and two-reel films on the market.

His intention is not to commercialize the name or reputation of this or that actor or actress, but instead, to make his brands the things that count. A consistently good, even product will accomplish this, Mr. Thanhouser believes, together with a perfect organization working upon good scripts with the right kind of material which will turn out weekly releases, endorsed by their brand, an exhibitor can rely upon the same as he could upon the merit of a projection machine, screen, or camera carrying the brand of a company known for its dependable product.

To illustrate his belief Mr. Thanhouser showed his three first pictures that typify the work which will hereafter bear the Thanhouser and Falstaff names. The first, "The Actor and the Rube," is a good, wholesome comedy. Not uproariously funny, but it tells a story, and leaves one in good humor. The second, "Monsieur Nickolat Dupree," is in two reels and, without resorting to sensational or heavy acting, forcibly demonstrates how a young man's illusion as to a friend's character is supported at the psychological moment by the merest coincidences until, just before the denouement, the young man becomes almost insane in his fear.

The third picture, "Their One Love," is a single-reel subject; simple in plot, but filled with action, and beautifully produced.

When the showing was over L. J. Rubinstein again assumed the duties of host, and escorted all down to the studio floor where two close-ups were taken of the party, Edwin Thanhouser presiding. At four-thirty Lloyd Robinson and Lynde Denig found room on the front seat of the waiting taxi, while Leon J. Rubinstein, Wen P. Milligan, George D. Proctor, Wid Gunning, Horace Fould, and Charles R. Condon piled into the back, and the "forty-five minutes to Broadway" return trip was begun.

Red Seal Plays

It has been decided to call the Selig Spectacular Specials soon to be released through the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay feature film combination, 1600 Broadway, New York City, the "Red Seal Plays." It seems to be an appropriate name, for they are said to carry the red seal of quality. Release dates for some of the forthcoming Red Seal Plays follow: "The Carpet From Bagdad," released May 3; "The Rosary," released May 31; "The Millionaire Baby," released June 28; "A Texas Steer," released July 26.

Brock Heads Screen Corporation

The Radium Gold Fibre Screen Corporation has made Henry Brock, of the Mark-Brock theatrical enterprises, its new president by reason of Mr. Brock's purchase of a large interest in the company. Robert T. Kane, known to practically every exhibitor in the states, by the good-fellowship title "Bob Kane," was the company's former president. He also served as general manager and in this capacity will continue his connection with the company, which has offices on the tenth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City.

J. S. Kempner is another man of importance in the corporation. For some time he has been associated with Mr. Brock in his theatrical interests and his connection with the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Corporation is in the way of additional activities.

It was with the placing of a Gold Fibre screen in the New York Strand theater, a year ago, that Mr. Brock's especial interest in the product of this screen company was awakened. In Mr. Brock's opinion, and after his miscellaneous inspection of screens, the Gold Fibre screen was the one which best adapted itself for use in the big Broadway picture theater. Its installation followed and, as a result of the satisfaction it has given, the various Strand theaters already so named are to be equipped with Gold Fibre screens, as also will those now in course of erection.

Since the choice of screens for the Mark-Brock houses has devolved upon Mr. Brock, the latter has given the study of their manufacture considerable attention and now feels that he can qualify as a screen expert.

"I consider the question of screens as important a one as that of films," stated Mr. Brock recently when the subject of his new position was being discussed. "Quite as important, because no matter how good a film may be, if it is projected on a screen that does not do it justice, the film loses thereby. The quality of screens should show the same advance that the quality of films shows. One either helps or hinders the other—so why not keep abreast in their progress?

Not only the film shows improvement, but the camera, the methods of production, the work of the players; and this general improvement can best be turned to advantage by the exhibitors' use of a screen that keeps pace with the film business' forward march."

The factory of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Corporation is at Orange, N. J. Frank Meifield, who has fitted well into the position of factory superintendent, will be retained in that position.

Lubin Visits Southern Studio

Siegmund Lubin, head of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, has gone to Jacksonville, Florida, to inspect his southern studio and arrange plans for the summer. Mr. Lubin intends to establish in Jacksonville one of the biggest comedy studios in the country. Work on this has already begun. The studio has just been overhauled and enlarged and two comedy companies are at work at the present time, one headed by Billy Reeves, the famous English comedian, and the other by Jac Tucker, the comedian, writer and artist. Mr. Lubin plans to send a number of other prominent comedians to Jacksonville within the next few weeks.

Robinson Wins Again

W. J. Robinson was awarded a verdict of $189,765.70 in Judge Charles M. Hough's branch of the United States District Court in New York City on Monday, April 12, in the $1,000,000 breach of contract suit against Louis C. Van Riper and the Vanoscope Company, a concern formed to manufacture machines for projecting flickerless colored motion pictures.

The jury in the case was out two hours after hearing the testimony adduced by the plaintiff's attorneys to show that their client had entered into an agreement with Van Riper on January 13, 1913, whereby he was to have the exclusive right to sell the stock of the Vanoscope Company for six years.

Robinson alleges that the Vanoscope, while excellent in theory was poorly constructed, and that he had to spend approximately $35,000 in perfecting it before he was able to create a demand for the stock. After the machine had been improved, Robinson alleges, Van Riper, who held the patent rights, abrogated the contract and gave the exclusive right to sell the stock to other parties, the company, according to Robinson, getting $50,000 for transferring the stock selling rights.

In another suit mentioned in Motography several weeks ago, Robinson was awarded a verdict of $100,000 against Van Riper by the United States District Court for personal damages sustained when Robinson was ousted from the presidency by Van Riper.

Fight Films Barred

According to a special ruling of the treasury department at Washington, D. C., made last week, the Willard-Johnson fight films will not be shown in the United States, for the special ruling was re-enforced in a letter of instruction to all federal officials, authorizing them to confiscate any films of the fight which might be brought into the country.

The action of the department is based on the congressional enactment of July 31, 1912, which prohibits the exhibition of all fight films whether they come under the head of prize fights or mere boxing bouts, and in its note the department warns exhibitors and exchangemen, as well as importers, that they will be vigorously prosecuted if any attempt to show the pictures is made.

Supply Men Get Together

On Saturday and Sunday, April 10 and 11, the first get-together meeting of the film supply dealers of the United States was held at the Hotel La Salle in Chicago, and all of those present were so enthusiastic over the possibilities offered for closer co-operation between the various dealers that regular monthly meetings will probably be held in the future.

This first meeting was arranged by Messrs. E. E. Fulton of Chicago and F. J. Skerrett of the Nicholas Power Company of New York City, and was attended by all but four of the leading supply men of the United States. It is expected when the next meeting is held in New York City on the second Sunday in May that these other four firms will also be represented and the organization made complete.

At the Chicago gathering there were present: F. J. Skerrett of the Nicholas Power Company, L. C. Atwater of the Precision Machine Company, Mr. Edwards of the Picture Theater Equipment Company and J. H. Hallberg, all of New York City; Mr. Smith of the Feature Film Calcium Light Company and Mr. Hummel of the Ludwig Hummel Company, both of Pittsburgh; A. D. Flinthum of Kansas City, Frank Hough of George Kleine's and all the officers of the E. E. Fulton Company, the entire party being entertained while in Chicago by the Fulton Company, and a royal good time enjoyed by all.

The next meeting is scheduled for New York on the second Sunday in May, and it is expected in addition to all those who attended the Chicago meeting that there will be present William Oldknow of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company of Atlanta, Ga.; Mr. Schwab and a representative of Williams, Brown and Earle of Philadelphia, also somebody from the Metcalf Company of San Francisco.

The supply men seem to feel that this get-together movement should have originated long ago, and are so enthusiastic over the benefits it promises that undoubtedly regular meetings will be held hereafter and an effort made to atone for the failure to get together long ago.

Metro Companies Busy

Among the new plays and stars engaged by the Metro Pictures Corporation and its producing allies, during the past week, are "The Right of Way" by Sir Gilbert Paker, which B. A. Rolfe is thinking of using for a vehicle for William Faversham. The Popular Plays and Players announce the procuring of "Her Great Match," "Her Own Way," and "The Girl with the Green Eyes" from the Clyde Fitch estate, through the offices of Alice Kauser.

Final arrangements were also consummated with the same estate for the production by the Popular Plays and Players Company for Mr. Fitch's greatest success "Barbara Fritchie," which will be staged at Frederick, Maryland, where the historical incident occurred. B. A. Rolfe also arranged for the production of George Bronson Howard's great stage success "An Enemy to Society," and "Fighting Bob."

The Metro Pictures Corporation, now releasing one picture a week, under pressure of its exchanges, contemplates an increase to at least eighty-four a year, or about two features every three weeks.

Studio equipment and working companies are practically ready to go into the field. Rolfe has three companies active, the Popular Plays and Players two companies, Dyreda one company and the Tiffany Film Corporation contemplates early activity. "Quality Film," under which banner Francis Bushman will appear, will begin operations the moment Mr. Bushman announces himself ready.

Walker Whiteside in Films

Walker Whiteside, who is now numbered with the long list of stage celebrities who are under contract to appear for John Cort in pictures, is finishing "The Melting Pot," Israel Zangwill's great play, which had a tremendous success on three continents. The company for "The Melting Pot" has been chosen with great care and much time, money and patience has been expended on the big scenes in which hundreds of extra people have been used in addition to more than 200 horses. These large bodies of players have been employed in the realistic representation of the Kishneff massacre scenes and in the pictures of snowy wastes across which groups of prisoners are driven to political exile. The whole thing is topped off with a magnificent representation of the Metropolitan Opera House interior in which Mr. Whiteside, as the musician who has come to note and fame, directs an orchestra of 100 men before an audience of several hundred persons.

It was understood at the offices of the Cort Film Corporation, of which John Cort is president, in the Longacre building, that Mr. Whiteside was induced to go into pictures only after much persuasion and that when he did accede to the wishes of Mr. Cort, his services were contracted for at a salary larger than any ever paid previously to a male star in motion pictures.

"The Melting Pot" was picturized from Zangwill's play by Catherine Carr, a well known scenario editor and writer.

New Washington Office

The World Film Corporation has outgrown its quarters in Washington, D. C., and on May 1, Manager Ben Drum and his staff will take possession of the three story building located at 1004 "E" street, N. W. The new quarters will give Manager Drum 500 per cent more space and he hopes that within twelve months it will be necessary for the World Film Corporation to seek still larger quarters because of the increase in business that he is certain will be shown on the books of the corporation.

American Laboratories Prospering

The American Film Laboratories, Inc., of New York City, which recently opened its plant for the developing and printing of negatives and positives for the moving picture industry, is certainly getting a good portion of the trade. It has been very careful from the outset to produce only the highest quality of printing. Work is being sent from various quarters of the United States. The Laboratories is said to have every conceivable contrivance for turning out work and the capacity is over one million feet a week, so that it can handle any amount of trade offered. It is located in the heart of New York City, working under fire license, and this says much, for the laws of New York City are very stringent in this line.

Being located adjacent to the film district and having all the facilities for quick shipping, it makes it very attractive for the film manufacturer, and in addition, makes it a very safe and satisfactory place for the manufacturer's negatives, as the greatest care and attention is given to them.

The president and general manager is Louis B. Jennings, and its vice-president Edwin S. Porter, technical director of the Famous Players Film Company.

Another Side Trip

Another interesting side trip has been added to the Selig moving picture special tour of the Golden West and California which will start on Thursday, July 8 and continue for seventeen days, at the low rate of $128 the round trip including Pullman, hotel accommodations, etc. At Colorado Springs the tourists will be permitted to make another side trip, if they so desire, to Cripple Creek and the silver mines. It is a 102-mile ride by railroad along a wonderful scenic route. There will be no extra cost.

New Exchange at Toledo

Another Kriterion exchange will soon be opened. This new acquisition will be located at Toledo, Ohio, and will operate under the name of the Toledo Kriterion Film Service with offices at 428 Huron street. This exchange will be run by Messrs. Peckham and Wesch who are operating the Kriterion renting office at Detroit, Mich.

The Toledo exchange will open on April 19, the same date that the Detroit office opens. Messrs. Peckham and Wesch are well-known throughout that territory. These two enterprising gentlemen expect to soon open another branch at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Two Kleine Offices Move

The Atlanta and Toronto offices of George Kleine changed their local addresses last week. Hereafter the Atlanta office will be located at 71 Walton street, Atlanta, instead of 43 Moore Building. The Toronto office removes from 56 King street, W., to 96 Bay street, same city.

U. S. Buys Projectors

The War Department, through the office of Quartermaster General Aleshire, has just let a contract for sixty-six moving picture machines for the use of the army. The contract is for the Simplex machine and it has been awarded to the Precision Machine Company, of New York, at $206 per machine.

This means the War Department has set out on a new plan whereby Uncle Sam will endeavor to furnish amusement and instruction for his soldiers. A moving picture machine will be sent to the chaplain of each post and each locality where troops are stationed.

Not only will each garrison have the use of a machine, but machines will be provided for troops in the field, in the large field camps, and at places like Texas City and Galveston, where large bodies are assembled for possible use in Mexico.

Army officers are convinced the moving picture machine will be well worth the money in that it will provide amusement, entertainment, and also instruction for soldiers. It will tend to make the soldiers better satisfied and reduce desertions. Also it will tend to keep soldiers in camp at night.

The moving picture machine is already found at some of the post exchanges and at Y. M. C. A. establishments with the army. But an admission fee of two or three cents is charged for entertainment by these machines, which are not government owned. Under the new plan, the entertainment will be provided free of charge.

These machines are to go to the Philippine Islands, Honolulu, Porto Rica, China, Canal Zone, and the various army posts throughout the U. S.

Lubin's Naval Romance

What can be accomplished scenically as a co-ordinating factor in a well plotted, well acted three reel drama is illustrated in Lubin's "A Romance of the Navy," written and directed by George W. Terwilliger. The successful director of today must, of necessity, be a good detailist on matters pertaining to backgrounds for his plays and in this three reeler Terwilliger has proven that he is one.

"A Romance of the Navy" is a society story with a strong naval flavoring and all of the scenes are laid in

Edgar Jones, Herbert Fortier and Earl Metcalf in Lubin's "A Romance or the Navy."

Newport, the summer headquarters of America's most fashionable smart set and the site of the most important naval station on the Atlantic seabord. Judging from the three reels, Terwilliger must have "borrowed" the majority of the big show estates there, and these, together with the cliffs, the drives, the beaches, the naval places, and the various activities of social and naval life, give one an intimate knowledge of the attractiveness of the Queen of Summer Resorts.

The cast is an unusualy strong one and includes Ormi Hawley, Herbert Fortier, Louise Huff, Edgar Jones, Earl Metcalfe, Arthur Matthews, Eleanor Barry and Kempton Greene.

"The Sign of the Rose"

Thomas H. Ince's masterful production, "The Sign of the Rose," with George Beban in the star cast, made its initial appearance this week at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, the largest motion picture house on the Pacific Coast. Every seat in the house was occupied and hundreds of people were turned away, so great was the demand for seats. "The Sign of the Rose" is a combination of motion picture and flesh and blood drama, the last scene actually taking place on the stage by Beban and the principal members of the company whose faces appear on the screen.

The effect on the audience of seeing the players actually come to life in the finale was startling and created an immense amount of enthusiasm. The stage was a raised affair situated immediately in back of the screen. When the last of the ten reels had been run off the screen was raised and by an ingenious system of gradual illumination there appeared to the audience the pretty little Broadway flower shop in which the dramatic climax of Beban's play takes place.

Each player as he appeared in life was greeted with tremendous applause and at the close of the scene so great was the enthusiasm that there were cries for Ince and Beban, who finally were prevailed on to appear on the stage long enough to bow their thanks to the audience.

"June" Contest Explained

Exhibitors the country over are this week receiving data regarding the "Runaway June" free trips to California contest, the literature being mailed them explaining fully how it works and how each exhibitor can use it in his business.

The eight-page booklet prepared by the Serial Publication Corporation is interesting in every particular, carrying not alone the announcement of the contest, with detailed instructions how to put it on in each theater, but showing illustrations of the banners and coupon ballots that are available. Illustrations also show the various slides that may be used to advertise the contest and the proper way in which to keep the entry sheets, together with suggested copy for newspaper advertising for the theater running the contest.

Since the "Runaway June" contest means forty-eight absolute free trips to both of the great California fairs, undoubtedly exhibitors in every state in the Union will take advantage of the wide publicity campaign inaugurated by the Serial Publication Corporation and will reap their own little harvest by putting on a contest that is bound to be of interest to every woman in the United States.

Change Title of Diamond Special

The title of one of the early three reel Diamond Special films to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company through the regular service of the General Film Company has been changed from "Two Boys in Blue" to "Pals in Blue." Other Selig Diamond Specials which have been completed and which will be released in the near future are "Two Natures Within Him," "The Quarry," "His Father's Rifle" and "How Callahan Cleaned Up Little Hell."

Lubin Issues Scenario Pamphlet

The Lubin Manufacturing Company has issued an eight page booklet on scenario writing which contains much valuable advice to those who aspire to become silent dramatists. It explains many difficult phases of the work and contains a sample script. Amateur writers desiring copies may secure them by writing to the Lubin scenario department and enclosing a two-cent stamp.

Anna Luther with Selig

Anna Luther, the well known motion picture star, left New York City for the Pacific Coast this week, where she will join the Selig Polyscope Company. Miss Luther has won an enviable reputation in the silent drama.

Supporting Walker Whiteside

Valentine Grant, the charming leading woman who will long be remembered for her excellent work in "A Mother of Men," and in subsequent pictures which were made under the direction of Sid Olcott, has come to the fore again with one of the best screen roles of the season. Miss Grant is now playing opposite Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot," the famous play of Israel Zangwill, which is being made by the Cort Film Corporation. Miss Grant will be remembered as the Seattle girl who came east to pursue her studies in voice, but gave them up on account of a temporary affection of the throat and went into pictures. She enjoyed the work of appearing before the camera so much that she remained in pictures and went with Mr. Olcott's company to Europe on a tour which was cut short on account of the outbreak of hostilities last August.

Valentine Grant.

Although Miss Grant had played the whole gamut of parts, she became a great screen personality in the role of an Irish colleen, a part which she has in several of the newer Olcott pictures. Now she has found another character much to her liking in the daughter of a Russian baron in "The Melting Pot."

Next Pickford Production

The next Famous Players production starring Mary Pickford will be an artistic film version of the famous drama, "Fanchon, the Cricket," by George Sands, the celebrated French woman who wrote so many of the great novels of France, to be released on the Paramount program May 10th. The inimitable little star rises to great dramatic heights as the mischievous imp of a girl who was the scorn and byword of the village, and who, under the subtle influence of love, gradually develops a goodness of disposition and a general bend toward virtuous principles whereby she eventually wins the heart of the man she loves, and triumphs gloriously over the envy and hatred of the rustic community of which she has been a despised and rejected member.

The Charlie Chaplin Walk

The Charlie Chaplin Walk is the latest song and dance hit. It is a new fox trot and is captivating all who hear it. No one who cares for dancing can possibly keep their feet still when the music is played. The idea is taken from the funny Chaplin step, as the comedian is seen in the Essanay comedies. The song is published by the Harold Rossiter Music Company of Chicago and New York.

New Penny Candy Box Device

The Ipswood Corporation of 1 Madison avenue, New York City, has announced that it will shortly place on the market a new patented penny candy box for use in exhibition houses throughout the country. Many months of time and thousands of dollars have been expended by the manufacturers of this latest profit-making device for exhibitors to insure its efficiency in every possible way, and the result is a small and ornamental box, finished in any trim desired, holding fifteen pieces of candy or chocolate, and with a patented shutter which throws out paper and iron slugs.

On a recent test in a large local playhouse the box demonstrated to the satisfaction of all present its superiority over the five-cent holder slightly in use at present, and made a direct appeal to the many exhibitors on hand because of the reason that it demands but a penny outlay from the patron. It is expected that within the next month these penny boxes will be in use in the majority of the houses throughout the city and country showing pictures.

Raver Takes "Cabiria" to Cuba

D'Annunzio's "Cabiria" had its premier in Havana, Cuba, on April 17, the engagement preceding the grand opera season at the National theater. Harry R. Raver personally organized the exploitation. He sailed for Havana, accompanied by Rafael O. Galvan, lessee of the theater where "Cabiria" was first shown in Cuba. Senora Calvan and Mrs. Raver joined them on the voyage. Last season's Knickerbocker theater presentation was duplicated in Havana, including an orchestra of fifty men and a chorus of forty voices. The elaborate stage decoration by the Ackerman Studios and all the accessories used by Mr. Raver in New York were shipped to Cuba for use there.

Incidentally, the final disposal of the Cuba, Porto Rico, and all the islands of the West Indies territory, by Mr. Raver to a group of prominent business men of Havana, not identified with motion pictures in the past, and at a figure said to be more than double that paid for any previous film, brings to light many of the tricks of the trade usually employed in Cuba to obtain an important feature at the price of an ordinary release. The few buyers in Cuba will offer a low price for a second-hand copy. If this is refused they wait for thirty or sixty days and pick up a second-hand copy in Barcelona or some other country outside of the United States, bring it into Cuba and then register the title of the film in their own names. The manufacturer is thereby not only deprived of a sale, but he cannot thereafter use the title of his own film in Cuba.

"Cabiria," however, has been so closely guarded in its world-exploitation, protected in all countries by proper registration and copyright and kept at all times under direct control of the company that no smuggling or pirating has ever developed. Mr. Raver has been besieged by brokers and others acting for Cuban interests to dispose of the usual second-hand copies, but he held out for the company's figure, knowing the usual avenue for duping and pirating were closed to "Cabiria."

The head of the American Itala Company will remain in Havana until the engagement is well under way and will then return to New York.

The Cruise of the Universal Special

BY ED MOCK

Some of the early risers at Kansas City, Mo., the morning of March 8. Photo taken in front of Union Station.

IN THE second installment of this serial you first discover the crew of the Big-U joy train in the passenger shed of the Kansas City Union station. A band was playing and a mob was yelling. There were big transparencies and banners. The peace of the party was disturbed and the paste-board brigade reluctantly pulled themselves together to see what it was all about. R. C. Cropper, manager of the Universal Film & Supply Co., at Kansas City, pleaded guilty and he suffered himself to be kidnapped and we took him along with us. J. D. Thatcher, of the Maze Theater, Kansas City; J. J. McCarthy of the Laemmle Film Service, Omaha; C. D. Mattingly, manager of Universal Film & Supply Co., Oklahoma City; William Roper, Council Bluffs, Ia., and maybe some more got aboard the train with proper credentials. We put most of them in upper berths—U. K. Whipple refusing to give up his place in the aisle.

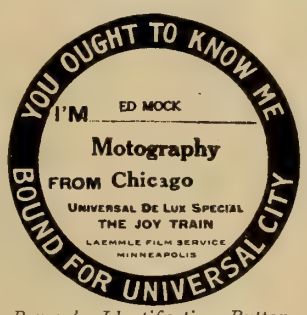
The excitement started after the train headed west out of Kansas City. Those of you who know little about the west will please remember that Kansas and Nebraska are separated by an imaginary boundary line. It can't be seen with the naked eye. On either side of this invisible mark there are great embankments of state pride. Kansas City—the great bulk of it is in Missouri—but Kansas claims it. The rivalry that exists between Omaha, Van Husan's town, and Kansas City, Cropper's town, is intense. Carl Laemmle may build a high fence to divide the territory. If it wasn't for Jim Bryson the fence would have been built long ago, but Bryson claims customers in both places—so what's the use!

* * *

I lived in Van Husan's state for fourteen years. I have whooped it up for Nebraska till my whooper refused to work, but now that I look back upon those earlier days I know Kansas City has the edge on Omaha by several serial film lengths. The town has the true western (or snap) atmosphere.

* * *

The morning of March 8 was gray and dank. Even the cheering of the great mob that greeted us couldn't change the temperature. It all but froze Mr. Laemmle's smile. There was two feet of snow all over the place. With this handicap Kansas City registered in strong favor. Some of us had breakfast with Fred Harvey, the dearly lamented who gets you all the Santa Fe way. Others found regular eat-shops up town. A lot of the folks preferred the street cars to the jitney busses—the fare being equal and the safety more apparent on steel rails. There were many of the party who failed to discover the second Kansas City. Bill Oldknow, Frank Flaherty and Claud Plough would have seen three or four later in the day, but it was all too early for them. As it was, they barely made the picture that was taken at the station. But there are two of Kansas City—count them—one in Missouri, where Cropper holds forth, and the other in Kansas. The first named is the second largest city in Missouri, and the latter the first city in Kansas. Kansas City was named after the Kansas Indians—the Smoky tribe. Early literature referred to them as Konzas, or Konseas, or Kaws. In this particular Kansas City has nothing on Omaha, for it was also named after Indians. Both places vie with each other in packing houses, parks, rivers and hills. The New York Life Insurance Company buildings are alike in both towns. The Universal films in both places come from the same spot. The exact center of the United States is as far from Kansas City as it is from Omaha. Kansas City has eighteen railroads and one depot. Omaha has as many railroads and two depots. Besides Fred Harvey doesn't run the restaurant in Omaha. That is as much as I dare say and retain Van Husan's friendship. At that, I think Kansas City, all by itself, is larger than Omaha, South Omaha and Council Bluffs.



Bryson's Identification Button.

Kansas City, Kansas, boasts 90,000 inhabitants, and doesn't come under the wing of the K. C. in Missouri. So much for that. Cropper will tell you more if you book through him.

* * *

The journey towards the west was uneventful. The scenery never changes in Kansas or Nebraska. The railroads follow the valleys—there are the bluffs to the south and the rolling prairies to the north. Us farmers discovered a new portable granary for the wheat that told us very plainly that bag manufacturers have suffered a shrinking market, but maybe they found a new outlet among film makers! Those granaries were planted alongside the threshing machines—the grain going direct to them. Kansas farmers all had 'em, right alongside the straw stacks.

* * *

Alfred Milton Handy, the train stenog., was kept on the jump all day, sending telegrams and letters. Some of these film folks have never learned how to rest or take a vacation. Homer Croy roped in a bunch of us to issue Laemmle's Ledger—a daily newspaper. Think of it—starting the tongues to wag like that. It was awful. No one should have known that Mrs. Fichtenberg walloped Mesdames Hoffman, Wolff and Depinet at rhum that day and the succeeding days. It was her winning way. Who should care who lost a poker chip, when the kitty scored a hundred a night? It was a bad place for a daily newspaper. Even Joe Mitchell Chapple was editing the May number of the National Magazine, but it was his business. Croy hasn't made an accounting for his concession, so Magie tells me, and the scandal attaches that there was regular paid advertising in the Ledger. For that matter, Croy had his paper printed, whereas the suffragette edition never materialized for want of funds, quite likely.

Herman Fichtenberg at breakfast and ALL ALONE.

It was the same day that Jim Bryson distributed his "You Ought to Know Me" medallions—about the size of a plate, and George Magie cluttered up the train with the Black Box puzzles. Art Schmidt and George Weeks—the fat men of the party—took to the puzzles like their lives depended upon it. Don't it beat the cards how fat men like to work? Not so with James Arthur Eslow. He couldn't see the shoe pegs with a telescope.

Ladies' night in the observation car.

You would never guess this to be the dining car.

* * *

I promised a night view of the diner, which, at great risk of life and limb, I'm able to present in this number. This view was taken between Streator and Galesburg, looking east, the first night out from Chicago. In the immediate foreground, to the right, is Pierpont Jackson Morgan, contemplating the problem whether to join the twenty-five-cent limit or buck the $5 proposition. The shining dome—that hairless knob—belongs to Hy Mayer, editor of Puck. It won't be fair to tell you all about these social gatherings, but Herman Fichtenberg told me in a burst of confidence that he wasn't making any investments this year. That's why he is standing out, presumably. I saw Carl Laemmle draw to a straight, open in the middle, and get it. That's the brand of Laemmle luck we read about. It was no place for boys!

* * *

Another flash light shows that there are tricks in all trades. Jack Marks can be seen as a man of good standing, hovering near his family. He never missed a second of the big game up front and always won! Also in this picture, where the ladies predominate, are V. R. Carrick, L. M. Swaab, C. E. Van Duzee, J. I. Schnitzer and Ned E. Depinet. Mr. Mustard was there holding up little Jack, but he's lucky in having a witness. Kitty Kelly is the pensive little mite in the foreground, coaxing a dimple. I would dwell on the rest of the party, with the exception of Miss Schnitzer, but the ladies are all married and their husbands were along. You'll find them out as the plot thickens.

* * *

I want to whisper right here that following every noon-day luncheon, the officers and exchangemen of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. went into executive session and mulled over trade conditions as they existed in all parts of the country.

See you in Denver next week. Give a look.

President Smith Discusses New Policies

Better Times For Exhibitors

A BRAND new phraseology for the feature program, as different from the ordinary program made up of single and multiple reel stuff, has been coined by Albert E. Smith, president of the newly formed Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig, Essanay, Inc.

In discussing the new combination of film manufacturers with MOTOGRAPHY's New York representative, Mr. Smith hinted that, in his opinion, the film business is now divided into wholesale and retail sections, and that the V. L. S. E., Inc. operating as combined manufacturers, will tend to the filling of wholesale orders, while the General Film Company will continue to supply a regular program of one, two and three-reel subjects and will act as the retailer, and the exhibitor can patronize either or both, as his needs require.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc.

Mr. Smith laid particular emphasis upon the fact that the formation of V. L. S. E., Inc. means no break whatever with the General Film Company, that on the contrary, the formation of the new concern will prove a great benefit to the old one, since it will be able to supply and make good with a big feature service, which the old company was totally inadequate to handle and for which in order to approximately break even, an exhorbitant figure had to be charged.

"The exhibitors wanted big things for small money, and in trying to meet the situation, the General Film Company not only lost heavily on the financial end, but failed in many cases to please its customers," said Mr. Smith. "Something had to be done to bring order out of the threatened chaos and the organization of V. L. S. E., Inc. followed. As a matter of course, it was an inevitable movement, the only way out of a tangle of conflicting interests: and the natural result of the immense development of the motion picture business during the past year.

"The General Film Company will continue to handle everything up to three-reel features. It is just two months since they discontinued handling our big features, which we will exploit in the future. The three-reel feature was a new departure formed to meet a long-felt want. I figured it out last December, and on January 15 it went into the regular Vitagraph service for the first time, and other licensed producers were quick to follow suit. The General Film Company is able to supply it at a standard price, which gives satisfaction to all concerned.

"The whole crux of the situation lies in this: Where it is necessary to make $100,000 in order to break even on a big production, you've got to be able to handle things on a huge financial scale. The General Film couldn't meet that requirement, but with our combined assets of from eighteen to twenty million dollars we can and will. Now this means that the exhibitor will be given a free hand in the choice of star subjects. The stuff will not be of the cheapest brand, but the best. We place no restrictions upon him as to whom he must deal with. If he wants to rent pictures from an outside source he is quite at liberty to do so. We offer him our regular program to use, as he wants it—for a week, month, year, anything. We intend to hold his trade by merit, not coercion. But the great point is this: By being enabled to give his patrons star features of first-class drawing power, the exhibitor will get bigger financial returns than ever before, and be in a position to pay better prices for his material. The men who are most deeply interested in the production of moving pictures are a unit in declaring that the day of the cheap film is past. And the exhibitors themselves realize this fact. Only last week a well known exhibitor, whose name I prefer not to mention for business reasons, voiced his thanks for the coming of a new regime which promised him better times.

" 'Under the old order of things,' he said, 'matters were going from bad to worse. I don't complain of the way the General Film people treated me. They probably did the best they could under a severe handicap. But I didn't receive first-class material for the price I was compelled to pay, and what excuse could I make to my customers? Nowadays the public is educated up to a high standard in the picture game, and the troubles of the exhibitor mean nothing to the patrons. You've simply got to give them the worth of their money if you want to stay in the business.'

"This man's complaint is only one among hundreds. From all over the country I have received letters from managers of exchanges deploring prevailing conditions and hinting that they could not see their way clear to weather the storm impending unless relief came. Gradually, but surely, the individual appeals for help have grown in volume until such protests have become united in one huge universal wail. That help we are now in a position to give, and I believe it won't be very long before the success of the new movement will be demonstrated.

"The old-time licensed producers suffered badly from what might be described as dry-rot. They were content to go along in the same rut, using only the regular moving picture actors and depending on archaic stuff and scenarios especially written to suit their needs. The new policy brings into being the picturization of well-known dramatic successes and the engagement of stage stars. All of which means not only a lavish expenditure of dollars, but the ability to pick and choose such features as will catch and hold audiences. Right there is where I feel confident that the vast experience of the members of our combination will prove of value. There is no greater gamble in the world than the motion picture game, and one must be prepared to expect fortune to hit an ugly blow now and then. But as veterans we may hope to be able to evade the making of many mistakes which might trip up novices.

"In order to make this combination a success it was necessary to plan every move as carefully as a general laying out a campaign of battle. There had to be men at the head of the forces responsible for the operations decided upon. Nothing could be left to chance; we had to be absolutely certain that the roads we had to travel were properly laid out, so to speak, for the progress of our heavy artillery.

"Let it be clearly understood that money alone will never make a success in this business. It needs a long and careful training to fit a man for its responsibilities. Experience is the thing that counts. I know of no other commercial enterprise on earth that has suffered so much from the ill-advised attempts of visionary dreamers, with worlds of wealth in view, to double their capital.

"From the time that the moving picture business began to appeal to the people it has suffered from the interjection of persons with some money and anxious to take a chance in what looked to them like the most glorious El Dorado that the world has known since the golden days of '49. Read up on American history and let the average man soak into his system the hysterical rush across the continent when it became known that the precious metal was waiting to be dug out of the soil.

"I have a brother who is a miner and has been fairly successful at the game of digging out the stuff. And a few weeks ago he said to me:

" 'Albert, take my word for it, there's more money been sunk in the earth than has ever been taken out of it!'

"Well, the same criticism applies to the moving picture business. Hundreds of well-meaning people with small capital have yielded to the lure of big money supposed to be made in pictures, and have come out at the small end of the horn, with nothing but bitter experience to show for their expenditures. What could they expect, looked at from a strictly logical standpoint? Take the case of a man who is good for anything from ten to fifty thousand dollars. He has heard of the fortunes made in pictures. Why can't he go ahead and do likewise? It doesn't occur to him that he is sadly handicapped when running in opposition to people who have not only tossed away thousands of dollars, but have years of experience behind them to warrant them in gambling still further. Your man of small capital doesn't think of those things. He plunges—loses and then goes home broke, wondering why he failed to hold his own with veterans of sixteen years' experience. Sad, but true! There is no place for the novice in the moving picture game.

"And while we are discussing this subject, permit me to say that it is the small fry of limited capital who are responsible for much of the adverse legislation passed against moving pictures. It stands to reason that a big combination cannot afford to take chances. The little men are the people who keep the various censor boards throughout the country in active operation. The little chap will take a chance on pictures not only sensational in the extreme, but sensual. He is in the game to save his puny capital.

"We who have millions instead of thousands of dollars at risk cannot afford to take chances. Just one bad break in a single feature would cost us thousands. Naturally, we keep on the safe side of the path.

"The active management of the V. L. S. E. will be in the hands of Mr. Walter W. Irwin and myself. Messrs. Spoor of Essanay, Lubin and Selig are on the board of directors and will meet to formulate policies. We have started with one feature a week, and expect to increase it to two per week by the first of September. Therein lies our strength. We are able to turn the stuff out faster than the demand. At the present time we have sixteen features listed, all of them finished and ready. We could, if necessary, release five- and six-reel features two a month. It is no idle boast to say that among us four producers we control the greatest number of dramatic successes and stage stars in the motion picture business.

"Our first release was the 'Eagle's Nest,' now in screen evidence, a Lubin feature. The second is 'The Juggernaut,' a Vitagraph feature, released Monday. The third is the Essanay 'Slim Princess,' and the fourth Selig's 'Carpet from Bagdad.'

"Our exchanges as already established are as follows: Mr. Partridge will have charge of our New York office, with Walter W. Irwin as general manager. Von Runkle represents us at Chicago, Hebrew at Philadelphia, Brandon at Atlanta, Meade at Dallas, and Pierson at Kansas City. Inside of another week we expect to have offices in Boston, San Francisco. Columbus, Portland and Salt Lake."

Posters Better Than Ever

Marked improvement has been shown in posters issued by the Selig Polyscope Company and the attractiveness of the one, three and six sheets are being generally commented upon by exhibitors and others. The Selig company does not believe in depicting illustrations on posters that do not appear in the motion picture programs. It also believes that dignity and good taste are essential qualifications in poster work. The highest priced sketch artists in this country have been engaged in viewing the picture programs of the "Diamond S," and they then make sketches which are later painted in water colors. From these paintings the final selections are made. An unusually liberal supply of posters, heralds, cards and other original publicity matter will be furnished all motion picture exhibitors hereafter by the Selig Polyscope Company. Beautiful posters in attractive colors will accompany all "Diamond Specials," in three reels, and all "Spectacular Specials" in five or more reels.

What Are the Experimenters Doing?

ONLY a couple of years ago the air was filled with the cries of delighted experimenters who had just perfected a successful system of color motion pictures, a practical method of synchronizing talking pictures, or a highly promising arrangement for projecting stereoscopic pictures. Of course stereoscopic projection never got any farther than the promising stage—although we do not care to go on record as stating that it never will get any farther. But talking and colored pictures (as separate innovations, not combined in one) actually were on the market in a nearly perfect state. What has happened to them? Has no one any further interest in these supposed refinements of the art?

Rumor had it that many of the big manufacturers were maintaining experimental departments whose sole function was the perfection of color and talking picture schemes. Now rumor is silent on the subject. We can only conclude that the development of the ordinary silent, monochromatic picture has been so strenuous that it has demanded all of everybody's attention. With it the public has been satisfied and so has not called for any additional attractions in the way of color and noise and stereoscopic perspective.

The talking picture progressed far enough to show that the value of the vocal feature was overestimated by its promoters. No system so far exploited added very much to the interest of the plain picture.

Stereoscopic projection is still an attractive field for investigation; but there are so many scientific obstacles in the way of success that we cannot expect any immediate developments.

But colored pictures are always attractive. The people like them. Indeed, it is safe to say that good natural coloring will make a feature out of a mediocre subject. And there have been so many experimenters engaged at the task of perfecting color systems that we had hoped by this time to see evidences of success. Instead, the whole subject seems to have been dropped.

Business is good in the kind of films we have at present, and shows no indications of an immediate slump. But we do not believe that is a good reason for neglecting the development of new refinements, artistic novelties that will tickle the optic nerve of the easily ennuied public. And if such work is being done at present we hear nothing of it.

The Influence of the Screen

ANY institution as popular as motion pictures must, we are bound to admit, have considerable influence on the daily lives of the people. Possibly the producers themselves do not realize how great that influence really is. People are accustomed to relying on their newspapers for much of their directions for living; they consciously accept the influence of printed type. Everybody reads the paper and lives by it. The business man determines through it whether he shall leave the house without his overcoat or umbrella. His only acquaintance with the candidate he votes into political office is by reading about him in the daily print. His wife and daughter use the same means to discover that hats will be larger this season, and shoes will button down the back. And mother redecorates her house and selects her medicines by what she reads in the newspapers.

The rule of the motion picture may not be so complete and far reaching as that of the newspaper; but it is becoming a large factor in shaping modern tendencies of living, especially among that class of people who lack a well-rounded education—the class who most need influence and are most susceptible to it.

An actress in an eastern company is said to have received a letter recently from a lady who had had some difficulty in restraining a young protege from unwomanly rudeness and bad manners. The girl was finally convinced of the desirability of culture by being persuaded to watch the mannerisms of the actress, with the result that she was able to gain a degree of refinement that surprised her patron.

There are doubtless thousands of examples like this, where the pictures accomplished a great deal of good, to every case where they exerted a bad influence. That the bad effect is equally possible with the good it would be idle to deny. Nevertheless, when we read (as we still do occasionally) the plea of the frightened boy that he burglarized a store or shot his playmate because he saw it in the picture show, we know that he is merely using the easiest excuse he can find. For no pictures shown today offer the boy, or the man either, any encouragement to a life of crime. Not even the half-wit or the "moron" could well miss the fact that in pictures the crook always gets his punishment. If there were any possible way of getting such information, it could be shown on the contrary that the picture shows have saved hundreds of young men from contemplated irregularities, by convincing them graphically of the futility and immorality of such acts. That influence overbalances a hundred to one, the barely possible impulse that might arise in a defective mind to commit some depredation the suggestion of which was flashed on the screen.

The visible and beneficent influence exerted by the pictures in the less spectacular ethical considerations, however, is decidedly important. Pictures not only appeal to, but are within the means of all classes of people. They show each half the answer to the old question of how the other half lives. Those who have already achieved culture and refinement are presented inoffensively with an insight to the needs of the poorer classes; while the dwellers of poverty row are brought within a few feet of the Fifth avenue drawing room with its rules of etiquette and its culture. Each side is benefitted; but, as is fit, the slum dwellers get the most good out of the influence because they receive a liberal education in the ways of refinement that they could get in no other way.

Lewis' Film Decalogue

On the way home from Dahlonega, Ga., where he has just finished the filmatization of Roy Norton's novel, "The Plunderer," for the Fox Film Corporation, with William Farnum and an unusually good company, Edgar Lewis, the director of this and many other big feature photoplays, was asked by his "happy family" of screen artists to give his opinion of the most important qualifications for a successful actor in the silent drama. The following was the result, which Lewis put in the form of the decalogue or Ten Commandments of Filmdom:

1. Thou shalt be honest.
2. Thou shalt have good health.
3. Thou shalt have courage.
4. Thou shalt have ability as an actor.
5. Thou shalt use thy brains.
6. Thou shalt understand the possibilities of the camera.
7. Thou shalt not be lazy.
8. Thou shalt not be stubborn.
9. Thou shalt be enthusiastic.
10. Thou shalt be a team-worker.

These would be good qualifications for any business profession.

Many Visitors at Universal City

Visitors by the hundred en route to the San Francisco and San Diego Expositions are taking advantage of the Universal's invitation to stop over at Universal City and see the films made. Under the direction of the company guides, there are at all times groups of a score or more roaming about the grounds being initiated into the mysteries of the picture game.

Episode Three: "The Pearls of Paulette."
(Part Two.)

"While the car went whirling dizzily around the track," continued Paulette, who was relating her adventures to those assembled in the studio of the Jumbo Film Corporation, "Harold was busily devising a way in which to stop the car and save my life. Beholding a small boy with a bow and arrow in his hands, standing near, Harold seized them, and sent an arrow several inches into the gasoline tank of the speeding car as it passed him. The liquid was soon exhausted and the car came to a stop. While Harold was caressing me, Owin bit off several of his finger nails by way of expressing his indignation. A week later Owin induced me to visit a submarine which was anchored in the harbor and then, in the absence of the crew, turned on the power and we went skimming out to the sea. The vessel was submerged, and then Owin, thinking me helpless and completely in his power, made his way to the torpedo tube and thought to escape, leaving me to die at the bottom of the harbor. Again Harold proved himself a hero. Going to the bottom of the sea in a diver's suit he stove in the side of the boat and rescued me. Try as he would, however, he could not enter the torpedo chamber in which Owin was confined by the water pressure, and the villain is still there for ought we know." "How amazing!" gasped M. A. Gnate. "Some hero!" scoffed "Di" Rector, the $1,000,000 per year producer of the Jumbo concern. "Speaking of heroes," murmured Sue Brett, "wait until next week, when Flossie Gay brings over her handsome friend, Tim Snorton, then you'll see a regular heero in real life."

Some Current Releases Reviewed

"The Diamond From the Sky"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

A GREAT throng of Chicago exhibitors, representatives of several trade journals, newspaper and exchange men of Chicago, and others gathered at the Fulton exhibition rooms to behold the screening of the first three chapters of the new North American picturized novel, "The Diamond from the Sky," the release of which will begin on May 3.

Before the film was screened the gathering was briefly addressed by President J. R. Freuler of the North American Film Corporation, who introduced President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company, who told of the hard work being done by producers and players in preparing the story. Joseph Finn, of the Nichols-Finn Advertising Agency, then told of the big advertising campaign which his agency is inaugurating and which will be carried on in newspapers, trade journals, with heralds, posters, slides and banners at the theaters and through other mediums of reaching the public.

Ere the showing was over those who could find words in which to express their opinion of the picture were unanimous in declaring it one of the best that they had ever witnessed, both from the standpoint of photography, the sustained interest of the romantic story and in its sensational and thrilling developments that are bound to pull the public back to the theaters in which it is to be shown; while many others were so charmed by the picture that they found themselves utterly unable to put into words their appreciation.

Lottie Pickford in the leading feminine role of Esther, proves satisfactory in every respect and by her grace, youth and winsomeness seems likely, judged from the wide publicity to be given the picture, to leap into fame almost equal with that of her sister, "Little Mary" Pickford. other screen stars in daring sensationalism. William Russell and George Periolat are also given roles calling for the utmost ability and unquestionably they are making good in the difficult parts assigned.

novel, when slides were thrown on the screen which relate what has transpired in the early chapters and brings the story thoroughly up to the beginning of the chapter then about to be run. By the use of these slides the manufacturer is able to get what has transpired before, without having, in any way, to shorten the current installment of the novel by waste of film footage in repeating what has already been seen by the great majority.

The prologue of the story begins in the year 1685 when Sir Arthur Stanley, banished from England, comes to Virginia to live. While riding through the woods one day he is captured by Indians and tied to a stake. As his life is about to be taken by the savages a blazing meteor streaks across the sky and falls a few yards away. The terrified savages fall on their faces, believing the meteor to be an omen of displeasure from the "Great Spirit." Stanley, taking advantage of their panic, frees himself from the stake and declares himself a supernatural being. In the meteor, when it cools, he finds a gigantic diamond, which later becomes known as "The Diamond from the Sky," and the heirloom of the Stanley family.

The prologue ended, chapter one of the romantic novel begins two hundred years later and we quickly discover that a feud exists between Colonel Arthur Stanley and his cousin, Judge Lamar Stanley, Virginia aristocrats and descendants of Sir Arthur Stanley in the prologue. Their jealousy over the possession of "The Diamond from the Sky" is intensified by the fact that the death of a noble kinsman in England makes the first born male child to the elder branch of the Stanleys heir to the Stanley earldom in Warwickshire, England, as well as possessor of "The Diamond from the Sky." Judge Lamar Stanley has a son, Blair, heir presumptive to both of these honors, and when a child is born to the young wife of Colonel Arthur Stanley it proves to be a girl. The mother dies and Colonel Stanley, chagrined and disappointed, determines to substitute the male child of a gypsy, born in a gypsy camp just adjoining the Stanley home, for his own, thereby creating an heir for the earldom and "The Diamond from the Sky."

Hagar, the gypsy mother, weak and sick, is horrified when her husband sells the child to Colonel Stanley, he believing that the gypsy mother has consented to the sale. Hagar manages to elude her husband and sets out to reclaim her baby boy.

Meanwhile Judge Lamar Stanley and an English lawyer, representing Earl Stanley, learn of the birth of Colonel Stanley's son and visit the home to verify the fact that the child is really a boy. The colonel stands facing the outer door while Judge Lamar Stanley and the lawyer are discussing the birth of the child with the family doctor, and as the gypsy woman, Hagar, starts into the room Colonel Stanley utters a shriek of terror and falls unconscious across the library table. Chapter two, entitled, "An Eye for an Eye," will be reviewed next week.

Reliance's "Captain Macklin"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS' novel, "Captain Macklin," has found its way into film circles under the guidance of Director John B. O'Brien, and through the medium of the Reliance brand of Mutual Master-Pictures. It is four reels in length. The mere mention of the name, Richard Harding Davis, recalls memories of previous adventurous, red-blooded young Americans, and this story, too, has its fearless, clean-cut hero. But, though he has been seen in numerous characterizations before, he is still a likeable fellow, and one who is an adept at stirring up things in a way that appeals to the picture-going public.

Central America affords a home for most of the plot, and the rest of it finds interpretation in and about West Point. Taken generally, the picture is staged with conscientious regard for the spirit and environment of the story. What the forest scenes lack in the maze-like density for which the wilds of the tropical countries are noted, the battle scenes and other exterior locations more than make up for in realism and atmosphere.

Jack Conway plays one of the leads as Royal

On being dishonorably discharged from West Point for breaking the rules, Royal Macklin, a born military man and the grandson of a distinguished United States army officer, decides to cast his lot with General Laguerre, a soldier of fortune, who is at present engaged in leading the forces of Garcia, the deposed president of Honduras. Laguerre, a great friend of the late General Macklin's, makes Royal a captain in his command.

The revolutionists seize upon the Honduras property of Royal's uncle. This causes the latter to sail, accompanied by his daughter, Beatrice, for the scene of the trouble. They are held captives in the executive mansion, the father because he strikes one of the high officials, and Beatrice because her beauty has attracted the offended man.

Royal's uncle manages to escape, and makes his way to Laguerre's headquarters. Captain Macklin, learning of Beatrice's predicament, induces the general to make the attack at once. President Alvarez' forces give way before Garcia's followers, led by Macklin, and, after a short scrimmage, the capitol is retaken and Beatrice rescued. The girl's father withdraws his objections to the lovers' marriage, and the fade-out shows Beatrice resting in Royal's embrace.

"Thirty," a Newspaper Story

Reviewed by Niel G. Caward.

A NEWSPAPER drama in which one is given glimpses of the inside of a newspaper office, showing a real city room, a real composing room, a real press room, and best of all, a convincing newspaper yarn is awaiting the public on May 8, when Essanay will release a two real subject entitled "Thirty." Victor Eubank is the author of the newspaper playlet and his story runs smoothly along to the climax which is naturally reached and one is never under the impression that the action or the story is being forced at any point.

Francis X. Bushman has the role of Dick Thompson, the star reporter of the Clarion, while Beverley Bayne is cast as Ellen March, several times a millionairess, and with a deep hatred for all newspaper men, while a clever supporting company assists these two.

As the story opens we see Ellen March, the heiress, in a tantrum over her discovery in a newspaper just published, that the engagement between Count Dangloff and herself is soon to be announced. The count calls and Ellen gives him plainly to understand that she does not approve of his letting the public know of their coming engagement.

As the count departs from the March home, he is surrounded by a score of reporters, but eventually wades through the crowd to his waiting automobile and departs.

Meanwhile, Dick Thompson, star reporter on the Clarion, is assigned to the story by his city editor and on ariving at the March home he sneaks quietly around the corner of the high wall that surrounds the March estate, and eventually succeeds in scaling it.

Arrived on the other side, he is seized by several servants, who attempt to put him off the grounds. The commotion attracts the attention of Miss March herself and when she understands why Thompson is being set upon, she indignantly tells him just what she thinks of all newspaper men.

Finally Miss March suggests that Thompson choose between being arrested for breaking into her grounds or accepting a position as her personal newspaper representative, and assume the task of preventing any news whatever regarding her getting into the papers. Thompson accepts the new post.

When an afternoon newspaper arrives with a still further story regarding the March-Dangloff engagement, Thompson is cautioned against letting any further publicity appear, and in order to distract the attention of the reporters from Miss March, he concocts a wild eyed anarchist story about old man Rockford, a millionaire neighbor of Miss March's, hinting to the city editors of the various papers that several anarchists are planning to blow up old man Rockford and his home, and the reporters thinking it the sensation of the day, soon all but forget Miss March, devoting all their attention to Rockford and his home.

To keep the story at fever heat, Thompson arranges a gigantic fire-cracker in the shape of a bomb and prepares to explode it on the boundary of the Rockford estate. As it happens, however, some real anarchists are plotting against Rockford, and are seen and followed by the police, who have been brought to the neighborhood by Thompson's story.

draws suspicion on himself and the police begin a wild chase for the bomb thrower, which ends in the arrest of the real anarchists, and the apprehension of Count Dangloff, Miss March's suitor, who proves to be the chief of the anarchists. Miss March is so delighted with the heroism of her personal representative and his devotion to her interests that she demands of her lawyer that he arrange to buy a newspaper for her that she may make Thompson its editor. The lawyer surprises her by telling her that she already was controlling an interest in the Clarion.

"When Justice Sleeps"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE scales of justice are brought into the limelight in the third three-reel release of the Pathe "Who Pays?" series, and the red-tape and formality with which they are bound lose some of their awe-inspiring glitter in the process. "When Justice Sleeps" tells the story of a man who, though possessing a criminal record, is better in heart and deed than many who bask in the sunshine of ease and respectability, but who is the law's only available answer to the public's clamor for legal vengeance for a crime, and therefore must suffer.

Circumstantial evidence is against the man, and the prosecutor feels that he is doing his duty and satisfying his supporters at the polls in sending him to prison. But no one feels obligated to investigate into the man's motives in opening the bank safe, and his own sense of honor and desire to shield his sister prevent him from pleading in his own behalf. To all intents and purposes the man is guilty, legally if not spiritually, and, the mechanical demands of the law satisfied, the judgment is pronounced, the prisoner sent off, and the court cleared for the next case.

Ruth Roland and Henry King are featured in this graphically portrayed and staged drama which takes its natural course without an expedient to bring about a cheerful ending. Realism and art mark every scene, as quality does the technical and photographic ends of the production.

Briefly, the story is of a young married couple who have considerably more debts than funds. This is due to the wife's extravagance. Gradually her demands for more money overcome her husband's sense of honor and ambition, and he "borrows" some money from the bank in which he holds a trusted and promising position. His race track and stock market speculations prove profitable, and he finds himself able to pay back the bank's money. But the bank is closed and the bank examiner will be around in the morning.

The wife's brother, formerly a crook, but now endeavoring to keep straight, is used as the cat's paw. He succeeds in opening the bank safe and returning the money, but is caught in trying to make his escape. Circumstances brand him as guilty, the law certifies it, and he is sentenced to prison, while the real criminals are left to the mercies of their accusing consciences.

"The Day of Reckoning"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

"THE Day of Reckoning," the two reel American release for Monday, April 26, is a human interest story of sure appeal.

The leading roles are in the hands of Vivian Rich and David Lithgoe and these two stars are supported by such favorites as Louise Lester, Jack Richardson and Charlotte Burton, all of whom seem well cast and thoroughly capable of performing the work required of them.

Though the greater part of the story is played against interior sets, there are a few exteriors of wondrous beauty, and the interiors representing the home of the millionaire merchant are satisfying in every detail.

Martha True, an innocent young woman, deceived by Carl Burton, a gambler and sporting character, into the belief that she has been honorably married to him, is brutally deserted by the designing man just as the story opens, and left to bear her disgrace alone. After her child is born she realizes that she must secure employment if she is to exist, for Burton left her almost penniless.

Accordingly Martha arranges with Mrs. Crew, a motherly lady who lives on the floor below, for the care of the child, and after several unsuccessful attempts, finally secures work behind the counters of a large department store, her only recompense in life being the week-end visits made to see her baby.

Finally the strain of work and the sorrow of being separated from her child prove too much for her and the girl breaks down. The tender hearted bachelor and millionaire owner of the department store, John Walton, takes the girl to a local hospital and there does everything possible for her comfort. Her employer's interest becomes more than platonic as time passes, and he finds himself a daily visitor at the hospital.

Finally Walton suggests to Martha that she marry him, and the girl, unable to resist the temptation to be honorably married, consents to an engagement and then hastens to Martha with a plan for eventually bringing both Martha and her baby again into her life. Martha at first objects to the plan, which is that nothing is to be said to Walton about the child, but, after the marriage, Martha is to receive a note saying that the child's mother is dying, and requesting her on account of their long friendship to care for the baby and the lady who will bring it to her.

In due time Martha and Walton return from their honeymoon, and a few days later Mrs. Crew calls with the baby. Martha pretends to be astonished at reading the note that Mrs. Crew brings, but when she shows it to her husband, Walton readily agrees that Martha may adopt the child and care for the kind lady who has brought it to her.

Meanwhile, Burton learns of the deception played on the husband and arranges with his accomplice, Rita Marr, an adventuress, to expose Martha to her husband, unless the girl agrees to share her prosperity with the blackmailing pair.

Feeling that her husband will discover her secret and never forgive her, Martha, on receiving the blackmailing note, decides to take her child and leave the house forever, but in the midst of her preparations Walton unexpectedly returns home, and demands an explanation.

Martha tells him her sad story and shows him the note sent by Burton. At first the husband is loath to forgive her for deceiving him, but his indignation against Burton conquers this feeling, and as the picture closes the husband folds his wife and adopted child in his arms and prepares to defy the blackmailers.

Selig's "The Reaping"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

THE contrast furnished by the difference between the desire of a childless wife for the little boy she has adopted and the intense longing of the boy's real mother for him is the idea which stands out above all else in the two reel production entitled, "The Reaping," which will be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, May 3.

Because of the delicate nature of the subject, a great deal of emotional acting is required on the part of the two actresses who have the leading roles. Virginia Kirtley and Eugenie Forde enact these parts and their work is indeed praiseworthy. The situations through which they are put are trying, but never once does their work falter from the standard which they set in the opening scenes. Robyn Adair, E. J.

Brady and little Otto Cytron have the supporting roles and also do splendidly.

The settings are in accord with the general worth of the production and, while the photography is inclined to waver in a few places, there are others in which it is exceptionally clear and this more than evens up the score in this department.

We believe that this picture will hold the interest of the average audience by the charm and grace of the natural development of its plot, without considering the acting of the two ladies, which we have mentioned before. It is not a "thriller" or a "big feature," but it is a two-reel film which gives more than mere entertainment during its running.

The story: Robert Chambers and his wife are childless. Edward Gray is a ne'er-do-well and constantly applies to Chambers for loans. Mrs. Chambers' mother writes to her, suggesting that she adopt a child and then possibly her husband would become interested and spend more of his time at home. Mrs.

The child restored to its mother.

Chambers ponders over the letter, when she meets Robert, the little son of the Grays.

Gray, who spends all his money in drink, is refused further loans by Chambers. Mrs. Chambers suggests to her husband that they adopt a child and the husband consents. He writes Gray a letter in which he tells him that he will cancel Gray's indebtedness if he will permit him to adopt his child, and in addition will give the Grays a thousand dollars, providing they relinquish all claims to the boy.

Mrs. Gray is loath to give up her beloved little one, but Gray tells her that the child will grow up in luxury, and when he grows up he will thank his parents for the opportunity.

The child is given to the Chambers and Gray proceeds to spend the thousand dollars in riotous living. Mrs. Gray, mourning over the loss of her child, becomes ill. Physicians say that medicine will do her no good, that the restoration of her child is the only hope.

Gray meets death in a saloon brawl. A neighbor writes to Mrs. Chambers, telling her that Mrs. Gray is dying and, for humanity sake, to bring her child to her. The child is permitted to greet its loving mother and Mrs. Gray recovers her health. Mrs. Chambers comforts Mrs. Gray and finally comes to understand what it means to have a mother's true love.

Majestic's "Man's Prerogative"

Reviewed By Charles R. Condon.

MANY pictures have been made which touch upon the "single or double standard for men and women" subject, and some, which center about it, but comparatively few, if any, which take up the argument as comprehensively as does "Man's Prerogative," a four-reel Mutual Master-Picture of Majestic make. Through a logical domestic drama it pictures the results of a woman's rebellion against the first law of society. The timeliness of the subject and the masterly manner in which it was filmed should awaken great response among the American people.

The play, an original script by Frank E. Woods, was produced by George Nichols, and beautifully photographed. The action might be termed quiet, so devoid is it of sensationalism, but behind each situation and in every development can be felt a great force, an unexplainable, almost portentous, something which one feels, is impressed by, and still cannot define. Several times the story nears the climax, but before matters progress so far that either the wife or the husband must admit that their belief is wrong, something intervenes, things take on a new complexion, and a new angle of the argument is exposed.

Robert Edeson, a familiar figure, both on the speaking stage and in motion pictures, impersonates the celebrated attorney, Oliver. Mr. Edeson is a good type for the part and does some excellent work in it, but his legal talent would have been much more in esteem had he not been seen pleading at the bar. Mary Alden's portrayal of Elizabeth enlists immediate sympathy for the wife who, though being her distinguished husband's equal in every way, is expected to submit to treatment such as is accorded a squaw among the Indian tribes. Charles Clary does well as the artist, who casts off his model (Billie West) with no more regard for her than were she a toy or an old, discarded easel.

A pretty romance between Oliver, a famous lawyer, and Elizabeth, a magazine writer of repute, culminates in their marriage. She does not understand how, after their marriage, her husband can justify his flirtations with Catherine, a pretty little model, and her protestations only call forth surly replies, the trend of which are that he, being a man, has a perfect right to do as he pleases.

A coolness arises between them, and Elizabeth resumes her work on the magazine. Oliver becomes angry because she has several times been seen in the company of Charles, the artist who illustrates her stories, and he has one of his men draw up an agreement of separation. Elizabeth's pride rebels at this, and she demands a divorce or nothing. Oliver refuses to divorce her, and so the situation remains as before.

In time a child comes. Oliver will not believe that it is his, and again he scolds Elizabeth for her wilful conduct. Jealousy causes Catherine, Charles' model, to hate her master, and one night, enraged by his toast to Elizabeth, she shoots him. Dying, he makes a statement which clears Elizabeth entirely. Oliver returns home to find his wife heart-broken over the death of her child. They come to an understand-

IN THE third episode of the Lubin serial, "Road O' Strife," the story advances quite a bit, for Alene, the heroine, is much attracted by Abner Gray, a new character in the story, and at the same time we are shown a silver cup which hangs beside a certain mineral spring and is sure to have some vital connection with the later developments of the story. Gilbert Jerome also arrives to carry out his plan to destroy the documents which were sought by the murderer of Alene's guardian, so as the picture ends the story is apparently at one of the most vital points in its unfolding.

Alene slowly becomes used to the conventions of the world and begins to consider her personal appearance, hoping thus to attract the attention of Robert Dane, who is still convinced apparently that she does not know what love is and keeps his distance.

Later Dr. Duncan and Dane visit the mineral spring beside which a silver cup is hung. Engraved on the cup is a warning that the water from the spring has great curative power, but that if the cup is used for any other draught it will cause instant death.

Alene, upon learning of the cup, says that Professor Gershom placed it by the spring when she was a child, but that she can remember nothing about it except that point.

While walking one day in the wildwood Abner Gray, a young villager, meets and is much attracted by Alene. The girl treats him with a frank kindness, and Dane, seeing the meeting from a distance, thinks her to be in love with Gray. As the picture closes Gilbert Jerome arrives in the village to carry out his mission of destroying the documents which, if kept by Alene, will enable her to dispossess him of the fortune which has been stolen, and he registers an oath to even take Alene's life if it becomes necessary in order to secure the documents.

THE identity of Blye, the mysterious gentleman of the black vandyke, his relations with June, and the young bride's reasons for leading her distracted husband a fourteen episode chase are all explained in the fifteenth and last chapter of the Reliance serial, "Runaway June," entitled, "At Last, My Love." The title seems a bit abstract, but it sums up, in four words, Ned's devotion, and faith in June, which caused him to follow her through an incessant war with Blye and his followers.

Blye discovers that Ned is also a passenger on the Bermudian, and plots to have him put in irons as a lunatic, as he did on the journey down to Bermuda. But Ned outwits him, and lands in New York it as the name of the boat which carried the Blye party, and, thinking that they might be returning on it, he makes haste to investigate. His guess proves a good one, but, on being approached by the sleuth, Blye pushes him aside, jumps into the automobile in which the others are already seated, and drives off.

Wolf follows in a taxi, and sees the party stop before a big building whose sides and roof are of glass. The mystery deepens as the doorkeeper is seen to greet Blye and his companions, and ushers them in. Confident that he has accomplished a master stroke in sleuthing, Wolf hurries to Mrs. Blye with the news.

Ned decides to call at the Blye home, thinking that the man with the black vandyke might possibly have gone there direct from the dock. up. As the man turns to them, Ned slips past him into the building.

Through the opening in an inner door Ned sees June yield to Blye's persuasions, and nestle in his arms. In a jealous rage, he breaks down the door, rushes in, and grapples with his rival. June's parents, summoned by Ned, arrive at this time, and the young husband is dragged off of his half-choked opponent. Cunningham and Edwards lead him away, and tell him the secret of the building. It is a moving picture studio!

At first Ned believes this to be some ruse to trap him, but the presence of banks of lights, cameras, miscellaneous furniture, and painted sets convince him that they are telling the truth, and a realization of how foolish he has been begins to dawn upon him. He returns to June, and she explains that, in order to feel independent, she had obtained an engagement as leading lady with the Blye Motion Picture Stock Company shortly after their marriage.

Blye readily accepts his apologies, and tells him that he played an important part in his serial in which he (Blye) was a deserted husband and Ned a pursuing villain. Mrs. Blye is delighted to learn that her husband had no intention of deserting her and promises never to interfere with his business again.

"With Bridges Burned"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

A THREE-REEL adaptation of Rex Beach's story, "With Bridges Burned," will be the Edison release of May 7. Under Ashley Miller's direction it unfolds the tale of a young married couple in desperate financial straits who pluckily bunch all their resources, and stake them on one chance, to win or lose; literally burning their bridges behind them. This spirit of "do or die" is followed right through the action, working one's sympathies up to the point where he feels that the outcome concerns him also, instead of only the characters on the screen.

The action begins in bustling New York, and, at the end of the first reel, is transferred to a foreign land whose leisurely ways of transacting business are in direct contrast to the commercial race of this country. The young American does not make his negotiations in high hat and frock coat attire, assisted with a generous roll of "gift" money, but in the end his integrity and likeable aggressiveness triumph over his competitors.

Augustus Phillips has the leading role as Louis Mitchell, and Mabel Trunnelle plays opposite him as his devoted wife. Frank McGlynn figures prominently as Paul Grigsby, Mitchell's dangerous opponent in the battle of wits. Others in the cast are Robert Brower, William West, Warren Cook, Yale Boss and Harry Eytinge.

Louis Mitchell, a young, ambitious salesman, is among those who suffer when the firm of Comer and Mathison find it necessary to reduce their expenses. After weeks of fruitless search for a position he visits his former employers, at his wife's suggestion, and offers to finance a trip abroad if Comer and Mathison will authorize him to act as their representative in bidding for a contract amounting to several millions of dollars. Reluctantly and without any hope of results, they consent.

Mitchell sets sail immediately, and the day after his arrival finds him waiting outside the door of the offices of Robinson and Ray. He succeeds in obtaining an audience with the director general of the firm, and his insistence secures him permission to bid on the contract, though he is informed that, in order to get his figures in in time, he should have started on them weeks before.

Day and night he works over the blue-prints, thoughts of his faithful little wife spurring him on to greater efforts when sleep threatens to claim his time. Finally he reaches a point where he must have inside information in order to make further calculations. Unable to bribe liberally as his competitors are doing, he arranges a dinner for a few of the firm's highest employes, and lays his situation before them. They are touched by his story, and yield to his request.

Grigsby, the representative of a rich firm, learns that Mitchell is in a position to underbid him, and bribes a clerk to turn the hands of the office clock forward. Mitchell rushes in on the last day with his figures, and is told that he is ten minutes too late. Broken, he drops his roll of calculations and sails for home on the next boat. The office boy knows of Grigsby's trick, and, favoring Mitchell, he takes the latter's bid in to the director general. As the downhearted man is telling his wife the story of how he lost out a wire is received from Comer and Mathison, conveying their congratulations on landing the contract and appointing him general sales manager with a princely salary.

Pathe's "The Watching Eye"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THRILL piles upon thrill, and surprise follows surprise in the seventeenth episode of "The Exploits of Elaine," or the third episode, if one begins with the new exploits, which is entitled "The Watching Eye."

Without any danger of contradiction, it can be stated that there is more action, zip, bang and go to any portion of this installment of the serial than is to be found in the entire thousand foot length of the average film subject.

As a final climax of all this peppery action the missing fortune of the Clutching Hand is finally discovered by Craig Kennedy and his assistant, Jameson, although they both falter before the realization of the fact that though the millions have been discovered, Elaine, whom Craig considers a still greater treasure, is still missing.

As the episode begins Wu Fang and his wily confederate Long Sing, are discovered in the underground passage where they previously secured the steel document box containing the mysterious cryptic ring, and this time their attention is attracted by a Chinese inscription on the stone wall of the passageway, which, interpreted, spells the word "ring." Just beneath this inscription is a narrow slot in the wall in which it is clearly evident a ring should be dropped in order to disclose the secret of the hidden fortune. Wu Fang quickly realizes that no ordinary ring will work the combination, but that the peculiar point studded ring which he had last seen on Elaine's finger must be the one necessary to unlock the hidden treasure. Accordingly all his efforts are bent on securing that ring.

Wu Fang finds it necessary to make peace with the Tong which had threatened his life and from one of the leaders of this Tong obtains a huge vase, shaped like a Chinese dragon, which he sends by an expressman to Elaine's Aunt Josephine.

Kennedy and Jameson happen to be in the house when the vase arrives and by chance discover in a narrow opening at one side, a message. On opening it they discover it to be a message from Elaine, saying that she is held a prisoner by a Chinaman, but if Craig will take the cryptic ring that night to a certain address and there deliver it to a man who will be waiting for it, she will be freed.

Kennedy and Jameson, carrying a duplicate of the ring, are on hand at the appointed time, but unfortunately Wu Fang has learned of their trickery and the fact that he is to receive a duplicate ring, for the crafty Wu Fang was himself concealed within the body of the vase and through the dragon's eye saw and heard all that took place in the room. That night, after Aunt Josephine has retired the crafty Chinaman emerges from the vase, steals quickly through the room and from its hiding place in her jewel case secures the ring.

Accordingly when Kennedy and Jameson arrive at the trysting place, Long Sing, high on a rock above the meeting place, tosses down to Kennedy a message signed with the Serpent Sign, telling him that the serpent is all wise and cannot be deceived and that his trickery may result in the death of the white girl. Kennedy impatiently starts out to seek the man who threw this message, but Jameson, after wrestling with him for a short time, is tossed aside and Long Sing escapes, closely pursued, however, by both Jameson and Kennedy.

They enter the subterranean tunnel that leads beneath the home of Elaine's Aunt Tabby and Jameson follows down the passageway, but becomes mired in a pit of bird lime which had been prepared for just such an emergency. Kennedy reaches the tunnel by means of a passageway opened in the yard by an explosion in a previous episode and frightens away the Chinamen just as they have dropped the ring down the chute prepared for it, thereby obtaining the hidden treasure.

Though the Chinaman escapes Kennedy and Jameson are thus enabled to come into possession of a steel box, which is literally overflowing with diamonds, rubies, emeralds and other precious stones. While the two men stand in awe before this treasure they both suddenly come to realize that Elaine, an even greater treasure, is still in the clutches of the Chinaman. Her rescue is yet to be accomplished as the episode ends.

E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM, the author of the Universal serial which is at present attracting nation-wide attention in the motion picture theaters, has the gift of being able to move his characters about, while unraveling his plot, in a manner much similar to that of a chess player working out a complicated play. To the onlooker the purpose of both is hidden, but the manner in which they set out to accomplish their end is intensely interesting.

Throughout this serial Oppenheim's characters have been working together continually, but to those who have followed their actions closely the purpose of some of them grows more mystifying with each episode.

In the seventh installment the expressions registered by William Worthington, playing Professor Ashleigh, will doubtless cause many who have been convinced this character is a friend to Quest, to wonder if he is not playing a double game. This and the many thrilling episodes which fill the two thousand feet, make this an interest-holding and exciting installment from start to finish.

The blowing up of a house of large proportions furnishes a real thrill and is "sprung" with dramatic effectiveness. Herbert Rawlinson continues to enact the role of Sanford Quest in a most capable manner, while Anna Little and Laura Oakley as his assistants are as interesting as ever. Frank MacQuarrie, who has been making his character of Craig one of the most interesting in the picture, is called upon to do some strenuous work and handles himself in most creditable manner.

In the opening scenes a band of river pirates are seen preparing to undertake some kind of a job, though what it is is not explained. Quest mysteriously finds Mrs. Reinholdt's jewels and returns them. He starts to work out a theory and requests Professor Ashleigh to explain to him certain things pertaining to happenings in a "haunted house" which the professor formerly owned.

Ashleigh tells Quest that he gave the house to Craig for his old parents to live in some time before. They visit the building and Quest finds a telephone, which convinces him that the house is now occupied. He locates Craig in a closet, but the latter manages to escape by means of a revolving staircase. They attempt to trap him in the cellar, but when Laura, Quest's assistant, is injured by a falling wall (one of Craig's devices) the chase is momentarily halted.

Quest and his party call an ambulance for Laura and just as they are about to return to the house it is blown to atoms by a terrific explosion. A motor-truck rushes down the road at the same time, manned by the river pirates and having Craig as a passenger. Quest recognizes the man he is after and takes up the chase again.

The auto-truck hurries to the water-front and Craig and the pirates jump into a motor boat and head for a steamer in the bay. Quest and the police follow in another motorboat and in time overtake the river-pirates' craft. To their surprise, they find that the man they thought was Craig proves to be one of the gang. They then force the pirates to confess that Craig was placed aboard the steamer. The detective and the police turn toward the boat, which is now making its way out to sea.

Unique Advertising of Contest

The success of the Reliance "Runaway June" contest in photoplay theaters over the country has lead may of the exhibitors into enthusiastic advertisement of the event in their theaters. They report that the desire of their women patrons to be among the lucky ones to win free trips to the California Expositions seems unbounded.

Exhibitors are determined to keep this high tide of interest at its present level, and so they are digging out novel publicity schemes.

A San Francisco exhibitor found himself face to face with an unusual problem after he had installed the contest, and he had to seek out an idea which was not exactly an advertising one. Before he began to run the Reliance serial and the contest, he found that the lures of a neighboring department store kept his women patrons away from his matinees. After he had begun the contest the women deserted the store for his theater. He heard them complain, however, that they were neglecting necessary shopping to see June and vote in the contest. So he installed a special shopping department. By using this a woman, on entering his theater, could give her order and have her purchases delivered at her home while she enjoyed the thrills of "Runaway June." The department proved very popular—so popular in fact that now the exhibitor is confronted with the necessity of either adding materially to the force in the shopping department, or of devising a more efficient method of using the present employees.

One enterprising exhibitor in Boston wrote that he had adopted what he hoped was a novel plan in connection with his "Runaway June" contest. He had been an expert camera man and owned a good moving picture camera before he acquired a theater. When the young women contestants in his house reached the number of six, he summoned them to his theater at a time convenient to all of them. "Now, young ladies," he told them, "we're going to have a little photoplay of our own." Then before his camera he had the six enact a little drama he had spent one evening in planning. This little local photoplay made an instant hit when it was shown in the ex-cameraman's theater. His patrons talked about it so much that it drew an added throng to the house and it really cost its maker very little—only a slight sum for laboratory work.

An exhibitor in New York went to the expense of showing a travel film of California covering pretty much the ground which will be visited by the prize winners on the Reliance special train. He also had a single reel covering some of the scenery viewed from a transcontinent train on a journey to San Francisco. At the end of these pictures he had a slide thrown on the screen reading "You too may see these sights free. Enter the Great 'Runaway June' Contest."

This exhibitor says that he found that his device of showing the scenes worked up the right introductory interest in the "Runaway June" contest. After the contest was once begun, and audiences saw the names of persons of their own neighborhood on the screen as candidates the voting itself kept interest constantly at high pitch.

No Fun About This

Taking a close up of a racing driver going at sixty miles an hour requires nerve in the cameraman. Director Jacques Jaccard, now producing the new American serial, "The Diamond From the Sky," recently gave his working crew the ride of their lives in taking a close up picture of Irving Cummings, who as Arthur Stanley in the forthcoming picture is made to do many daredevil stunts.

To get the desired effect Director Jaccard rigged the motion picture camera on the front of the racing car as shown in the accompanying picture, leaving for the cameraman a very insecure and hazardous place to grind his machine.

In this instance the cameraman was George "Tripod" Hill, who knows not fear. Nate Watts, co-director with Mr. Jaccard, and the latter himself draped themselves with other assistants on the racing car and then Mr. Cummings was told to "open her up." He did.

The car swayed from side to side down the road, but Hill grimly held on and grimly cranked. At the end of half a mile Director Jaccard halted the car, and the first greeting Mr. Cummings received from the nervy cameraman was, "Why didn't you go—what's the idea of waiting?" Whereon the leading man vowed he would "get Hill." The odds, however, are on his not shaking the cameraman's nerves.

Cort Signs Castles

It was announced at the offices of the Cort Film Corporation in New York City this week that John Cort, president of that feature film organization, had signed contracts with Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle of dance craze fame, whereby those two biggest individuals in the modern art of Terpsichore will appear in a spectacular dramatic photoplay this summer.

While it is true that the Castles have appeared on the screen before, they have done so only as exponents of the modern dance and not as the characters in a film drama. In the production which is to be put out by the Cort Film Corporation, Mr. and Mrs. Castle will take the leading roles in a society drama in which Mr. Cort's producing force promises to have enough thrills to suit the demands of any lover of good, solid melodrama. Of course, the two principals will show their ability at dancing, but the main thing will be the story as it should be in any film. Work on the Castle picture will be begun the first of June.

To Manufacture the Diascope

Feist and Feist, Inc., of Newark, N. J., leased the large plant at Nos. 145 to 151 Frelinghuysen avenue, owned by the Mack Brothers Motor Car Company of Pennsylvania, to Klump-Greenfield Company, of Newark, N. J., for the manufacture of the Diascope—a machine that will permit the showing of motion pictures in daylight. This property has a frontage of 100 feet in Frelinghuysen avenue, a depth of 112 feet, with an additional entrance in Stanton street, 25x100, and consists of a large one-story building and several frame buildings, containing approximately 20,000 square feet. Extensive alterations will be made immediately. The lease covers a long term of years, with an option to purchase. About one hundred hands will be employed.

Kulp Wins First Prize

W. W. Kulp, the Cleveland manager, of the World Film Corporation, received the first prize for branch managers, for the period starting January 25, and ending February 21. This amounts to $100, which is the cause of much competition on the part of the twenty-three World Film managers.

St. Paul Firm Growing

The Raths-Seavolt Film Manufacturing Company of St. Paul, on March 30, obtained a permit for the erection of a brick and concrete building on the north side of University avenue between Victoria and Avon streets, St. Paul, at a cost of $5,000. The building will be used as a studio for the manufacture of photoplays and commercial subjects.

William Loomis Hinckley is latest addition to the Mutual stock company at Hollywood, Calif.

Brevities of the Business

Ford Sterling started recently on the first one-reel release that he has made since his return to the Keystone company. Mack Sennett, managing director of the company, took personal charge of the picture. Both Sterling and Sennett have been occupied with the new six-reel feature which is now nearly completed, and this sensational release will soon be officially announced.

Miss Adele Rowland, the charming and talented ingenue for the Starlight Film Company at their studio at Yonkers, N. Y., has signed a contract with Cohan & Harris to appear in the second season of the great Broadway success, "It Pays to Advertise," next year.

Edwin August and Bill Bailey will co-direct and co-star in the new Pyramid pictures of the United Program now in course of production at the Smallwood studios in Cliffside, New Jersey.

The latest Komic release, produced under the direction of Edward Dillon, features "Vic" Forsythe, creator of the "Flooey and Axel" series. This comedy is called "Flooey and Axel."

Edythe Sterling is now a member of Bert Bracken's company at Santa Barbara, Cal., producing Western dramas for the Kriterion Program.

"The Broken Coin," the new Universal serial featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, is having the first installment filmed in and around San Francisco, Cal., and Ford and Miss Cunard have a full company in the Exposition City making some important scenes.

Director Colin Campbell, the veteran Selig feature producer, plans to put on a few two and three reel pictures before attacking his next big production.

One of the most important changes in the policy of the Imp and Victor studios will be the inauguration of a new system concerning feature plays for the big stars. Julius Stern, the able manager of these well-known brands, has made arrangements to produce plays by some of the best writers in the film world. These plays will be written especially for Mary Fuller, King Baggot and Jane Gail, Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips, Frances Nelson, Hobart Henley, Alan Holubar and William Garwood and Violet Mesereau.

So fast is the West coast plant of the Universal growing that even now the four-hundred-foot property room, which was twice as large as needed at the time of its construction, is too small. In order to make room for the extra props plans are being drawn for the construction of a balcony to run around the four walls of the room.

Miss Fritzi Brunette, who plays the leads in the Santa Barbara dramas, which are released through the Kriterion Service, will be one of the featured players to appear on the United Time over the Keith Circuit through New York city and surrounding territory.

Allen Curtis, director of the West Coast Joker comedy company of the Universal, who recently secured the privilege of photographing the Exposition grounds at San Diego, Cal., is making preparations for an extended stay in that city. It is the intention of Curtis to make use of the grounds as a background for the production of a number of comedies. He will also take a number of scenes for the Animated Weekly.

The Vitagraph Company has secured "The Man Who Came Back," an original story of the regeneration of a man, from Lionel Adams, and will put it in immediate production with a picked cast.

Hobart Bosworth's first Universal release, a four-reel drama, entitled "Fatherhood," is a Western picture of action and strong physiological interest. Mr. Bosworth is the author of the play and appears in it as the leading character. Helen Wolcott has the woman lead.

J. Warren Kerrigan, the popular Universal star, has denied the report that he is to return to the speaking stage and play the lead in a coming Broadway production. It is his intention to remain with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and he is now more busy than ever appearing in several productions at the west coast studios.

C. E. Shurtloff, formerly salesman of the Atlanta branch of the World Film Corporation, has been transferred to Washington to work in the same capacity.

Kathryn Osterman is now working in "Sauce for the Gander," soon to be announced as a World Comedy Star release. Dave Thompson, the leader of the New Rochelle Elks, and also the brand new father, dropped in on the ranks of the World Comedy-Star, and is now playing an important part in the forthcoming Kathryn Osterman release, "Sauce for the Gander."

O. T. Enos, a product of the salesman's school, has been sent to the Philadelphia office of the World Film Corporation, and it looks as if he is going to make good with vengeance.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Miss Jane Darwell, who is doing her first work for the Bosworth-Morosco interests since leaving the Laskys in "The Wild Olive," recently won a motor car for exactly $6.40. This sum represented her purchase of tickets in Oscar Apfel's raffle of his last season's machine.

Emmett Campbell Hall's two-reel drama, "Such Things Really Happen," which is an attack upon the fake schools which guarantee, for a consideration, to make photoplay writers of anyone, will be released by the Lubin Company May 6.

The popularity of "Edison Nights," which have been in demand at various New York theaters, is spreading beyond that city's limits, but is naturally limited to distances which the players can travel and not disturb the picture making at the Edison studio. Through the influence of Lee Arthur, the noted playwright who is writing exclusively for Edison films, Manager H. H. Wellenbrink of the Montclair theater, Montclair, N. J., has been able to secure such a night for May 1.

Otis Turner and his company of special feature players have left Universal City, Cal., for San Bernardino, where they have made arrangements with the Santa Fe railroad for the wrecking of two trains in the production of Turner's big serial, "The Black Box."

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.—Can now proceed with its plans to increase the capital stock from $2,000,000 to $3,500,000 and to retire all of its preferred stock in case the stockholders see fit. The application for injunction by Mr. Horsley was denied.

Thanhouser Film Corporation.—Sales have taken place at between 80 and 85, which were the highest in the last six months.

Majestic Film Corporation.—Stock is in good demand and has advanced sharply on reported increase in earnings.

North American Film Corporation.—The first 7,000 feet of film have been sent to many different sections of the country, so that exhibitors are now signing contracts after having had the privilege of investigating what they are buying. That this has made a hit with the exhibitors is proven by the rate at which contracts are coming in all over the country. If the present rate is maintained to May 3, release date will witness all records broken in contracts for serials in this country. The common stock is in strong demand at 55. Many of the exhibitors agree that the fall of the automobile from the forty-foot cliff, with the driver jumping from the machine as it descends, is as dramatic a performance as has ever appeared on the screen.

New York Motion Picture Corporation.—The market, after "backing and filling" on the announced 1 per cent dividend disbursement, finally firmed up, and stock is now in demand at between 76 and 80.

Elmer Booth, who is playing in the Mutual Komic dramas, recently turned down an offer to appear with May Irwin in the forthcoming stage production of "L3 Washington Place."

John G. Mayers won the prize with his title of "His Peasant Princess" and Marie Louise Farley the prize for the best ending to the play which was left unfinished in the contests recently held by Manager Dollinger of the Claremont theater, who held them in conjunction with the weekly showing, Thursday evening, of all Edison current films.

After a three weeks' visit in the East, Irene Hunt has returned to the Mutual's Holywood (Cal.) studios. She was accompanied on her trip to New York by her mother, who shares her California bungalow.

Edison Director Charles Brabin has received word that his cousin, Rifleman A. E. Brabin, of the Fifth Liverpools, was killed at Givenchy when the English went into action. This is the second relative that Director Brabin has lost at the front.

Alec Lorimore, president of the Bishop, Pessers & Lorimore, Inc., is meeting with great success in his exploitation of the Boy Scout film, which has been released through the World Film Coroporation.

John Bunny, the veteran comedian of the screen, who almost a year ago resigned from the Vitagraph Company to tour the country at the head of his own musical comedy troupe, was seriously ill at his home in Brooklyn during the past week. His life was in danger for a few days, but his recovery was rapid.

F. R. E. Woodward has been appointed assistant to President Wilbur Euymant of the United Photo-Plays Company of Chicago.

Jack Clark is at work on the first production in which Gene Gauntier has appeared since her arrival at the coast. The story was written by Miss Gauntier herself for the particular use of their cast of players and is entitled "Gene of the Northlands."

Richard Ridgely, who produced the excellent three-part Edison feature, "The Deadly Hate," which made a hit with exhibitors the country over, has started work on another that bids fair to outdo this one for popularity. It is entitled "The Wrong Woman," and will be in three reels, featuring the well-known Edison star, Mabel Trunnelle.

The Photoplay Authors' League, in annual session at Los Angeles, Cal., adopted resolutions cordially inviting all photoplay authors to come to Los Angeles aboard the Selig Movie special which leaves Chicago on Thursday, July 8. A grand reception and entertainment is promised the writers, who will be guests of "The Carbon Copy" special Pullman coach named in honor of the writers.

Saturday, April 17, was a big day at the Strand theater, New York City. The added magnetism to this million-dollar theater's program was in the personal appearance of little Helen Badgley, the Thanhouser kidlet, and the beautiful Fairbanks twins. Their debut came at the end of the Thanhouser "kid" comedy which was one of the number on the bill. The closing scene showed the children, dressed in nightgowns, ready to retire. As the picture faded from the screen, the lights went out and the spotlight revealed the three popular juveniles at the center of the stage, dressed as seen in the final scene of the picture.

For some mysterious reason, L. J. Rubenstein has recently disported himself about the Strand theater as though he had fallen heir to the door receipts or a large block of stock in the amusement palace. Wonder what the good news is that has brought with it that busy air of proprietorship?

R. W. Horn, an expert in matters pertaining to cameras and projection machines, is to be found at the Exposition at the Nicholas Power Company headquarters located at 1618 Larkin street, San Francisco, Cal. Mr. Horn, who is a native of California, was doing special work for some of the prominent film manufacturers in and about New York up until last November when he heard the exposition call of his home state and answered it promptly.

Bill Barry, advertising department of the Nicholas Power Company, was one of the disporters at the Exhibitors' League ball in Baltimore where he made a decided hit in his doll clothes and good humor. Every exhibitor in the hall met Bill Barry, and learned at the same time the merits of the Powers 6A projection machine.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 31—Selig—April 19.—Coast artillery men at practice in San Francisco, Calif.; General Huerta arrives in New York City; training dogs to trail criminals, Elmhurst, Pa.; disposing of worthless scales and measures in San Francisco, Calif.; Congressman Gardner entertains 9 men, more than half of the reserve army of the United States, at Washington, D. C.; latest fashions by Lucille, Lady Duff-Gordon; crew of expert divers leave San Francisco for Honolulu to raise submarine F-4; Mrs. Jess Willard and her children photographed at their home in Los Angeles, Calif.; soccer football game at New Bedford, Mass.; war views from Russian-Poland, Greece and other European points.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 32—Selig—April 22.—School children's festival in honor of Hans Christian Anderson, author of fairy stories, at Los Angeles, Calif.; Grace Darling visits Leland-Stanford University in Calif.; Aviator Peck shown in flight a few hours before his death, College Park, Md.; elevated train derailed in New York City; indoor golf championship decided at Chicago; tennis game between women champions at Los Angeles; President Wilson opens the baseball season at Washington, D. C.; Rev. Billy Sunday visits Mayor Mitchell of New York City; occupants of Hotel de Gink take up new quarters on Long Island farm for the purpose of raising chickens; William Hale Thompson, mayor-elect of Chicago, on a trip down the Mississippi river; war views from the front.

The Children's House—Biograph—April 26.—"Children's Houses" like this have been established throughout the United States. The children have complete charge of them and keep them in order. Thousands of tiny tots, the men and women of tomorrow, are learing through play, like the three-year-olds in this picture, things which fit them for useful work in the world. And they enjoy doing it. This method of teaching young children the way they ought to live when grown up is known as the Dr. Montessori method and is education in its most practical form, and has attracted the serious attention, not only of educators, but of parents in all countries who wish to give their children every advantage. Dr. Montessori is a great Italian educator.

Greater Than Art—(Three Reels)—Edison—April 26.—Gertrude McCoy and Edward Earle in this great story of a woman sacrificing her honor through her great love for art, to find that "greater than art" is her new soul-thrilling and pure love for another young man for whom she sacrifices her future in art for which she had already paid such a price. An unusual and strong theme powerfully played with rare emotional power, showing the struggle between the two loves. Reviewed on page 606, issue of April 17.

On the Dawn Road—Essanay—April 26.—Bob Allen, star reporter on the Blade, gets a "hunch" that there is something big breaking in a fight for control of the C. I. & W. R. R. He knows that Granger, an unscrupulous financier, is fighting to get control of the stock. He goes out on the story. He is captured and thrown in a deserted shack by two crooks hired by Granger to steal the proxies held by John Armstrong, the heaviest stockholder in the railroad. In the shack he finds Helen Armstrong, bound and gagged. While they are there, Granger comes out to the shack and takes the proxies which Burns has forged from the originals he has stolen from Armstrong's safe. Burns destroys the original proxies. Bob overcomes the two crooks in a fight, rescues Helen and drives to town in time for the directors' meeting where he denounces Granger and saves the day for Armstrong. Helen falls in love with him.

The Haunted House of Wild Isle—(Two Reels)—Kalem—April 26.—The ghost of John Miller, a suicide, is said to haunt the house on Wild Isle. Warren Kent, an author who is in love with Ann, the suicide's daughter, determines to investigate the haunted house. He arrives there and is shot at by a rifle mysteriously pointed through a hole in the wall. The following night he returns with Ann, who masks as a ghost to attract the attention of the person who fires the revolver. The plan works and the mysterious person is forced to show himself. While Warren grapples with him, Ann hurries for assistance. Dr. Truby, Ann's guardian, has followed them to the island and when he comes upon Warren and the ghost struggling he attempts to kill Warren, but wounds the ghost instead. Ann returns with help and it is then discovered that Dr. Truby had been responsible for the impression that Miller committed suicide and that he had forced his imprisonment on the isle.

The Road O'Strife—(Episode Four)—Lubin—April 26.—Gilbert Jerome meets Alene and falls in love with her. By marrying her, he sees a way out of his difficulty, for he will then have both the girl and the fortune. He, like Dane, believes her to be in love with Abner Gray and determines to eliminate him. When Alene tells him that she likes Abner because he killed Professor Gershom, he has the village youth arrested, charged with murder. Because Dr. Duncan's family is quarantined by smallpox, Alene instinctively seeks Robert Dane for protection and advice, but he has gone away without leaving any word as to his whereabouts. The real cause for his departure is that his small fortune which was invested in an enterprise in a nearby city is in danger of being lost. Gilbert's plan works excellently, but his success is threatened by the appearance of Clara, a woman who presents herself as his wife, but he sends her to the country for the time being. Alene, when alone, realizes that her statement is liable to cause the death of Abner Gray and is horrified.

Lonely Lovers—(Two Reels)—Selig—April 26.—A story of the lives of the inmates of a theatrical boarding house, depicting the adventures of a fresh young girl seeking to become a stage star and her ultimate triumph. See review on page 653 of April 24 issue. N. G. C.

Boobley's Baby—Vitagraph—April 26.—Because he can never get a seat in the car going home and because men with children in their arms are always able to secure one, Boobley buys a life-sized doll and carries it on his trips to and from the office, thereby winning a seat for himself. He is in love with Ethel, a stenographer at the office, and the clerks, when they "get wise" to his trick, make Ethel believe it is a real baby which he carries with him. One of them supplies a real infant to make their bluff substantial and Ethel will have nothing more to do with him, despite his efforts to explain. One night they go home on the car together, Boobley still carrying the doll. He realizes that she is angry because he is carrying the doll and gets off the car to throw it in the lake. She still thinks it is a real baby and many complications arise which are eventually settled and lead to a reconciliation between Boobley and Ethel. Sidney Drew and Mrs. Sidney Drew featured.

Adam Bede—(Two Reels)—Biograph—April 27.—Adam Bede and Hetty Sorrel are betrothed but the girl secretly loves Arthur Donnithorne. When their love affair is discovered Arthur is sent away and the couple married at once. Dinah, who has long loved Adam in secret, is saddened by the wedding but makes the best of it. Hetty soon leaves her husband and follows Arthur. She fails to find him in London and here her child is born. Tired and discouraged she does what she considers best for the child and is arrested for murder. She is sentenced to be hanged but saved from this disgrace by Arthur who secures the queen's pardon. Hetty dies, uniting the hands of Adam and Dinah with her last breath, for she has seen the other woman's love for Adam.

The Idle Rich—Edison—April 27.—That funny team, William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman, are here seen as two tramps who, while trying to think up some way of getting a big dinner with little labor, spy a thousand-dollar bill laying on the ground. After gorging themselves with food they present the bill, and, the proprietor being unable to change it, they saunter out of the restaurant without paying. Their shopping tour ends by their meeting the bank messenger who, accompanied by a policeman, is searching for the lost bill. A. Conan Burns, the sleuth on the trail of Augustus Phillips and Marc MacDermott, whose photos he carries with him, tries to fasten their identity on the two tramps, but fails and they are allowed to go free. C. R. C.

Blindfolded—(Two Reels)—Essanay—April 27.—A mystery drama which sustains the interest splendidly from start to finish. Much credit should be given to the author, Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and to the players who enact the leading roles, especially Richard C. Travers and Ernest Maupain. Arnold Blaine, a clever rogue, is captured in possession of the crystal butterfly, a rare piece of jewelry, which he has stolen from Andrew Meridith. His capture is the result of the efforts of Milburn Warren, an amateur detective, who is in love with Bernice Meridith, daughter of Andrew. That the jewel may not be stolen again, Warren sets a trap in which a flashlight photograph will be taken of anyone rifling the secret compartment. The jewel again is stolen and the photograph shows a picture of Blaine. But Blaine is in jail. Warren is captured and dragged to a deserted house by the crooks and is rescued by police. The crooks are captured and it transpires that the thief is a twin brother of Blaine's. C. J. C.

The Phoney Cannibal—Kalem—April 27.—Ham and Bud are unable to pay their board bill, but have a happy thought when they see a missionary collect money on the street corner after illustrating a lecture with a cannibal he has brought with him from the wilds of Africa. Bud at once becomes a cannibal and Ham a minister. The plan brings many dollars to their pockets when the crowd sympathizes with Ham's ideas, but the boarding house lady and a squad of police finally kill their game.

Percival's Awakening—Lubin — April 27.—Percival, a bookworm, finds little interest in life except his studies until he meets Alice, a tom-boy, while on a visit to the country with his parents. During his stay she leads him a merry chase and despite his parent's warning to leave the tom-boy alone and devote more attention to his books he continues to court her and at last the romance ends with their engagement. Raymond McKee and Frances NeMoyer in the leads.

The Honor of the Camp—Selig—April 27.—Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley are the featured players in this one-reel story of the West that depicts the effort of Edgar Sill, a mining expert, to secure possession of Dunham's wealthy claim by taking advantage of a technicality. Dunham, who loves Merry Waymire, the daughter of an eastern capitalist, is finally able to convince the latter's father of the value of his property and the latter, on investigating, discover Sill's crookedness. When the news of Sill's trickery spreads through the camp, the miners order him out of town. N. G. C.

The Lady of the Lighthouse—(Three Reels) — Vitagraph — April 27. — Miss Hope, a teacher in a school for the blind, is known as the "Lady of the Lighthouse," because of the great good she does in helping her afflicted pupils. She is attracted to little Victor Vaughn, who is kept in seclusion by his father because the parent did not wish him to know of his affliction. The boy is sullen, but under the influence of Miss Hope he becomes bright and cheerful. The doctor intimates that the child may see in time and, as they wait and hope for the miracle to come, Mr. Vaughn and Miss Hope fall in love. At Christmas time Victor is operated upon and when his sight is restored Mr. Vaughn, thankful for the care given him by Miss Hope, asks her to become his wife and a mother to little Victor and she accepts. Rose Tapley and Lionel Adams featured.

The Fable of a Night Given Over to Revelry — Essanay — April 28. — This George Ade fable, the plot which is rather scant, deals with the dinner given by the members of the class of '88 with Mr. Dubley, who considers himself a sport, playing the chief role. The incidents, which are far too numerous to describe, are real laugh-getters and keep the interest alive throughout the thousand feet. The older men at the dinner, whom Mr. Dubley thought could not "stick it out," prove veterans in the art of eating and drinking and at 2:30 the next morning when they carry Dubley out, the old fellows announce that they are just beginning to "make a night of it." Charles Stine, Harry Dunkinson and Thomas Commerford have the most prominent parts.

this comedy of a bogus nobleman who seeks the pretty girl and her accompanying dowry reserved for a certified title and monacled gentleman of royal parentage. The ludicrous mistakes of applicant Macaroni, and the manner in which he is exposed furnish more than one laugh through the picture.

The Tattooed Hand—(Two Reels)—Kalem—April 28.—An episode of the "Girl Detective" series in which Cleo Ridgley is featured. Patrolman Kerrigan rescues his daughter from the insults of Bat Dorgan, a gangster, and incurs the enmity of Dorgan's followers. He is attacked and throddled into insensibility and Jean, the girl detective, is assigned the case. Talcott, her assistant, visits a dive patronized by the Dorgan gang and when Jean boldly visits the place she is made a prisoner. Her purpose was to learn if Dorgan had an anchor tattooed on his hand, for Kerrigan said it was a man thus marked that had attacked him. Police rescue Jean after a desperate battle with the gangsters and, when the girl detective finally corners Dorgan, the mystery of his arm not being marked is explained, for upon a nearby table she sees a bottle of India ink and a fine brush.

Her Father's Picture—(Two Reels)—Lubin—April 28.—This is a powerful drama, doubtless one of the most intense the Lubin company has offered for some time. It is the story of a scheming woman who divorces her first husband to marry another. She leaves a little daughter with the father, who eventually dies and the child is placed in an asylum. Years pass and the second husband is attracted by an actress, who agrees to marry him if he will divorce his wife. The wife discovers the affair and going to the actress, pleads that she will cease to attract her husband, but is laughed at by the girl and ordered out of her dressing room. The wife then goes to the soubrette's home, intending to kill her and there discovers a picture of her first husband and realizes that the girl is her own daughter. She flees back to her own house. The husband meets the girl, who tells of the scene on the discovery of the picture. They hasten to the mother's house but arrive too late to save her from a tragic end.

The Voice of Eva—Selig—April 28.—Eva, whose life is not a happy one, is persuaded to leave her home by a stranger. Later, deserted by the the man who brought her to the city, she secures employment as a singer in a cafe and chancing to meet Whitney, a widower, who knows nothing of her past, she becomes engaged to this wealthy man.

Whitney one night enters a cafe and discovering that his fair charmer is a cabaret singer, he breaks the engagement. Later, Eva's voice fails her and she becomes ill. Whitney's little daughter, who has learned to love Eva, is also ill and begs for "the pretty lady," and thus eventually Whitney and Eva become reconciled. Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley featured. N. G. C.

The Boarding House Feud—VITAGRAPH—APRIL 28.—Mrs. Drexel, who runs a boarding house, objects to Billy making love to her daughter. When Billy's uncle, with whom he lives, goes away he evens up matters with Mrs. Drexel by starting a boarding house himself and taking Mrs. Drexel's servants and boarders away from her. A wine party is given to the boarders by Billy and when his uncle returns home he is thrown out by the boarders. Uncle and Mrs. Drexel compare notes and decide to pay Billy back in his own coin, so they take the boarders and servants away from him. He prepares to fight some more, but decides to call it off when Mrs. Drexel agrees to his marrying her daughter and announces that she is to wed his uncle.

Fool's Gold—BIOGRAPH—APRIL 29.—Gone daft through years of searching for El Dorado, the old miner thinks that the vein of iron pyrites he has found is a lode of rich gold-bearing earth. With frantic joy he displays his samples at the saloon in town, and invites everybody to celebrate his luck. The knowing ones kindly congratulate him and wink at each other; a young prospector saves the situation by secretly giving the bartender money with which to cash the "nugget" tendered by the old man in payment for the drinks. A greaser among the crowd sees the transaction and believes that the old miner has really struck gold. He determines to rob him of his claim and follows when the veteran, with elaborate caution, proceeds to his mine. The young prospector and the sheriff are rivals for the hand of the miner's orphaned niece and bad blood arises between them. The sheriff threatens openly to "get something on" his rival. Under the influence of liquor he follows the prospector and sees him shoot the greaser, who has apparently killed the crazy miner. The sheriff takes advantage of his authority to arrest his rival, and handcuffs him, although he protests that the border law justifies his act. On the way to town the sheriff stumbles and falls to death. The prisoner contrives to take the key to the handcuffs from his pocket and, after a vain effort to release himself, is freed by the girl.

Poisoned by Jealousy—(TWO REELS)—EDISON—APRIL 29.—Bessie Learn, Carlton King, and Harry Beaumont starred. Stephano and Enrico, brothers, both admire Dolce who lives next door. Enrico wins her, and, after their marriage, the couple ask Stephano to live with them. As his admiration for Dolce grows, his hatred for Enrico becomes more intense. He writes his brother a letter purporting to come from their uncle in America. As requested, Enrico sails for the land of promise, intending to send for Dolce later. Stephano follows up his advantage by writing Enrico that his wife has died, writing Dolce a fake letter at the same time, stating that her husband has succumbed to a deadly fever. As time passes heartsick Enrico is seized with a longing to return to his native land. By chance he and Dolce meet. Stephano then pays the penalty of his deceit. A review appears on page 659, April 24 issue.

The Undertaker's Uncle—ESSANAY—APRIL 29.—The undertaker and Slim are rivals for the favor of the damsel, with Slim a shade to the good. The undertaker, in order to recover ground, pulls a poor hobo into the picture as his wealthy uncle. They visit the damsel and her mother and the "uncle" impresses the women with his wealth. A short time after, the undertaker arranges with the hobo to play dead and he invites the women to see the corpse. But Slim meanwhile gets wind of the plot, and he steals into the undertaker's rooms and conceals himself under the coffin containing the hobo. When the women appear to look their last on "Uncle" Billie Slim drills a hole through the coffin and sticks the hobo. Of course, the hobo gives everything away and the undertaker is disgraced. Made by Essanay's "Snakeville" players.

A Romance of the Navy—(THREE REELS)—LUBIN—APRIL 29.—Because of a quarrel between himself and his wife, Henry Gardner adopts his widowed sister's child, Reggie, in infancy, and raises him as his own son, allowing his real son Jack, whose birthright he is doubtful of, to believe that he is a foundling. The boys grow to manhood and both desire to go to Annapolis. Gardner gets Reggie the appointment, still trying to avenge the wrong he believes his wife did him. Both boys love Rose and she appears to favor Reggie after his appointment to Annapolis. Jack works his way up from the ranks of a common sailor and becomes an ensign. Rose marries Reggie, who takes the downward grade, and becomes a scapegoat officer. Gardner's wife manages to ruin him and he becomes a derelict. Reggie and Gardner engage in a drunken quarrel, in which the former learns that he is the foundling and not Jack. Rose overhears this and, though Gardner dies, she conveys the information to Mrs. Gardner, and the latter determines to rid her son of the man who has caused him so much sorrow, but mistakes Jack for Reggie. Reggie falls in with some foreigners after he is dismissed from the service. He plans to sell some important government secrets and starts for the foreigners' yacht in a motor boat. Jack follows in another speed craft. Mrs. Gardner plans to blow up Jack's boat by "springing" a mine under it, as she believes him to be Reggie. She discovers her mistake in time, however, and explodes another mine, sending Reggie to his death and leaving happiness before her son. Ormi Hawley, Early Metcalfe, Edgar Jones and Louise Huff appearing in the cast.

Bunks Bunked—MINO—APRIL 29.—Old man Bunk determines his daughter shall marry a count, but the girl decides otherwise, for she is in love with Harry. The lovers hatch a plan to foil father and the count and at a party Harry masquerades as a woman in an effort to humiliate the count. The young man makes a "mess" of his role, however, and is beaten up and thrown out of the house.

Strictly Neutral—VITAGRAPH—APRIL 29.—A burlesque on the war situation in Europe, with each nation represented by a servant in the household of Mr. Higgins. Flora, the maid, is French; Kate, the cook, is Irish; Rudolph, the chef, is German; Pietro, the gardener, an Italian, and James, the butler, English. They band together in a manner similar to that of their mother nations and Pietro, alone, remains strictly neutral. The fun comes from the incidents which are numerous and quick moving. Flora Finch, Kate Price, Jay Dwiggins and Mr. Lack featured.

His Poor Little Girl—BIOGRAPH—APRIL 30.—The shabby-genteel old gentleman sends his daughter to a fashionable school, but is unable to afford her the luxuries to which the other girls are accustomed. Timid and lonely, she does not enjoy the first days at school. Then the rich girl takes her up, gives her pretty dresses and in other ways makes life pleasant for her. At the rich girl's graduation party her most eligible young man pays so much attention to the poor girl that she becomes jealous. On an automobile tour the rich girl's car breaks down near the poor girl's home, and she invites her companions in. When they make fun of her father's old-fashioned ways she flares up and bids them begone. Only the young man stays, and after her father's death it is he who consoles her with his love.

The Tie That Binds—ESSANAY—APRIL 30.—The husband sits by the fire musing over his married life and what might have been. He gets up and goes to the window to look out into the night.

Across the yard in his neighbor's house, he sees two children being put to bed by their parents. The wife neglects her married life for social affairs. The husband sees her bidding an affectionate goodnight to a man who is in love with her. When she comes in, he suggests that they be divorced, saying that their union has been without issue. He shows her the happy family. A poor woman leaves her baby on the doorstep of the home. The husband finds the baby. The wife feels the mother-love awakening in her breast. They adopt the child and are happy. G. M. Anderson featured.

The Destroyer — (Three Reels) — Kalem—April 30.—Alice Hollister, Anna Nilsson and Harry Millarde have the leading roles. Dick, though engaged to Helen, falls a victim to the wiles of Cherie, a dancer. Despite her efforts she cannot win him away from Cherie and finally the girl gives him up. His father, angry, disinherits him and Cherie, learning this, casts him off for a suitor with money. Dick turns to Helen, but finds that her love has died. He drifts lower and lower and months later, when Cherie and one of her suitors come from a fashionable jewelers, a beggar asks them for enough money to get a meal. The suitor gives him a coin but Cherie contemptuously turns away, for she recognizes the beggar, Dick, her former suitor.

When the Range Called—Lubin—April 30.—Lem Hart, a wealthy ranch owner becomes lonesome and goes to the city to live. He is surrounded by society friends and falls in love with Agnes, a debutante. She appears to favor another suitor and when Lem learns that all of his society friends are secretly making fun of him, and enduring his presence only because he has money, he renounces them and decides to return west. The manner in which Agnes acts when he tells her that he is sorry that she is one of the fickle kind, makes him re-consider and he asks her to become his wife. Though angry at him for not believing in her from the first, she agrees, and they decide to return to the ranch together. L. C. Shumway and Velma Whitman in the leading roles.

At the Mask Ball—Selig—April 30.—Mr. Prettyman plans to attend the gay French masquerade ball without the knowledge of his wife, by telling her that business detains him late at the office. Mrs. Prettyman finally determines to visit the same ball rather than spend a lonesome evening at home and at the gay affair Mr. Prettyman becomes infatuated with a columbine, while Mrs. Prettyman flirts outrageously with an audacious devil. The police, who are chasing Slippery Sam, a sneak-thief, arrest Prettyman, since they think him the thief in disguise, but eventually he is enabled to escape and on arriving home comes face to face with the columbine. Both unmask and discover they are husband and wife. John Lancaster and Lyllian Leighton featured. N. G. C.

The-Sort-of-Girl-Who - Came - From - Heaven—Vitagraph—April 30. — At a millionaire club several members are talking over past experiences and one of them, who is regarded as more adventurous than the others, is asked if he has never met a girl for whom he really cared. He says he has and that she was the-sort-of-girl-who-came - from - heaven. He then tells his story of how he met her in a soda fountain and for some time spent his money lavishly on her. She was an actress and very beautiful. One day she excused herself from dinner with him and announced that she would have to meet her husband at the corner. After that girls of this variety always called for a raising of the danger signal by him. He finishes his tale and joins his friends in a hearty laugh. Earl Williams and Anita Stewart featured.

His Convert—Edison—May 1.—Marc MacDermott and Mabel Trunnelle featured. Gerald Morgan, a wealthy clubman, scoffs at the remark that street prayer meetings do wonderful reform work, and bets that he can, in the course of three nights, gather as large a number of converts as any of them. His friends take up his bet, and Gerald, decked out in clerical garb, mounts a chair on one of the street corners, and harangues the audience which gathers quickly. Lizzie, a woman of the streets, chances to pass the crowd, lingers, and steps closer to hear Gerald's plea for righteous living. He notices her, and is pleased to see her among his gathering on the second night. By this time the work which Gerald started in jest has begun to take a hold on him, and he preaches earnestly, with the spiritual welfare of his listeners in mind. On the third night as Lizzie is listening to Gerald, Bennie Mazzetto, who is angry because she has deserted him and the "old life," slips a stolen pocketbook into her pocket. Gerald extracts her from her difficulties at the police station, and shortly afterward they become married, and devote their time to missionary work. C. R. C.

Frauds—(Three Reels) — Essanay—May 1.—Zelda Dunbar, a detective, on the trail of two notorious blackmailers, offers herself as their accomplice and is accepted by Eldridge and Mortimer. Zelda wins the heart of Kendrick, a rich bachelor. Zelda slips Kendrick a note saying her father is going to force her to marry a man she does not love. Kendrick takes the girl into another state. At a hotel the pair are confronted by the two blackmailers and Eldridge charges Kendrick with violating the Mann act. Kendrick is arrested. A mob threatens to lynch the prisoner. Mortimer urges Kendrick to settle for $20,000. On a signal from Zelda he does so. The crooks attempt to escape, but are prevented. The mob bursts into the room. Zelda shows her star, explaining she has been seeking evidence against the men. Zelda confesses her love for Kendrick. Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn in the leading roles.

Home Again—Komic—April 25.—Mr. Drummer, a traveling salesman, is arrested by mistake and sentenced to jail for sixty days. Believing that he has deserted her, his wife sublets their home, and moves to a hotel. On his release he wires his wife that he is returning home. Mrs. Grinder, the new tenant, directs the messenger to the hotel. By the time that Drummer reaches home he is somewhat the worse for a few drinks. Clad in pajamas, he enters the room formerly occupied by his wife, inteding to square himself. As he is retreating under heavy fire, Grimer sees him. Drummer thinks that his wife is unfaithful, on seeing the other, and a great chase and fight ensue. Meanwhile Mrs. Drummer has received her husband's wire. She arrives at the old home just in time to save her husband from being landed in jail.

The Open Door—Reliance—April 26.—A young man attired in evening dress stops before the wide-open door of a little white house, and, after pondering for a moment, enters. Upstairs a light is burning. He surprises a girl in the act of stealing a string of sparkling gems. Just as he slips the jewels into his own pocket a voice is heard from the doorway, and both turn to find themselves covered by a gruff stranger. A policeman then makes his appearance, handcuffs the couple, leads them a short distance from the house, and then lets them go free. He returns to the house, changes his clothes, and he and his pal make ready to leave with their loot, for both are thieves. They are met at the door by policemen summoned by the young ex-prisoner. The girl is filled with remorse on learning that her companion in evening attire is the owner of the house. His affectionate glance speaks his forgiveness, and he tosses the gems on the table with the remark, "paste."

The Day of Reckoning—(Two Reels) — American — April 26. — Vivian Rich and David Lithgoe featured in this heart interest story in which Martha True, an innocent young girl, deceived by a heartless man, becomes the wife of a millionaire merchant, without disclosing her former relations with another. Years later the man who deserted her threatens to expose her past, but the husband by chance discovers the deception of his wife, is induced to forgive her and the blackmailer is foiled. See review on page 702 this issue. N. G. C.

No Quarter—Beauty—April 27.—Virginia Kirtley and Joseph Harris are the featured players in this really natural little farce which relates the misadventures of an engaged couple shortly after the installation of a new gas meter that has to be fed quarters at frequent intervals. When the supply of 25c pieces runs out, unexpectedly, one evening, not only the dinner is spoiled, but the illumination of the house also destroyed. The picture will be popular with all, except gas companies. N. G. C.

Checkmate — Majestic — April 27.— Tom, a telegraph operator, meets his employer's ward, Dorothy, and is greatly attracted to her. Dorothy has never seen her father. He placed her in Gray's care when she was a baby; refusing to see her because her birth had caused her mother's death. Gray has speculated with the money which he was to turn over to Dorothy when she became of age or married, and lost it. The girl's father, outgrowing his antipathy to his daughter, wires Gray that he is coming to take the girl in charge. Gray decides on marrying Dorothy as the best way to hide his misappropriation of the funds. Tom becomes suspicious of his employer's actions and interferes. Gray knocks him down and binds him, but Tom manages to pull the telephone from the desk, and, using the receiver as a key, he telegraphs for help. The wire chief rushes to the scene, and frees Tom. He boards the train, and succeeds in preventing Gray from carrying out his scheme. Later, Dorothy and Tom marry.

Bianca Forgets—Thanhouser — (Two Reels)—April 27.—Florence La Badie and Morris Foster starred. Jarvis, Bianca Wells' ardent suitor, is unable to understand the position of Count Berdeau who seems to be at the Wells home constantly. Jarvis' suspicions that the nobleman is a fugitive from the law accounts for Berdeau's being snatched away from a ballroom, and marched before a magistrate to account for himself. This brings out the explanation that the count and Mr. Wells are putting over a business deal. Bianca appreciates the humorous side of the affair and also the motives that prompted Jarvis in his part of it.

Wanted—A Wife — American — April 28.—Andy Fortune resorts to a want ad to seek a wife and receives replies from girls of all shades and colors. The one that meets his approval, however, is a photograph of a bathing girl on the back of which is written, "find me." Andy goes to a nearby beach to endeavor to find his charmer. J. D. P. Moore and his daughter, Ruth, are staying at the beach and become acquainted with Count Raphio, whom her father thinks would make a good match. Ruth witnessing Andy's rescue of the bather, declares she will wed none but a hero, and accordingly the count arranges a fake rescue of her, but at the last moment his plans go astray, and it is Andy who rushes to aid her. While the ruffians are taking their revenge on the count, Andy recognizes the girl as the one on the photo and she promises to become his wife. Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood featured.

The Renegade — Broncho — (Two Reels)—April 28.—Robert Graves, a renegade slave trader in Africa, defeats a party of British soldiers and takes prisoner Captain Marley. He finds in the captain's clothing a letter telling him that he is heir to the estates of the late Earl of Craven. Graves sells Marley into slavery to Ali Hamid, and sails for England where he impersonates Marley, and assumes control of the estates. He falls in love with Alice Craven. She distrusts him and repulses his advances. Marley, meanwhile, has become infatuated with Normah, a beautiful Arabian girl. She helps him to escape, and he returns to England to recover his inheritance. At his lawyer's suggestion, he appears in Graves' bedroom while the latter is lying in a drunken stupor. The usurper awakens, thinks he sees Marley's ghost, and leaps out of the window to his death. Alice marries a young Englishman, and Marley sends for Normah, who, as his wife, presides with him over the Craven estates. Charles Ray, Herschal Mayall, Louis Glaum, and Ethel Ullman featured.

The Power of the Street—Domino—(Two Reels)—April 29.—John Steele, a New York stock broker, is happy with his beautiful wife, Marion, until the advent into their circle of Alexander Hanlon. The latter deliberately ruins Steele in the exchange, and elopes with Marion to Europe. Steele pretends suicide and goes to Alaska under an assumed name. There he strikes it rich and returns to New York, resolved to avenge himself on Hanlon. He is wearing a heavy beard, and his rival fails to recognize him. In a fierce battle on the

The Buried Treasure—Reliance—April 28.—Marie's father looks more kindly upon Jean's suit for his daughter's hand when the young clam-digger finds a chart revealing the location of buried gold. Ragout steals the chart, kidnaps Marie, and sets sail to find the treasure. Jean and the girl's father induce a tourist to take them overland at lightning pace to the spot where lies the gold. They rescue Marie and locate the treasure.

Ragout is driven out of the country, and Jean and his sweetheart marry. Florence Crawford, Walter Long, and Mr. Rhefield featured.

Movie Fans—Falstaff—April 30.—A young clerk and a stenographer meet in a movie theater, fall in love, and marry. Common ambitions have drawn them together, he, dreaming of becoming a scenario writer, and she, of starring on the screen. But, as time passes, their hopes fail to materialize. Gradually true love replaces the bond of common ambition, and, when the baby comes, they agree that in her and her future rest all of their ambitions. Lorraine Huling and Billy Sullivan featured.

The Valley of Hate—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—April 30.—Allen Walsh, a young Northerner, falls in love with Madge Canfield while teaching school in the mountains of Tennessee. Allan's attitude towards the feud between the Canfields and the Huttons causes Madge's father to regard him as an enemy. In spite of this the young lovers meet in secret. When a cousin of Canfields' is found murdered Madge's father convinces her that Walsh is the guilty one, and she consents to lure him within her father's reach. She learns that Walsh is innocent, and, rather than have him know that she plotted against his life, she persuades him to allow her to wear his coat and hat. Canfield shoots, and his daughter falls. Walsh induces Mrs. Hutton to nurse her back to health. The two families become reconciled, and Walsh and Madge are married. Rhea Mitchell and Thomas Chatterton featured.

The Little Soldier Man—Majestic—April 30.—Mildred's boy chum becomes jealous of a big soldier doll given her by her uncle, and steals it. That night he dreams that he and the soldier race to reach Mildred. The soldier wins, and marries the girl. Paul, meanwhile has secured his father's sword. As the couple leave the minister's house, he leaps forward to kill the soldier—and wakes up. He steals out of bed, pulls open the bureau drawer, and sees his rival lying there unromantically calm.

The House of Bentley—Reliance—(Two Reels)—May 1.—John Bentley discharges his pretty little stenographer when his son falls in love with her, and threatens to disinherit the boy if he marry below his station. Grandma Bentley sympathizes with the lovers, and determines to help them. She recalls to her son the story of his own romance, and how he and his bride began life together in poverty. Mr. Bentley relents, and consents to John's and Edith's marriage. Frank Bennett and Teddy Sampson play the leading roles.

Locked Out—Royal—May 1.—Ned leaves town on business, telling Nell that he will be back in the morning. He finds that he will be able to make the night train back and wires his wife to that effect. In coming out in the hall to get the telegram, Nell is locked out. Clad only in pajamas she attempts to get into the house by way of the fire escape, and is taken for a burglar. Ned finds her in a compromising position, but the janitor's explanation and some persuasion restore him to good humor.

Ethel's Disguise—Komic—May 2.—Antonio becomes infatuated with Trixie, a chorus girl, and his wife asks Mr. Hadley to start divorce proceedings for her. First, some evidence is needed against the Italian, and to this end Hadley has Ethel disguise herself in man's clothes, and follow Antonio. The Italian finds his sweetheart in a cafe, surrounded by several admirers. He raises such an uproar that they turn Trixie over to Ed, who happens to be Ethel's lover, and make their escape. Ethel enters just in time to see Ed with Trixie in his arms. She gets even by flirting with the chorus girl. Again Antonio objects. Ed learns Ethel's identity in time to save her from harm, and the stenographer has the pleasure of serving a summons on the Italian.

The Comeback—Majestic—(Two Reels)—May 2.—Borden, roused to defend the name of a girl whom Sinclair has implicated in a story he has been telling, empties a revolver at the other clubman. Fred Dexter, Borden's cousin, hides him until he is ready to leave for New Zealand. Some months later Borden's attention is called to his picture printed in a New York paper. The news item announces that Dexter has identified the body of a man found in the woods as that of his cousin, Richard Borden, and that he, being next of kin, inherits the fortune of Francis Borden, a South African millionaire who, on dying, willed his fortune to Borden. The editor of the paper on which Borden is working listens to the fellow's story, and suspects that the shooting at the club was a prearranged affair. It turns out that he is right. Dexter, knowing of the uncle's death, arranged with Sinclair and another to stage the little play at the club, first filling Borden's gun with blank cartridges. When faced with this theory, the conspirators finally confess. Borden returns to New York and to the girl whose name he defended. Dexter and his accomplices leave the country.

Universal Program

Playmates—Sterling—April 15.—Olive and Margie start off the day with most sincere intentions of keeping clean, but, after a game of marbles, they submerge themselves in a muddy pond, and come out black from head to foot. Fearful lest mother should see them, they creep into the bath tub, emerge white and joyous, and indulge in a pillow fight in the bedroom. One of the pillows bursts, and the room becomes filled with feathers. Mother appears at the opportune moment, and rescues the "kiddies."

Animated Weekly No. 163—Uuniveral—April 21.—Vice President Marshall visits the San Diego Exposition; Jane Addams and prominent women sail for the Hague to participate in a peace conference; Mayor Mitchell attends dedication of fountain to the memory of Isador and Ida Straus who lost their lives in the Titanic disaster, New York City; Schooner Kit Carson runs aground off Narragansett Pier, Rhode Island; General Huerta arrives in New York City; President Wilson opens American League base ball season, Brooklyn, New York; the opening of the Federal and National League seasons in Brooklyn and Boston, respectively; negro baptism in the Mississippi River, St. Louis, Mo.; war section, including views from London, Russia and France; cartoons by Hy Mayer of Puck.

Nature's Triumph — Laemmle — April 25.—At the insistance of his wife, Conway leaves for the mountains hoping, by means of solitude, to cure his habit of drink. Beth, the hotel keeper's daughter serves him as guide and they become fast friends, thus arousing the jealousy of Charles, Beth's sweetheart. Conway tells Beth of his fault and of his wife and the girl, in an excess of sympathy, throws her arms about his neck. Charles sees this and attempts to shoot Conway. The latter produces a telegram in which his wife summons him home to his newborn son and the youthful lovers are reunited.

The Honor of the Ormsbys—(Three Reels) — Victor — April 26. — Maurice Ormsby leaves his Virginia home to make his way in New York. His father's parting admonition is that, should he marry, he choose a girl of high birth. In New York, Maurice falls in love with Mary Hempden of the Folly theater whom he marries and therefor is disowned by his proud father, John Ormsby. The task of providing for Mary and himself is too much for Maurice and the end of five years finds them and their baby in poverty. Maurice appeals to his father but the letter is torn up, unread. The old butler, Roberts, pieces it together, obtains Maurice's address and sends him fifty dollars. Maurice gets rid of this money in a saloon, is thrown out and later is shanghaied on a vessel bound for China. Mary is tempted by a former admirer, to take advantage of a life of ease but refuses and is found by Roberts, who comes to see Maurice. With her baby, she is taken by him to the Ormsby estate in Virginia. There Mary nurses old John Ormsby through a serious illness and wins his heart, as also does the baby. Later, Maurice, reformed by the hardships of his long voyage, returns to Virginia, his search for Mary having been fruitless. John Ormsby unrelentingly reproaches him for not having married a girl like Mary. Explanations, forgiveness and happiness follow.

Matty's Decision—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—April 27.—Christy Matthewson and Eddie try to decide where to spend their vacation. Eddie suggests Hoboken. As punishment Mattie sends a base-ball toward him, it misses Eddie, breaks through a window and hits a girl. The girl summons a policeman and they enter the house from which the ball came and find Mattie and Eddie. Matty's decision is "Arrest the ball."

His Nobs, the Duke — Nestor — April 27.—At the Cliff House, Miss Dill Pickle determines to enamour His Nobs, the Duke. At the same hotel The Girl, her father and sweetheart Jack, are stopping. Father determines to have a duke in the family but his plans whereby The Girl will have a chance to get acquainted with the royal person, are frustrated by the Dill Pickle. At last the duke and The Girl make an appointment to go walking. Jack disguises two friends and confronts the duke and The Girl with them, introducing them as the wife and son of the duke. The latter turns and runs. Victory is Jack's.

A Prophet of the Hills—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—April 28.—Jim Blake and Nan Mason are sweethearts when the arising of a fued between the two families threatens to disrupt their romance. Frank Mason is shot by the Blakes. Jim refuses to take a part in the fight, is reviled by his family and in anger seizes a rifle and goes into the woods to seek whom he might kill. He meets the kindly old "prophet of the hills" who shows him how wrong he is and replaces the rifle with a Bible. Jim places the book inside his coat where it stops the progress of a bullet sent toward him by Nan who mistakes him for another member of his family. Hot-tempered, she refuses to remain friendly with him, but later is persuaded differently by the old prophet, who reconciles the two. Shots are heard and the three emerge into the thick of the Blake-Mason fight. The old prophet is killed and over his body the two families declare peace.

Shaved in Mexico—L-Ko—April 28.—Senor LaBullio is the accepted suitor of the Senorita Hitchy Koo; he also is the village barber. Then one, Perkins, globe-trotter comes to town and obtains the Senorita's favor. He brags about it and

W. N. SELIG knows a great deal about advertising.

Mr. Selig says:—

"If there is one enterprise on earth that a 'quitter' should leave severely alone, it is advertising. To make a success of advertising one must be prepared to stick like a barnacle on a boat's bottom. He should know before he begins it that he must spend money—lots of it. Somebody must tell him also that he cannot hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditure early in the game. Advertising doesn't jerk, it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady. It increases day by day and year by year, until it exerts an irresistible power."

Are you prepared to stick?

Are you concentrating in one territory and letting the tremendous Central and Western States go without any publicity?

unfortunately, thereafter, goes to get a shave. LaBullio has an assortment of razors handy but Perkins leads him a chase which is fatal to all who get in the way of either the barber or the globe-trotter. At the conclusion of an exciting time, they discover that the Senorita is faithful to neither.

Courage—Big U—April 29.—Walter and Ruth are engaged. One night they witness McHugh and several companions hold up Flynn, a westerner. Walter goes to Flynn's rescue, is felled and Flynn, after driving off his assailants, is shot through the shoulder. He is taken to the home of Ruth where he becomes convalescent. Ruth, her fancy taken by his tales of the west, marries him and goes west to live. Walter makes his work fill his life and some time later, in a western hospital, offers his blood to save the life of a sickly boy. The boy is the son of Ruth and Flynn. At home the boy's father, who has liked cards and drink too well, tries to drown his worry over his little son, in drink. McHugh, who has waited long for his revenge, fires at him through the window and Ruth is widowed. The boy recovers without Ruth's knowing whose blood saved him. Three months later, the boy falls into the river is saved by Walter and Ruth learns that she has him to thank twice for the life of her boy. The engagement broken years before is resumed and happiness is promised for three people.

Unlike Other Girls—(Two Reels)—Rex—April 29.—Henry Darrell builds a railroad in the western town which his wealth controls. Mrs. Barnett, in moderate circumstances, refuses to sell her homestead for the small sum Darrel offers and when the railroad is built across her land, starts a lunch-room at its terminal. Trade is brisk, so Darrell starts an opposition restaurant and takes the Barnett trade away. Ray Darrell and Polly Barnett, school-day sweethearts, return from college. Polly takes charge of the Barnett kitchen and business again becomes brisk. Ray, not knowing who the Barnett cook is, decides to kidnap her in order to turn patronage again to the Darrells. He discovers Polly, the Barnetts receive a large sum for their property and Polly and Ray marry.

At the Banquet Table—(Two Reels)—Imp—April 30.—King Baggot is seen in the leading part in this quick, parlor comedy. A drunken man is left in King's home by mistake, and King's wife, hearing a noise, shoots and tumbles the intruder to the floor—she thinks. In reality, the drunken man was lying there before the shot was fired. Then, through ludicrous circumstances arising from a mix-up in overcoats, King is suspected of committing the "crime."

Her Friend the Milkman—Nestor—April 30.—Eddie, just home from college, starts to learn his father's business, that of the dairy, from the beginning so is given a milk-route. He becomes enamoured with the supposed maid at the home of Mrs. Grey, where he delivers milk. The girl is Miss Gray who plays maid while the real maid is ill. Miss Gray and Eddie decide they are in love. Mrs. Gray decides to report Eddie to his firm and does so. While Mrs. Gray makes her complaint to Eddie's father, Eddie and his bride enter. The mixed identities of the young people is explained and everybody is satisfied.

A Romance of Hawaii—Victor—April 30.—Roselli, a painter, his daughter Marie and her fiancee, Bainbridge, go to Honolulu where Roselli finds in Captain Clifford of the fishing industry, a desirable model. Marie is interested in Clifford and his daughter Leolo and Bainbridge becomes unreasonably jealous. He hires some fishermen to abduct and murder Clifford. The latter pretending to be dead, is thrown overboard a vessel and swims in safety to shore. There he is found by Roselli's party. He accuses Bainbridge and the latter's evidence of guilt convicts him.

Nabbed (Two Reels)—Bison—May 1.—The new chief of police, in earnest about cleaning up certain districts, orders the Red Light district closed. This act makes the Ward Boss his enemy. The chief has much to contend with, also, in the way of supposed reformers. A raid is made upon a certain house. Information of it had been obtained by the Ward Boss and he managed to bring the chief's daughter to the house to be raided in order that she be among those arrested. But an inmate befriends her and to the discomfiture of the Boss, the chief's daughter is not among those arrested. The wife and daughter of the reformer are, however, and complete victory belongs to the chief. The girl who befriended his daughter is given a new start in life.

No Soup—Joker—May 1.—The American Consul, who leads a lonely life among the Igorottes welcomes a minister, his wife and daughter. The latter's pet dog escapes and the consul, knowing the dog-eating habits of the Igorottes, leads the search for the canine, its owner having promised to marry the man who returns the dog to her. Various near-captures are made and finally the dog is rescued just as he was about to become soup. The consul thus wins the hand, heart and money of the girl.

Tiny Hands—Powers—May 1.—Captain Monroe's last memory of his baby is of the clutch of its tiny hands upon his fingers as he leaves for the front. Later he receives news of the deaths of his baby and wife. On his entrance into a southern town with his troops, the captain makes his headquarters at the home of Mrs. Kirby "The Little Widow." She leaves for her mother's house and is followed by her mammy who carries a clothes basket. The captain demands to know what she is carrying. His hand, inserted into the basket, is clutched by baby fingers. His dearest memory returns, and the widow and her charges are passed through the lines in safety.

"$100,000"—Laemmle—May 2.—Frank Edmanton is entrusted with a large sum of money for deposit in a country bank which will have to close its doors unless the money arrives speedily. Edmanton, though married, is enamored with Lila Holmes, a woman of the under-world, who has discouraged Edmanston's advances because his wealth was not sufficient for her. Edmanston tempts her with the money the bank has entrusted to him. She consents to go away with him, then learns for what purpose the money has been given him. The bank to be saved is the one in which Lila's mother has her savings. Slipping away with the money, Lila commands Edmanton's chauffeur to take her to the country bank where she arrives in time to save it from closing. Lila's mother realizes the girl's heroism, forgiveness is extended and Lila goes to her mother's home. Edmanton meanwhile, has gone home with the intent to commit suicide. His wife intervenes; he tells her of Lila and her escape with the money. The wife 'phones the bank and learns that through Lila, it is saved. Edmanton tells the president of his bank that he became ill and so turned the money over to Lila to deliver. Lila sends him the message to be kind to his wife. Edmanton has learned his lesson.

Their One Love—Thanhouser—May 2.—The total absence of sub-titles and the thrilling battle scenes, staged at night, combine with a simple little story in making this picture different from those of the general run. The Thanhouser twins, Madeline and Marion Fairbanks, play the principal parts. Both Madeline and Marion, sisters, are in love with Valvert, a neighbor's son, who enlists with the South at the opening of the war. For some time the girls are unaware of the trend of each other's affections, but, on learning that they both love the same boy, each bravely determines that the other shall be the chosen one. On their way out to mail their letters to the soldiers, they meet on the veranda. The awkward silence is broken by the arrival of a travel-stained soldier who gives them a package, stating that it contains the effects of Calvert who was killed in a recent battle. C. R. C.

The Shadows of a Great City—(Five Reels)—Popular Players.—A profligate son of a wealthy merchant falls in love with the daughter of an inventor, who has devoted his life to perfecting machinery for the merchant. When an accident causes the inventor's death, the merchant lays claim to an unpatented invention. Unaware of his father's acts, the son is courting the inventor's daughter, and his father offers him a half interest in the business if he will renounce the girl, but the boy refuses, and when ordered from home, secures a job as stevedore on the docks. In a quarrel with the foreman he accidentally pushes the latter into the river and, running to his sweetheart, declares he has committed murder. He is arrested and sentenced to Blackwell's Island, and while there he learns that the man he is supposed to have murdered is alive, and breaks jail. His sweetheart, meanwhile, has discovered the same facts and goes to the governor at Albany, from whom she secures a pardon for her hero. The last scene discloses the couple in their own little home.

Mutual Masterpictures

On the Night Stage—(Five Reels)—N. Y. M. P. Corporation.—William S. Hart, Rhea Mitchel and Robert Edeson featured. The "road agent" lives as a respected citizen by day and loves the dance hall girl with all his heart. He agrees with the citizens of the western village that the mysterious bandit, who is none other than himself, should be captured. The sky pilot comes to the village and falls in love with the girl, after converting her from the life of the dance hall. The "road agent" gives her up, and after a year we see her happily married to the sky pilot. Another man comes into her life and threatens to destroy her happiness and that of the sky pilot, but the "road agent" turns outlaw once more and does away with the worthless fellow. Reviewed on page 656 of the April 24 issue.

Man's Prerogative—(Four Reels)—Reliance.—Robert Edeson, Mary Alden, Charles Clary, and Billie West impersonate the four characters in this picture who become involved in an unhappy, and for one of them, tragic tangle, resulting from a woman's rebelling against the first law of society. It is being released as a Mutual Masterpicture subject. Reviewed on page 703. C. R. C.

Captain Macklin—(Four Reels)—Majestic.—Adapted from Richard Harding Davis' fascinating novel, this Mutual Masterpicture release visualizes the adventures of romantic Captain Macklin, a former West Point cadet who casts his lot with the army of General Garcia, deposed president of Honduras. Jack Conway, Lillian Gish, Spottiswoode Aitken, W. E. Lowery, and Dark Cloud are seen in the principal parts. C. R. C.

North American

A Heritage of Hate—(Chapter One of the North American Novel, "The Diamond From the Sky")—(Three Reels)—American.—The prologue depicts the finding of "The Diamond From the Sky" which later becomes the heirloom of the Stanley family, while the two reels of the first chapter show the intense rivalry between Colonel Arthur Stanley and Judge Lamar Stanley, Virginia aristocrats and descendants of Lord Arthur Stanley, two hundred years later. When a girl is born to the young wife of Colonel Arthur Stanley, the latter, to retain an earldom and "The Diamond From the Sky," buys a new born gypsy baby boy and substitutes it for his own babe. Judge Lamar Stanley visits Colonel Arthur Stanley's home to see the child just as Hagar, the gypsy woman, bursts into the room to demand her boy, and the colonel falls unconscious across the library table. See review on page 699, this issue.

Niobe—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—Hazel Dawn proves a delightful Niobe and is splendidly supported by Charles Abbe, as the harassed president of the insurance company. Peter Amos Dunn, president of an insurance company, takes home a statue of Niobe, and, falling asleep before the fire, is aroused by sounds from behind the screen back of which the statue has been placed. On investigating, he finds the statue has come to life, and when the vision flings her arms around his neck and hails him as her master, he is petrified with horror, since there is a Mrs. Dunn and a sister, both of whom are at the theater. Dunn succeeds in getting Niobe upstairs and dresses her in some clothes which have recently arrived for the new governess, but later when she descends, clad in various parts of the governess' wardrobe, and meets Mrs. Dunn and the sister, there is a scene. Niobe escapes in the night to dance upon the greensward. Dunn follows and finally succeeds in getting her back into the house, though the situation between Niobe and Mrs. Dunn becomes more strained when Niobe flings her arms around Dunn's neck. He will have nothing to do with her, and she plunges a knife into her heart, expiring in his arms. Just then the family really return from the theater and find Dunn fast asleep before the fire. Upon being awakened he goes tremblingly over to the screen, finds the statue just as he had left it and nearly collapses with joy.

The Spanish Jade—(Five Reels)—Fiction.—Manuela, daughter of a water seller in a Spanish town, is sold as a dancing girl and later meets and falls in love with a vagabond calling himself Esteban Vincas, though in reality he is Don Bartolome, son of the poverty-stricken Don Luis. To escape his poverty, he has become a bandit. Later Osmund Manvers, an Englishman traveling in Spain, meets Manuela and is struck by her beauty. He rescues the girl from some ruffians and takes her with him toward Madrid. Bartolome follows planning to kill her, but in the absence of Manvers she stabs Bartolome and then flees, leaving behind only a silver crucifix. Manvers attempts to find her, but is unsuccessful, and later takes the crucifix to a goldsmith to have it encased in plates of gold. Don Luis sees him there and later, when he learns of his son's murder, tries to arrest the Englishman. Manvers is enabled to escape by Gil Perez, his valet, and finds refuge in a house in Madrid, in which Manuela is living. Fearing her lover will be killed, Manuela offers to give herself up to Don Louis, and meets him in the park for that purpose. He forgives her, and as she is walking away she is attacked by Tormillo, Don Luis' servant. Manvers regains consciousness and sets out to seek her, coming up in time to effect her rescue.

Snobs—(Five Reels)—Lasky.—Henry Disney, a milkman, is discovered by Phipps, a lawyer, to be the heir to the title and fortune of the Duke of Walshire. Phipps endeavors to interest Disney in Laura, his sister, with the hope of effecting a marriage before Disney discovers that he is a duke. Disney, however, has seen and fallen in love with Ethel Hamilton, a social butterfly, and when he accordingly discovers that he is a duke, he courts Ethel. At a ball which he gives, Disney disgraces himself in Ethel's eyes and she tells him that his innumerable friends are all snobs pursuing him for his money alone. He renounces his wealth and title, goes back to his milk wagon and Ethel acts as his instructor in teaching him how to be a duke.

Just Nuts—Pathe.—This is a most slappy slap-stick comedy, which is good enough to be funny, despite its horseplay. As with all comedies of this class, the humor is in the spontaenous action, not in the plot and its situations. The story, which is about the love affairs of three or four men who invariably fall in love with the same girl all at the same time, contains many opportunities for clever "stunts." C. R. C.

Bridge-Building and Track-Laying in the French Army—Pathe.—An interesting insight into the lightning-like methods used in the French army to transport the forces and implements of warfare. It is a thrilling sight to see substantial bridges or stretches of firm, even railroad track built in almost no time. C. R. C.

The Watching Eye—(Episode three, New Exploits of Elaine)—(Two Reels)—Pathe.—Wu Fang finds that to obtain the treasure of the Clutching Hand, the mystic ring possessed by Elaine is necessary. By concealing himself within a huge vase, the Chinaman is conveyed to Elaine's Aunt Josephine's, and there, emerging from the vase, secures the necessary ring. Meanwhile Kennedy obtains a clue to the Chinaman's whereabouts and arrives in time to frighten Wu Fang away before the treasure can be obtained. As the episode closes, Wu Fang finds the treasure, though Elaine is still missing. See review on page 706 this issue.

When Justice Sleeps—Pathe—(Three Reels).—This is the third of the "Who Pays?" series, featuring Ruth Roland and Henry King. A young man with ability and a future meets a pretty girl and loses his heart to her. After their marriage they learn how terribly mismated they are. His ambition is to accomplish things in life, to command the respect of men of prominence, and to be loved by his wife and family. She, however, thinks only of the present, and her extravagance weighs heavily upon her husband's modest income. The inevitable comes to pass. Given the choice between retaining his honor and his wife's love, he chooses the latter by gratifying his wife's request for money with his bank's funds. He wins on horses, and again in the stock market, but beyond this burst of fortune he sees the impending danger of the bank examiner's expected visit the next morning. The wife's brother, formerly a safe-blower, but now endeavoring to lead an honest life, is pressed into service and succeeds in putting the money in the vault—but is caught in trying to make his getaway. His dream of honor is limited to the bars of his prison cell, and the other two live as before, apparently wealthy, respected people. C. R. C.

Serial Publication

Runaway June—Reliance—(Episode Fifteen)—April 21.—This release concludes the story of June Moore's adventures while trying to elude her husband, Ned. Back in New York, Ned Warner traces his young bride to a large, glass-roofed building, where he sees her surrendering herself to the impassioned embrace of Gilbert Blye. Failing to receive an answer to his repeated knocks on the door, Ned splinters the panels of the door, climbs through, and attacks the man with the black vandyke. June, screaming, implores him to stop, telling him that he is in a motion picture studio. Ned then realizes that what he has seen has not been reality, but merely acting. He turns to June, and she explains that she has made herself independent by working as leading lady in the Blye Motion Picture stock company. June and Ned once more are in one another's arms, and this time there is no vandyked "villain" to interfere.

Universal Special

The Unseen Terror—(Two Reels)—(Sixth Episode of the Black Box)—Universal—April 12.—An exciting fire scene, in which Detective Sanford Quest makes his escape from a burning building by sliding down a rope and making his way along a telephone cable high above the street, forms one of the thrillers of this installment of the story. At its finish Quest succeeds in proving his alibi by means of a confession obtained from the two Gallaghers, and also finds another of the black boxes containing a message that leads to the discovery of Mrs. Rheinholdt's missing necklace, in the drawer of his own desk. See review on page 654, issue of April 24.

The Black Box—(Episode Seven)—(Two Reels)—Universal.—Quest discovers, in this episode, that his suspicions of Craig were justified when he finds him in a supposedly vacant house, in which he has many devices known to the criminal world only. Despite the efforts of the detective, Craig slips from his grasp, and as the final scene fades from the screen we see Quest in a motor boat trying to catch up with the ship which is carrying Craig out to sea. The blowing up of the house, two stories high, in which Craig had his headquarters, furnishes the chief thrill. Review appears on page 707 of this issue.

World

The Fifth Commandment—(Five Reels)—Brady.—Julius Steger is featured in this powerful story, the scenes of which are laid in New York and Rio de Janeiro. Carl Winter, an instructor in music, falls in love with Alice Winthrop, the only daughter of a wealthy banker, and when the father learns that Alice is in love with her teacher, she is told that she must never see Winter again, while Carl is discharged from his position at the conservatory as a result. The two marry and Alice is ordered out of the house by her father. Carl leaves for Rio de Janeiro to become head instructor in a college of music, and Alice is to join him when he is established, but later Winthrop persuades her to return home and then intercepts and destroys the letters received from Carl and about to be mailed by Alice. A daughter is born to Alice, who dies the same day, and Winthrop cables to Carl that his daughter is dead. Carl, disheartened and discouraged, earns a meager livelihood by playing in cabarets, and some eighteen years later returns to America. One day while Carl is singing on the street, he is seen by Alice, who is attracted by the singing and invites him to call at her home and play and sing at a birthday party. Carl accepts the invitation, not knowing that it is his own child who has invited him to the home of his wife's father, and while there he notes a photograph of his wife, and when Winthrop enters Carl informs him who he is. Winthrop instructs his grandchild to obey the Fifth Commandment, "Honor Thy Father," and the story ends with father and daughter embracing each other.

Rena's Pet Pirate—Thistle.—Ed and Jake, the fathers of Rena and Fred, desire to see their children married, but Rena will have nothing to do with Fred since she longs for an adventurous lover. Rena's father announces that Admiral Fritz Rocquefort is to visit him, the admiral being an ex-pirate, and Rena is at once interested. When the two have fallen in love and eloped, it is learned after the wedding that the admiral is none other than Fred in disguise, when Rena is satisfied, since he has shown much bravery in fighting off his pursuers during the elopement.

Universal to Stage Big Features

And Other Filmdom Happenings

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has just announced that within the near future it will offer the public some of the most successful plays of the dramatic stage and books of the literary world on the regular Universal program, with the greatest stage stars obtainable as the leading players.

Importance is placed on the fact that these films will be released not as great special features, but as a regular part of the Universal program, though it is expected a slight additional charge will have to be made for their rental.

The Universal plans are not as yet nearly complete enough to make announcement of anywhere near all the plays or stars under contract with the Universal, but already such favorites as Lawrence D'Orsay, Wilton Lackaye, Helen Ware, Nat Goodwin, Julia Dean, Charles E. Evans, Ward & Vokes, Marie Cahill, Emmet Corrigan, Herbert Kelsey and Effie Shannon may be mentioned as among those who have signed contracts to appear in these pictures, while such plays as "Her Own Money," "Caleb West, Master Driver," "The Earl of Pawtucket," "Bucky O'Connors," "The Suburban," "Business is Business," "The Run on the Bank," "The Parlor Match," "Nancy Brown," "The Little Brother of the Rich," and "The Escape of Mr. Trimm" are among the subjects soon to be filmed. At the time the next issue of MOTOGRAPHY goes to press it is expected a more complete announcement of these Universal features may be made.

National Convention Program

Everything is set for the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at San Francisco, July 13 to 16, inclusive.

National President Marion S. Pearce has just returned from a trip to New York and in his report made to the league declares that he was cordially received everywhere and that the convention is receiving the support of all the eastern film manufacturers and supply men.

In fact, Mr. Pearce declares that the league is now in a position to merit the sincere support of the whole industry in a fashion never possible before, and that if the league makes good with this convention, the manufacturers in the future will undoubtedly cooperate in every way with the league, and that the league should show its appreciation by fighting everywhere vicious laws and regulations, as they are introduced in the various states, and seek in every way to protect and better the conditions of the industry as a whole, as well as seek the betterment of each individual and member of the league.

A complete program has been outlined for the various days of the convention and if it goes off according to schedule it will be as follows:

MONDAY, JULY 12.

9:00 A. M.—Arrival of League special from New York, Chicago and eastern points. Train will be met by reception committee and exhibitors escorted to their hotels.
11:00 A. M.—Session of National Executive Board.
2:00 P. M.—Session National Executive Board.
8:00 P. M.—Reception by manufacturers and exhibition feature of pictures in exposition salon.

TUESDAY, JULY 13.

9:00 A. M.—Arrival special trains from Washington and Oregon and from Los Angeles and other California points. Trains will be met by reception committee.
10:30 A. M.—Formal opening of National Convention.
2:00 P. M. and 8. P. M.—Exposition salon, viewing pictures and exhibits.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14.

10:00 A. M. to 1:00 P. M.—Business session.
Afternoon and evening, continuous exhibitions in exposition salon.

THURSDAY, JULY 15.

10:00 A. M.—Business session.
2:00 P. M.—Automobile trip.
8:00 P. M.—Exhibitions, exposition salon.

FRIDAY, JULY 16.

9:00 A. M.—Arrival All Star special, bringing actors and actresses to attend grand ball.
10:00 A. M.—Final business session of convention, including election of new league officers.
2:00 P. M.—Reception of screen favorites in respective booths, exposition salon.
9:00 P. M.—Grand ball.

SATURDAY, JULY 17.

9:00 A. M.—Departure special trains for Los Angeles. Arrangements are being made to spend several days in and around Los Angeles and the big studios.
During Saturday the screen favorites will be guests of the League at the Panama Pacific Exposition.
The All Star special will return to Los Angeles Sunday morning.

During the Wednesday and Thursday business sessions the convention will be addressed by several of the greatest men in the motion picture business. Names of the speakers and subjects will be announced later.

The grand ball will be attended by at least one hundred of the best known actors and actresses. The ball is to be held in the new civic auditorium, which covers an entire square city block. The dancing floor is one hundred and ninety feet square and on either side will be spacious cafes, each seating a thousand people.

Death of John Bunny

After an illness of about three weeks, John Bunny, whose face is known to motion picture fans the world over because of his comic antics in Vitagraph pictures, passed away at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Monday, April 26. The early part of last week his life was despaired of by physicians, but he rallied and for several days appeared to be progressing nicely. Complications set in, however, and the end came suddenly. Mr. Bunny was one of the earliest favorites of the screen, having joined the Vitagraph Company in 1910, after 26 years on the legitimate stage. His features photographed excellently, and in less than a year his popularity was firmly established. It is doubtful if there were any comically embarassing situations in which he was not placed by scenario writers and directors during his screen career. His "Pickwick Papers" were undoubtedly his most notable work and in the taking of these he visited Europe to secure authentic settings. Last summer he secured a leave of absence from the Vitagraph Company and in October began a tour of the country at the head of his own theatrical troupe in a musical review entitled "Bunny in Funnyland." It is believed that the strain of being on the road and overwork was responsible for bringing on the illness which resulted in his death. MOTOGRAPHY joins his countless other friends in extending sincere sympathy to the Bunny family in their time of sorrow.

N. Y. State Convention

A convention of the New York State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held at the Statler Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., on Wednesday, April 21. The meeting was opened at 10:30 a. m. by National President Marion A. Pierce of Baltimore. He made a lengthy address in which he outlined the future policy of the league—its aims and benefits.

Next followed the election of officers with the following result:

President, Lee A. Ochs, New York City; first vice-president, J. D. Parmelee, Buffalo; second vice-president, A. N. Wolff, Rochester; treasurer, W. H. Linton, Little Falls; secretary, Adolph Weiss, New York City; national vice-president, Samuel H. Trigger, New York City. After the election of officers Lee A. Ochs took the chair and conducted the meeting for the rest of the day.

Mr. Linton of Little Falls offered a resolution drawn up by Stephen Bush, dwelling upon the necessary legislation for the betterment of the motion picture industry in the State of New York. This resolution was unanimously adopted. Various committees were appointed.

The object of this meeting was a general get-together for the purpose of creating harmony amongst the New York State exhibitors. The meeting adjourned at 5 p. m.

Club Women for Censorship

Massachusetts club women, who for some weeks have been battling against an adverse report of a bill relative to the censoring of motion picture films in that state, won their point last week when the senate substituted in place of the adverse report of the committee a favorable bill, which on roll call received a vote of 32 to 7.

The new bill makes the state board of labor and industries the censoring board for Massachusetts and provides that no film can be shown within the state which has not been properly censored. Among the provisions is the following: "The state board of labor and industry shall charge a fee of $1.00 for each reel of film to be examined which does not exceed 1,000 lineal feet, and for every reel of film exceeding 1,000 lineal feet, the sum of $2.00 shall be charged. All money so received shall be paid monthly into the treasury of the commonwealth. A censor and not more than two assistant censors shall be appointed and their salaries determined, as inspectors of said board."

Completing "Fine Feathers"

The five part photoplay "Fine Feathers," with Janet Beecher in the stellar role, is nearing completion under the guiding hand of Joseph A. Golden. Work on "The Price," by George Broadhurst, with Helen Ware, has been started.

Taylor Joins American

William D. Taylor, the producer, has accepted an engagement with the American Film Manufacturing Company of Santa Barbara, where he will produce feature pictures. Mr. Taylor entered the motion picture field with a big legitimate stage record and among other engagements he was several years with Fanny Davenport. He first joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation and then the Vitagraph, and it was with this last named company that he took the part of "Captain Alvarez," which added so much to his fame as a screen actor. He next joined the Balboa Company as a director and left to produce the Favorite Players' features, with Carlyle Blackwell as his star. "The Last Chapter" and "The High Hand" proved him a producer of the very highest order. He enters on his new duties with a splendid reputation.

Irwin Discusses Big Feature

"As simplicity is the ideal in a piece of machinery, so it is in any business organization; the highest efficiency is secured by the fewest possible manipulations in commercial transactions," said Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., Inc., "and efficiency, 100 per cent of it, is the aim of the four famous producing companies in the new plan of booking big features direct to the exhibitors.

"Big features require especial attention in point of promotion and presentation and the best results can be obtained only by direct dealings between the exhibitors and the producers.

"To conserve the patronage of picture play patrons favoring features, and arouse still greater interest in the art, the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies have produced and are producing special features of such magnitude and artistic preeminence that, to put them into the hands of the exhibitors at prices within reason, an economic and efficacious plan of handling was necessary to show a fair return on the vast sums expended on production.

"Aside from this, another and equally as important a consideration is the matter of service. The public must not be disappointed in the exhibition of a feature on an announced date, nor in the ability of the play to live up to the claims made for it. The disappointment of the public in either instance is dangerous; directly to the exhibitor, and indirectly to the manufacturer and the entire industry as a whole.

"Each of our offices is supplied with a sufficient number of prints to properly care for all bookings; it is not a case of individual profit with them, but a matter of caring for the mutual interests of the exhibitor and the manufacturer, for, while working under a corporate name, each branch manager and his staff are really the representatives of the producers, and the exhibitor may have what he wants, and as much, or as little of it as he chooses.

"As for the quality, the reputation of these companies has been firmly established and little need be said. With men of the standing of A. E. Smith, J. Stuart Blackton, William N. Selig, George K. Spoor and Seigmund Lubin giving their personal attention and best efforts to the productions, aided by a powerful staff of famous directors and an army of distinguished stars, the film world may confidently expect features that, in artistic and dramatic values, far surpass anything ever produced.

"The best of specially written picture plays that are at the disposal of our companies will be supplemented with adaptations from famous literary works and noted stage successes. Many prominent stage stars will be featured in addition to the popular artists of the screen, and the subjects will embrace every phase of the dramatic art; spectacles, tragedies and comedies.

"The announcement of the titles and release dates of our features, three months in advance, is of inestimable value to the exhibitor; it allows him plenty of time to make up his program, distribute advance matter, and by acquainting all of his patrons of its coming, with the positive assurance that it will be shown on the announced date, he will get the utmost out of its exhibition.

"In dealing directly with the exhibitor, it is our intention to help him make more money; and we are now ready to fulfill this purpose."

A "Who's Who" of Stars

Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., the "big four" of the motion picture producers, in announcing the first sixteen productions to be offered through the new affiliated booking offices, present a list of players that reads like a "who's who" in dramatics, and includes shining lights from both stage and studio.

Frank Daniels, Viola Allen, Tyrone Power, Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Edwin Arden, Romaine Fielding, Francis Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Kathlyn Williams, Charles Clary, Wheeler Oakman, Ethel Clayton, Ruth Stonehouse, Rose Coghlan, George Soule Spencer, Edith Storey, Antonio Mareno, E. H. Calvert, Harry Festayer and John Charles, are names to conjure with and more are to come in the features that are now being produced at the different studios.

Anita Stewart and Earle Williams in "The Juggernaut," the powerful drama of railroad stock jobbery in which is introduced the thrilling railroad wreck that cost $25,000, by the Vitagraph Company, is now being shown all over the United States. This is followed by the picturization of George Barr McCutcheon's "Graustark" by the Essanay Company.

Lanier Succeeds Mills

Reginald B. Lanier, son of F. D. Lanier of the old established New York banking house of Winslow, Lanier & Company, has succeeded Philip O. Mills as secretary of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., with offices at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City. There have been many instances of the use of Wall street capital in the moving picture business, but this is an unusual instance of where a Wall street man has turned from stocks, bonds and securities to the personal promotion of photoplays.

Mr. Lanier has been interested in the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., as a stockholder, for some time, but as the result of negotiations which were recently concluded, he has assumed an official position with the company, and in the future will devote all of his time to the company's interests.

Octavia Handworth to Lubin

Octavia Handworth, widely known for her good looks and versatility as an actress, is the latest leading woman to join the Lubin players. She is to be featured in a number of dramas, especially suitable to her type. Miss Handworth has had a long and thorough training as an actress, six years of her professional life having been spent in pictures and thirteen years on the legitimate stage. Miss Handworth was born in New York, but most of her girlhood days were spent in Copenhagen, Denmark, where she was educated in all the arts. When she returned to America she took a post-graduate course at the Brooklyn Conservatory of Music and then did concert work. Miss Handworth achieved quite a reputation as a soprano and concert pianist and was making rapid strides ahead in her work when she was suddenly taken dangerously ill. It was months before she was able to leave her bed, and during those months she completely lost her singing voice. Lew Fields persuaded Miss Handworth to go on the stage and gave her a part in one of Weber and Fields' shows. From then on she played in a long list of dramatic productions. Six years ago Miss Handworth went into pictures and discovered that the screen was the best medium of all for the expression of her artistic ideals.

New Chicago Theaters

If present plans materialize, Chicago will, before the year is over, witness the erection of two exceptionally large motion picture theaters on the west side of State street within the loop. One building is scheduled to cost approximately $1,000,000 and the other in the neighborhood of $600,000.

John Burnham & Company, a stock and bond concern with offices at 39 South La Salle street, is behind one of the play houses and will aim to make it the finest of its kind in the world.

John Burnham in discussing the matter declared that the new house will seat three thousand persons and that in connection with the theater a restaurant will be operated. A large orchestra will be a feature of the show house when it is opened, and with the exception of classical dancing during the intermissions, the theater will be devoted exclusively to the showing of films. Plans for the new building are to be prepared by the firm of Holabird and Roche.

The other theater is to be erected, it is understood, by Jones, Linick and Schaefer, who already control a great number of houses in Chicago. It is declared the new house will have a 100-foot frontage on State street between Jackson and Van Buren streets and will be named The Strand. Aaron J. Jones is authority for the statement that the building will be devoted to theater purposes exclusively. The theater will have a mezzanine and balcony floor and will seat more than 2,500 persons. Plans for this house are to be drawn by the firm of Marshall & Fox.

Vitagraph's New Serial

Beginning on May 20 the Vitagraph Company of America will offer its first serial to the public entitled "The Goddess," which will be released on the General Film Company's program in weekly two-reel installments, and the story of which will appear simultaneously in newspapers widely circulated in all the large cities.

From present indications "The Goddess" will be known as "the serial beautiful," since it is claimed that the new continued story will abound in charming exteriors, unique bits of artistic photography and withal be genuinely powerful and picturesque.

The story was conceived by Gouverneur Morris, the internationally famous writer, and Charles W. Goddard has combined with him in the writing of the story, which will feature Anita Stewart and Earle Williams in the leading roles. The production is being directed by Ralph W. Ince.

The story will treat of the future and disclose many marvelous inventions and discoveries that will revolutionize existing conditions. The Goddess, in the person of Anita Stewart, will direct and control every living thing on earth, and is well nigh a modern Joan of Arc.

As the story opens a group of all powerful men are seated about a table engaged in earnest discussion of the world's activities and power, which in the past was shifted from kings to great financiers, and at the time the story opens has once more shifted so that public opinion rules the world. These mighty captains of industry are beginning to fear for their own authority, and finally conclude that if public opinion is to rule the world they must rule and mold public opinion to suit their needs. The happy idea of creating a beautiful woman and transforming her into a goddess accustomed to do their bidding seems to be the happy solution of their difficulty. Accordingly an innocent girl is kidnapped and taken to an uninhabited island, where she is reared in the belief that she is a messenger from heaven destined to influence the judgment of ordinary mortals.

However, the plans of the money lords go awry, for their goddess escapes from the island before her education in the philosophy of business is complete, and under the guidance of a friendly human, enacted by Earle Williams, she goes about the world spreading the gospel of kindness and love. She faces the problems of anarchists, of socialists, labor questions, modern christianity, and in fact the men and women in every walk of life are influenced by the strength of her wonderful personality.

MacKenzie Making Pathe Feature

Donald MacKenzie, the Pathe producer, announces that he is making a four reel feature, called "The Fortunes of Pierre," which has all the earmarks of a notable success. Mr. MacKenzie has assembled a cast of well known players, most of whom have already achieved fame on the screen.

George Probert, who won golden opinions as Oskar Von Guggen in "Innocent," and the Cadet in "The Lure," has the lead and this picture marks his debut before the camera. Mr. Probert confesses that his first two days of picture acting were little less than torture to him. The sight of the lens staring at him all the time was infinitely more dreadful than the batteries of critical eyes on a big "opening night."

Paul Panzer, after weeks of successful vaudeville touring, returns to the screen again in this picture. Mr. Panzer, it will be remembered, made himself the best hated villain in the country through his work as "Owen" in "The Perils of Pauline."

Other members of the cast are Miss Alma Martin, a popular favorite in the "legitimate," Sam Ryan, who has been in many Pathe pictures, and Charles Bunnell, who was with the Pathe St. Augustine company in the winter of 1913-14. The picture requires hundreds of supers, and Mr. MacKenzie has made arrangements for a troop of cavalry, regulars of the United States Army, who will appear in a number of stirring scenes. George Brackett Seitz wrote the scenario.

Begin "The Broken Coin"

While "The Black Box" continues to smash box-office records, Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, with a special company, have begun work along the San Francisco water-front on the Universal's next great serial, "The Broken Coin," which will be released in fifteen episodes of two reels each upon the completion of the run of "The Black Box." Mr. Ford already has filmed many important scenes in Golden Gate Park and in the underground passages of San Francisco's famous Chinatown district.

Advertising "The Juggernaut"

The Vitagraph Company is issuing de luxe "dodgers" for its first Blue Ribbon Feature release, "The Juggernaut," printed on cream colored paper in blue and gold. The type is well chosen and tells all that is necessary in a thoroughly readable way.

President Aitken Talks of Future

"It is my firm belief that the future will see smaller programs of better films, each of which will stand the acid test of any critic," said Harry E. Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, during an interview with a representative of MOTOGRAPHY in Chicago last week. "For a long, long time I have believed that the exhibitor who changes his program daily is making a great mistake and I believe that at the present time many theater managers think as I do."

Harry E. Aitken.

"We put a great amount of time and money into every picture we make and it does not seem quite just to us that an exhibitor should show it merely one night and then pass it on. Those who have booked films for three or four days have found that they reaped the benefit of not only the direct advertising they did but also the indirect publicity resulting from praise by satisfied spectators. Exhibitors are beginning to realize that they are now being supplied with productions which, if they are advertised in the right way, are certain business-getters, but it seems a shame that a great deal of money should be spent to advertise a picture for a single night only."

Mr. Aitken is enthusiastic over the future of the Mutual Master-Pictures. He says that his company's directors are exerting every effort to make each one so perfect that it stands in a class by itself and that they have been instructed to see that each is as near perfection as possible before declaring it ready for release. He also believes that original scenarios for features will come into their own in time and that the writers of these will represent a new school of literature and one whose standing will rank favorably with the older branches of drama and letters. This will not necessarily mean the production drama originated for the screen to the exclusion of adaptation, but it will mean more of the former and less of the latter than at present. He also thinks that the publication of books will follow the screen play in many cases, because the silent drama's requirements will become even more exacting as time goes on.

His views will doubtless be of interest to many exhibitors who have followed his most successful career and who know that the Mutual Film Corporation has been for some time working out the plan which he outlined in his talk.

New Film Concern

M. B. Dudley, well known in the theatrical game from his management of the tours of such stars as Olga Nethersole, Frederick Ward, James Keene and others of like caliber, has incorporated at San Diego, California, the Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, with a capital stock of $50,000 and will shortly begin to make films near that city.

Mr. Dudley has already produced "Richard the Third," with Frederick Ward in the title role and a multiple reel scenic picture entitled "Panama and the Canal," which was filmed from an aeroplane.

A number of San Diego business men have invested their capital with Mr. Dudley and believe implicitly in the success of his undertaking. J. S. Benner of the United States National Bank of San Diego, is president of the Dudley concern and Leonard G. Coop secretary-treasurer. Mr. Dudley himself will be managing director and Winfield Hogaboom will be scenario editor.

Dwan-Bush Nuptials

Pauline Bush, leading lady for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was married Saturday, April 24, to Allan Dwan, the director, who is at present with the Famous Players. The union is a notable one, for both of these well liked people are at the top of their profession. Mr. Dwan was for a long time directing Miss Bush, this at the time they were both with the "Flying A" forces and when J. Warren Kerrigan was playing opposite to Miss Bush. Then Dwan joined the Famous Players as producer and Miss Bush stuck to the company she was appearing with. The professional parting and Dwan's sojourn in New York only tightened the bonds of affection and sympathy which had existed for so long and when the absent one returned they quickly agreed upon a wedding date. They will enjoy a short honeymoon, but their work will not allow them to be absent long.

Establishing Educational Program

Salisbury, Inc., has opened up a new office in the Candler building, New York, for the purpose of distributing not only the "Salisbury's Wild Life in America" pictures now being shown at the Strand theater, New York, but also for the purpose of establishing an educational program designed to aid the education of both children and grown-ups from the kindergarten to Chautauqua course. Special attention will be given to natural history, geographical and other subjects of similar nature, together with entertaining scenics, bringing to the metropolitan audience the natural wonders of America. If the product of Salisbury, Inc., which is to follow measures up to the photographic and entertaining excellence of the pictures which have been booked by the Strand theater for a six weeks' run, the future of the company is bright indeed.

To Hold Conference

As soon as President Cobe of the Alliance returns from his trip he will call a meeting of exchangemen. The conference, which is to be held in New York, will consider in full several details which, owing to lack of time, were only casually treated by Mr. Cobe on his tour. Among those expected to be present are, M. H. Blackwell of the All-Theaters Film Co., New York distributors of the Alliance program; H. Schwalbe of the Electric Theater Supply Co. of Philadelphia; Herbert Lubin, Allied Features, Inc., Montreal; Herman Rifkin, Eastern Feature Film Co.; Felix Feist of the Celebrated Players Exchange, Chicago, and the managers of the other distributing offices.

Van Ronkel Heads Busy Office

The Chicago office of the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig, Essanay, Inc., is already open and doing a tremendous business. It is located on the second floor of Business College building at Adams street and Wabash avenue.

I. Van Ronkel, district manager of the new concern, has a beautifully furnished private office, and when seen by a representative of Motography was so busy he could hardly find time to talk. Exhibitors thronged the place, and contracts for the new service have already reached a huge figure. Though only a few of the big subjects are yet available for release, the advance booking of the forthcoming features has been arranged for many weeks ahead and from present indications, this exchange will soon be one of the most prosperous in the city of Chicago.

Film Publicity Man Dies

News of the sudden death of Claxton Wilstach, who was handling the Boston publicity on "The Birth of a Nation," was telegraphed Mr. Wilstach's father-in-law, Dan. W. Allen of the Morgan Lithograph Company, on the morning of April 26. On its receipt Mr. Allen had just finished reading a letter from Mr. Wilstach written on April 24 and in which he detailed Boston's sentiment regarding the "Birth of a Nation" film. The telegram announcing the writer's death came as a severe shock to Mr. Allen. Minnie Allen Wilstach, wife of Claxton Wilstach, was wired the news of her husband's death, at Evansville, Ind., where she was playing a vaudeville engagement, which would have all but terminated her tour work for this season.

Liberty Showing Continues

D. W. Griffith's epic film, "The Birth of a Nation," continues at the Liberty theater, where it is now in its third month. This wonderful production has been establishing a record for attendance which is the talk of the town. Plans are now being made at the Liberty theater to make the summer run a feature of the season. A new system of cooling the theater is being installed and whenever the weather makes it necessary the management will be able to reduce the temperature indoors at least fifteen degrees.

Selig Issues Plate Story by Star

Miss Kathlyn Williams, who stars in the Selig Red Seal play, "The Carpet From Bagdad," released in five reels Monday, May 3, by the Selig Company, has written an account of the trials and tribulations of the players experienced during the filming of this great production. Miss Williams' story has been put in plate form by the Selig Company and the proposition put forth will prove beneficial to wideawake exhibitors.

The Selig Company urges exhibitors to call upon the editor of their home newspaper and tell him the Selig Company will furnish the newspaper free of all charge, with an intensely interesting story written by Miss Williams. The story in plate form will not necessitate any composition and it is nicely illustrated. After getting the consent of the newspaper editor, the exhibitor is urged to send the name and address of the publication to the Selig Company, Chicago, and the plate feature will be immediately shipped to the publication. The story can be published simultaneously with the appearance of the Red Seal play at the local theater or can be printed preceding the booking.

New Denver House

Negotiations have just been concluded which provide for the construction on the site of the old Isis Theater, on Curtis street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, Denver, Colorado, of one of the finest and largest motion picture theaters in the West, at a cost of $175,000. Work of clearing the site for the new building will be completed in time for most of the 1915 tourist trade.

The new house will be the property of the Strand Theater Company, a local corporation, financed with Denver capital. A. F. Megahan represented the company in its negotiations for the site of the building, and will have the destinies of the new house in charge. Thomas F. McGrew represented the owners of the lots where the new building is to be located.

Robert Willison, formerly building inspector of Denver and one of the best known architects in the city, is preparing the plans for the new theater. These plans will include a number of new and unique features.

One of the new features of the theater will be the large, roomy children's nursery and playroom, which will be in charge of a trained matron. This idea has been introduced for the benefit of the many mothers who visit the motion picture houses with their children.

Furnishings and equipment will be massive and elegant. The style of the theater throughout, as well as the class of pictures to be presented, will be of the highest order. The pictures will be similar to those shown at the Strand Theater in New York.

The ventilating and lighting features have been carefully worked out by experts, and every provision for the health and comfort of patrons will be made. The theater will seat 1,200 persons.

Miss Johnson Conducts Department

"Betterment Films" is the title of a new department which appears in the April issue of The Ladies' World and which is edited by Jane Stannard Johnson, advertising manager of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. The department is devoted to the exploitation of films which serve to uplift the world and contains much that is of interest to those who have studied motion pictures as a means of teaching great lessons.

New United Exchanges

General Manager R. W. Savini of the United Program Film Service with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia, reports the succesful opening of a new branch exchange at Tampa, Florida, with offices at 315 Curry building.

New United Film Service offices have also been opened in Butte, Montana, with a comfortable home in the Butte Post building under the guiding hand of J. C. Woolf of Denver, Colorado, with Manager B. C. Knox in direct charge, while Sidney B. Lust of Washington, D. C., who is manager of the United in that city, is preparing for a grand opening to celebrate moving to new quarters at 903 E street, N. W.

Universal's Harem Film

As most exhibitors know, Ola Humphrey, the California girl who married Prince Hassan, heir to the Egyptian throne, and then fled from her royal husband, has been engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to tell the story of her life to the world through the medium of moving pictures.

Thrilling, indeed, is the interesting succession of events in this charming girl's life. Miss Humphrey was born in California and adopted the stage as a profession when very young. She played in America and abroad in a wide range of parts with some degree of distinction. In Australia she succeeded Margaret Anglin for three Australian tours, winning individual honors. Then she toured around the world in repertoire. Her natural charm and refinement gave her

It was during her Paris and London season that she was presented to Prince Hassan. After a tempestuous courtship the lovely American girl became the wife of the oriental nobleman. But oil and water did not mix. The independent spirit of the American girl rebelled against the ways of the eastern autocrat. It was not long before she determined to free herself of her shackles, and while visiting in Paris she fled to America. A legal separation followed, and now the Turkish embassy of New York and other interested friends are arranging her affairs.

The princess has agreed to divulge every secret of the life in a harem, to be used as the foundation for the scenarios of the Universal production. She also has some snapshots which she took secretly, and these will be used in the settings of the pictures.

Coming Paramount Offerings

According to an announcement just made, the Paramount program for June, July and August will release ten of the strongest feature attractions yet produced by the Famous Players Film Company. Included in the releases of the next three months will be three Pickford productions, "Rags," from the pen of Edith Barnard Delano; "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," from Frances Hogson Burnett's famous play, and "The Little Pal," the release of August. Marguerite Clark will be seen in the screen version of the celebrated comedy romance, "Mice and Men," and the noted stage success, "Seven Sisters." Hazel Dawn will appear in a photo dramatization of "Clarissa," and the comedy drama, "The Gay Lord Quex," while Pauline Frederick, who is featured in "The Eternal City," will be seen in Herman Bernstein's dramatic story "Sold," and John Mason will once more appear in an adaptation of Sir Charles L. Young's international dramatic success, "Jim, the Penman."

C. D. Mattingly Dead

Charles D. Mattingly, manager of the Universal Film & Supply Company, 116-118 West Second street, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, died very suddenly last week following injuries sustained on Easter Sunday, when an auto in which he was riding with B. H. Powell of the Powell-Croak Amusement Company, turned turtle. Mr. Mattingly is survived by a father, mother, widow and a small child, and after funeral services held in Oklahoma City, the body was taken to Little Rock for interment. Resolutions of sympathy and condolence were passed by the Oklahoma City Film Exchangemen and the Oklahoma City Theater Owners' and Managers' Association, signed by John T. Ezell, Frank Lewis and L. L. Hersley, a committee representing the Oklahoma City Film Exchangemen, and by B. H. Powell, Thomas H. Boland and John Zinopoulo, a committee representing the Oklahoma City Theater Owners' & Managers' Association. Motography extends to Mr. Mattingly's relatives and friends its sincere sympathy in their hour of bereavement.

Difficult Projection Problem

The St. Louis Hippodrome is following in the steps of its sister theater, the New York Hippodrome. On Monday, April 26, the St. Louis house will abandon vaudeville and start as a motion picture theater, exhibiting only the highest class feature films. The opening run will be made Monday night with the celebrated "Heart of Maryland."

In remodeling this house to meet the demand of high class film productions no expense was spared to get perfect projection. The contract for the projection screen was let to the Minusa Cine Products Company of St. Louis, and this company took full charge of the details of the projection problems. The extra width of this house, eighty-three feet, made the fade-away especially difficult to contend with.

E. R. Anderson, the inventor of the Gold Fibre screen, who now makes the Minusa Gold Fibre by his new process, gave the matter his personal attention. An especially rough pebbly surface was devised, the length of throw, and likewise, the location of the projector, were rearranged, with the result that almost perfect projection has been attained for all seats in the house. The depth of color, tone and light value, surpass any other results ever obtained in a wide theater in this vicinity.

The St. Louis Hippodrome, which will be the largest feature house west of the Mississippi, is to be in charge of Colonel Al F. Oldham, who is an experienced exhibitor, having graduated from the circus business some years before. Since the Hippodrome is to be the first exclusive feature film house in the business district of St. Louis, its future will be watched with a great deal of interest, but the wise ones predict great success.

Spoor Reclaiming Beach Front

Chicago daily newspapers of Tuesday, April 27, carried the news of what is probably one of the biggest private reclamations of beach front property on Chicago's north side—including sixteen acres of lake front land of priceless value. The man responsible for this project is none other than George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, whose home is at 908 Argyle street and overlooks the newly made land, which, when completed, will, it is said, be utilized for the erection of several lofty apartment houses.

Workmen in hip boots began work the latter part of last week driving piles and building a retaining wall that projects into the lake for a distance equal to a full city block, and teamsters followed them, unloading limestone inside the retainer.

In an interview granted to the Chicago newspapers, Mr. Spoor stated that the newly made land, when completed, will comprise more than sixteen acres, and that he secured the beach front property from the heirs of an estate, who were quarreling among themselves, the price paid for it being in the neighborhood of $210,000.

Wonderfully Artistic Booklet

"We Want You With Us In California" is the name of a very artistic booklet issued by the Selig Polyscope Company. The booklet consists of sixteen pages and is beautifully bound in two colors. The booklet is printed on plate paper and is profusely illustrated with scenes in California and elsewhere in the Golden West. The booklet is sent free to all interested in the forthcoming tour of the Selig Exposition flyer which will leave Chicago on July 8 for a seventeen days' tour of the Golden West. It is undoubtedly one of the most attractive pieces of publicity matter ever issued by a motion picture company. The text is attractively written and pretentious in every respect. Copies are going fast, according to the Selig company.

Selig Trip Popularity Contest

The Selig Polyscope Company reports unusual success with newspaper popularity contests in connection with the forthcoming trip of the Selig Movie Special to California. Through the bright weekly newspaper now issued by the Selig Company, entitled "Paste-pot and Shears," a newspaper popularity campaign was mapped out and special literature was sent to over one thousand newspapers and other publications in the United States and Canada.

The returns have been unusually satisfactory. Up-to-date fifty newspaper popularity contests have been instituted by as many newspapers and other publications in the United States and Canada. Young women receiving the most votes are sent free to California on the Selig tour, which starts July 8 from Chicago.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

INTERMITTENT MOVEMENTS

IN ORDER to keep the "moving" picture in one place on the screen while the film is racing through the projector, we have seen that it is customary to start and stop the film 16 to 20 times per second, and have the light shine through it only while it is still.

This is not the only way to do this, however, as there are several devices which make the film run continuously, while a special mechanism, such as a moving lens or mirror, counteracts the motion of the film-images. These will be discussed in due time, but for the present we will consider only those types of intermittent movement which have been embodied in projecting machines which have proven to be practical, and are in daily service.

Until a few years ago the Geneva movement, or star and pin-wheel, was the most practical, its chief rivals being the "claw" described in the article on the motion picture camera, and the "beater" movement, which is simply what its name implies—a beater in the shape of a roller which swings around 16 or 20 times a second, and hits the film (which otherwise is moving continuously) just above the sprocket which is "feeding" it. This jumps that part of the film ahead one picture, and then while the beater is drawing back for another slam, the feeding sprocket takes up the slack, while a short portion of the film (including the picture which is being shown) is standing perfectly still.

Many of the Kinemacolor projectors were of the beater type, as it permits a very rapid succession of images, but it is a comparatively clumsy piece of mechanism.

At least a dozen other movements have been developed and tried, but the great difficulty has been that most of them gave a period of rest not over one-half of the "cycle," or, in other words, one-half of every sixteenth of a second the screen would be dark, and this used to cause an annoying flicker.

The three-wing shutter, already explained, is built upon the principle that the film is moving just one-sixth of the time, and still just five-sixths. In practice, however, this ideal is not realized when a Geneva movement is used, for the film only stands still one-fourth of the time. (Other ratios may be provided for by increasing the relative size of the pin-wheel, but new difficulties enter when the star turns too quickly.)

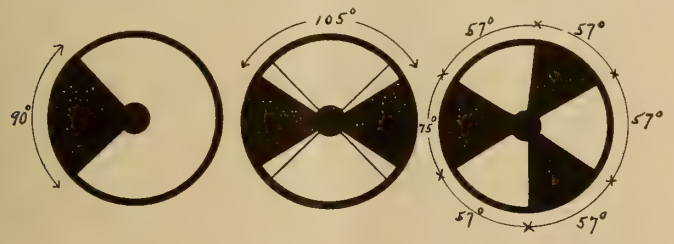

Fig. 32.—Evolution of the Shutter.

Nevertheless the designers of projecting machines refuse to be bound by theory when they can attain a better all around result by tinkering with it, so when they make a shutter for a star and pin-wheel (Geneva movement) mechanism, they make the openings somewhat larger than theory calls for, thus getting more light and less flicker.

EVOLUTION OF THE SHUTTER

The reason is as follows: In order to get the most light when the ratio of still time to motion time is 1 to 3 (meaning that the star-wheel is turning one-fourth of the time) the shutter should be one-fourth dark or opaque, and three-fourths open or clear. But we have already seen that that would make 16 flashes of light per second, hence an undesirable flicker, so the next obvious move was to put another opaque blade or "wing" in the middle of the open part of the shutter, thus cutting off one-third of the useful light, but making 32 flashes per second, which being rather quick for the eye, are less noticeable.

Therefore some of the first "two-wing" shutters were shaped like a regular cross, or rather like a pie with two-quarters taken out of opposite sides, and for a while it certainly looked as though theory and ingenuity had contrived to bring the shutter to a state of practical perfection, at least until a different movement should be evolved. But here is where the experimenter got to work and showed the theorist that his theory wasn't big enough to cover the problem. Thus it was found that by cutting a little more out of the pie there was no appreciable blurring or "trailing" of the picture images as would be expected, and the light was increased considerably. Then as the limit was reached (meaning the extreme amount that could be taken off of the opaque parts of the shutter without causing the images to trail) it was found that about 15 degrees had been taken off, and hence that the opaque portion measured 75 degrees instead of 90 (which is one-fourth of 360, the number of degrees in a complete circle).

Of course, in the experimenting it was the blade which covered the film images while the film was standing still that was used, but naturally if some could be taken off of that blade, it could also be done to the other or "interrupter" blade or wing, and hence still more light would reach the screen. Here was progress, indeed, but the end was not yet, for it was found that the 32 flashes per second were still noticeable, and so when they had reduced the two opaque wings to a total of 75°+75° or 150 degrees, leaving 360°—150° or 210 degrees for the light spaces, another happy thought struck somebody, and another interrupter wing was added so as to divide the "still" part of the cycle into three instead of two flashes, thus making 48 per second.

This cut off some more light it is true, but that is easier to supply than uniform projection, so the three-wing shutter became part of the standard equipment, and is ordinarily used except, as already explained, when the pulsations of alternating electric current make the two-wing necessary. (See Figure 32.)

STAR AND PIN-WHEEL

In Figure 33 is shown a typical star and pin-wheel or Geneva movement which turns the sprocket A, as follows: The wheel, G, is made to turn continuously and uniformly by being connected (by means of its shaft at the left) with gearing operated by the crank of the projecting machine. When the pin, F (shown sticking out from the side of this wheel), turns a little farther in the direction indicated by the arrow, it will pass into one of the slots, E, at H′, and as it turns still farther it will give the slotted star a jerk and make it turn quarter way round as indicated by the small arrow. In the meantime the opening in the ring, H, H′, on the wheel G, allows the slotted point of the star to turn, but as soon as it has done so and the pin is free again the ring will press close to the curved part of the star and prevent it turning until the pin enters the next slot, when it will again turn quarter way round.

Now here is a chance to see why the shutter need not be precisely quartered, for when the pin first enters the slot it does not turn the star more than a very slight amount, which increases rapidly toward the middle of the swing, and then slows up just as rapidly. In fact, while the wheel is turning 5 degrees (1/72 of the way around) just after the pin enters the slot, the movement of the star is so slight as to be unnoticeable, and this is true also while the pin is leaving the slot after it has turned the star. This makes 10 degrees, and the designer simply takes another 5 for good measure, and this gives us the 15 which, taken from the theoretical 90, leaves 75, which is the number of degrees in the principal opaque wing of a three-wing shutter when used on a star and pin-wheel projector.

This peculiar turning of the star (first slow—then gradually faster, etc.), is also very good for the film (which would tear if started suddenly), and is an essential point in all intermittent movements employed for the purpose.

CAM AND CROSS-PIN

departure from the star and pin-wheel, in that it reduces the motion period of the film to an actual, rather than a fancied, one-sixth, and permits the use of much heavier and more substantial parts. It consists simply of a cam-wheel, C, and a "cross-pin," B, the "cam" proper, D, being of one piece with the wheel, which is much larger than the usual pin-wheel, so it is known as the "cam and cross-pin" movement.

In Figure 34 the cam-wheel, C, is shown connected directly to the "fly-wheel," M, which is as heavy as possible (for steadiness), and is made to turn either by gearing connected with the crank handle of the machine or with an electric motor, not shown.

Figure 35 shows how the cam makes the cross-pin turn, something after the fashion of the star just described. The two pins (just under the prongs marked 1 and 20) have been sliding around on the inside of the ring, which is turning steadily in the direction indicated by the arrow, while the cross-pin, B, was perfectly still, but now that they have reached the cam, D, something is going to happen very suddenly.

First the lower point of cam, D, will strike, ever so gently, the pin under the prong 4, causing the cross to swing about its axis (near B), whereupon pins 3 and 4 will enter their respective slots between the cam proper and the rest of the rim of the wheel, C, and pin 2 will swing across the center part of the wheel and take the place of pin 1. Similarly 3 takes the place of 2, etc., with the result that the intermittent sprocket, A, which is directly connected to the cross, will be turned quarter way round in the direction of the small arrow. Pins 2 and 3 will now be on the inside of the rim of wheel C, and 1 and 4, on the outside.

HAIR-SPLITTING MACHINE WORK

Like all revolutionary inventions, this new movement was regarded skeptically when first introduced, but as many thousands of them have been in daily use for several years, and it has been adopted as part of the regular equipment of one of the leading professional projectors, its merit seems to have been pretty well proved.

But here as with the star and pin-wheel, unless the most extreme care be exercised in the machining of the several parts, the excellent principles involved would be set at naught, and a noisy machine and unsteady projection would result.

Time was when a thousandth of an inch was considered about as small as necessary for any kind of machine work, and instruments for making small measurements used to be graduated in thousandths of an inch, and in fact are now for most work. Certain classes of scientific apparatus, such as microscopes, astronomical and surveying instruments, etc., required specially accurate machining, but such work was in a class by itself, and in the early days of the motion picture, some manufacturers were a little slow to realize that they must get into that class if they were going to help perfect the art of motography.

For be it known that the devices and apparatus used in this art partake of the nature of all three of the above scientific instruments. The camera is a telescope, microscope, and surveying instrument all in one, and the projector is simply a camera working backwards, being provided with certain necessary differences of construction. And it is just here that further refinements are necessary, in order to make this little difference precisely adaptable to the desired end.

So we find that a ten-thousandth of an inch has taken the place that a thousandth used to occupy in the brains of the mechanics who direct the automatic machines which turn and grind the vital parts of a modern projector. But what does this mean to the man who has never had work of this kind to do? What do you know about a ten-thousandth of an inch?

The paper on which this magazine is printed is about three-thousandths (.003) of an inch in thickness. The cover is about five-thousandths (.005), and the films used for motion pictures are nearly six-thousandths (.006), of which .005 is celluloid, and about .001 gelatine, etc. Human hair is sometimes two-thousandths (.002) of an inch in diameter.

Now, if we could slice such a hair into 20 strips, or a page of MOTOGRAPHY into 30 equal layers, each of them would be about one ten-thousandth of an inch in thickness. Yet the manufacturer who makes the cam and cross-pin states that an error of a single ten-thousandth of an inch in grinding the cross-pin would cause him to reject it as unfit.

Suppose we try to realize a few of the difficulties. Take an ordinary domestic pin one inch long, and hold it in your closed palm for a minute. It is now longer than it was by about five ten-thousandths of an inch, or, in other words, the difference between the length of a common pin on your table, and the same pin in your hand is more than five times as much as the permissible error of a modern intermittent movement. Of course, the explanation is simple, as the brass or other metal in the pin has "expanded" from the heat of your hand.

Similarly cams, and cross-pins, and grinders, and measuring instruments, all expand and contract with slight difference of temperature, and if they are warm when you grind and measure them and cold when you use them, they will be correspondingly different and unsatisfactory.

There are a hundred and one other things that keep the superintendent and the foremen of a projector factory on the alert, and they as well as the other workmen think that they are careful for some particular reason. We could hope that they strive for perfection for its own sake, and for the joy of turning out a perfect job, but doubtless some of them do it just because they are told to, and a few because if they don't they will be discharged. All of them at any rate soon learn what the boss wants, and he knows from experience what the exhibitor wants, and, last, but not least, the exhibitor ought to know what the public wants, so it is up to you and me to tell him when his pictures flicker, or jump all over the screen, or get out of frame, or run too fast or too slow, so that he can have it fixed.

Most of these annoyances are traceable to the operating booth, where the best possible projector may be poorly mounted, or in the hands of a careless operator, for one of the unfortunate things about the modern projector is that its very refinement and completeness tend to make an operator almost superfluous. What with motor drive, automatic arcs, and a fool-proof machine, all the operator needs is a case of spring fever to make him forget the audience entirely.

Big Features Here to Stay

By THOMAS H. INCE.

The "big feature" in motion pictures has come to stay. Only a short time back one and two reel thrillers were the order of the day. Then the big feature announced itself and public demand has already assured it a permanent place in the gallery of films.

A few years ago, if a producer had the temerity to get out a ten reel picture story, he would have been looked upon as a madcap. Even then the big feature, however, was regarded by some with favor, but the bigger companies, which were then young in the process of growth, hesitated to venture into unmarked trails because of the expense involved.

Since that time the picture-making industry has gone through an era of evolution. System and economy have replaced chaos and inexperience, better and cheaper film is being produced, and, in consequence, the bigger American companies are now in a position to give the public something in the line of pictures never dreamed of five years ago.

Yet as far back as that the big feature was suggested as the sole means for insuring the permanency of motion pictures, but the suggestion was looked on as impracticable and entirely too expensive. The producers stuck by the one reelers which were then the popular films. Now we have Mutual Master-Pictures, a great series of feature pictures.

When the public pays more to see a big feature it is not because of its being a special production destined to filch a few more dollars from the film fans, but because of the enormous expense incidental to making so large a production.

It is probably far from the minds of the audience, when viewing a finished feature, that its cost has run into hundreds of thousands of dollars and that the company back of it has assumed entire responsibility for its success or failure.

Those are anxious moments for the producer—those moments preceding the first night run of a big feature photoplay—for there is more money invested in a ten reeler than in half a dozen footlight dramas, and the failure of one feature may mean incalculable loss to the company standing behind it.

Its Hero Talks of "The Melting Pot"

BY MABEL CONDON

Walker Whiteside.

THE Battery at eight o'clock of a warm sunshiny morning, and already the benches that circle Battery Park had a generous quota of occupants, men, women and children.

"Seen anything of a motion picture party around here?" I asked the guardian of the pop-corn stand at the wharf from which the Statue of Liberty boats leave on their bi-hourly trips to Bedloe's Island. The refreshment-stand guardian had not, but a weighty person in converse with him answered "Yes," and pointed out the stolid ones on the benches, saying they all belonged to the Cort film party.

I approached the benches and sought among the groups standing about for somebody who might resemble Walker Whiteside, he who is playing his world-known role of David, in his world-known play, "The Melting Pot," being produced by the Cort Film Corporation. I found him; we found a vacant bench and, pointing to the stolid ones, he said:

"There are the contents of the melting pot. There were 750 of them in the massacre scene we took in Bayonne a few days ago and many of the older people, when they heard the shots and the ringing of bells, cried out and showed genuine terror. Their families had been in the Kishinef massacre."

"'The Melting Pot,'" I said, looking across at the variety of types and nationalities the benches contained, "should make a wonderful film."

"It was a play that named a nation," Mr. Whiteside replied, the gaze of his light-blue eyes fixed in the direction of Liberty. "It gave to this country its own name, 'the melting pot.'" He readjusted his black velour hat and the gray-black of his hair revealed itself.

"As this is my first experience in motion pictures I can't guess how good or how poor I am going to be in it, but I'm sure the rest of the picture will be splendid. I'm putting myself absolutely in the hands of Director James Vincent. My opinion on the subject of screen work is that thought registers on the screen as well as on the stage. I keep that in mind and act accordingly. I don't want to look 'moving picture' in my work. That is one thing I am determined never to look. The work fascinates me. Should I do another film, I should like it to be 'The Ragged Vagabond.' That, I'm sure, would make good material for the screen."

An ocean-bound vessel, gray with black smokestacks, plowed majestically past. "That," remarked Mr. Whiteside, "is the life." And there was no hint of reference to the popular expression in his use of the phrase. "A number of times I have gone home, packed a bag and crossed the ocean just for the sake of the trip, returning on the next boat. But the war has put a stop to that pleasure."

"You like the out-of-doors," I suggested, having in mind the picture the Cort publicity man had shown me, in which Walker Whiteside, in flannels and a garden, is perched on a ladder, snipping—so the press agent guaranteed—grape-clusters at his Hastings-on-the-Hudson home.

"They were not grapes, they were roses," Mr. Whiteside corrected, and went on. "Yes, I love the out-of-doors. I spent six years in the saddle, out west."

"Home there?" I asked, watching a fat bird peck its breakfast off a peanut on the ground.

"No," replied Mr. Whiteside. "I was born in Logansport, Indiana, and I'm very proud to claim Indiana as my native state. I've been in the east for thirty-two years—on the stage twenty years. I went on in New York in 'Hamlet' at the old Union Square theater. I did an entire repertoire of Shakespeare's plays; then there were many others, 'Cousin of the King,' 'Jewels of Fire,' 'Hearts and Swords,' Stanley Wayman's 'Man in Black,' 'Typhoon,' 'The Melting Pot,' 'Mr. Wu' and still others. What I intend to do the season after next, is to play a repertoire of seven or eight of these plays, not staying in one city for a long run, but playing in New York about eight weeks and then making an entire tour that same year. That will give me the following season for either a new repertoire or a new play. I don't care about staying in one place any length of time.

"The scene we are going out to the Narrows for this morning," enlightened Mr. Whiteside as the Howard C. Moore chugged into the place left vacant by the Ordinance, "is that showing the immigrants and David's first glimpse of the Statue of Liberty.

"Shine!" commanded a dark-hued person with an array of shoe-polishes. He saved his voice as he passed the benches whereon the stolid ones sat.

"I'm enjoying the making of this picture and I'm sure I shall like to learn and do more of this art of the motion picture."

The David of "The Melting Pot" walked with me to the end of the benches and I left him there in the warm sunshine of the Battery.

New Alliance Exchange

Last week saw the change of management in the Pittsburgh Alliance exchange and the addition of Cleveland to the list of Alliance offices.

In Pittsburgh the new headquarters, which will be located at 404 Ferry street, will be known as the Alliance Film Service of Pittsburgh. The Cleveland branch is located at 420 Columbia building, and will be known as the Alliance Film Service of Ohio. These two offices have been fully stocked and between them will supply Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio.

BY ED MOCK

DENVER! See the joyous bunch singing the gladsome song: "Meet me on the 5:15." Bill Oldknow, choir leader, right there in the middle. Take 'em in disorder from left to right beginning with D. K. Hopkins and his spaghetti necktie. (Before I go further, let me explain. D. and K. are the initials I have tacked to Mr. Hopkins. They mean Don't Know. It is the penalty you pay a writer when you leave your business cards at home.) All right, then, there's Hopkins and C. E. Van Duzee and Claud Plough and Carleton J. Birchfield, and the tall guy looking over Frank Flaherty is J. A. Shugert, and wedged in between Flaherty and Oldknow is C. R. Thompson. Then you have the Beau Brummel of the party, bedecked with glasses and a cheroot, Ed T. Lux, and Chester A. Clegg, who traveled the longest distance to get aboard, and Ned E. Depinet and Hy Mayer—the austere, trying to silence the bunch—and J. D. Thatcher and the good right eye of Charles V. Henkle. These constituted the noisy gang. They were first on the ground at Denver and last to make the train before we left. For noise-making, their capacity was without limit. Denver looked good to them.

Patrick Anthony Powers' Denver Smile.

It didn't look so good to me, however. I knew Denver in the wide-open days of the late '80's and early '90's, when everybody in town had a fist full of money and had been trained to let go of it. The Denver of today offers sorry comparison. Denver is harder hit than any city in America. She shows it in a thousand ways. It took the Universal gang to relieve her of apathy that notable March 9. The show started at the Union Station, where an annex is being built, and where all the sight-seeing buses in town were commandeered. And then Harry Nolan rung the bell by shooting a brass band out of a convenient alley and the parade started. The sight-seeing rigs were decorated with banners and the crowd was equipped with noise-making paraphernalia. The ride lasted from early morning till late luncheon time. Stops were made in the m. p. theater district, at the newspaper offices and at the capital grounds. Motion pictures and still pictures were being made.

* * *

The luncheon was at Hotel Savoy, where William Cody was an honored guest. It had been a long time between ours and a similar occasion at the Savoy restaurant. Buffalo Bill accepted the invitation to speak briefly and received hearty cheers for his happy remarks and begged the party to stop at his town, Cody, on the way back. You have had some pictures of our antics in Denver. It was an enjoyable day, well worth the five-hundred-mile side trip from La Junta.

It was in Denver that Harry Wolff got his chicken. Mrs. Wolff gave him a special dispensation to do it. The chicken was rescued from a crate on Water street and was the Universal mascot till it broke a leg.

Patrick Anthony Powers, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, had his picture taken at Denver several hundred times. I got hold of the best one of the lot as a decoration for this issue of MOTOGRAPHY. It bears me out that everybody was enjoying the trip. Mr. Powers' smile tells its own story.

tion of favors for the Universal guests. From some dark recess there came forth a surprising consignment consisting of sterling silver perfume lockets for the ladies and gold pocket knives for the men. George Magie found the respective owners. The knives were suitably engraved with the owners' initials. I'm using mine for full dress occasions!

But let us move along. Our train left Denver and W. A. Patterson at the same time. Mr. Patterson misunderstood the time of departure. He caught us at the Grand Canyon twenty-four hours later.

* * *

At Colorado Springs there was sufficient daylight to see the town and its crowning glory, Pike's Peak. Postcards were purchased and mailed and telegrams received and sent, when we entered the darkness of another night and lost from view some of the finest scenery that lies out-of-doors.

And then the night's festivities. I give you another view of the diner at night. You note that Herman Fichtenberg has moved over to the other side of the car, but he is still standing out. This view was taken from the north end of the car, which was running south. Compare it with last week's picture. You never saw such an industrious lot of money-grubbers in your life. Sorry there wasn't a chance to get into the compartments with a camera and a flashlight. There were some scenes for sore eyes, but the doors were locked.

Reaching Albuquerque the next day, the things we did to that town should cover a chapter of its own, but at the rate I'm going we'll never reach the coast. Albuquerque is mostly Santa Fe property—or at least you get that impression. An enormously large band of Indians greeted us. Real Indians, musicians of the government school. A parade was formed and the party marched through the main streets, led by the band. You will get the pictures next week.

Time was taken to view the splendid Harvey stores of Indian wares. Many souvenirs were taken away. Indian squaws and their papooses littered up the sidewalks with stores of pots, beads and trinkets and picked silver coin for the privilege of being photographed. Our party "fell" for all this. It was in the day's program. It was the thing to do and we did it. You could buy Mexican pepperwood canes in Albuquerque—buy 'em from a genuine Indian—and pay three prices for them. Art Schmidt bought the biggest one. Ed Lux got the smallest.

Your attention, ladies and gentlemen, is directed to the twelve-sheet stand of Mr. Carl Laemmle which appeared as the frontispiece of last week's edition of Motography. Mr. Laemmle and his smile are preserved for all time. He put it on in New York as he turned his back on his desk and started on his memorable journey to Universal City. It clung to him all the way. There were four thousand feet of films and nearly as many still pictures made during the trip, but that smile of Mr. Laemmle's always registered. He was in high spirits. Nothing feased him. He was out for the time of his life and the proof is all to the good that he had it.

I must reserve Old McCarthy's for the fourth episode. Old McCarthy's is no kin to J. J. McCarthy, who was part of the party, although he wanted to lay claim to the kinship. It is unusual to stop a de luxe passenger train on the main track of a transcontinental railway and delay progress for several hours, but that's what we did at Old McCarthy's Indian village. We'll linger there a while, take you up to El Tovar and the canyon and stop with San Bernardino in the fourth installment.

"Under the Crescent"

One of the most interesting series of pictures recently filmed promises to be the unique six part feature which introduces to Universal audiences Her Serene Highness, the Princess Hassan, in "Under the Crescent." This series has just been completed in twelve reels at Universal City, where some of the most tremendous sets ever constructed for moving picture purposes have been used. The series will be handled like the Terence O'Rourke series, except that two reels will be released each week. The release date for the first episode has just been set for Tuesday, May 25, and the other episodes will follow as Gold Seal features on each succeeding Tuesday. The title of the first, which will be complete in itself, as will all the others, will be "The Purple Iris." The others in order will be "The Cage of Golden Bars," "The Shadow of the Pyramids," "For the Honor of a Woman," "In the Name of a King" and "The Crown of Death."

Prominent in the cast are Edna Maison, Edward Sloman, William Dolan, Carmen Phillips and Helen Wright. It was directed by Burton King.

Pathe Shows "Who Pays?"

Pathe gave a private showing of two of the "Who Pays?" series at the Broadway theater, Broadway and Forty-first street, New York, on Thursday morning, April 22. Invitations had been sent to a large number of clergymen, college professors and well known educators resident in Greater New York. Despite the early hour of the showing, which had been set for 9 o'clock, there were present in the neighborhood of 500 people, among them being a number of persons prominent in New York affairs.

The two pictures shown were "The Pursuit of Pleasure" and "Unto Herself Alone." Between twenty and thirty well known persons were asked after the performance for an expression of opinion regarding the pictures. The general sentiment expressed was that they were splendidly produced and had a strong influence for good. Among those present were Dr. Edward E. Slosson, professor of chemistry in Columbia University and literary editor of the Independent; Rev. O. C. Mees, Rev. Fred Hovey Allen, Prof. A. G. Panoroni of the College of the City of New York, The Rev. Professor R. Venturini, Prof. R. E. Noyes of Pratt Institute, Mrs. Edward Wadsworth Moody, Miss Alice Hill Chittenden, president of the N. Y. State Association Opposed to Woman's Suffrage; Dr. John H. Walsh, associate superintendent of schools, New York City; The Rev. Christian Reisner, Hon. Everett P. Wheeler, and Miss Ethel Peyser, member of the executive committee of the Women's Political Union.

LEGITIMATE drama of the higher order has featured the player, rather than the play, since the memory of the oldest inhabitant runneth not to the contrary. Rip Van Winkle was essentially Joe Jefferson; one went to see Richard Mansfield rather than any of the plays he appeared in.

In the earlier days of motion picture publicity the film was featured, and not the player. The general public knew nothing of the identity of its screen favorites. Indeed, it was the proud boast of one of the best producers that he could make a player out of anybody; who they were did not matter to anyone but themselves. And what is more, he seemed always to make good on his theory.

How that condition has changed in a few short years! Today the well-known actor or the celebrated actress is more important than the picture itself. The public has been deliberately educated to look for the name of this player or that, even without regard for the name of the producing company.

A player enters a studio without experience or fame. He develops a talent for a certain line of work. Aided by good fortune, a pleasing personality and a considerable amount of publicity he becomes known to the picture-going public. His name becomes something of a household word. A rival producer realizing the new demand, offers to double his salary. In order to realize on this increased investment his publicity is also doubled. He becomes still better known, and receives a still better offer. Now there is no question as to his popularity. The geometrical progression of fame is working out. The public likes him because he is advertised, and he is advertised because the public likes him. He develops temperament. He demands an enormous salary, a minimum amount of work, and a number of extraordinary privileges and concessions. He gets all of them because the public must have him, and he is threatening to quit. And so the producer finally throws discretion and business judgment to the winds, hands the idol a fortune, and plunges desperately into a still more lavish publication of the player's virtues—hoping thereby to boost his stock still higher and so realize on his big investment.

It has grown to be a great game, this exploiting of players. And the moves are very fast; so fast that as a rule one producer does the publicity work for the player and the producer who next falls heir to him profits by it. Seldom indeed does the employer who builds up a stage of his fame have a full opportunity to use it.

Far be it from us to decry the popularity of any screen player. Those who have it deserve it; and the divulgence of their identity came in response to a public demand that would not be refused. And who can deny that the people are entitled to the knowledge of who their favorites are, or that the players have a right to enjoy any and all benefits that may accrue from such popularity?

What we would particularly plead against is that excessive publicity of the individual employe, which bolsters up a false popularity and creates an artificial value, which results in the loss of the employe to some rival who is willing to take the chance of getting dividends out of the employe's watered stock.

Last December this same subject came up in a different way. A dramatic writer coined the word "filmophobia" to describe the fear of dramatic producers that legitimate stars would lose their glamor through too much film exploitation, so that people who had seen the counterfeit presentiment of a favorite on the screen for a dime would not pay two dollars to see the same favorite in flesh and blood. Those producers are wrong; but in fact the whole system is wrong. At that time we said:

> As to the old saying that the pictures were a training school for the legitimate, that was an honest prediction in its day and was believed by all the profession. But it has simply outgrown its usefulness. The legitimate has become a training school for the pictures.
> The exploiting of personalities has long been the chief aim and greatest success of theatrical producers. It has not been true for years that "the play's the thing." The attraction is not the dramatic value of the play, but the advertised value of the players.
> If it is personality the public seeks, not playing, it will still willingly pay its two dollars for a look at its favorite talent. With all our worship for the film, the player on the screen is a picture, not a personality. This is not saying that the picture is not just as attractive as the personality, at least to the normal mind. But the fact remains that so long as the producers persist in featuring and advertising persons rather than plays, the people will continue to pay to see those persons in real-life, and when they want good playing they will go to the pictures.

Publicity, whether incidental or intentional, creates in the public mind a desire to see its subject. Despite its iconoclastic sound, we cannot resist voicing our conviction that the people thronged to look at Theodore Roosevelt, Jack Johnson, Harry Thaw and Nat Goodwin for the same elemental, psychological reason in all cases.

We have always regarded the motion picture industry —mark the word—as containing more of business sense than the theatrical business. The manufacture of fame for players may be good theatrical practice; but we cannot persuade ourselves that it is good business. Forcing the publicity of the individual player makes him a celebrated personality without adding anything to his talent.

The play is the thing; we all know that to be true. It is the play that should be exploited; the play and the ability of the producer to make it, and others as good. If the people go to see only the player, regardless of what he plays in or who he plays for, he has been overadvertised. It is a good thing for the player; but it is a bad thing for the business, if it is to continue as a business.

Give the player all the credit that is due him; but let us remember that a good scenario and a good producer form the winning combination. Neither of them can be easily replaced by a substitute; the players always can.

Sarsaparilla in the Studio

A CERTAIN district superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, who confesses to a fondness for picture shows, was moved by what he saw on the screen to write to some of the producers in this fashion:

Let me ask you a question, which will seem silly and unimportant to you, but which I know to be of great importance to the multitude of young men and women who hourly view your pictures and who have their characters formed by them. In your drinking scenes do the actors use intoxicating liquor or do they use a nonalcoholic substitute? Why?

This anti-liquor man's apologetic preclude to his question was unnecessary. His question is not unimportant; but it is either silly or subtle. If it is the latter, his aim was merely to get a few more people —incidentally in this case picture producers—on record against liquor. If that ingenious scheme was not in his mind, then we cannot see the purpose of the question. Wherein would the effect upon the picture fans be different if the players used real spirits instead of imitation, so long as the appearance was the same?

Manager Plimpton of the Edison Company, for one, made answer to the curious "dry" fan in these terms:

In the telling of a dramatic story it is sometimes necessary to show the effects of drink or to show the associations in saloons or matters of that sort. In no case do we use ever alcoholic liquors in the studio. Its use in any form is strictly forbidden, and the violation of this rule would lead to dismissal. In the scenes themselves we usually use ginger ale or sometimes sarsaparilla, but we never go to the extent of using actual beer. Naturally, to permit any use of liquor would not only be against our policy but would obviously have a very bad effect upon the actors themselves.

So that point is settled; but we do not see that the inquirer is any better off. Logically, he might as well have asked if the cartridges fired in a screen duel were blank or ball. A shot is fired; the man staggers and falls. A drink is taken—or several drinks; the man staggers, perhaps, but being only half shot he does not fall. Both are faithful pictures of real life, and both are necessary to dramatic art so long as the millenium keeps in the distance. By putting a real load in the revolver and getting the actor through some vital organ a more realistic effect might possibly be produced; and using real whiskey instead of sarsaparilla might put more verisimilitude into a rum scene. Neither ball cartridges nor alcohol are used, however, in well-regulated studios. It is only in actual human life that those things are regarded as essential; and that fact makes their counterfeit presentment necessary on the screen.

We hear that Boston's modest mayor has objected to the showing of Bosworth's "Hypocrites," as he regards the film as "indescent." A lot of charges have been made against the picture, but never to our knowledge one so serious.

Out in Oakland, Calif., a man of 41 laughed himself to death over a motion picture comedy the other day. The paper which recounted the fact very carelessly neglected to mention the title of the film the man witnessed so the press agents of the land can go as far as they like in claiming it was a comedy of their brand he saw.

Episode Four: "The Dollar-Thirty-Nine Mystery."

(Part One.)

After the executives of the Jumbo Film Corporation had assembled in the studio, Flossie Gay and Tim Snorton, her fiance, who accompanied her everywhere, took their seats and Flossie, at Sue Brett's suggestion, began her tale by relating the strange events that led up to her father's disappearance. "Millionaire Dargreaves departed most mysteriously just before I came home from boarding school," Flossie began, "and I was left in charge of Smith, the chauffeur, whom Dargreaves trusted implicitly. I soon discovered that the shares of stock which my father had purchased at a bargain for a dollar-thirty-nine were immensely valuable and were consequently being sought by the members of the Fearsome Fifty, a criminal band of which father had long in the past been a member. Princess Ollie and Crane, a wholly unscrupulous villain, headed the conspirators' band and followed me everywhere I went, in their eagerness to learn from me where father had hidden the stock certificates. I, of course, could tell them nothing, as I, myself, didn't know where the stock was hidden. Tim Snorton, my fiance, came into the case when he was assigned to interview me by the editor of the paper on which he works. Really I don't see how he found time to write any copy for the paper because all his time was spent in saving and rescuing me from the Fearsome Fifty. After trying one scheme after another to get me into their power, Princess Ollie called on me and totally unsuspecting, I followed her one day to the underground meeting place of the criminals. There a horrible fate awaited me."

"The Cup of Life"

PEOPLE in every stage and class of life will find something to grip their attention and stir their emotions in "The Cup of Life," a five-reel Mutual Master-Picture produced by the New York Motion Picture Corporation. It meets the demands of the most critical in being staged as befits the story and acted with force and appeal, and holds the interest of the average spectator with a touching drama of plain, unexaggerated life.

Truth may or may not be stranger than the flights of fiction, but where there is a lesson to be told, a moral to be emphasized, no vehicle proves quite so efficient or convincing as a story of which almost everyone knows some parallel or tangent. This play pictures vividly the problems and temptations confronting two sisters in their struggle for existence. One chooses the virtuous path, fights a hard, silent battle, and in the end is rewarded with victory. The other heedlessly travels the unhappy road of illgotten luxury, and experiences, after her bloom of youth has been replaced by prematurity and more rouge, the realization that she is a cast-off toy, a coquette whose charms are no longer a commodity. The cleverness with which this subject is handled makes it acceptable for anyone to see.

The scenario, by C. Gardner Sullivan, became a photoplay under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and with the co-operation of a cast whose every move and emotion is prompted by the spirit of their impersonations. Bessie Barriscale gives a wonderful performance as the worldly sister, Helen Fiske. Enid Markey's characterization of Ruth Fiske brings the plain, hard-working girl out in strong contrast to her vain, indolent sister. No less than three or four times these girls are moved to tears in their emotions.

Bersage), Jack Jordan (Arthur Maude), and James Kellerman (J. Barney Sherry). Louise Glaum is seen as Irene Bullard; Harry Keenan as John Standing, and Howard Hickman as Higsby. To Jerome Storm is entrusted all of the comedy in the story in the role of the awkward, undiplomatic Sam Dugan, whose cheek, even on such state occasions, as calling on a girl and acting as best man at a wedding, bulges suspiciously, as though it might conceal chewing tobacco.

Helen and Ruth Fiske, two girls working in a department store, are moved by different emotions at the crucial moment of their lives. Helen's longings are for easily-acquired wealth, finery, and attention, while Ruth's are defined in true love, a home, and a family. Despite her sister's entreaties, Helen accepts the gifts and advances of a chance acquaintance, and finally leaves the squalid surroundings in which she and her sister have lived for the luxurious home of John Ward.

Ruth marries a young man of moderate circumstances, and they start housekeeping, devotion and loyalty making up for what their home lacks in ease and plenty. The threshold of Helen's life is more or less of an auction block, the highest bidder winning her. One man out of her many admirers really loves her and begs her hand in marriage, but Helen is flushed with the pleasures on the surface of the cup of life, and merely laughs in Kellerman's face when he is outbid.

Several years pass. Ruth is now the mistress of a pretty little cottage, and the mother of two children. Helen is buffeting about in Europe, and beginning to taste some of the bitterness of life. No more is she sought out by the wealthy, or the center of attraction in the cafes. Returning to America, she attempts to win back the affection of Kellerman, but her artifices and sham coyness only arouse in him memories of the sweet, innocent girl whom he is going to make his wife.

She visits Ruth, and sees, in the love and happiness which reigns in her home, the things in life that are worth living for. Although still a young woman, she has lived nearly all of her life, and looks forward with a shudder to the rest of it. Drink, dope and cigarettes alleviate it somewhat, and she is more in a state of coma than consciousness when her pitching forward in the ruins of her dissipation signify that she has drained her "cup of life."

Essanay's "Graustark"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

GRAUSTARK, the six-reel Essanay feature which is to be the first of the de luxe Essanay releases through the Vitagraph, Lubin, Essanay, Selig, Inc., exchanges, is ready.

By long odds it is the best release ever made by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, and if this release is to be a criterion of the class of features to be regularly supplied by that company through the new releasing medium, the exhibitors of the country have a remarkable list of productions to look forward to and will undoubtedly find them box office magnets with a tremendous pulling power.

Francis X. Bushman is featured in the leading role, that of Grenfall Lorry, a young American, who falls in love with a European princess.

Beverly Bayne is truly regal in her characterization of the Princess Yetive and supporting these two stars are such Essanay favorites as Edna Mayo, Bryant Washburn, Thomas Commerford, Albert Roscoe, Lester Cuneo, Helen Dunbar and Ernest Maupain, besides innumerable supernumeraries.

Photographically the picture is a gem. One of the scenes hardest to forget will be the sunset view of the Potomac from the top of the Washington Monument, this being the last word in photography. The company actually journeyed to Washington and New York in securing the scenes that depict the travels of the Balkan princess and her American lover through those cities, while the European atmosphere is really convincing in the portions of the picture laid in the kingdom of Graustark, though of course all this part of the picture was taken in and about Chicago.

So satisfying is the picture as a whole that one easily overlooks such trifling little mistakes as Mr. Bushman's appearance in the railway station with an overcoat, when he was seen a moment before on the platform minus the overcoat, and the rather unconvincing arrival of the stage coach at a station that does not seem quite to fit in with the station at which we later see him taking the train, after having caught up with it. The romantic story from the pen of George Barr McCutcheon is so well known to the public that the retelling of the tale seems hardly necessary, but briefly it may be summed up by saying that Grenfall Lorry, a young American, falls in love with a beautiful girl on a train and eventually succeeds in meeting her under the name of Sophia Guggenslocker. Months later while visiting in Edelweiss, the capital of Graus-tark, her home, he discovers her to be the Princess Yetive, and with the assistance of his friend, Harry Anguish, is able to thwart a conspiracy to kidnap her from the castle.

However, Lorry is seen in the castle by Prince Gabriel, who also loves the princess, and he takes occasion to implicate Lorry in the murder of Prince Lorenz, to whom Yetive is engaged for reasons of state. The Princess Yetive assists Lorry to escape from the prison and conveys him to a safe hiding place outside the walls of Graustark. The American returns, however, when he learns that Yetive is again in danger and that his return will possibly result in her salvation.

After Yetive has declared her love for the American and begged Prince Bolaroz for mercy, Harry Anguish discovers by chance that the murderer is none other than Prince Gabriel, so the latter is arrested and led away to prison, while Bolaroz agrees to a new alliance with Graustark and Lorry is free to wed the Princess Yetive.

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

INTERESTING as was the first chapter of the North American Film Corporations' continued novel, "The Diamond From the Sky," and splendid as was the photography in that installment of the novel, chapter two, which is entitled, "An Eye for an Eye," is even better.

The story begins to develop, and is brought more up to date, since in the beginning of the chapter the action is taken up where it left off in chapter one, and before the chapter has proceeded far jumps a period of three years in order to show the events that transpired at that time, and then jumps another period of eighteen years, bringing the story up to a comparatively recent date.

Both Irving Cummings, who is to be the hero of the continued novel, and Lottie Pickford, who is to star as the heroine, are introduced, and from now on will undoubtedly occupy the center of the screen for the greater part of the time.

As the first chapter ended, it will be recalled, Colonel Stanley had fainted in his library at the sight of the sudden appearance in the doorway of Hagar, the gypsy, who is the mother of the babe he purchased, for the purpose of presenting to Judge Stanley and the English lawyer an heir to the earldom in England and a claimant for "The Diamond from the Sky," the heirloom of the Stanley family.

Ere the gypsy can make her presence known, Mat Harding, her husband, follows her into the room and drags her away ere she can make an outcry, so when Colonel Stanley revives he finds Judge Stanley willing to acknowledge the legitimacy of his claim to the earldom and satisfied that the new born babe is really the heir to the Stanley fortunes.

Three years later, Hagar, the gypsy, again returns to the vicinity of the Stanley home, and making her way by stealth into the mansion, she finds and carries away with her Esther, the real daughter of Colonel Stanley, for whom the gypsy babe had been substituted. At first Hagar is tempted to take her own child, but on second thought decides it best to let him remain as heir to the Stanley fortune, and to take with her only the immensely valuable "Diamond from the Sky," which hangs about his neck.

Colonel Stanley is amazed when he finds his daughter gone, for on that very day he had planned to turn the girl over to the keeping of Doctor Lee, who had agreed to adopt her as his own child.

Eighteen years later, Hagar once more returns and after communicating with Doctor Lee, now a venerable old man, induces him to adopt Esther, now a winsome miss of twenty. Doctor Lee agrees, but demands that Hagar return the "Diamond from the Sky."

The gypsy's son, now known as Arthur Stanley, has also grown to manhood, though he is already showing traces of his gypsy blood by various wild escapades, and it is with pleasure, therefore, that old Doctor Lee notes his desire to reform, after meeting and associating with Esther.

Blair Stanley, the son of Judge Stanley, and supposedly Arthur's cousin, also loves Esther, and one night while calling upon her, accidently sees Doctor Lee examining the "Diamond from the Sky" in his study. Previously Blair's mother has told him the story of the wonderful diamond that fell in a meteor from the heavens and of how it came to be an heirloom of the Stanley family, so Blair is amazed at beholding it in the possession of Doctor Lee.

As the hours pass, Blair is obsessed with a desire to possess the diamond and with grim determination he steals into the Lee home that night and endeavors to secure the stone from the hiding place in which he has seen Doctor Lee conceal it.

His entrance to the house is heard and Doctor Lee arises to defend his home from the intruder. Blair meets and overpowers him in his study, and then horrified at the thought that he is a murderer, attempts to flee from the house, but at that moment Arthur appears without to serenade Esther, and Blair fears that he will surely be seen if he ventures forth. At this point the story ends, to be continued a week later.

American's "One Summer's Sequel"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

BASED upon that ever-important theme, the double standard of morals for the sexes, and driving home with no uncertainty the results which follow the folly of a summer vacation, the two reel production which will be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company on Monday, May 3, entitled, "One Summer's Sequel," is a film which is meant to do much more than furnish entertainment.

Its plot is not exceptional, but the manner in which it is developed is. The action begins slowly and gradually increases in dramatic strength until the climax is reached, at which time a distinct "punch" is felt. There can be no doubt left in the mind of all who see the picture as to the author's purpose, for the director and players have caught the spirit and interpreted it perfectly. It is a pity that more films of this kind do not find their way to the screen, though we admit that a full program of them would be quite heavy. The American seems to have the right idea about releasing them, for these idea-plays appear on its program about every five or six weeks, lighter themes filling in the dates between.

The players in this picture do excellent work, Ed Coxen, as the man who believes in the double standard; Winnifred Greenwood, as the woman who does not; Nan Christie as the wronged girl, and George Fields as the man's cousin, doing especially worthy bits of acting. The backgrounds along the seashore are wonderfully beautiful and the interiors and exteriors of the social sphere are most artistic. The photography is distinctively of American quality.

At the opening of the film's story, the summer boarders have all left Gills' New England farm. Lloyd Norman, a millionaire society man, and his cousin, Edgar, are ever in the thoughts of the farmer's pretty daughter Mary. She dare not think what will happen if a promise given a short time ago is not kept. Daily she awaits the summons which would make her heart glad, but it never comes until at last she realizes that she must face the world alone—an outcast, for she knows her Puritanical father and mother would consider her indiscretion as the "one unforgivable sin."

On their return to the city the cousins, Lloyd and Edgar, take up the routine of their daily existence, soon forgetting the pretty country girl who had entered their lives for a few short weeks. The memories of the days that are past soon fade from the thoughts of Lloyd Norman and he becomes infatuated with Janet Moore, while Edgar looks forward to a life of happiness with Janet's cousin Dorothy.

A double wedding is arranged of which Mary hears and tries to prevent. Edgar, meeting her at the door, persuades her to wait until after the weddings, when he promises to compensate her in her trouble. After Lloyd's marriage to Dorothy he devotes much of his time to business and his complaining wife, to fill her life, adopts an orphan, of which her husband becomes insanely jealous and obsessed with the idea that the child must be an illegitimate offspring of her own.

He finally accuses her and, Dorothy, to test his love, says that his thoughts are true. As Lloyd orders his wife from the house, Edgar enters and when he is told of his cousin's decision he informs him that his wife had lied because the child is his own, whom Edgar has been instrumental in providing a future, out of sympathy for the girl Lloyd wronged.

The horror stricken husband appeals to his wife to forgive him, but the fact that he had driven her out of his house on account of a sin of which he was guilty makes her detest him and she leaves.

Episode Four, "Road O' Strife"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine

THE subtle development of the characters and the novel means utilized to "get over" various effects, distinguish Lubin's "Road O' Strife" serial from the average screen play, and, as each episode is released, the interest in the story itself grows stronger.

In the fourth installment Alene, the girl who up to this time has been unmindful of the ways of the world, begins to realize that her frankness and disregard of society's conventions makes her different from other people, and that she must change her ways. The action is even and interesting and the players at all times do excellent work. Jack Standing, Mary Charleson and John Ince are most prominent in this reel, Crane Wilbur appearing in only a few scenes.

An exceptional scene, and one which will doubtless attract much attention in photoplay houses, is the one in which Mr. Wilbur, in his character of Robert Dane, hurries up to a railroad station and takes a letter from his pocket. As he reads it about two thirds of the screen becomes blank and the letter fades in. After the audience has time to read it, the letter again fades out and the scene reappears in its place, this time with a train waiting alongside the station. It is a clever bit of camera work, excellently timed and perfectly arranged.

The story of the episode tells how Gilbert Jerome, the man who has determined to get possession of the papers which will make secure the fortune which his father stole, visits the village and begins to work out his plan. Alene and Abner Dray are among the first persons he meets upon his arrival and he at once is attracted by the girl's beauty. Like Robert Dane, he is certain that she loves Gray and decides that the villager must be removed from the path, for if he, himself, wins the girl there will be no further trouble about the fortune.

Alene unconsciously gives Jerome the weapon he desires when she tells him that she likes Abner because he killed old Gershom and freed her. The scheming fellow at once reports the affair to the police and Gray is placed under arrest. Alene is heartbroken and hurries to Dr. Duncan, but finds that he has been quarantined with a smallpox patient. She then seeks Robert Dane, but again is disappointed, for that morning, unknown to his friends, Dane had left for the nearby city to try to save himself from financial ruin. Thus she finds herself with no friend to turn to.

Jerome, despite the fact that a woman arrives in the village who claims to be his wife, sees that his plan is working out to splendid advantage. He sends the woman away for a few days and then sets out to get Alene in his power. The innocent girl, alone in her room, realizes that what she has told Jerome is liable to cause the death of Abner Gray and the closing scenes of the episode show her growing terror.

Pathe's "Unto Herself Alone"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

THE problem of the hoidenish but pure girl's vain struggle against the formalities and laws of convention is the subject treated in "Unto Herself Alone," the fifth of Pathe's three-reel drama series, entitled "Who Pays?" Alicia, pretty, high-spirited, and of strong character, recognized no law save that of her own desire. In her opinion chaperons were merely frills of society, not in any sense a necessity and usually a damper on jollification.

Unfortunately, Alicia trusts others whose denial of conventions is not as innocent as her own. The penalty transforms her future life and nature completely. During the few moments following her discovery that the man whom she had thought her friend had deceived her and was married to another, Alicia was changed from a happy, forgiving, confiding girl to a morose, vindictive, distrustful woman, relentless in her persecution of her betrayer. The latter's punishment lies in the loss of his young wife, who, on becoming cognizant of her husband's conduct, divorces him. Ruth Roland, as Alicia Knight, and Henry King as Felix Lynn are the principles in the cast.

The opening scenes contrast the natures of Esther Halsted and Alicia Knight. Esther, on receiving an invitation to sail on Felix Lynn's yacht at her christening, declines, because, though accompanied by her mother, she fears that it might stir up idle gossip. Alicia, on receiving Felix's telephoned invitation, accepts at once. Her mother forbids her to go, as she has an appointment and cannot accompany her, but Alicia goes anyway. When she returns the butler meets her at the door with a note from her mother, stating that she will not put up with her disobedience longer and that Alicia can take up residence at Ivy Manor, a part of her father's estate.

Alicia plans a reception and tries to get in communication with Felix to invite him, but is informed that he is living on his yacht. Undaunted, she rows out to invite him personally. Morning finds her still aboard the boat. The gaiety at Alicia's party is at its height when Esther Halsted receives a message that her father is dead. Weeping on Felix's shoulder, she explains that they were married some months before, but had kept it secret because of her father's disapproval.

Alicia is stunned by the news of the marriage. Furious at Felix's deceit, she tells Esther of her visit to him on the preceding night. Thereafter Felix lives a lonely, miserable existence. Divorced and denied by Esther, he is constantly haunted by Alicia's accusing eyes. In time he is sent to a sanitarium, hopelessly insane.

Vitagraph's "The Juggernaut"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

ONE of the biggest sensations ever offered in pictures is to be found in "The Juggernaut," a five-reel Vitagraph feature released under the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay banner. Photographed in such a way as to make one feel that he is at one end of a high trestle, the spectator sees rushing towards him a passenger train, made up of an engine and three coaches. Just as it reaches the middle of the trestle the rotted ties give way, plunging engine, cars and passengers into the river below.

From the time that the train becomes an important factor in the story until it reaches the wooden span the suspense, by means of close-ups and flash-backs, is worked up to the point where a person attempts to conjecture just what is going to happen to the speeding train when it reaches that weak spot in the trestle —or if, after all, the man hurrying to get to the bridge to flag the train, will make it in time. Good judgment is used here in cutting the picture, so that the anxiety thus aroused does not change to impatience or become irksome.

This thrill forms the core of a perfectly good, sound story. The latter without the train wreck would be a forceful, attractive drama. It has an excellent cast, and has as its background artistic interior settings and well-chosen outdoor locations. Character portrayal and the atmosphere suggested by the environment count for a good deal in the filming, as the action in the main part of the story transpires twenty years after its beginning and in much different surroundings.

William Dunn's characterization of the railroad magnate, Philip Hardin, stands out as a strong example of the type of man whom the author must have had in mind in writing the theme. Earle Williams makes an impressive district attorney as John Ballard, and Anita Stewart gives charm and personality to the roles of the railroad president's wife, Viola Ruskin, and Anita, his daughter. Julia Swayne Gordon, Paul Scardon, Frank Currier, Eulalie Jensen and Jack Brawn complete the cast.

Briefly, the story deals with the relations between John Ballard and Philip Hardin. First, they are enemies at college, then chums, later rivals for the hand of Viola Ruskin, and after graduation and Philip's marriage to Viola, they part friends; Ballard, following his pursuit of law, and Philip, taking up his father's work, railroading.

Twenty years later they are brought together again. Viola is now dead, and her daughter, Anita, is an attractive girl of eighteen. District Attorney Ballard begs railroad president Hardin to lessen the cost of life on his road by having its deficiencies properly attended to. Hardin refuses, and Ballard leaves, threatening to prosecute him. The night before the day which Ballard has set for the exposé, the district attorney receives a visit from Hardin, who reminds him of a murder committed back in their college days of which Ballard believes himself guilty.

The district attorney postpones his prosecution.

The next day a train on Hardin's road plunges through a faulty trestle into a river. Hardin's daughter is one of the passengers. The railroad president witnesses the accident, and dies of heart failure on the river bank. Ballard, who has since learned that the man whom he thought he had killed at college in protecting Philip was merely stunned, attempts to rescue Anita, but she dies before he can pick her out of the debris.

"The Ingratitude of Liz Taylor"

THE Selig Polyscope Company has a new star; two of them, in fact. For, undoubtedly, the leading honors in the two reel release of Monday, May 10, entitled, "The Ingratitude of Liz Taylor," belong to Rowland Sharp, a clever little lad of tender years, who plays the newsboy, and to "Paddy," the Airedale pup, which we understand is the property of Stella Razetto, who appears as himself.

Vivian Reed makes a beautiful and interesting Liz Taylor, for whom the story is named by its author, Maibelle Heikes Justice, and Guy Oliver is convincing in the role of Ben Bradshaw, the sturdy hero, though in reality these two adult leads are entirely subsidiary to the ten-year-old newsboy.

Mickey, the newsboy, is summoned in off the street by Liz Taylor, and invited to have a bowl of soup, her purpose being to get a glimpse of the want ad section of the newspaper without having to spend a penny to purchase it, and through the newspaper she secures the addresses of several firms with whom she seeks employment, though unsuccessfully.

Meantime, Mickey encounters Ben Bradshaw, a down-and-out job hunter, and remembering the feed which Liz Taylor prepared for him, he takes his new friend back to Liz in the hope that another feed will be provided.

As foreseen by Jimmy, Ben is fed and he and Liz console each other over their failure to land a job. Jimmy, learning of their difficulty, volunteers the information that he knows of jobs for both of them and conducts them to a clothing factory, where Liz is hired as a machine operator and Ben as a shipping clerk.

As the weeks pass by Mickey finds himself more than ever bewitched by the beauty and kindness of his friend Liz and is proud when he sees her promoted to a position in the office, where she is compelled to suffer the unwelcome attentions of Doyle, the factory superintendent.

Eventually Mickey succeeds in rescuing Liz from the unwanted attentions of the superintendent, and after Ben likewise complains of the superintendent's ill maners, the latter is discharged. But a day or two later when Mickey, with his best clothes on and his puppy dolled up in a new sweater coat, visits Liz for the purpose of declaring his undying love and affection, he is amazed to learn that Liz is already engaged to Ben. Despite the fact that an invitation is extended for him to live with them after they are married, Mickey seats himself on the steps with Paddy by his side and curses the ingratitude of "dese woimen."

Reliance's "A Child of God"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

A SPLENDID human interest story, photographed in the de luxe fashion for which the Reliance pictures are famous, will be the Mutual Master-Picture release of next week under the title, "A Child of God." Cyrus Townsend Brady is the author of this story, which is done in four reels of film, the principal roles being enacted by Sam de Grasse, Francelis Billington and Richard Cummings.

The story begins in a quiet fashion, leading naturally along step by step to a tremendous climax and action speeds up as the climax is neared. In the second reel occurs one of the best motion picture wrecks that it has been this reviewer's privilege of seeing. Two trains run together in a head-on collision that will thrill any audience. A happy ending assures the picture meeting with the approval of the great majority of theater patrons, since all picture fans dearly love to see the heroine in the arms of her hero rather than mourning his tragic fate as the story ends.

Sam, a rough but wealthy rancher, falls in love with Frances, the school teacher of the neighborhood, and is amazed when the girl rejects his proposal because she thinks him too rough and uncouth. After he has rescued her, however, from a half-breed's advances, she is inclined to regard him in a new light, but ere their love affair can progress very far she is called to her home in the East by an urgent message from her father.

Arrived there she learns that Chet Condon, a sweetheart of her girlhood days, owns a mortgage on her father's home, and is using this mortgage as a lever to induce her father to give his consent to a hurried marriage with her.

Frances, however, declares that she will never be able to marry a man she does not love and while she is still considering the matter word comes that her widowed sister, Jane, is returning home with her baby, her husband having died and left her without funds. This added burden seems likely to prove too much for her father to even hope to bear, and it seems inevitable that Frances must marry Chet in order to save both the home and her father.

The train on which Jane is returning East suffers a head-on collision with another train just outside the town in which Sam lives, and the rancher is even a witness of the wreck and one of the first on the ground to begin the work of rescue. One of the first victims to be drawn out of the wreck is Jane, injured so badly that there is no hope for her life. Ere dying she insists that her baby be baptized and a minister of the little settlements performs the ceremony, Sam acting as the baby's godfather.

This act changes Sam's whole life and he feels a new reverence for his Maker and a desire to become a better man. Despite the fact that his cowboy companions josh him unmercifully about "getting religion" Sam faithfully reads his little Bible daily and becomes indeed a child of God.

The minister, meanwhile, has gone East with Jane's baby and upon arriving at Frances' home explains all to the bewildered parents. Frances gives a reluctant consent to her marriage with Chet and on the very day that this wedding is to occur Sam arrives from the West, having been drawn by a desire to see the child for whom he acted as godfather. Great is his amazement upon learning that the baby's mother was a sister of Frances, the girl he loves, and great also is the surprise of Frances upon beholding in the child's godfather her friend from the West. The circumstances under which Frances is being compelled to marry Chet are unfolded and Sam agrees to himself take up the notes held by Chet, thus relieving Frances from the compulsory marriage.

In calling upon Chet to accomplish this purpose Sam gets into a quarrel which results in Chet being severely mauled, much to the enjoyment of his office employes. Sam then returns with the canceled notes and as the film ends it is evident that he and Frances will soon be married.

Edison's "Her Proper Place"

AN OLD and much-honored saying finds refutation in the touching story of "Her Proper Place," a three-reel Edison drama of a girl who, in doing what she believes to be her duty to her parents, becomes the grind and domestic scape-goat of the household. She finally sets aside the teachings of the adage that "all comes to him who waits," and, by her independent spirit and new determination, compels the respect and admiration of those who formerly had grown to look upon her as a good and willing servant.

The fact that the turning point of the theme, reached when Agnes decides to deceive the others into believing that she became engaged while in Washington, is told by a sub-title rather than action may or may not be considered a technical weakness, but the interest value of the story is not decreased by it in any sense. There are several places in the picture where the action could be brightened up a little or given a closer relation to the developments of the story, but taken as a whole, it presents a unique plot in an entertaining and convincing manner.

May 10 is to be the release date of the drama, which was produced under the direction of Langdon West and features Miriam Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott; the former as Agnes Reynolds, the maid-of-all-work in the Reynolds household, and the latter as "the gentleman from New York," Senator William Northrup. Able support is rendered by the balance of the cast, consisting of Bessie Learn as Agnes' sister May; Harry Beaumont, as her brother Tom; Margaret Prussing as Clarabelle Marsh; Edward Earle as Harry Cornell, and Robert Brower and Mrs. Wallace Erskine as Agnes' father and mother.

Scene from Edison's "Her Proper Place."

On graduating from high school, Agnes Reynolds sacrifices her ambition for the higher things in life, and returns home to take care of her aged father and mother. In order to allow Tom, her brother, plenty of spending money at college, Agnes dismisses the maid and takes her duties upon her own shoulders. In time the poor girl becomes a veritable drudge, while her younger sister, May, grows up pampered and sheltered from work of all kinds.

Determining to put up with this state of affairs no longer, Agnes leaves for Washington, where she obtains a position in a department store. She attends school nights, and soon qualifies herself for a position as stenographer in the office of a broker, located directly across the hall from the offices of Senator William Northrup. One night Agnes, who is a great admirer of the senator's policies, hears a pistol shot in his office. Rushing in, she revives the unconscious man, and bandages the bullet wound in his arm.

The next day the senator tries to learn her identity, but she has disappeared completely. The girl has answered her father's recent request to return home. Feeling the yoke of her former servitude settling about her neck, Agnes decides to command the consideration accorded her sister and brother by stating that, while in Washington, she became engaged. The scheme works, but not altogether to her satisfaction.

When pressed for the name of her fiance, she says it is Senator Northrup. One of her girl friends, Clarabelle Marsh, gives a reception for the betrothed couple, and sends the senator an invitation. He publicly denies the engagement, but attends the reception out of curiosity to see who it is that claims him as her future husband. He recognizes Agnes immediately, and, on hearing her story, asks her not to retract her statement, but to let the engagement stand as it is She consents, and a few weeks later finds them married.

Universal's "The Black Box"

JOHN CRAIG, the elusive and cunning criminal of the Universal serial entitled "The Black Box," is once more successful in eluding the vigilance of Sanford Quest, the scientific detective, in episode eight of "The Black Box," which is entitled "The Inherited Sin."

Though Craig is captured by a detective from Scotland yard and an attempt made to take him to London, where the detective from America is to secure him and take him back to America, Craig succeeds in escaping from the Scotland yard officials and after eluding a pack of bloodhounds, which are sent on his trail, he finally finds refuge in the basement of Hamblin House, the country home of Lord Ashleigh, brother of Professor Ashleigh, who is already known to followers of the serial.

After seeing the two Gallaghers sentenced for life at their trial, Sanford Quest leaves for London with Lenora for the purpose of securing Craig, who has been arrested by Scotland yard officials and is to be held until Quest arrives.

Ere sailing, Quest visits Professor Ashleigh's home and in a family record found in the library, he secures evidence regarding Craig's past that seems to indicate that the man has inherited a criminal tendency, which doubtless accounts for his committing the terrible crimes of which he is suspected.

Craig manages to escape the Scotland yard men, when, while being taken to London, the team runs away and throws both Craig and the man to whom he is handcuffed out on the road. Craig regains consciousness, and manages to free himself from the handcuffs, while the official is still in the land of dreams.

When a pack of bloodhounds is put on his trail,

Craig is recognized and arrested.

Craig succeeds in eluding them by gathering a little clump of marsh grass and sinking himself beneath the waves of a nearby pond, the marsh grass preventing the officials from seeing him from the shore. Late that night he finally makes his way to the cellars of Hamblin House, whither Quest goes the next day to call on Lord and Lady Ashleigh.

After dinner, Quest expresses a wish to see the basement of the old home, and while there barely misses finding Craig, who makes his way into the basement through a subterranean passage, but hurries away again on seeing Quest. As the film closes we see Lord Ashleigh in his bed and a mysterious pair of hands creeping toward his throat, so that one will scarcely be surprised on witnessing the following episode if it is learned that Lord Ashleigh has been murdered in his bed.

Pathe's "Exploits of Elaine"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

A DEADLY African tick, whose bite means certain death, is the latest means taken by Wu Fang, the Chinese criminal, to do away with those who are pursuing him in the Pathe serial, the new "Exploits of Elaine."

Wu Fang decides to permit Elaine, whom he has held captive for several weeks, to return to her home, but ere he allows her to depart, he tells her that her ultimate punishment will be more frightful than any bodily injury he can possibly inflict, since she will see her friends die one by one, while she will live on in dread apprehension that she will herself be the next one to suffer the vengeance of the crafty Chinaman.

Craig Kennedy, though himself a victim of the Chinaman's vengeance, is finally able to solve the mysterious cause of his illness, and with the assistance of a noted physician to obtain an antidote for the poison. Ere the picture ends he is once more himself and able to renew his activities against Wu Fang.

As the picture opens, Wu Fang obtains from Africa a package containing a little vial in which are the microscopically small but exceedingly deadly insects, and at once a plan materializes for wrecking vengeance on Kennedy and his assistant.

Releasing Elaine after telling her that her friends are to be slowly murdered before her very eyes, the Chinaman visits Kennedy's laboratory and conceals one of the deadly little African ticks in the receiver of the telephone.

Then he deliberately calls up Kennedy and thus makes sure that his ear will be placed in such a position that the African tick can poison him. Both Kennedy and Jameson are infected, though the poison is so slow in taking effect on Kennedy that the latter is able to depart with Elaine for the country for a week-end.

Wu Fang agrees to free Elaine.

He is summoned back by Jameson's illness, and though himself far from well, at once sets out on an attempt to discover what ails Jameson.

Noting that Jameson's ear bother's him and that the man who is attending Jameson and who has also used the phone in the room, is having trouble with his ear, Kennedy surmises that since his own ear buzzes and burns, the infection must have come from the telephone, the only instrument which all have used in common.

Kennedy summons a famous physician to attend Jameson, but ere he can impart his suspicions to that individual, he falls over on the bed unconscious.

The doctor, by testing the blood corpuscles of the infected men, discovers all are suffering from spirillum fever and at once prepares to inject an antidote in their arms.

The Chinaman meanwhile substitutes for a nurse ordered by the doctor, Weeping Mary, one of his accomplices, and instructs her to infect all the instruments to be used by the physician.

The chance arrival of Elaine, who at once recognizes Weeping Mary, spoils this plan, and undoubtedly saves the lives of the three men. Mary flees and Elaine is installed as nurse in her place, and ere the film ends we see both Kennedy and Jameson once more themselves and ready to take up the trail of Wu Fang and his Chinese accomplice.

The specialist attends Kennedy and his assistant.

Rolfe's "The High Road"

Reviewed by Mabel Condon.

A HAPPY choice of features by any exhibitor will be that of "The High Road," in which Valli Valli is featured by the Rolfe Company on the Metro Pictures Corporation program. The screen appearance and work of Valli Valli are distinctly good. In addition, there are other and as important points of merit which go toward recommending the picture. Its direction is one of them and bespeaks a word of praise of Director Jack Noble. The method of fading scenes into close-ups is one that is used to advantage throughout the picture's five reels; it adds materially to the fineness of the production, which is beautifully photographed and aptly cast. A shortening of the fire scenes, one feels, would make for the future effectiveness of this part of the story, adding thereby to the strength of what is undoubtedly the "punch" of the picture.

Frank Elliot is cast as Allen Wilson, the writer, and C. H. Brenon as Barnes, whom we see first as a suitor of Mary Page and later as mayor. The remainder of the cast is not named but all contributed their share equally well toward making "The High Road" a creditable picture.

Mary tells the mayor her story.

The novelty of the story's unfolding during the first two reels is refreshing. A long road overlooking a town stretches into the distance; it is traversed by a young woman who, as she walks, recalls the scenes that have made for her unhappy travels on the high road of life. Her rejection of Barnes, her liking for Wilson, a summer boarder, her father's cruel treatment which causes Wilson to offer the country girl protection, and her acceptance of this protection which means three years spent as Wilson's mistress. Then one day the illness of a factory girl receives Mary Page's sympathy, and a further acquaintance makes her realize that the life she is living in an offense against society. She decides to leave Wilson's home. As she finishes a letter explaining why, Wilson enters with Maddox, a friend and owner of a shirt waist factory. While Wilson is absent from the room, Maddox insists on Mary's drinking wine with him and on her refusal sneers that he knows her position in Wilson's household. Mary strikes him in the face and, Maddox gone, tells Wilson of her determination to leave. When she has gone Wilson realizes too late, the fact that he loves her. Mary finds employment in the shirt waist factory which, unknown to her, is owned by Maddox. A cut being made in the girls' wages, Mary leads them on a strike and Maddox orders disturbers hired to put the girls in disfavor with the police. Mary learns of this and takes the matter before the mayor, whom she finds to be her former suitor, Barnes.

The girls return to work at their former wages, and they are locked into the factory one night when forced to work overtime. A fire breaks out and Mary is among the saved. She is taken to the mayor's home where, convalescent, he again asks her to marry him. Maddox reveals to the mayor the preceding three years of Mary's life. Wilson prevents his making further trouble, by the use of a revolver, and the mayor and Mary decide they have earned the happiness that promises to be theirs.

"Prohibition"

"PROHIBITION," the six-reel offering of the Prohibition Film Company, is, as its name implies, a picture with a purpose, though the purpose does not become so obvious as to spoil a real interesting story.

The main thing deals with the transformation for the worse of William Irving and Lemuel Larkin by drink and their subsequent regeneration and return to a high position in society. Interwoven in this main thing is a sub-plot relating to the attempt of Benjamin Larkin to make a drunkard of his brother Richard, for the purpose of breaking up the love affair of Richard and his sweetheart, Hattie Holmes. Two other love stories add their interest to the plot.

Among the prominent picture stars taking part in the picture are Thurlow Bergan, David Wall, Virginia Westbrook, Charles Trowbridge, Charles Clark and Mary Moore, while among the national figures of prominence who have been induced to pose in certain scenes of the picture are such notables as Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, Senator Richmond Pearson Hobson of Alabama, Senator Shafroth of Colorado, Senator Vardeman of Mississippi, Senator Jones of Washington, Senator Ashurst of Arizona, Senator Clapp of Minnesota, Senator Sheppard of Texas, and Senator Works of California.

Undoubtedly "Prohibition" will be a widely booked picture and one which will prove a strong box office magnate.

Ralph Stuart in Films

Ralph Stuart, a long-time favorite and a star with a country-wide reputation, will at last appear on the screen, having been secured by the Knickerbocker Star Features for the three-reel dramas to be released on alternate Wednesdays on the regular program of the General Film Company, starting early in May.

Mr. Stuart has completed his first picture, the "Kick Out," under the direction of Robert T. Thornby, a former Vitagraph director. He is featured as the Mayor, a part which calls for an unusually strong character combining great force and varied emotions; from the gentle and tenderly regard of a father for a motherless daughter to a face to face battle with a crafty city boss and the masterly handling of an infuriated mob.

Mr. Stuart's stage successes include his own play, "By Right of Sword," also leads in "Strongheart," "The Rainbow's End," and many other dramas of equal character and strength. He was also lead in the original cast of "Wallingford" as produced in Chicago.

Knickerbocker Star Features are making most elaborate plans for big reproductions. A huge stage, augmenting the present productive capacity many times, has been completed and no money or efforts are being spared to make these features equal to the best and among the most thrilling dramas available on the General Film program.

Freuler and Finn Speak

New York and vicinity, as spoken for by exhibitors of this territory, likes "The Diamond from the Sky." The first three chapters of this picturized romantic novel were shown to exhibitors and the press on the morning of April 21 at the American theater, on Forty-second street. The large attendance was generous in its praise of the North American Film Corporation's romantic screen novel, which is to be given the public in chapters of two acts each until the story has logically told itself. John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Corporation, and Joseph H. Finn, president of the Nichols-Finn Advertising agency, which is issuing the screen-novel's publicity, addressed the attendance. Their respective talks left no one in doubt as to the bigness of the film and its handling and the promised award of $10,000 to the one who provides the best sequel to the novel. "The Diamond from the Sky," as judged by its first three chapters, is going to verify the fine things that have been predicted for it.

Big Film Storage Contemplated

New York City within the near future is apt to have two large office buildings, the greater portion of which will be devoted to a storage place for film negatives.

The first of these contemplates the erection of a 16-story fireproof building on the site now occupied by the Lincoln Hotel at Fifty-first street and Broadway at an approximate expenditure of $4,000,000.

Frank L. Dyer, 31 Nassau street, president of the Dyreda Art Film Corporation and a director in the World Film Corporation, is said to be at the head of the project, while details of the scheme are in the hands of J. Arthur Fischer.

One of the features of the building will be a number of exhibition rooms, which will be used as sales or display rooms by the film firms occupying the building, each of which will have the use of them at certain periods of the day. The steel vaults in which films are stored will be both burglar and fireproof and carefully guarded both day and night.

The other proposition contemplates the erection of a building for similar purposes at Forty-seventh and Seventh avenue, the property there having been leased for twenty-one years by a syndicate of which George Backer, and Arnstein and Levy are members. The building will be 16 stories in height, and already the Backer-Arnstein syndicate has agreed to rent several stories of it for a period of twenty-one years, the rental for the first period to be $1,750,000 or about $84,000 a year, while, in case the lease is renewed, a still larger rental will be expected. This building, like the other one, is said to be absolutly fire and burglar proof, and a strong inducement will be held out to film manufacturers to lease offices and store productions within the structure.

More Thrilling Stunts

Riding a horse at break neck speed down the main aisle of a grand stand with hundreds of spectators, startled at the sight, making a mad dash to get out of the way, is what Irving Cummings did last Sunday during the taking of a scene for the new picturized novel, "The Diamond from the Sky."

The occasion was a rodeo given by cowboys from the "Flying A" studios and the crowd was gathered at the driving club grounds in Santa Barbara to witness the exciting range boys, roping, tying, breaking, racing and the other thrills incident to the wild outdoors.

A tournament such as was held in the old days was also on the program with tilting of lances and hurdle racing. It was at the close of this scene that Cummings and William Russell, blood cousins in the story, work out a family grudge, resulting in a call for the sheriff and an attempted arrest of Cummings. The author had written that the hero should escape as per the habit of heroes, and to do so required a consummate amount of nerve and quick wit, for hemmed around him in a great plunging mass of men and horses, was the sheriff and his deputies.

Then toward the grand stand Cummings turned his horse. He dashed through a small gate and up among the spectators.

Behind him, pressing hard, was the stern hand of the law. Then to the amazement of the spectators, the fleeing man turned his horse down a treacherous flight of steps at full gallop. At the bottom of the steps was a railing, and over it, a fifteen foot leap to safety, Cummings went.

Will Hold Open House

On Thursday, April 29, Harry Weiss, manager of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation, located in the College building, 207 S. Wabash avenue, Chicago, will hold "open house" to all of his friends and customers, for the purpose of celebrating his first anniversary with the concern of which he is manager. Mr. Weiss extends a cordial invitation to all his friends to drop in on him, smoke a cigar or two at his expense and look over the exchange over which he presides. On May 1 Mr. Weiss will hold a "blow-out" for the office employees and certain personal friends. Invitations to this affair are now being sent out.

Bell's Publicity Campaign

The W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation, 804 Powers building, Chicago, is mailing this week to exhibitors publicity matter relating to its feature production, "The Christian," made by the Vitagraph-Liebler Feature Film Company, and in which Edith Storey and Earl Williams are featured. Enclosed in the envelope in addition to the little herald, which briefly tells the story of "The Christian," and gives the cast of characters, as well as illustrating many of the principal scenes, is a post card photo of Miss Storey and also a handsome print of Mr. Williams. Still another enclosure is a four page pamphlet containing newspapers reviews of "The Christian" in the principal cities of Illinois, where the film has been shown. The matter reproduced gives the press opinions of more than a score of leading newspapers and should be proof conclusive to the exhibitor that "The Christian" is a drawing card. We have no doubt but that Mr. Bell will receive a number of new bookings as a result of this new campaign.

Universal Exchange Damaged

Fire, shortly before seven o'clock on the evening of Monday, April 12, destroyed the annex of the Kent building in Toronto, Canada, one floor of which was occupied by the Universal Film Corporation as an exchange. The loss to the exchange is said to be in the neighborhood of $10,000, while little more than $1,200 worth of insurance was carried. The Ramo Company, which also had an exchange on the same floor, suffered to the extent of $5,000.

Fortunately for the Universal Company, all of the out-of-town shipments were enroute to their consignees at the time of the fire, and only such film as was intended for immediate showing in and about Toronto was in the building at the time of the blaze.

Helen Case Engaged

Miss Helen Case, formerly featured by the Universal and the New York Motion Picture Company, takes the lead as the mayor's daughter in the new feature drama, the "Kick Out," produced by Robert T. Thornby, for Knickerbocker Star Features. Miss Case has just completed her engagement in a five-reel feature with S. Miller Kent, in the drama, "The Cowboy and the Lady." In this Knickerbocker Star Feature Miss Kent will have a large opportunity, all of which she is improving with strong artistic ability.

Films Missing From Exchange

Copies of the Thanhouser two-reel photoplay, "The Final Reckoning," and the Reliance single-reel photoplay, "The Express Messenger," have been lost or stolen from the Mutual Film Exchange in New York City. Any information concerning these two subjects will be greatly appreciated by the management of the corporation. Address communications to J. N. Naulty, vice president, 71 West 23rd street, New York.

"Hearts Ablaze," an original drama by Eugene Mullin, is a Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature now in course of production under the direction of Lorimer Johnston.

The long distance debate between Billy Ritchie and Charles Chaplin as to who was the original drunk in "A Night in an English Music Hall," has now become three-sided with the entrance of Billie Reeves, now leading comedian with the Lubin Company, who not only announces that he was the original drunk in the production, but offers to separate himself from one thousand dollars if his claim isn't correct.

Joseph Galbraith, a former matinee idol of the speaking stage at the Belasco theater in Los Angeles, Calif., has joined the American Film Manufacturing Company forces and will be cast in some of the leading roles in "Flying A" productions under the direction of Archer MacMackin.

Still larger additions to the dressing room accommodations on the Mutual studio lot at Hollywood, Calif., are being built. New actors and actresses are constantly being added to the stock company and this necessitates an almost continuous increase in the facilities for housing them.

E. Mason Hopper is a new director for World Comedy stars. He was formerly with the Essanay and Pathe companies.

Kalem is hard at work on its "Broadway Favorites" productions. Each of these productions will feature a star of the legitimate stage who has scored a success on Broadway. The first "Broadway Favorites" feature will be a three-act production of Lawrence Marston's famous play, "An Innocent Sinner." It is the vehicle for Katherine La Salle, who recently played opposite John Mason, in "Big Jim Garrity," which opened at the New York theater.

Adele Farrington and Rupert Julian have been added to the company of Universal players headed by Lois Weber and E. Phillips Smalley, while news is announced that Fritzie Brunette, a former Universal star, and her husband and director, Bob Daly, are now welcome members of the Joker company. All are busily at work in the big studios at Universal City, Calif.

The first annual meeting of the Photoplay Authors' League passed off smoothly recently, the prevalent opinion being that the league had fully justified its existence and had done splendid work in its first twelve months of endeavor. Frank E. Woods was re-elected president, Russell E. Smith, vice-president, and Richard Willis, treasurer. Richard Harding Davis is the second vice-president, and William Lord Wright the third vice-president. Hettie Gray Baker is secretary and Mary O'Connor, David Griffith and W. E. Wing fill up the governing board.

Comedy dramas of one and two reels are being added to the Selig program.

Andrew J. Cobe, president of the Alliance Films Corporation, is now making a tour of the Alliance exchanges, East of and including Duluth, Minn.

Samuel Goldfish announces on behalf of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company that it has been definitely decided to release through the Paramount Program seven exceptional productions during the summer months of June, July and August.

J. Frank Brockliss, European representative of the Lubin Company, who has been in America for the past few weeks on a business trip, has sailed for London.

George W. Lederer has obtained from Charles Frohman the film rights to the celebrated drama, "Sunday," in which Miss Ethel Barrymore scored such a triumph.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, expects to leave within a short time for Los Angeles, Calif., where he will visit the new Selig Jungle-Zoo, which is rapidly nearing completion.

Tom Walsh, who played Barcus in Universal's "Trey O' Hearts" series, has been transferred to the position of assistant director to Roy McCray of the Joker comedy company.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

The Washington, D. C., offices of the World Film Corporation have been moved to 1004 "E" street, N. W., because of increased business.

George A. Magie, general manager of Universal City, Calif., entertained the members of the American Association of Passenger Traffic Officials at a big barbecue in the picture city last week.

Tyrone Power, the noted actor, and Mrs. Power, were guests of Colonel William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, in Chicago, last week. Mr. and Mrs. Power were en route to Los Angeles, Calif., where Mr. Power will enact leading roles in forthcoming Selig Red Seal plays.

Lillian Gish is expected back at the Mutual studios in Hollywood, Calif., shortly from her vacation. She has been away on a trip with her mother and is now visiting in Massillon, Ohio.

In appreciation of the assistance rendered him in producing Clara Kimball Young in "Hearts in Exile" by the priest of the Greek Catholic church, James Young, the director, gave a special box party at the New York Hippodrome when the feature was shown there. Besides the priest, there were present the officials of the Russian Immigrant Home and their friends.

Robert T. Kane, of the Prohibition Film Corporation, returned to his offices in the Candler building Monday, convalescent after a several days' illness.

The pep and ginger which moves Nicholas Power advertising copy to hit one in the eye, as it were, recently prompted its originator, Bill Barry, to open the bathing season at Asbury Park, N. J. Bill found it so inconvenient coming out of the water ever and anon to divest himself of icicles that he finally gave it up and left the beach to open up the season itself.

Biograph Company—After a rather spirited advance the securities of this company have subsided in point of interest and offerings are now more numerous than bids.

General Film Company—There has been more trading in this stock in the last three or four weeks than in any similar period of the last six months.

Mutual Film Corporation—Earnings during the last quarter were reported to be a trifle under those of the preceding quarter. The company, however, is already beginning to feel the effect of the new feature service and earnings for the current quarter, if continued at the rate of present business being done, will equal any quarter in the past year and a half.

North American Film Corporation—This company decided that the only fair way to handle the exhibitor is to "show him the goods." That this spirit of fairness has had the immediate support of the exhibitor is evidenced by the increasingly large number of contracts that continue to come in each day. The response has evidenced itself from every part of the United States. The picture is right and the story has taken hold.

New York Motion Picture Corporation—There has been some talk of a bulk dividend in addition to the regular 1%, but as to whether or not this is merely unofficial gossip or will materialize into an actuality will probably be decided within the next ten days.

Reliance Motion Picture Company—Earnings from the new four-reel features have been reflected in the price of the stock and a fair amount of it is wanted at between the above bid and asked figures.

Thomas Ricketts and the company of feature players from the American Film Manufacturing Company, under his direction, spent several days in Los Angeles, Calif., recently getting slum scenes for the coming feature "The House of a Thousand Scandals." As guides the company had a sergeant and two deputies of the Los Angeles police force and some wonderful material was secured.

Olive Johnson, one of the best known of the popular kiddies appearing in motion pictures, is now a Mutual leading lady. Olive is four years old.

Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley gave a delightful tea at the Hotel Alexandria last Sunday afternoon in honor of Mrs. Carl Laemmle. A number of film notables attended, including Mr. Laemmle, P. A. Powers, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Standing, Winnifred Kingston, Myrtle Stedman, Courtenay Foote, Mrs. Hobart Bosworth, Laura Oakley, Richard Willis and ever so many other clever people.

On next Saturday afternoon, Grant H. Longenecker, physical director of the New York Association for the Blind, will head a company of thirty Blind Boy Scouts, who will march from the Institute, 111 East 59th street, to the Vitagraph theater, where they will attend the performance of "The Lady of the Lighthouse," as guests of the management. While some of the scouts are blessed with partial sight, those who cannot see with their eyes will enjoy the picture from a description by their more fortunate brothers.

Pat Rooney, Marion Bent and their clever young son, Pat Rooney, Jr., three of the most popular vaudevillians on the stage today, make their initial appearance in the Lubin comedy, "The Busy Bell Boy."

The May issue of The Movie Magazine, the clever publication which comes from Los Angeles, Calif., is even more interesting than the previous numbers. Among the many items which are sure to attract attention are an exceptional story on Tom Mix, the Selig cowboy-leading man, an interview with Mary Pickford and a department containing the latest west coast news.

The town of Caliente, Nevada, one of the remaining wild and wooly communities reminiscent of the days of Bret Harte, is planning to accord an enthusiastic reception to the Selig Movie Special tourists who will pass through that section.

Alfred Raymond is a new salesman at the Dallas office of the World Film Corporation, and W. H. Allen is now traveling out of Indianapolis for the same concern, having been appointed to that office by Central Division Manager Scates.

Lillian Peacock, of the Joker comedy company, who was badly hurt in an automobile accident in Los Angeles on March 12, is now rapidly recovering and expects to be back at work by May 1.

"The Chalice of Courage," in six parts, a picturization of the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's widely read novel of the same name, has been completed by the Western Vitagraph Company under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon, and will be an early Vitagraph release.

Scarcely any of the Lubin players or "extras" think of riding to the studio these delightful spring days in trolley cars. The reason for it is the arrival of the jitney. Philadelphia is almost jitney overrun, and as a result it is possible for everyone to ride to work each morning in some sort of an automobile for not over ten cents at the most.

"Love Finds the Way," a one-reel Selig drama, to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on May 19, was written by Mrs. Otis Skinner, wife of the distinguished actor.

The first Vitagraph production in which Robert Edeson will be seen is a picturization of "Mortmain," or "The Dead Hand," from the story of Arthur C. Train.

Last Wednesday evening, E. S. Porter, producing manager of the Famous Players Film Company, was tendered a surprise dinner at the Hotel Knickerbocker to commemorate his forty-fifth birthday. The party was carefully planned and organized by Mrs. Porter, the wife of the noted director, and it is interesting to note that though eleven of Mr. Porter's closest associates were invited, the guest of honor did not have the faintest intimation that the dinner had been arranged, until his entrance into the dining room.

Gretchen Knorr, the popular little pianologuist, recently of the Orpheum Circuit, who was one of the popular members of the Garrick Players, the stock company in which James Hawley played the leading parts, has left the stage and has joined the United Program where she will appear in ingenue leads with the Lariat Films.

The widespread demand for motion pictures is demonstrated by the fact that it finally has been taken up by the church. The first motion picture of a Sunday School ever made has been produced by Essanay. The film was made for the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. The picture is of the Brazil, Ind., Sunday School of 3,500 members, said to be the largest Sunday School in the world. The operations of the Sunday School from the opening hymn to the closing prayer are shown in the picture.

Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the Unitarian minister, has just left the pulpit to become scenario editor for the United Film Service.

ROLL OF STATES.

The Olympic theater of Norfolk, which has been run for several years under the management of S. P. Hutchins, Jr., has been acquired by the Bonita Theater Company, Incorporated. of Norfolk, which contemplates the establishment of a chain of theaters in Virginia and North Carolina, according to a statement by the management. Harry G. Church, of Norfolk, will be in charge of the Portsmouth theater.

WASHINGTON.

H. D. Williams recently purchased from Walter Casey the moving picture theater in the Odd Fellows' Temple at Colville.

G. E. Widger and Arnold Reading have purchased the moving picture theater at Ione from George Peone.

Henry D. Allard recently purchased the Gem theater at Twenty-first street and Portland avenue, Tacoma.

Spokane capital is interested in the building of a new motion picture theater in Hillyard. The house is to be known as the Rose, and it will be located on Market street. Seating capacity 250.

Ground has been broken for the new Liberty theater to be erected on South Second street, Walla Walla. The theater will cost $40,000.

Work has been started on the construction of F. E. Starkey's new motion picture theater on the corner of Post and First streets, Spokane. The building will cost approximately $50,000.

One of the most up-to-date theaters in Washington was recently opened at Ballard. It is the Majestic theater, owned by J. G. Jonson and W. W. Kastner. The new theater is valued at $17,000 and has a seating capacity of 500 persons.

Hillyard is to have another motion picture house to be known as the New Rose theater, the property of Mrs. Clara A. Holmes, who will manage it. The theater will be at 525 Market street, where the building has been remodeled.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Work is rapidly progressing on Bluefield's newest photoplay house, the Rex, which will be opened to the public about May 3.

The work of repairing the Theatorium theater at Moundsville, which was recently damaged by fire, is rapidly progressing, and same will be opened within a very short time.

WISCONSIN.

Ground has been broken for a new photoplay house at Baraboo. The theater will be under the management of A. Ringling.

The Oregon Opera House is now under the management of F. L. Buskirk. Mr. Buskirk will make many improvements on the theater.

Plans are under way for the construction of a new photoplay house for the Badger State Investment Company on Grand avenue, Milwaukee. The building will be of concrete and brick, with a seating capacity of 1,300 persons and will cost about $80,000. It is expected the theater will be ready for occupancy in the early fall.

The Rex theater, Fifty-third and National avenues, Milwaukee, was recently damaged by fire.

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

J.; Count Von Bernstorff, prominent in U. S.-German neutrality question, poses for a picture camera; newsboys visit Governor Walsh of Massachusetts; Grace Darling visits Selig Jungle Zoo; opening of the golf season in New York City; Daughters of the American Revolution arrive in Washington, D. C., for national convention; war views from Servia, Russian-Poland and other European points.

A Double Winning—Biograph—May 1.—A globe-trotter and his friend get into an argument at the Sportsman's Club, the result of which is a wager that the globe-trotter cannot find his way out of an isolated mountain to which his friend will lead him. They go to the mountain and the friend leads the blindfolded globe-trotter into the center of a forest on its slope and leaves him there. The globe-trotter starts to find his way out and meets a prospector's daughter, whom he falls in love with. She leads him to her father's cabin and in a short time he finds his way out. While her father and he are telegraphing news of his success to his friend, two bandits besiege the girl in the cabin, but the globe-trotter returns in time to save her and wins not only the wager but also a bride.

The Box Car Trap—Kalem—May 1.—Shortly after Charlie secures a position for Jim in the power house, an epidemic of fitting thefts breaks out. Later Charlie discovers that his chum is the culprit. Jim is placed under arrest but makes his escape by knocking his captor down and hiding in a box car. It happens that the box car is to be used to test out a newly invented brake. Jim is aware of this and maliciously determines to ruin the test. Shortly afterwards the car is sent down hill. Inside the car Jim removes the flooring and ruins the brake apparatus. The box car runs wild. Too late, Jim learns that he is caught in his own trap. Unable to get out of the car, a fearful fate awaits him. Meanwhile, Helen is notified of the runaway and ordered to sidetrack it, if possible. The terrific speed at which the car travels causes a hot box. Before Helen can sidetrack the runaway it makes Elbow curve and shoots off the track, overturning as it topples down the embankment. By the time Helen reaches the spot, the box car is afire. Screams of agony reach her ears. The girl telegrapher learns that Jim is trapped inside the burning car. Smashing a hole through the side, she braves the flames and crawls into the car. Jim, frightfully burned, drops unconscious just as she reaches him. Exerting all her strength, Helen drags him to safety. By this time the railroad officials arrive. But Helen's heroism goes for naught. Fatally injured, Jim dies in her arms.

Safety Worst—Lubin—May 1.—Billington Biggs is a worker in the cause of "Safety First" and gets a lot of cards of warning printed. He gives one to Bill Jones when he catches him spooning with Jane Judson. He gives one to a man who is about to lend some money to another man and gets beat up because of it. He hands a card to two men who are fighting and he gets the worst of it. He gives one to the man at the gasoline station and after the explosion he gets a can on the head that knocks him out. He stops a crowd of policemen who are chasing a burglar and hands them a card and is thrown into the river. He hands one to the men who pull him out and they proceed to throw him back again, and that is the finish of him. On the same reel is:

The Undertaker's Daughter—Lubin—May 1.—Mattie Cook, the undertaker's daughter, loves John Scott, who has no job. Her father wants her to marry Sime Sloan, who has a job, and it takes all of Mattie's persuasive power to overcome Dad's objections, but she is equal to the occasion. She gets rid of John's two rivals, Sime and Bime, by promising to marry them if they will prove their love for her. To prove it one must sleep in one of her father's coffins and the other sit by it all night. Unbeknown to one another they come to fulfill their promise. After some hesitancy they settle down to the task. It really looks as if she would have to marry one or both, when she thinks that a little noise would help some. With the aid of John, she manages to get rid of both. In their fright they run through the meeting house presided over by Dad, who gets a couple of spills. He finally decides that John is the most sensible and thinks he can help in the undertaking business.

A Pillar of Flame—Vitagraph—(Two Reels)—May 1.—Norma Talmadge, E. A. Turner and Harry Morey have the leading roles in this drama. A society woman leaves her husband and little daughter to take singing lessons under a celebrated music teacher. Upon completing her studies she finds that she cannot go upon the opera stage without meeting his attentions. Discouraged after she fails to make good in a cabaret, she writes her husband that she is dead and then goes to the music teacher to pay the price that he demands for her success. Years later the husband again marries, but is unhappy to think that his little daughter has inherited her mother's longing for the stage. The mother, now an opera star and an adventuress, finds her husband and threatens to expose her identity to his present wife. She also agrees to take her daughter away with her and give her a position on the stage. Left alone she is overcome with remorse, however, and decides to go away from them forever. Recoiling at the thought of the deed she almost committed, she accidentally backs into a flaming gas jet and instantly her flimsy gown is ablaze. She is fatally burned, but before she dies she exacts a promise from her daughter to never go on the stage.

Toys of Destiny—Biograph—May 3.—The deacon's daughter is disowned by her father because she attends at theatrical performance. She marries one of the actors and a year later when their child is born he goes away on a trip and does not return. In desperation she leaves her child on her father's doorstep and he raises the girl as his own. When he dies she goes on the stage as a means of earning her livelihood and in time becomes a star under a famous director. Before her greatest performance a scrubwoman in the theater faints before her dressing room door and she learns that the old woman is her mother. The director entering the dressing room stops in surprise for he sees in the scrubwoman his wife whom he lost years before, because he had gone away and had been confined in a hospital on account of an accident. He had risen to the height of his position and had always searched for her in vain. Thus father, mother and daughter are happily reunited.

Sue—Essanay—May 3.—Miss Dorothy Warshauer, winner of the contest of the Chicago Record Herald and the Essanay Company for the most beautiful girl in Chicago, plays the leading role in this picture, that of Sue Newland. The story follows that of the real contest. Sue in the film being the winner of the Herald's contest and later the leading woman of the Essanay Company about to enact a picture. While posing in the studio she is called upon by Jack Rankin, star reporter on the Herald, and eventually the two fall in love and are married. Albert Roscoe has the leading role opposite Miss Warshauer. N. G. C.

An Innocent Sinner—Kalem—(Three Reels)—May 3.—Dr. Jacobs, an eccentric English physician, opens an office in the little Southern village. He falls in love with Hinda, an orphan, and employs her. Tom Bridges also falls in love with the girl. Hinda, however, is attracted by Tom's younger brother, John. She is unaware of the fact that John is engaged to marry Peggy. Tom, learning that his brother is trifling with Hinda's affections, compels the boy to promise to marry her. Dr. Jacobs overhears all that passes between the two and is filled with jealous rage. The physician possesses a hypnotic influence over Hinda. While Tom and John go for the marriage license, Dr. Jacobs and Hinda visit Mrs. Bridges, the boy's aunt. Later, while the doctor and the orphan are on their way home, a terrific thunder storm arises. The two take refuge in the woods. Tom and John on their way home from the town hall are also caught in the rain. The elder brother dashes for a nearby farmhouse, while his brother elects to take refuge in the forest. A flash of lightning reveals John to Dr. Jacobs. Insane with hate, the doctor hypnotizes Hinda and has her slay the man who has blasted her life. Laughing Ann, the village disgrace, witnesses the crime. The murder is discovered the following morning. Laughing Ann's story brings about Hinda's arrest and trial. Placed upon the stand, Hinda convinces the jurors of her innocence and is acquitted. Jacobs asks the girl to be his wife, but convinced that he is in some way to blame for the dreadful experience she has undergone, Hinda spurns him. Tom presses his suit and eventually makes her his wife. Overcome by a desire for revenge Dr. Jacobs informs Tom that Hinda was guilty of John's death. The scoundrel hypnotizes the girl and while under his influence, Hinda goes over the details of the crime. Horrified Tom attacks Jacobs and administers so severe a beating that the physician becomes paralyzed. Convinced that Hinda has murdered John, Tom determines to divorce her. His wife is ignorant of the confession she has made while under Jacob's influence. Bewildered by Tom's behavior she begs him to reconsider his decision. In the meantime Dr. Jacobs, now a hopeless cripple, finds that death is near. The man is brought to the realization of the misery he has caused. Filled with remorse, he determines to clear Hinda and take the blame upon himself. The doctor is carried to the Bridge's home where Tom and Hinda are just about to sign the separation papers. Then comes the confession, which reconciles the couple. A moment later, Jacobs dies.

Road O' Strife — Lubin — (Episode Five)—May 3.—Alene, in terror at the fate which awaits Abner Gray, and feeling that she is responsible for his trouble, asks a lawyer if there is nothing she can do to save him. He tells her that a wife cannot be forced to testify against her husband, and Alene marries Abner at once, not considering the future at all. Dane learns that Gray is in prison and that Dr. Duncan is quarantined and hurries back to the village to watch over Alene. He does not arrive in time, however, to prevent Clara, the woman who claims to be Jerome's wife, from tricking the girl, and the last scene shows Alene plunging apparently to her death through the rotted floor of an old mill to which she has been lured.

The Reaping—Selig—(Two Reels)—May 3.—A wealthy couple are unhappy because they are childless. A poor couple have a child to bless their union, but the father is given over to drink and neglects his family. The wealthy couple learn of the other couple's condition and adopt the child, paying the poor family considerable cash in exchange. The poor man spends the money for drink and is killed in a saloon brawl. The mother of the little boy is heartbroken at being separated from him, and when the rich couple learn of her suffering, they return the child, for they realize that he means much more to her than to them. Reviewed on page 702, issue of May 1.

Cutey's Sister—Vitagraph—May 3.—Cutey, while attending college, finds that none of his chums will introduce him to their sisters, because he is a flirt. By securing an actress' picture and by putting it up in his room as a photograph of his sister he becomes popular overnight. He is at once introduced to one of the fellow's sister, Alice. Cutey and Alice get along excellently and are soon engaged, but Jack, the "fellow" who paved the way for Cutey's happiness persists in seeking an introduction to the original of the photo in Cutey's room. The actress comes to town and the "fellow" tries to make her acquaintance. Complications follow in rapid succession when the actress' husband arrives in town, but matters are eventually straightened out and Cutey finds that Alice loves him despite all that has happened. Wally Van and Nitra Frazer featured.

Black Sheep—(Two Reels)—Biograph—May 4.—Simeon Carruthers is on the verge of ruin because of the extravagance of his son, Philip. He marries a rich widow, whose son George is a rising young novelist. His brother in a nearby city dies and leaves his daughter Clare in his care. The girl has a fortune in her own name and Carruthers plans to have her marry Philip. She falls in love with George, however, and Carruthers tries to disgrace the novelist by making him appear a thief. Philip falls in with crooks and they in turn fleece George. A quarrel between the crooks and Philip leads to one of them killing Carruthers' son. George is present when the murder takes place and is arrested for the crime. Carruthers does all in his power to have the novelist convicted, but through the efforts of Clare he is cleared. The young novelist then asks Clare to become his wife.

Cartoons in the Kitchen—Edison—May 4.—This is the second comedy featuring Raoul Barre's cartoons. Annie, the cook, starts to look at Andy Estes' book of cartoons and becomes so engrossed in them that she prepares the dinner like an automaton, putting into the soup anything she can reach without taking her eyes off the book. Consequently one of Andy's rubbers finds its way into the concoction. After waiting for their dinner for what seems an age, the Estes family descends on the cook in the kitchen, and demands immediate service. The soup puts a dangerous edge on their already aroused tempers, and they grasp the book to see what it is that is so funny about it. In their interest they forget their troubles and laugh as heartily as Annie did. C. R. C.

The Profligate — Essanay — (Three Reels)—May 4.—Many thrilling and dramatic situations are developed in this photoplay, adapted from Arthur Hornblow's novel of the same title, in which E. H. Calvert, Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse are featured. The profligate, a lovable, but dissipated young man, is cast off by a man believed to be his uncle and told that he is only a foundling. When the uncle is found murdered and his safe robbed, evidence points to the profligate, who is acquitted, although many still believe him guilty. In the country, the profligate meets a girl with whom he falls in love, but a busy-body friend tells the girl of the profligate's past. Eventually the profligate succeeds, through tracing some bonds formerly possessed by his uncle, in running down the murderer and the man is finally forced to confess. A locket accidentally dragged from the profligate's pocket is recognized by the murderer as one that he had placed on the neck of his baby when he had driven his wife and child from the house, the wife leaving her child on a doorstep and ending her own life. The profligate is startled, as he realizes that he is the son of the murderer. As he stands there dumbfounded, the girl he loves enters to bring back some trinkets of her friend who had died, and who was a niece of the murderer. She has heard all, and throws herself into the arms of the profligate. The two turn to find that the murderer, overcome by fright, has succumbed to heart trouble. N. G. C.

Ham's Easy Eats—Kalem—May 4.—On the verge of starvation Ham and Bud hold up a grocery boy and take his basket from him. Finding nothing but potatoes the adventurers heave them at their victim. The missiles, missing the boy, hit a policeman. Terrified, Ham and Bud flee. To get food Ham tries the famous old "starving beggar" trick. A crowd that sees him grab a piece of bread from the sidewalk gives Ham a hatful of money. Bud, however, steals the collection and disappears. Taking pity upon poor Ham, Mrs. Manning and her daughter, Nellie, place him in their auto and take him to their home. In the meantime Bud gets into a crap game and loses all his money. Later he is arrested by a policeman and carted to jail. While Bud languishes in the cell, Ham is being royally entertained. Ham makes a big hit with Nellie. Ham endeavors to sing for his kind friends, but his barber-shop chords prove too much for them. They invite him out for an auto ride. For awhile everything is lovely. Then the butcher boy and the policeman assaulted by the adventurer see him in the machine. Giving chase, they overtake the Manning auto and drag Ham out. Poor Ham's castles in the air come crashing to the ground. Turning coldly from him, the Mannings drive on. Ham is taken to the police station and thrown into a cell. To his intense delight he finds that Bud is his cell-mate. Seizing hold of his diminutive chum, Ham whales away at him for dear life.

Curses! Jack Dalton—Lubin—May 4.—In this cartoon picture the love and jealousy between Jack Dalton and Jim Dorney is at fever heat. Jim sees his loved one through the window at the piano and quickly makes himself welcome. Clara plays "The Maiden's Prayer," and Jack listens in his room on the floor above. Love and music take possession of him and he cuts a hole in the floor through which he dives and, grabbing Clara by the hair, lifts her to his own rich apartment. Jim follows without assistance and wages a merry chase, over housetops and across the river. He is assisted by a good natured stork who permits him to hang to his legs. Passing a battleship, Jack hauls the fair maiden on board, but Jim overhauls a submarine and diving aboard fires bombs at the ship. He then rescues his loved one and hurls curses at Jack Dalton. On the same reel is:

The Twin Sisters—LUBIN—MAY 4.—Eva Bolton, though bigger than her husband, is his domestic slave. Just because she asks for a couple of dollars for household expenses, he makes an awful row and storms off to business, leaving her heartbroken. She has about decided to leave home when she gets a letter from her twin sister, Nancy, announcing her arrival. She leaves a note for Nancy telling her that she has gone home to her mother because she can't live with her husband and asks Nancy to follow her there. But Nancy is not like Eva and Bill doesn't know she is in town. She settles down and when Bill gets home, he tries his pranks on Nancy, thinking it is his wife Eva, as they look so much alike. Nancy leads Bill a merry chase at the end of which Bill is glad to hand over all the cash. Nancy then calls Eva on the telephone and tells her that she can come home as she has cured Bill. Eva returns home and finds a very different husband awaiting her.

An Arizona Wooing—SELIG—MAY 4.—A thrilling western drama in which Tom Mix has the leading role. The action is fast and interest-holding and the photography and settings excellent. Manuel Paquito and Tom Warner are rivals for the love of Jean Dixon. Knowing that Paquito is an outlaw, Jean favors Warner. In difficulties with the cattlemen, Tom Warner is captured by them one night; they peg him out on the desert to starve him into surrender. Paquito finds Warner and tortures him. Jean comes upon the scene, and is forced by Paquito to promise to marry him or see her lover killed. She reluctantly chooses the former. Dixon, Jean's father, returns to Warner, who tells him what has happened. Together they summon the other cattlemen and start to run down the Mexican. Paquito and Jean reach the nearest village and ride to the house of a clergyman. However, Tom and Dixon ride up in time to prevent the marriage. After a revolver duel, the Mexican is captured and is forced to stand by and see the marriage of his rival to Jean.

A Child of the North—(TWO REELS)—VITAGRAPH—MAY 4.—Nan, a half-breed girl of the North, has a staunch friend in Cal Stanton, owner of a tract of land near her father's cabin. Burton, a stranger who is in the northland to secure all the property possible for little or nothing, wins her love and she goes to live with him. An old school chum of Burton's, Lillian Baker, visits the forest and wins his love. Nan learns that Burton plans to swindle Cal and warns him. Upon returning to Burton's cabin she finds him about to marry Lillian and kills him. With the mounted police on her trail she hurries to Cal, who succeeds in getting her safely to a river, telling her that he will meet her next day near the lower lake. While she paddles down the stream a great snow storm comes up and the next day when Cal finds her she passed into the great beyond. Margaret Gibson featured.

Jack Kennard, Coward—EDISON—MAY 5.—This is the winner of the Edison College contest. It was written by Edwin Marston, and tells the story of how Jack Kennard proves to his fiancee's satisfaction that he does not merit the brand "coward" placed upon him by his rival, Edward Cottrell. To pay his college debts, Kennard accepts Cottrell's offer of a loan. The latter takes advantage of his debtor's position by insulting him in Miriam Phelp's presence, and threatening him, in a whisper, with exposure if he retaliates. Miriam, Jack's fiancee, takes this as proof that he is a coward, and breaks off their engagement. Later Jack heroically rescues May Eldridge by leaping down and snatching her out of the way of an approaching elevated train. May's brother, in gratitude to Kennard, informs Miriam of Cottrell's contemptible scheme to dishonor Jack. The lovers become reconciliated.

The Clairvoyant Swindlers—KALEM—(TWO REELS)—MAY 5.—A shrewd man in ordinary business affairs, Brandon, through his interest in the occult, falls an easy victim to a gang of clairvoyant swindlers headed by Rillando. The latter gives Brandon advice "from the other side," in which the financier is ordered to invest in stocks sold by Kelly. This man is also a member of the gang, had been discharged from the police force because of crookedness. Unable to convince Brandon that he is being swindled his daughter, Ray, appeals to Bertha, the girl detective, for help. Accompanied by Talcott, her assistant, Bertha attends one of Rillando's seances. She speedily discovers the man to be a fakir. Later, further investigation reveals secret telephones through which the "clairvoyant" receives the information from his assistants which enables him to mystify his dupes. Bertha enters the house by the rear door and cuts the wires of the secret telephones. As the result the seance breaks up in confusion. Rillando attempts to escape through a secret passage, but is confronted by Bertha, armed with a revolver. The fakir's assistants are captured by Talcott and several policemen. The girl detective and her assistant hasten to Kelly's office. There they find Brandon in the act of handing a large sum of money to the crook. Kelly is placed under arrest after a hard fight.

Who Violates the Law—LUBIN—(THREE REELS)—MAY 5.—Sheriff Black allows the illegal sale of liquor in his county, the place run by Mother Hubbard being without restrictions. Black's daughter, Linna, is loved by Bob Nelson, a young reporter, and by Pank, an ex-prizefighter, who is the "go-between" for the sheriff. Bob is assigned to the case by his paper and Black and Pank attempt to throw him off the track by arranging a fake raid. Plans miscarry, however, and the raid becomes a real one, Bob being the only raider, however. A "hanger-on" about the saloon is killed during the melee and Bob is arrested for the crime. Mother Hubbard believes Black responsible for the raid and determines to get even with him through Linna. She lures the girl to her place, but Pank, who really loves her, defends her. The police again visit the saloon and a fierce fight takes place, during which Pank protects Black's daughter with his own life. Dying, he confesses that it was he who killed the man in the previous raid, thereby clearing Bob and uniting the lovers.

Her Career—SELIG—MAY 5.—A single reel drama containing much that is true. It deals with the ambitions of a young wife to go on the stage and the folly of her act. Virginia Kirtley has the leading role. Daniel Groff, president of the Groff Dramatic School, asks Mrs. Trent, wife of Owen Trent, a retired actor, to accept a part in his new play. Trent tells his wife there is nothing in the show business and to keep out of it. Mrs. Trent tells her husband that he cannot stifle her career; that she is going to the city to accept Groff's offer; that he must give her a year's freedom, and that if he will follow or interfere with her, she will never return. The play does not show up well in rehearsal. Then Groff attempts to make love to Mrs. Trent. She now realizes that stage glamor and home life are two different things. She 'phones to her husband that she is coming home, and all is again happiness in the Trent homestead.

A Lily in Bohemia—VITAGRAPH—MAY 5.—The country girl marries the young violinist and upon their return to the city he returns to his gay Bohemian life. She is awe-stricken at first, but when a friend of her husband's who has the interest of the young couple at heart suggests that she also join in the riot of fun she agrees. At a masquerade ball she is the gayest one present and before she removes her mask she has the young violinist madly in love with her. When he finds that it is his wife he is more than delighted, but when a short time later she leaves him to join a party of gay young men he becomes jealous. When he reproaches her she tells him she is merely acting as he has done and he decides to renounce Bohemia and live a simple domestic life, a decision which she welcomes. Lillian Walker and Evart Overton have the leading roles.

The Master of the Sword—Biograph—May 6.—A fencing master, on a vacation, wins the heart of a pretty girl and deserts her. Her sister, an artist, vows vengeance and studies fencing. From time to time she sends notes to the fencing master that his end is approaching. When she is deemed an expert at handling the sword she writes a final note telling him to meet her on a certain night. He does, but his conscience has so overcome him that he drops dead from heart failure during the duel. The sister then takes her departure, satisfied that she has avenged the fencing master's wrong.

How Slippery Slim Saw the Show—Essanay—May 6.—Slippery and his wife attend a performance by a company of barn stormers at the village Opry House, and just as the show gets nicely started, Slim, who has become interested, finds his time occupied by attending to the baby. When the baby yells and drowns the words of the performers, the show is stopped, while Slim is kindly requested to leave the Opry House. Outside, he quiets the baby and endeavors to sneak quietly into the show again, but the sight of the villain causes the baby to yell and poor Slim is marooned outside, being the only one in all the village who was not uplifted by the drama. Victor Potel featured. N. G. C.

Such Things Really Happen—Lubin—(Two Reels)—May 6.—Two swindlers start a photoplay writing school and among their many victims are a young country lad and his sweetheart. They spend their entire savings without telling each other what they are doing and this leads to a lover's quarrel. The girl is persuaded to go to the city by one of the crooks and is in great danger. The boy visits a motion picture studio and learns that he can never succeed and that he has been swindled. The fake teachers quarrel just as the police raid their rooms and on of them is killed. The other forces the girl into his auto and makes his get-away. The boy, with the assistance of the police and some people from the studio, captures him, however, and the lovers come into their own.

Safety First—Mino—May 6.—Patsy's wife refuses him the joy of smoking and he has himself arrested to get out of her clutches. The policeman proves a good sport, however, and releases Patsy. That worthy gets gloriously drunk and crawls into a box car. Waking up the next morning in another city, he visits a friend and his wife, and the minister from his home town on a business trip finds him. Believing he is leading a double life he telegraphs Mrs. Patsy. She arrives full and in the mixup which follows all land in jail. Patsy is happy, however, for in the cell next to his wife he is allowed to smoke.

The Park Honeymooners—Vitagraph—May 6.—The young couple are disappointed because their proposed honeymoon trip to Europe is made impossible by the war, but at their uncle's suggestion decide to spend several days in the parks of New York City. The majority of the film is given over to their visits to the various beautiful parks in and about the great metropolis and many exceptionally interesting views of what they saw are shown. A novel method of changing the still pictures they took into a motion picture is introduced in the film. Anthony Moreno and Betty Gray are cast as the young married couple.

Masked Fate—Biograph—May 7.—The banker's daughter attends a masked fete at a country club and there meets a dashing cavalier who makes love to her and ere they part kisses her. A short time later she visits the apartment of her brother in the city and discovers a man, whom she believes to be a burglar, there. She summons the police, but her brother arrives before them and gives her the laugh, for the masked man she thought was a crook is really the cavalier of the fete and her brother's chum and roommate. He tells her that he masked purposely to see if she would recognize him and he then tells her of his love. At first she appears to be angry, but at last she accepts him.

With Bridges Burned — Edison — (Three Reels)—May 7.—An adaptation of Rex Beach's story, featuring Augustus Phillips and Mabel Trunnelle. Because of hard times, the firm of Comer and Mathison cuts down their force. One of those let out is Louis Mitchell, a capable and energetic young fellow. As the weeks pass and he is unable to obtain employment, Mitchell decides to accept his wife's suggestion that he secure permission from his former employers to represent them, and pay his own expenses abroad to bid on a contract reaching several millions. After much hardship both on his and his wife's part, for the latter is reduced almost to poverty at home, he is successful, and is made sales manager by his old employers. C. R. C.

The Actress and the Cheese Hound—Kalem—May 7.—His desire to secure publicity for Lillian Bussel causes Blight, her press agent, to invent a yarn about her wonderful $10,000 cheese hound. Frightful Fogerty, a gentleman crook, swallows this story, hook, line and sinker. Forthwith he determines to steal the valuable dog. Hastening to the hotel in which Lillian is stopping, he tries hard to annex the hound. At the same time the actress, siren-like, has bedazzled Fossil, a muchly-married man, into paying for her costume. While poor Fossil is admiring the costume Fogerty steals the dog. The gentleman crook hides the hound under his coat. Blight comes along just then. Frightful Fogerty's actions fill the press agent with suspicions and he follows the thief. In his desire to escape Fogerty enters Mrs. Fossil's room. The woman, who has been lying in wait for her husband, knocks the intruder down before she discovers her mistake. Fogerty scrambles to his feet and departs from the room in haste. In the meantime the fleas infesting the cheese hound desert the dog in favor of poor Fogerty. At the same time, Mrs. Fossil discovers the affair between her husband and the actress. She seizes the poor man and belabors him. Blight catches Fogerty, who is now making desperate efforts to get rid of the dog. Knocking the crook down, the press agent gives him the beating of his life.

The Spy's Sister—Lubin—May 7.—Bob, a boy in his 'teens, and his older sister, Joy, live together in the Southern mountains. At the outbreak of the war Bob joins a band of guerillas and soon becomes their spy because of his cleverness. A young Northern officer meets and falls in love with Joy, but one day sees Bob in disguise in her arms and thinks it is another lover. He leaves her cabin, but before he goes far he hears shots and returns to find that Bob has been killed by his men and that he is the "boy spy" for whom they have been searching. He also learns that Joy is the spy's sister. Duty is about to take him away without a reconciliation when the surrender at Appamatox allows him to claim Joy as his wife.

The Strategist—Selig—May 7.—This laughable comedy tells of what a hard time the strategist has in trying to marry the girl he loves; the difficulties he has in getting a job when he is fired, and the trap set for him by the old maid daughter of his at-last-found employer. The strategist is compelled to take extreme measures to make the old maid lose her love for him without his running the risk of losing his beloved position and a raise in salary. Daisy has her finger in the pie and finally the course of true love runs smoothly, and Daisy and Bob enjoy their well earned happiness.

The Vanishing Vault — Vitagraph — May 7.—A pleasing comedy in which Billy Quirk, Charles Eldridge and Constance Talmadge act as chief fun-makers. A baroness places her valuable jewels in the hotel's safe which is built in the wall, but the next day the safe has disappeared completely. A detective with his young man and young woman assistants are called on the case and disguise as attendants in the hotel. Many amusing incidents follow in rapid succession until the young man suddenly discovers that a wall has been built outside of the safe and which has caused it to disappear. Just as he pounces upon the two fellows who did the act the detective himself discovers that the baroness and her two assistants had planned to defraud an insurance company by claiming that the jewels had been stolen and that they were nothing but paste in reality.

A Day's Adventure—Biograph—May 8.—The leader of a band of crooks learns that young Bentley is to call for his inheritance papers some time during the day. A female member of the gang leads Bentley into a trap and the leader impersonates him and secures the identification papers. The lawyer and his wife invite him to spend the night at their home and he attempts to burglarize it. The lawyer discovers him and delivers him to the police. He almost escapes, but young Bentley, who has eluded the crooks, is instrumental in recapturing him. Te then makes known his identity and claims his fortune.

A Sad Dog's Story—Edison—May 8.—

A bulldog tells the story of its adventures, revealing a domestic tangle in which jealousy and "too much mother-in-law" figure prominently. Fred Poole's interest in his business interferes with his home duties, and, unfortunately for his wife, he allows the home duties to suffer. The result is that Claudia encourages the attentions of Charlie Grant, and agrees to elope with him. At the critical moment the little bull dog which Grant had presented to Mrs. Poole when it was a puppy, intervenes, and is the means of bringing the husband and wife together again. Just as the dog finishes its tale, the Pooles enter the store, spy their friend and take him home with them.

Thirty—Essanay—(Two Reels)—May 8.—An exciting newspaper story that relates how Thompson, the star reporter of the Clarion is employed by Ellen March, an heiress, to prevent items regarding her engagement to a nobleman getting into print. Thompson arranges to distract the attention of the press by starting a story about anarchists and another millionaire, which results in the discovery of some real anarchists, and eventually in Thompson's being rewarded for his work by being made managing editor of the paper on which he works. Francis X. Bushman and Beverley Bayne featured. See review, page 700, issue of May 1. N. G. C.

The Wild Engine—Kalem—May 8.—Because it is belief that women are prone to lose their heads in cases of emergency, Division Superintendent Marks announces his intention of discharging the girl telegraphers. It is only because Chief Dispatcher Bond promises to be responsible for Helen that the girl retains her position. Shortly after a train filled with excursionists leaves Balfour, an engine runs wild. Helen is informed of the danger which menaces the excursion train. Mounting a motorcycle which stands just outside the station, Helen speeds down the track to warn the excursion of its danger. Nearing the Larkin River Trestle, she fails to notice the posted warnings which tell of the repairs being effected upon the structure. The draw rises just as she reaches it. Before the brave girl can bring her motorcycle to a halt, it hurtles into the river. Undaunted, Helen swims to the opposite bank the moment she comes to the surface. The girl telegrapher flags the excursion train in the nick of time. Her message causes the engineer to run his train on a siding just a few minutes before the runaway dashes by. The engine of the excursion train is cut off and the runaway pursued. The latter is overhauled and brought to a halt. Helen thereupon climbs into the cab and drives it back to Balfour. Division Superintendent Marks learns of Helen's heroism and promptly discards the opinion which had almost brought about Helen's dismissal.

The Busy Bell Boy—Lubin—May 8.—Fidgie, a soda counter clerk, is happy in his position until a beautiful society girl crosses his path. He then resigns and follows her to her hotel, where he becomes a bell-boy in order to be near her. Her mother objects to her daughter paying attention to a mere bell hop, so Fidgie steals a suit of dress clothes from one of the guests and becomes a gentleman for a night. The guests start a fight, however, and Fidgie is forced to flee for his life. The society girl follows him, despite his trouble, and tells him that she still loves him.

The Lion's Mate—Selig—May 8.—A thrilling jungle zoo picture, which depicts the slave trade in Arabia, and the discovery by Allan Deane, when he goes to take charge of the ivory camp presided over by Hamad, an Arab half-breed, that Hamad has imprisoned Naila, the daughter of a white missionary. Deane rescues Naila, and later her father, who is confined with the slaves Hamad is preparing to sell. Hamad is overtaken by fate when the mate of the lion that he shot in the jungle visits the camp and tears him to pieces. N. G. C.

The Breath of Araby—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—May 8.—Tiring of the attentions of De Launay, whom her father wishes her to marry, Clothilde places him in a compromising position and her father challenges him to a duel which results in De Launay being mortally wounded. Clothilde meets Captain Thurston, an army officer who is happily married and because she falls passionately in love with him determines to win him away from his wife. He refuses to pay any attention to her, however, and she sets out to secure "The Breath of Araby," a precious fluid, one drop of which remains in the world and which will cause love to spring up in any heart. Ahamed Hassan, a wealthy Persian, has the single remaining drop and after no end of trouble Clothilde finally secures it. Her father learns of her attempts to ensnare Captain Thruston and in shame he commits suicide. Clothilde enters the room she has requested Captain Thruston to visit and finds a man lying on the bed. She believes it to be the captain and pours the drop of "The Breath of Araby" on him. Thruston enters just as she does this and she discovers that the man on the bed is her dead father. He still has the revolver clutched in his hand, and in her excitement she seizes the pistol and it discharges, killing her and saving Captain Thruston from disgrace.

One Summer's Sequel—American—May 3.—"The catch" of the season and his cousin visit a seashore and meet a simple fisher girl. In the fall they return to the city, where both marry society girls. Time passes and the fisher girl and her child are turned out of her parent's home. The "catch's" wife finds the child of the fisher girl in an orphan asylum and decides to adopt it. He objects and says that has nothing to prove it is not her own. She is angry and says that it is hers. He orders her to leave the house, but when his cousin tells him that it is his child he reconsiders his decision and asks her to stay. Realizing his selfishness, however, she goes away forever, taking the child with her. See review on page 743, this issue.

The Mission of Morrison—Reliance—May 3.—This is a strong drama with plenty of heart interest, produced with the attention to details and artistic appreciation which have made Reliance pictures second to none. A capable cast including William Taylor, George Daly, and other favorite players are seen in the play.

The Most Fair—Beauty—May 4.—Billy Stanhope visits a friend in a nearby city and, while waiting for him to return to the hotel, sees a beautiful girl. He learns her address and starts to follow her, but is injured in an accident. He is taken to a hospital and to his delight finds that his nurse is none other than the girl. His injury proves to be slight and he is soon told that he can leave the hospital. He uses various means to remain until at last the doctor "gets wise" to what he is doing and gives him a homely nurse. This leads to Billy quickly vacating. He is very downcast and sees no joy in life until he again meets the girl while attending a garden party with his friend. He tells her of his love and she admits that she also cares for him. Joseph Harris and Virginia Kirtley featured.

Her Grandparents—Majestic—May 4.—Dorothy Gish and W. E. Lawrence starred. Dorothy, loved by Bob, the boy-of-all-work in the store, is fascinated by a drummer's alluring descriptions of the city, and consents to elope with him.

While waiting at the depot, she falls asleep, and dreams that many evils befall her grandparents because of her desertion, for she is their sole support.

She awakens to find the drummer standing over her. Angered at her change of mind, he attempts to take her by force, but Bob, who has been shadowing the stranger, pitches into him, and he is glad enough to escape on the moving train.

Monsieur Nickola Dupree — Thanhouser—May 4.—Pierre, an artist, sits pondering over two letters. One is from his mother, asking him to return home as she needs his loving care; and the other is from a wealthy friend, urging Pierre to come and live in luxury while teaching him how to paint. As he decides to accept his friend's proposal he feels another's presence, and turning, sees a slender, dark fellow glide through the doorway and out of sight. His first impression of the man is that he is an evil spirit in human form. Both Pierre and Morris fall in love with Mariette, the beauty of the neighborhood. At heart, she prefers the artist, but the prospects of luxury as the millionaire's wife overcome her affections, and she promises to marry Morris. Pierre goes abroad. He feels that his suspcions as to the identity of the dark stranger are confirmed when he meets him at Monte Carlo, in Paris, and again in America on his return. The truth is that M. Nick Dupree is Pierre's uncle, and he wants to know the youth's habits before naming him as his heir. Mariette is prompted to break her engagement with Morris and, after the mysterious one has declared himself and all have laughed over Pierre' ridiculous belief, she marries Pierre. Florence La Badie, Morris Foster, Harris Gordon, and Ernest Ward starred.

When Empty Hearts Are Filled—American—May 5.—An artistically set dramatic subject in which Harry Von Meter and Vivian Rich appear in the leading roles. The plot is rather simple, but the action throughout is strongly dramatic and interest-holding. A fisherman is disabled by an accident and his wife becomes the support of the two of them. A child is washed up on the beach near their home and brings happiness into their lives. Word is received in the village that a rich couple lost their child in a recent wreck and the fisherman and his wife decide to do the honorable thing and return the child. When the rich couple come to claim the lad, however, it is discovered that their child was a girl. They go away and the empty hearts of the fisher-folk are again filled with happiness, for they know the boy can remain with them.

The Spark From the Embers—Broncho—(Two Reels)—May 5.—Mary Forbes, the daughter of Dan Forbes, a criminal, poses for Hal Choate, an artist. Hilton, an acquaintance of Choate's forces his attentions upon Mary one day in the artist's studio. Choate comes in upon the scene, and in the struggle which ensues Hilton is worsted. Later, he meets Dan Forbes, now liberated, in a saloon, and makes him believe that his daughter is being led astray by an artist. Forbes enters Choate's studio, and destroys a canvas painting of Mary. Choate discovers him, and notifies the police. The crook finds Mary and learns that she is the artist's wife. He prepares to leave quietly, but the police arrice, and, in trying to escape, Forbes is fatally shot. Mary's husband never knows that the dead crook was his wife's father.

The Baby—Reliance—May 5.—A startling tale of a small boy's revenge, with an all-juvenile cast. Jack, Billy's rival for Olive's affections, plans to get the other "in wrong" at home by hiding baby Mary, whom Billy has deserted on the beach. Just as he puts her in a box with a catch lid, Jack's mother calls him, and he is forced to go on an errand. When he returns, everyone is searching for little Mary. To his horror, Jack sees that the tide has risen and carried the box out to sea. Teddy, Billy's Newfoundland dog, is sent to the rescue, and in the joy of getting the baby back safe, Jack's sin is forgiven.

The Man from Nowhere—Domino—(Two Reels)—May 6.—Pasquale, a saloonkeeper, furious because Emma Frazer, the sheriff's daughter, resents his advances, frames up a fight between two of the worst men in town, and sends Frazer to arrest them. As the sheriff is being beaten by both men, a stranger plunges into the fight, scatters the bad men, and rescues Frazer. The saloonkeeper draws a gun to shoot the "Man from Nowhere," but the stranger turns and pretends that he has taken the gun from one of the men. The stranger, thinking that he has saved his life, thanks him and promises to do anything for him. Pasquale sees in the man a dangerous rival for Emma's love, and pretends to send him after some horse thieves. The "Man from Nowhere" insists on the saloonkeeper's accompanying him. The Mexican hides the water bags in the sand and lets the horses loose. The stranger, realizing that both cannot get back alive, sacrifices his chances to pay the debt which he believes he owes to Pasquale. But the Mexican fails to find his cache, and in drinking from a poisoned spring meets death. The stranger finds the water bags and manages to get back to town. There he learns Pasquale's true character. He wins Emma for his wife. William S. Hart and Margaret Thompson featured.

Dreams Realized—Beauty—May 7.—Irving Cummings does a splendid bit of character work in this production, appearing as an old actor whose pride and stubbornness causes him great suffering. His daughter marries a young doctor in place of the count whom the old actor had selected for her and he will have nothing more to do with her. Worry over the affair breaks his health and he goes down grade until at last he applies for admission to the poorhouse, where the doctor is installed. A reconciliation is effected and the old actor finds happiness with his daughter, her husband and their two children, the dreams of happiness which he formerly had being realized when the children sit on his knee. Joseph Harris and Virginia Kirtley have the supporting roles.

The Scientific Mother—Falstaff—May 7.—Mrs. Janes' baby is sickly and undersized. She determines to utilize all possible scientific means to bring the infant up to standard, and studies and experiments until she has a food preparation which, she is convinced, will make baby grow. It does. At the age of two he is as tall as a child of ten, and by the time he reaches eighteen he is nearing the eight-foot mark. Then he falls in love, scorns the girl of his mother's choice, tosses his mother onto the roof of the house, kisses her goodby, and flees with his sweetheart.

The Kite—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—May 7.—While sitting in Benjamin Wheeler's favorite chair in the scientist's home, Davis Watts, an eccentric capitalist, falls dead. The police learn that Wheeler was in debt to Watts, and hold him on suspicion. Marion, the accused man's daughter, enlists the aid of a scientific detective, Norman Dunbar, to help in clearing up the mystery. In the chimney, which connects with the laboratory, Dunbar finds a highly sensitized steel plate. Later, he finds numerous other bits of evidence, proving that Watts was electrocuted. Hammond, Wheeler's assistant, who wished to marry Marion against her father's wishes, comes under Norman's suspicion. On being confronted with the apparatus, the murdered confesses, vindicating Marion's father. Rhea Mitchell, Edward Brennan, Howard Hickman, and J. Dowling comprise the cast.

The Old Shoemaker—RELIANCE—(TWO REELS)—MAY 8.—Miriam Cooper, Walter Long, and O. V. McDiarmid starred. Capado, an old cobbler, forbids his pretty daughter, Bella, to receive the attentions of Conners whom she loves. Luigi, a flashy Italian whom she dislikes, kidnaps her. A note which Luigi writes to his confederates falls into an old shoe lying under the table, and is taken to Capado's shop. Conners enters to inquire about Bella, and is shown the writing, for Capado cannot read English. The young American leads the rescue to his sweetheart, and old Capado consents to their marriage.

Added Fuel—RELIANCE—(TWO REELS)—MAY 8.—Jane Pepper, reporter on The Daily Mail, hears that her father's and brother's business difficulties are being aired upon "the street," and begs Sim West, reporter on The Express, to suppress the story. West, however, scores a scoop by publishing the entire scandal. Shortly after this, Jane's father is found murdered. Her brother is held for the crime. West now repents his abuse of Jane's confidence, and, believing that his story precipitated the crime, he joins Jane in the search for the murderer. The girl is saved from the criminal's trap by the timely arrival of West. The butler proves to be the guilty one, and Jane's brother is cleared of all blame.

That Doggone Serenade—ROYAL—MAY 8.—A widow and a widower live across the street from each other. The widow has a daughter. The latter's pet bull dog is the pest of the neighborhood. Next to the widower lives a young chap who possesses an energetic concertina. The widower loves the widow, but does not fancy her daughter. So the two of them scheme to marry off the girl to the musician. The story of how this is accomplished is crowded with ludricrous situations.

Flooey and Axel—KOMIC—MAY 9.—Vic, cartoonist on the Daily Blizzard, has a hard time winning the affections of Margy. He is plunged into more gloom by the editor's telling him that his drawings are criminal perpetrations. Discharged, he goes home and goes to bed. He dreams that Flooey and Axel, his cartoon characters, come to life and show him how to bluff the editor and also how to outwit his pugilistic rival and win Margy. On waking, Vic determines to follow the plans worked out for him by Flooey and Axel. But he quickly learns that reality and dreams have no relation to each other.

The Spell of the Poppy—MAJESTIC—(TWO REELS)—MAY 9.—Mangredi, an opium user, is the pianist in a Chinese cafe. A wealthy tourist becomes interested in him, and sends him abroad to study. He promises Zuletta, his common law wife, that on his return he will marry her. Five years later he comes back, still addicted to the drug. Margery Rhodes, a society girl, studies music with the genius, and acquires a taste for the drug. John Hale, Margery's lover, is in the secret service. He learns from the jealous Zuletta that Mangredi conducts an opium den. Hale raids the place, and saves Margery from a fate worse than death. Eugene Pallette, Lucille Young, and Joseph Hennaberry featured.

Si Perkins in "The City of Delusion"—JOKER—MAY 1.—Si Perkins and his daughter, en route to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, stop off at Hollywood, Cal., to visit with a friend. While out horseback riding, he loses his way and stops for the night in a deserted shed. In the morning a troupe of "movie" people arrive to stage a few scenes. Si awakens to find himself surrounded by a group of angels. The pretty girls lead the bewildered man to the edge of the hill, where they show him Universal City. He travels on to it, his brain in a whirl, and walks in on some of the sets. Carl Laemmle extricates him from his difficulties, and turns him over to a guide, who takes him about and explains the city's purpose. In the meantime his daughter has become worried about his absence. Si is found happy in the company of a number of girls fresh from a harem scene.

The Page—IMP—MAY 3.—The scientist, engrossed with his work, neglects his young wife. She accepts the attentions of another man, a childhood friend, and finally he begs her to elope with him. She tells him to come back the next day for an answer. The scientist overhears all of this, and, half dazed, returns to his laboratory to finish an experiment. There is an explosion, and the wife finds her husband lying on the floor, his sight destroyed, but otherwise unharmed. The next day when the intruder comes for his answer the wife tells him that her duty is with her husband. The scientist makes his way downstairs, where he gives the other man one of the two revolvers which he holds in his hand, and, to make the thing fair, says that they will turn out the light and count ten before firing. At the count of five the light goes up, and the wife rushes in just in time to prevent the intruder from killing his blind opponent. Needless to say, he is ordered from the house. E. Girardot, Violet Mersereau and W. Welsh comprise the cast.

She Winked—JOKER—MAY 3.—Mr. and Mrs. Trotter of Topeka tour the Old World. On the street Trotter meets an old friend from Kansas, one Hi Oldtop. They give Mirandy the slip and set out to see the sights. The princess, who has made a big hit with Trotter by winking at him, begins a flirtation with Oldtop. During a fight at the mosque, where the two men have been roughly handled for not removing their shoes on entering, Oldtop deserts Trotter and makes his way back to where he has seen the princess. Here he gets into an awful mix-up with her bodyguard. Mirandy finds her husband and his friend and scolds them for trying to lose her, Trotter, now disgusted, sells his wife at the slave mart where harem girls are bought, sold and exchanged. The old men then go out for a big time. Mirandy, outlandishly garbed in turkish trousers, overpowers the slave dealer and looks up her former companions. As she leads them past the princess' house, the pretty little girl, now behind bars, gives them a merry wink.

For Cash—(TWO REELS)—VICTOR—MAY 3.—Vera Ronceval, a beautiful girl, has been brought up in seclusion by her father, Amos Ronceval, a recluse. She meets Arthen Owen, and they fall in love. When Amos learns of it, he flies into a rage. The strain proves too much for his wekaened heart and he dies, first committing Vera to the care of her cousin, a lawyer. Arthen, unable to find any trace of Vera, falls into evil ways and loses his self-respect so much as to paint pictures and sign Varick's name to them. Vera's guardian is in favor of contract with Varick, famous as an artist, a match between the girl and Varick, and, to please her cousin, Vera conditionally consents to the engagement. One day she meets Arthen and hears his story. She tells him that she still loves him and promises to break off her engagement with Varick. Arthen, on his way to return to his employer the check which he has received for his paintings, hears Vera call for help. He bursts into Varick's studio and rescues the girl. When her guardian learns of Varick's conduct he readily consents to Vera's marriage to Arthen. J. Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sisson featured.

The Faith of Her Fathers—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—May 4.—Murdock MacQuarrie, Cleo Madison and Joe King featured. A young Christian opens a mission for the Jews in the ghetto. Bertha appeals to her father, Tamor, the rabbi, to rescue the missionary from the angry mob who assail the Christian house of worship. The young man is taken to the rabbi's house, where he is nursed back to health by Bertha. They fall in love, and the Christian asks for the girl's hand in marriage. A violent scene follows. Old Tamor takes the matter up with the ten wise men in the synagogue. At a public meeting he rises to pronounce the sentence of excommunication upon his daughter, when he is interrupted by a younger rabbi, who is presiding. He makes an appeal to the girl, who is seated in the balcony, to stand by the faith which her fathers have striven so to preserve inviolate. The lesson has its effect upon her, and she determines to make the sacrifice of her life. As she is about to enter her tenement home, death, brought on by a broken heart, overtakes her. But she has remained true to the faith of her fathers.

Caught by a Thread—Nestor—May 4.—Mrs. Newlywed becomes suspicious of the "important" engagements which keep her husband out nights, and decides to trail him by placing a spool of thread in his pocket, keeping hold of the end of the thread herself. Just as he is about to enter his friend's house he notices the thread in his pocket. Realizing its purpose, he turns the spool over to a messenger boy and instructs him to wander about with it. The game over, hubby, a winner, leaves his coat down for a moment to crank his friend's car. A tramp steals the coat. The messenger grows tired of his wanderings and slips the spool into the coat, which he recognizes as the property of the man who gave him the thread. Wifie, following the thread, attacks the man in her husband's coat, and he slips away, leaving the coat in her hands. Absent-mindedly, she runs her hands in the coat pockets and finds the roll of bills. Hubby is shorn of excuses on seeing his wife with the money which he won at poker, and he promises never to lie to her again. Lee Moran and Victoria Forde starred.

The Little Girl of the Attic—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—May 5.—William Lloyd, Helen Leslie, M. K. Wilson and M. C. Robbins comprise the cast. At her mother's death little Helen Marsh is placed in a boarding-school in New York city. Her father, Phillip Marsh, disowned by his father, a southern planter, years before, because of his marriage, visits his old home at the outbreak of the Civil War, and begs his father to take care of his daughter, but the old man refuses. Phillip enlists in the southern cause, and is killed in one of the battles. Her tuition failing to come, Helen is put to work about the school and is given a room in the attic. Phillip's old servant returns to the North after his master's death and becomes janitor in the building next to Mrs. Galloway's school. Phillip's father relents and comes north to find his granddaughter. He meets old Cæsar, who has meantime learned Helen's identity, and in this way finds the girl.

Father Was Neutral—L-Ko—May 5.—Billie Ritchie, Henry Bergman and Peggy Pearce featured. Father and a husky individual become engaged in an argument in the park and father suffers an aching jaw as a result. Soon after, Peggy brings Billie home to meet father, but the latter recognizes him as his friend of the park tussle and orders him out. Henry decides that he wants to marry Peggy and tells her father so. He slaps father into obeisance, and sends slaps father into acquiescence, and sends him in to tell Peggy of her future husband. The girl refuses to be forced into marriage, and father and Henry arrange to have her kidnapped. But they unconsciously hire Billie to do the deed. He accomplishes it in a most artistic manner, and later presents his wife to the astonished pair.

Roses and Thorns—Big U—May 6.—Stanley Phillips has a beautiful wife, but she is a social butterfly. The only real tie between the pair is their little son. Phillips leaves for a hunting trip in the mountains. Edna, a child of nature living with her father in the wilds, finds, upon awakening one morning, that he has passed away. Blinded by grief, she wanders about the mountains. Weak from hunger, she falls from a steep mountain trail to the road below. Phillips' automobile runs over her. He takes her to a hospital in the city and sees that she gets the best of care. Love springs up between them. Phillips knows that he is doing wrong in encouraging the girl's affections, and decides to take a trip to Europe, hoping that they will forget each other. He confesses to Edna that he is married, and adds that he loves her as he never did or never will love another. She tells him that she understands, and points out to him that his duty is to be true to his wife. Edna Maison and Ray Gallagher play the leading parts.

Rene Haggard Journeys On—(Two Reels)—Rex—May 6.—Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips starred. The opening scenes are of the trial of Rene Haggard, accused of murder in the first degree. He is condemned to be hung. His heart-broken mother turns to him as the sentence is pronounced and asks, "My boy, why did you do this?" The prisoner's jaw sets, and he looks at her with the pleading gaze of a dumb animal. The scene fades away to tell the story. Rene's sister, an innocent country girl, marries a good-for-nothing drunkard in the city. Some time after his reported death she remarries. The couple live happily together. Shortly after the arrival of the first-born, Rene visits them, and her sister tells him her story. The former husband turns up and demands "hush" money. Rene shoots him and is placed under arrest. The scene shifts to the prison on the day set for the execution. The mother, standing on a hilltop, sees the black flag raised above the grim buildings, and turning, starts off down the hill and disappears up the road.

Beulah—Balboa—(Six Reels)—Henry B. Walthall is featured in this production founded upon the novel of Augusta J. Evans. Mr. Walthall is supported by Joyce Moore, who appears as Beulah. Dr. Guy Hartwell, whose life has been embittered when his girl wife proved false to him and later died, meets Beulah Benton, an orphan girl, turned out in the world to earn her living as a servant, in order that she may support her little sister, Lillian, who has found a home as the foster daughter of a rich lady. It is when Lillian is taken sick that Beulah meets Dr. Hartwell, who comes to attend her. The kindness of his nature impresses the girl and out of pity for her he takes her to his home and later places her in school. The doctor's widowed sister and her daughter, who are planning to make the daughter the physician's heir, humiliate Beulah in every way, lest she become the heir of Dr. Hartwell. The girl departs, to return to the orphanage, but Dr. Hartwell seeks her out and installs her in other quarters. Beulah's orphan lover, Eugene, returns from Europe a dissipated wretch, and though Dr. Hartwell is anxious to see Beulah happy with her former lover, he grows to realize that he himself loves her, and when his proposal is rejected, he goes north, while Beulah becomes a school teacher. Later, when an epidemic breaks out in the city, Dr. Hartwell returns and the two fight side by side against the ravages of disease. This comradeship results in the doctor's faith in God and man being restored, and eventually he finds happiness as Beulah's husband.

The High Road—Rolfe—(Five Reels)—Valli Valli is the featured star in this five-reel production directed by Jack Noble, which is splendidly photographed and interesting throughout. As Mary Page, a country girl, she recalls her unhappy travels on the high road of life, among her recollections being her rejection of Barnes, a suitor of her girlhood days, her liking for Wilson, a summer boarder, and her acceptance of his protection when her family treats her cruelly. Years later she realizes that she is doing wrong in living with Wilson as his mistress and after quarreling with Maddox, a friend of Wilson's, she leaves him and secures employment in a shirtwaist factory owned by Maddox. She leads the girls in a strike when their salaries are cut and later helps them to win the strike. While working overtime in the factory the building burns and Mary is among the rescued. By chance she meets the mayor of the city and recognizes in him Barnes, and as the story ends she agrees to become his wife. See review on page 749 this issue.

Mutual Masterpictures

The Cup of Life—(Five Reels)—New York Motion Picture Corporation—April 26.—Bessie Barriscale is featured in this Ince production. Helen and Ruth Fiske, two young girls working in a department store, come to the parting of the ways. Helen, the more beautiful of the two, chooses "The Easiest Way," and we follow her through life on the downward path. Meanwhile Ruth, who has become the wife of a poor laborer, becomes the happy mother of a family, content to spend her life in the labor of love. Helen returns from Europe, broken in spirit and health, with her beauty faded, an old woman before her time. She goes from bad to worse, until finally the picture closes as she empties "the cup of life." See review on page 741 this issue.

A Child of God—(Four Reels)—Reliance—April 29.—Sam, rough but wealthy rancher, wins Frances' love, when he saves her from a half-breed's advances, but she is called home ere they can marry. Chet Condon, an old admirer, who owns a mortgage on her father's home, is anxious to marry her, and with the mortgage as a leader, finally secures her consent. Meanwhile, Frances' sister, now a widow, returns home with her child, when the train is wrecked and Sam becomes godfather of the chld. When the mother dies, impressed with his responsibility, Sam becomes religious, and months later, after the minister had taken the child to Frances' home in the East, Sam follows and arrives in time to prevent the wedding of Chet and Frances. Reclaiming the mortgage from Chet, Sam orders the latter off the premises and marries Frances. See review on page 746 this issue.

Paramount

The Captive—Lasky—(Five Reels)—This is Blanche Sweet's second appearance as a Lasky star, and she has a role affording her infinite possibilities. Miss Sweet appears as Sonya Martinovitch, a Montenegran peasant girl, beloved by a handsome Turkish soldier, enacted by House Peters, who is made a prisoner in the Balkan war and detailed by the Montenegran government to cultivate the farm on which the peasant girl and her little brother reside. Though the peasant girl has to command the influential Turkish soldier at the point of a pistol, her growing love finally enables her to manage him in another way. The atmosphere of the production is quite unusual and a splendid selection of battle scenes adds much to the beauty of the film.

Pathe News No. 29—Pathe.—This issue of the topical shows representatives of seven states gathered at Chattanooga, Tenn., to plan the Dixie highway; a polo match at Aiken, South Carolina; ex-President Taft at a luncheon given by the Boston Chamber of Commerce; Billy Sunday now conducting services at Paterson, N. J.; and in the war section, views taken at London, England, and St. Omer, France.

Pathe News No. 30—Pathe.—In this issue of the topical are to be found pictures of the crew of the British bark Ivermay which went ashore off Mantoloking, N. J.; funeral of Curtis Guild, ex-governor of Massachusetts, at Boston; a baby camel born in the Central Park zoo, New York city; the landing of ex-President Huerta of Mexico in New York city; the opening of the Federal League baseball season at Brooklyn, N. Y.; the German commerce raider Kronprinz Wilhelm at Newport News, Va., and in the war section views taken at Manchester, England, and also at Liverpool.

Just Tramps—Pathe—Picturing the ups and downs of two hungry, romantic tramps. One of them falls in love with a pretty milkmaid, and progresses admirably in his suit until the appearance of his jealous rival, formerly his companion. Flying loaves of bread, stones, and pies contribute to the confusion before the tramps are thoroughly convinced that distant neighborhoods are much safer for them. C. R. C.

vacious girl with no regard for society's conventions, errs in placing unlimited confidence in Felix Lynn. She is awakened to her great mistake by the news that Felix and Esther Halsted married some months before and kept it a secret because of Mr. Halsted's disapproval. Felix, divorced by his young wife, is continually haunted by Alicia's accusing eyes. In time his mind becomes unbalanced and he is sent to a sanitarium, hopelessly insane. C. R. C.

The Vengeance of Wu Fang—Pathe (Episode Eighteen of the Exploits of Elaine—(Two Reels)—In this episode Elaine is released from captivity by Wu Fang and by means of a deadly African tick installed in the telephone receiver, the Chinaman plans to poison and ultimately kill Kennedy and his assistant, but, though he succeeds in poisoning them, the famous physician, who discovers the cause of their ailment is able to save their lives, and when the Chinaman later attempts to infect the doctor's instruments with the assistance of Weepy Mary, their accomplice, Elaine chances to recognize the woman criminal and is the means of saving their lives. Ultimately they are cured and resume the trail of Wu Fang. See review on page 748, this issue.

Universal Special

The Inherited Sin—Universal—April 26.—(Eighth Installment of the Black Box)—(Two Reels)—Sanford Quest, the detective, visits London for the purpose of capturing and bringing back to America Craig, the suspected murderer. Though Craig is arrested by Scotland Yard men, he succeeds in escaping and makes his way into the basement of the Hamblin House, the country home of Lord Ashleigh. That night a mysterious pair of hands attack Lord Ashleigh in his bedchamber and as the film ends one suspects that the man has been murdered by Craig. See review on page 748, this issue.

V-L-S-C, Inc.

The Juggernaut — Vitagraph — (Five Reels)—April 19.—Philip Hardin, son of a millionaire, and John Ballard, working their way through college, become chums. In a quarrel in a bar-room one night Ballard floors a gambler named Curley, and the following day's paper carries a report of Curley's death. The two students, badly frightened, agree to keep the fight a secret. Years later, Hardin, who has become president of the N. Y. & V. C. Railway and husband of Viola Ruskin, whom Ballard had loved, is brought face to face with Ballard when the latter, as district attorney starts to investigate the railroad. Ere the investigation can begin, Hardin threatens to expose Ballard as a murderer if he continues the case, and the district attorney, frightened at the threat, determines to get new evidence against the road before proceeding. Hardin telephones his wife to bring him some proxies which are in the safe at his home, and when the auto in which she is rushing to the city breaks down, the wife boards a fast express, wiring her husband of the fact. Meantime Hardin receives a wire telling of the rotten ties and loose rails on the bridge the express is soon to cross and immediately hurries in an automobile and motorboat to try and prevent the impending accident. He barely arrives in time to see the train crash through into the waters of the river below and falls dead. Viola is taken, unconscious, from the wreck by Ballard and carried to the man who was her husband. Ballard watches her as she succumbs to the shock brought on by the juggernaut of fate.

Graustark—Essanay—(Six Reels)—April 26.—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are featured with an all-star support in this adaptation of the novel by George Barr McCutcheon, whose story is known to nearly everyone. Many of the scenes were actually filmed in Washington, D. C., and New York City and some of them are of exceptional beauty. See review on page 742, this issue.

World

Women and Wine — Brady — (Five Reels)—May 3.—William Elliott is featured in the role of Dick Seymour, who is fortunate in having a kind father and a winsome girl as a sweetheart. Though heir to an enormous fortune, he is tempted by women and wine on the gay white way at New York and falls. Visiting in Paris he goes from bad to worse, and is finally accused of murder and there seems no escape from prison and later death. His father and sweetheart prove loyal to him and eventually succeed in proving him innocent of the crime of which he is accused. In the end he finds happiness by shunning bad company and bad habits. The settings, depicting scenes in New York and Paris, are brilliant and effective and Mr. Elliott is supported by a powerful cast.

The Lily of Poverty Flat — (Five Reels)—California Motion Picture Corporation.—Joe meets the "Lily of Poverty Flat" in a stage coach when the girl is returning to her father, John Follinsbee, the owner of a store at poverty flat. Indians attack the stage coach, and Joe and Lily are the only ones who escape alive. Later when Lily holds a dance, she sends an invitation to Joe by a Mexican porter. The latter shows the invitation to Delores, a Spanish woman who also loves Joe, and the latter delays the delivery of the note until Joe is compelled to swim the flooded river in order to reach the dance on time. Follinsbee tells Joe he must make his stake before courting Lily. Follinsbee has bought a supposedly worthless mine, and later, when this mine is discovered to be rich in ore, Culpepper, a nephew of Colonel Starbottle's, tries to prove a flaw in the deed, but Follinsbee, having already become rich as a result of the mine, leaves for Europe with Lily. Joe, meanwhile, is offered a map of a fabulously rich mine by an Indian girl, whom he befriends, and Lily in Paris and courted by a Count de Brie, yields to her titled lover when news of the flaw in the deed reaches them. Hamlin, a westerner who has gone to Europe with Follinsbee, saves Lily by fighting a duel with the count, and then all return to poverty flat. Joe, on her arrival, is out with a posse searching an outlaw. He is captured by the bandits, and later rescued by Lily, who eventually marries him.

Miscellaneous

The Unbroken Road—Life Photo—(Five Reels)—Radford becomes the guardian of Constance Turner, but when the girl falls in love with Walter Dover, son of a political boss, and elopes with him, learning too late that he means to betray her, she seeks to return home, but Radford refuses to receive her, and Walter, returning home himself, is able to induce her to marry him, though the marriage is a mock one. Constance later learns that this was the case and informs Walter's father of the circumstance. The political boss sends Walter abroad and has Constance convicted of a crime of which she is innocent. Radford is elected governor, and after he and Dover quarrel and Radford seeks a renomination he is opposed by the boss. Constance, released from prison, meets Garvan, a political rival of Dover's, and seeks to have him ally himself with the governor for the purpose of nominating Radford. Though Constance offers to present her story of the wrong committed by young Dover to the world, Radford refuses to permit her to do so, and as a last resort she offers to become the mistress of Garvan if he will support Radford. The convention hall is destroyed by fire, and Radford with difficulty rescues Constance and Walter, who has returned from Europe, from the flames. On his deathbed Walter confesses how he wronged Constance and, with her name cleared, she marries Garvan, while Radford is again nominated for governor.

The Press Agent Says—

That while taking a scene in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the Nestor comedians, were having a fight in the kitchen of a cafe, a cabbage which was intended for Lee missed its mark and hit Victoria Forde. The mean part of it was that Vicky was about to go home and was adorned in one of her newest and prettiest frocks! She shan't forget "A Mix-up At Maxim's," for a long time!

Minnesota Holding Big Convention

OTHER NEWS OF THE WEEK

As Motography goes to press nearly two thousand exhibitors, exchangemen, film manufacturers, supply dealers and others affiliated with the motion picture industry, are gathered in convention at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Promptly at 10 o'clock Monday morning, May 3, President H. H. Green called the third annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Minnesota to order and appointed various committees. An adjournment was then taken until 2 o'clock in the afternoon when Mayor Wallace Nye of Minneapolis delivered an address of welcome, which was responded to by an official of the league. Monday evening the throngs were entertained at Cooke's gymnasium, where a boxing and athletic exhibition was held for the male visitors, while the ladies were entertained at a special performance at the Shubert theater.

Even more delegates are in attendance at this convention than had been anticipated and besides Minnesota the states of North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Montana are represented.

The lobby of the West Hotel is bright with bunting and gayly decorated booths, wherein exhibits of all kinds are on display, everything being shown from the smallest part of a projecting machine or an humble display of slides, up to the pipe organ, which costs many thousands of dollars, or the display of projection machines, each of which is a model of perfection.

The regular business sessions of the convention were called to order at 10:30 Tuesday morning, but the early hour at which Motography goes to press prevents our publishing this week a story of the Tuesday session. A complete story giving the results of the election of officers and covering the balance of the sessions of the convention will be published next week.

Cox Heads World Film

A complete reorganization of the policy and directorate of the World Film Corporation occurred at a business meeting held last week in New York City, at which time George B. Cox of Cincinnati was elected president to succeed Van Horn Ely, and George A. Huhn of Philadelphia was appointed chairman of the executive board. Joseph L. Rhinock was elected an additional vice-president, Louis J. Selznick retaining the other vice-presidency as well as the general managership, and William A. Brady and Milton C. Work were elected on the board of directors.

Mr. Cox is known throughout the country as an able politician, and occupies high official positions with the theatrical firm of Klaw & Erlanger. He is immensely wealthy and regarded as a power in Wall street. Mr. Huhn is said to be one of Philadelphia's most powerful bankers and has infinite resources at his command, while the other gentlemen mentioned above are well known in the theatrical field and undoubtedly will immensely strengthen the already strong organization of the World Film Corporation.

Tom Ince Near Death

One of the narrowest escapes from death on record happened in Los Angeles on April 26, when Thomas H. Ince, one of the best-known motion picture magnates in the country, was catapulted from his automobile when it skidded and turned turtle on the boulevard between Santa Monica and Los Angeles.

Ince was so severely injured that he was rushed at once to a hospital, where it was feared he was suffering from internal injuries. Unless complications set in, the producer will be confined in bed for at least a month.

Ince left his beach studios in the early evening, intent on returning to his Hollywood home. Shortly after leaving Sawtelle, near the Old Soldiers' Home, the machine ran into a wet patch of road and skidded, plunging down a steep embankment and wrecking itself on the bottom. Ince was thrown clear of the machine and was found shortly afterwards by one of his directors lying in a semi-conscious condition. He was rushed to a near-by hospital, where his injuries were dressed, and was later removed to his home.

Ince gained fame in the motion picture producing field by his remarkable rise in five years from vaudeville actor to the directing head of one of the world's largest moving picture companies. He is said to be the only magnate in the entire industry to make a million dollars within five years through the medium of motion pictures.

V. L. S. E. Booking Offices

Announcement is made by Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., of the territory to be served by each of its branch offices. This division is only temporary and will be changed as new branch offices are opened.

From 1600 Broadway, New York City, Joseph Partridge will look after New York state, northern New Jersey down to and including Trenton, and all of the New England states.

The Chicago office in the Business College building, in charge of I. Van Ronkel, will take care of Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin, North Dakota and Iowa east of and including Des Moines.

The Kansas City office at 18th and Walnut streets.

Mr. Pearson will book Kansas, Colorado, Missouri, South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa west of Des Moines, Nebraska and Oklahoma north of and including Oklahoma City.

Mr. Meade, in Dallas, at 1900 Commerce street, will serve Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, New Mexico, and Oklahoma up to but not including Oklahoma City.

San Francisco will cover California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Idaho, Utah, Arizona and Montana.

In Philadelphia, at 1316 Vine street, J. C. Hebrew will look after Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and southern New Jersey, up to but not including Trenton.

The Atlanta office at 75 Walton street, in charge of W. C. Brandon, will cover Georgia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Kentucky.

Additional branch offices will be established as rapidly as possible, and while it has not been definitely decided, in all probability, Boston, Columbus, Seattle and Denver will be the first cities to become V. L. S. E. booking centers.

Uphold Power Patent

Nicholas Power's patent on the framing mechanism of the projection machine and the patent on the fire valve on the film magazine were upheld by Justice Mayer of the United States district court, in a decision handed down last week. The decision of the court in sustaining the fire-valve patent makes especially interesting reading. It says:

"Motion picture exhibitions are attended daily by many thousands of people, and we all appreciate the danger which would result, not only from fire, but more seriously, perhaps, from panic. Thus, any instrument of fire protection becomes important which shall instantaneously extinguish fire and be so constructed and adjusted as not to scratch nor impair the film. . . . What the art needed from an efficient and commercial standpoint was a fire protection device which would also protect the film. It must be remembered that the film travels at the rate of about sixteen pictures per second; that splices are not unusual, and that scratching either destroys or impairs the film to the extent of seriously deteriorating the picture which is thrown on the screen. . . . In my opinion, it required a faculty more than ordinarily to be expected from the man skilled in the art to produce the Power valve. . . . Indeed, the prior art in respect of this device, which now looks so simple but which was unattained by others, is, to my mind, convincing proof that what the Power accomplished in this regard was invention."

Blackton Talks to Theater Club

J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company of America, and Wilton Lackaye, the actor, were the principal speakers at a meeting of the New York theater club Tuesday afternoon in the Hotel Astor. Mr. Blackton discussed "The Technic of the Motion Picture as Compared with the Stage," while Mr. Lackaye spoke on "The American Actor."

There was also a program of motion pictures, showing the progress of the art of moving photography. Incidentally a series of pictures of Violet Virginia Blackton, taken every six months, from the age of one year to seven, proved of great interest to the several hundred members of the club which filled the grand ball room.

After tracing the growth of the motion picture business, Mr. Blackton said that he had been requested by Mrs. Belle de Rivera, the president of the club, to cite some figures showing the growth of the business.

"We who are engaged in making moving pictures," declared Mr. Blackton, "constantly are animated with a desire for better things and for improvement. With the wonderful possibilities offered by the camera we are impressed by the opportunities for good that are entrusted to us.

"I have been asked to give some statistics of the motion picture business, and the figures I quote are for the year 1913. During that time there was $20,000,000 paid by the film exchange, the wholesale distributor to the manufacturer. The theaters paid $25,000,000 for rental of the films and the public paid $275,000,000 for admission to the various theaters. This means an average of 11,000,000 people attended the theater daily to see the moving pictures. During the same time manufacturers had tied up in the business $25,000,000, and about $50,000,000 worth of feature films unreleased."

Mr. Blackton then declared that the feature films that provide a full evening's entertainment cost from $15,000 to $30,000 apiece. As an example of the tremendous cost, Mr. Blackton asserted that it cost $24,000 to produce "The Christian," which was adapted from Hall Caine's book of the same name. This did not include Mr. Caine's royalties, which have thus far amounted to over $20,000. Mr. Blackton asserted that over $120,000,000 was invested in moving picture theaters, and that during 1913 there were made 40,000 miles of moving pictures, or enough to go around the world, and to provide 32 tintypes for every citizen of the United States.

Mr. Lackaye opened his remarks by saying that he is a moving picture fan. "There is no doubt," continued the speaker, "that the moving pictures have done a lot of harm to the legitimate stage. Times are hard and pictures are cheap. The public is tired of listening to actors who do not know their lines. The public, too, has shown a preference to pictures for highbrow drama. Moving pictures have deprived many actors of positions on the stage, but they have made up for this by giving him work in the pictures. Not that I think that actors make good as moving picture actors. In the theater the voice is four-fifths of the battle, while in pictures it is pantomime alone." Mr. Lackaye then humorously referred to his experiences in posing for pictures.

Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton spoke of "What Is Nearest a Woman's Heart," which was illustrated with motion pictures.

Bookings Exceed $750,000

The Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation reports a pleasingly steady business for "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," which now bids fair to surpass the total bookings of its record-breaking predecessor, "The Million Dollar Mystery." Edgar Shallenberger, vice-president of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation, recently said that the total bookings, with cancellations deducted, for "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" have passed the $750,000 mark.

The popularity of Marguerite Snow, James Cruze, Sidney Bracy, Harry Benham, Frank Farrington and Elizabeth Forbes in the big mystery serial, not only shows no sign of abating, but constantly increases. Their many thrilling experiences seem thoroughly to satisfy the patrons of motion pictures throughout the country.

California's Next One

Bret Harte, in his powerful California novel, "A Phyllis of the Sierras," created a fair creature of the mountains, the untutored daughter of a poor blacksmith, a harum-scarum girl, full of fire and ambitious far in excess of her opportunity. This girl dares to fall in love with a young English lord, temporarily visiting wealthy friends in the Sierras. How fate kept them apart and then threw them together is the story, told by the famous bard of the Argonauts, and it is this story, through the medium of Charles Kenyon's scenario, that the California Motion Picture Corporation has produced in a five-reel photoplay, scheduled for release through the World Film Corporation on May 31.

Beatriz Michelena, the charming opera star who is now shining just as brightly on the screen as she did behind the footlights, is cast in the title role in this most exacting part of the Sierran tomboy. To interpret the character requires more than emotional ability of an exceptional nature. It requires a real talent for comedy, something which the admirers of the California screen star have hardly suspected, save in fleeting glimpses in her portrayal of the role of "Mignon."

Beatriz Michelena as "Phyllis of the Sierras," a near release of the California Motion Picture Corporation.

"A Phyllis of the Sierras" affords an unusual opportunity for elaborate interior sets, and the California Motion Picture Corporation has spent money lavishly to procure the right effects. The scenery will include not only interior views of the palatial homes of British aristocracy, but also scenes in the mansions of California's mining nabobs. Not the least interesting will be the beautiful exteriors, filmed in the far-famed Boulder Creek redwood region.

Big Lasky Productions

According to the present plans of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, seven exceptional productions will be released by that firm on the Paramount program during June, July and August. Though the releasing of big subjects in the summer is always a doubtful undertaking, the Paramount people believe that it is the duty of exhibitors and film manufacturers to keep the theaters open during the summer, and that accordingly the very best photodramas should be released during that period.

Among the seven productions scheduled for release during the three summer months are "The Fighting Hope," which will feature Laura Hope Crews; "A Wild Goose Chase," a merry comedy of youthful romance by William C. DeMille, featuring Ina Claire; "The Arab," based on Edgar Selwyn's dramatic success of the same title; "The Secret Orchard," adapted by Channing Pollock from the novel by Agnes and Egerton Castle, featuring Blanche Sweet; "The Clue," Margaret Turnbull's play, also featuring Miss Sweet; "Kindling," an adaptation of Charles Kenyon's extraordinary drama, featuring Charlotte Walker, and "The Marriage of Kitty," adapted from the French play by Fred de Gresac, and the English translation by Cosmos Gordon Lennox, in which Fannie Ward will appear.

Walker Whiteside Fights

One of the most interesting parts of Walker Whiteside's screen debut is his thrilling fist fight with Wil Rex, which takes place in the first reel of the Melting Pot. Mr. Whiteside plays the part of a youthful Hebrew violinist, while Rex is seen as a Russian aristocrat and student. These men enter into a controversy, which eventually leads to blows. The struggle is short, but terrific, with Mr. Whiteside the victor. The fight is due to create a sensation, as both actors are athletic and noted for their skill in boxing.

The piece is enacted by an all-star cast, including Walker Whiteside, Valentine Grant, Royal Roberts and Wil Rex. James Vincent is responsible for the direction of this, the first release of the newly formed Cort Film Company.

Foreign Films Studio

The studio of the Foreign Films Corporation, located in Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, is well worth seeing, according to those who have been privileged to inspect the plant, which consists of an indoor studio with room for five directors to work on five different sets at one time, extensive property rooms and a storage house for films separate from the studio. Large outdoor studios join the main building and adjacent to the property on which the studios are located are quiet countrysides, a stone quarry, a lake, a small range of mountains, and in fact such scenery as will prove adaptable to the making of pictures.

G. Guattari.

Professor J. Thomas Arntz, Jr., is in charge of the educational and industrial pictures, while G. Guattari, president of the corporation, supervises the importation of films and superintends those productions made in this country.

Chevalier Guattari, a member of the firm, has his headquarters in Rome, Italy, where all foreign pictures are reviewed before being purchased for exploitation in this country. The Foreign Films Corporation already is the official representative in America of Vera Film of Rome and the La Film Grafica of Naples.

The officials, managers and directors of the concern are all well known in the trade and experienced in the manufacture of films. Carl Von Hoffmann, said to be the youngest moving picture director in the United States, and known to the public as the camera man who went with Theodore Roosevelt to the wilds of South America and who took the pictures of General Villa, is one of the principal producers for the company.

The officials, as already stated in a previous issue of Motography, are G. Guattari, president; H. H. Swartz, secretary and treasurer. Offices are at 251 North Thirteenth street.

Selig's New Lead

Harry Mestayer, who assumes the leading role in the forthcoming Selig Spectacular Special, "The Millionaire Baby," is the only remaining representative in the theater today of one of the oldest theatrical families in the United States and one which included such stars as William A., Charles H., Louis, Henry and Emily Mestayer, Charles and Edwin Thorn and Thresa Vaughn. Besides starring in their own vehicles, the members of the family have been associated with many of the greatest actors of the world, appearing in the support of Booth, Barrett, McCullough, Fanny Davenport and Thomas W. Kean.

Harry Mestayer.

Harry Mestayer has appeared in the New York productions of "Mr. Potter of Texas," and "Sweethearts," and has played many parts in stock companies and has starred in the Middle West. He also originated the part of Oswald in Ibsen's "Ghosts," and played the lead in "The Penalty." After a season with James K. Hackett in repertoire he appeared in an all-star cast of "Love and Politics." Later he supported Margaret Illington and played leading roles later for Holbrook Blinn's Princess players. He was then engaged for the cast of "On Trial," and became leading man for the Selig Polyscope Company.

Five May Releases

The month of May will see five of the big V. L. S. E. productions put into screen evidence, and a glance at the list discloses the fact that four of the screen's most charming stars will be seen in parts admirably suited to their individual dramatic gifts.

Subtle Kathlyn Williams will be seen in "The Carpet from Bagdad." Charming Ethel Clayton will make her bow in "The College Widow." Versatile Edith Storey is in "The Island of Regeneration," and winsome Ruth Stonehouse plays in "The Slim Princess."

Altogether, the V. L. S. E. will release five features during the month. The fifth feature is "The Millionaire Baby," in which Harry Mestayer and John Charles are featured. They are artists of the first rank, and their popularity is well deserved, but, while entirely proper to do so, it seems a little peculiar to call them "charming."

The features themselves, in point of subjects and action, are widely diversified and the order of their places in the schedule of releases indicates the care and excellent judgment exercised in making the V. L. S. E. program.

Club Women Interested

A number of exhibitors who are running "Runaway June" wrote to the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation, maker of the serial, this week, that women's clubs in their vicinity were becoming deeply interested in the George Randolph Chester film story. The money problem, which is sketchily indicated in the story without detracting from its interest, has called the attention of women's clubs to this picture.

These women's clubs, according to the exhibitors, have made the subject of "Runaway June" one for debate at their meetings. They have stated the subject thus:

"Should a woman be financially dependent upon her husband?"

Many amusing and entertaining sessions have followed from the discussion of this theme, called to the women's attention by "Runaway June."

The exhibitors report that in many cases the women ask if a showing could not be given of the film in their clubrooms. The exhibitors were forced to decline the request, but said that they would be only too glad to have a regular "club day" in their theaters, and that they would have special provision made for the clubwomen and their guests. In many cases the clubs took advantage of this offer.

So deep has become the interest of women in the serial, say the exhibitors, that many of the clubs are entering their members in the contest, which is to result in the selection of one woman from each state to go to the California expositions on the Reliance special train.

Thanhouser Hires New Directors

Edwin Thanhouser added two more valuable members to his staff the past week when contracts were signed with Thomas Coffen Cooke and Ernest C. Warde, both of whom are known wherever the drama is patronized.

Mr. Cooke has been director for Wagenhals and Kemper for seventeen years and is noted for the splendid fashion in which he has staged all the productions made by that concern. Though it is said he has never been inside of a motion picture studio, his technique of the drama is so well nigh perfect that undoubtedly he will score a huge success in filmdom.

Mr. Warde, who is a son of Frederick Warde, the famous legitimate star, has a record of five years as stage director for Richard Mansfield, and in one season alone was called upon to produce more than eleven plays. Since Mr. Mansfield's death, Mr. Warde has worked successfully with stock companies and produced among other big stage spectacles Henry Savage's "Everywoman."

With two such talented directors as Messrs. Cooke and Warde, Edwin Thanhouser has undoubtedly secured two of the most experienced dramatic technicians of modern times and their work in future Thanhouser releases will undoubtedly make for an even higher standard for this well known brand of film.

Marguerite Snow Metro Star

Marguerite Snow, for five years one of the principal stars of the Thanhouser Film Company, at New Rochelle, has signed a contract to play opposite Francis X. Bushman, in the productions of the Quality Pictures Corporation.

Marguerite Snow.

Fred J. Balshofer, head of the Quality Pictures Corporation, interviewed no less than sixty prominent screen personalities, in his quest for the ideal leading woman, and it is not uttering one word against any one of the leading aspirants for the position opposite Bushman when Mr. Balshofer remarks that Marguerite Snow qualified for the important part from every angle. Francis X. Bushman, said Mr. Balshofer, is a big, manly, virile actor and extremely popular, and in order to balance his work, he needs a leading woman with equal magnetism and strength of personality. This personality should possess facial strength as well as beauty and everybody knows that Marguerite Snow does possess strong physical features and a certain attractive form of beauty, which are rare combinations in any one.

Miss Snow has long been an admirer of Francis X. Bushman, and it is with the consent of her husband, James Cruze, who is a very good friend of Bushman's, that she assumes the principal role, opposite Mr. Bushman.

Miss Snow leaves for Los Angeles, May 6, in the four-car special train engaged by Quality-Metro organizations and will take with her her Mercer runabout, eighteen trunks of costumes and the Belgian seamstress that she has adopted, and whom she will put in charge of her wardrobe on arriving at the Quality Pictures studio.

The first appearance of Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow together will be in "The Second Command," Mr. Frohman's former stage success, which will be released the latter part of June, on Metro program.

Last Tribute to Bunny

Elks and Masons paid their last respects to John Bunny, the late moving picture funmaker, at the Elks Club on Wednesday, April 28. Fifteen hundred people were present, including nearly every moving picture actor in the East. Many of the former members of the theatrical productions that Bunny had played in, members of the New York Lodge No. 1 of the Order of Elks, and members of the St. Cecile Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

In a mahogany casket, draped with the national colors, in the center of the lodge room was the body.

The Elks held the first service, consisting of the usual Elks' rituals for the dead. Immediately following the Elks' service, the service of the Masons was held. Mrs. John H. Bunny, the widow, was present with her two sons, John Francis and George Henry Bunny. A brother of the dead man, George Bunny, of Bridgeport, Conn., was also present.

The pallbearers, selected from the ranks of the members of the Vitagraph company, of which Bunny was a member until shortly before his death, were William T. Rock, the president of the company; Samuel Spedon, Maurice Costello, Edward Scranton, George Baker, Van Dyck Brooks, Harry Morey and Lee Beggs.

Among the members of the theatrical and motion picture world present were: Charles Frohman, David Belasco, Jesse Lasky, Ben Teal and Capt. Jack Crawford, "The Poet Scout."

The body was taken from the Elks Club at 10:30 o'clock on Thursday and interment was made at Evergreen cemetery.

To the Memory of John Bunny

Good-bye, good clown,
Indeed, thou were a merry fool,
Thy unctuous wit and rotund shape
Could wring kind wrinkles from the wisest face.
Thy life was not in vain,
For richly did'st thou earn the gratitude
Of mankind of thy time.
Ten hundred thousand friends for years will tell
The stories of the parts thou played so well,
And laugh again as they recall
Thy droll pomposity.
Thy "Bottom" was the top of classic humor,
And earned for thee a name,
Fit to be graven in the Hall of Fame.
Thou passed too soon,
But memory will keep thy name forever honored.
"Requiescat in pace."

—H. A. D'Arcy.

Kentucky League Meets

With Vice-president J. H. Stamper, Jr., manager of the Orpheum theater, of Lexington, Kentucky, in the chair, on account of the illness of President L. J. Dittmar, of Louisville, the annual state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky opened its session in the ball-room of the Phoenix Hotel, on April 21.

The ball-room had been converted into an exhibition room by pictures and displays, and among those exhibiting at the convention were, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Pathe Exchange, William Fox Attraction Company, the Renfax Musical Picture Company, the World Film Corporation, the Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati, and F. A. Clegg & Company, of Louisville.

After a brief business session at which a number of new members were taken into the league, the meeting adjourned until 10 o'clock the following morning, and the balance of the day was spent in visiting about the city, and in the evening banqueting in the main dining room of the hotel, where after the feed numerous vaudeville acts were staged and several motion pictures projected.

On the last day of the convention, officers for the ensuing year were elected and delegates and alternates chosen to attend the national convention at San Francisco which opens on July 13.

McCardell the Winner

The secret's out at last.

Roy L. McCardell, of 140 Pelham Road, New Rochelle, New York, is the author of "The Diamond from the Sky," and consequently the winner of the $10,000 prize for the best suggestion for a photoplay novel, recently offered by the American Film Manufacturing Company in co-operation with the Chicago Tribune.

In an interview with a Tribune representative, Mr. McCardell declared that he had been at work on the continued photoplay idea for a number of years, as he knew that big pictures were sure to come some day, and when the $10,000 prize was offered, he merely read the conditions of the offer, found out what was needed, and then set down the idea that had been in the back of his head for so long.

Mr. McCardell is too well known to the public to need any introduction to either the motion picture exhibitors or the patrons of their houses, for he is the author of innumerable stories and motion picture scenarios.

At the completion of the last chapter of the photoplay novel "The Diamond from the Sky," another prize of $10,000 is to be awarded to the person sending in the best suggestion for a sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky." Their manuscripts must be one thousand words or less in length, and the offer is said to be open to every man, woman and child in the world, since no literary ability is required, and simply an idea is wanted; a suggestion for a sequel to this photoplay.

Harry Weiss' Celebration

Employes of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation presented Harry Weiss, in honor of his first anniversary as manager of the Chicago office, on April 29, with a beautiful silver loving cup, 24 inches high. The names of each one of the employes in the Chicago office were engraved on the cup, together with an appropriate inscription. Mr. Weiss happened to come to town from Kansas City on the day this cup was presented to him, when all the employes gathered in his office, and R. H. Fox, acting as spokesman, made the presentation speech. Every visitor who came to the Chicago office was given a little birthday party all by himself. Special cigars for the occasion were passed around, and at the close of the day it was discovered that not only was there

On Friday, April 30, Mr. Weiss was the guest of honor at a dinner tendered him at the Sherman Hotel by some of his friends in the film game, and also some of the exhibitors of Chicago, but the big doings took effect on Saturday night, May 1, when twenty-seven of the employes of the office force of the World Film Corporation in Chicago were the guests of Harry Weiss and R. H. Fox. Many novel ideas were worked out. Every body was called for and taken home in a taxicab. Each one present received a plaster elephant, which is the trademark of the World Film Corporation. A handsome little eight-page booklet containing a program, bill of fare, several toasts, etc., was also given to each one attending, as well as a photograph of L. J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the firm. An impromptu vaudeville performance and moving pictures formed a part of the entertainment, and everyone looks forward to the second anniversary, as Mr. Weiss says he will be more than satisfied if his second year with the World Film Corporation is as productive in comparison as the first year.

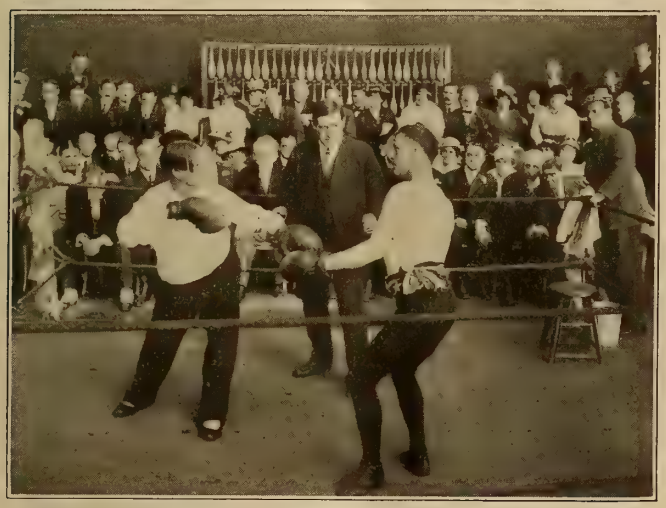
Rolfe Gets Ethel Barrymore

Ethel Barrymore has been convinced that motion pictures and art go hand in hand. The star of "Mid-Channel," "Shadows" and a hundred other big plays, and perhaps one of the most sought after of legitimate stars, agreed last Friday to appear for B. A. Rolfe and the Metro Pictures Corporation in a motion picture production upon which work will begin at once.

Just what play she will appear in has not been announced by the Rolfe people, but as the Metro Corporation recently purchased a large number of former Frohman successes, it is more than likely that Miss Barrymore will be seen in one of her former stage hits.

Reeves Lubin Comedies

Billie Reeves, the English comedian, pantomimist and acrobat, the man who set the world laughing as the drunk in "A Night in an English Music Hall," will make his debut as a screen performer and Lubin star on May



Billie Reeves and Billy Potter in their famous burlesque boxing match in the one-reel Lubin comedy, "The Substitute."

15, when he will appear in a screamingly funny comedy called "The Substitute."

Reeves, who has an international reputation as a funster, was recently engaged at a large salary by the Lubin Company, together with his own company of comedians, and each Saturday, beginning with "The Substitute," Reeves will be featured in a comedy, and the Lubin Company is making every effort to make these Saturday releases the strongest and funniest of comedies. "The Clubman" will be released May 22, "Out for a Stroll" on May 29, and so on.

In "The Clubman" Reeves imitates the antics of a "drunken sport," as played by him over 5,000 times in vaudeville in this country and abroad. The comedy is a riot of laughs from beginning to end and includes his famous roller skating act in a fashionable cabaret restaurant and his inimitably ludicrous boxing match.

More Broadway Stars

Still more Broadway stars are announced as the leads of the new multiple reel features which are shortly to be released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Henry E. Dixey, the famous star of innumerable Broadway productions, has signed a Universal contract and will shortly be cast in the leading roles of several big multiple reel productions. Frank Keenan, who will always be remembered by those who saw "The Girl of the Golden West" for his wonderful character work as the sheriff, is another Broadway star who will appear in the films.

In addition to Broadway stars, Universal has also secured the film production rights to a number of famous plays and books. Among the best known of these are "Under Southern Skies," Lottie Blair Parker's famous Broadway production; "Colorado," written by Augustus Thomas; "Sons of the Immortals" by Louis Tracy, famous novelist, and the two well known Ralph Connor stories, "The Patrol of the Sun Dance Trail" and "Corporal Cameron."

The first one of the big Universal releases, it is now announced, will be "Judy Forgot" by Avery Hopwood, which will feature Marie Cahill. Mr. Hopwood himself will write the scenario and Lucius Henderson, the well known director will produce it at the Coytesville studio.

Eagle Signs With Famous

Announcement is made this week that Director Oscar Eagle, formerly with the Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago and still more recently the director of the "Runaway June" serial, has been engaged as producer by the Famous Players Film Company.

Mr. Eagle is a director of undoubted talent, and leaves this week for Cuba with John Barrymore and a supporting company for the purpose of staging "The Dictator" in the exact locality in which the scenes are laid. The subject will be released on the Paramount program during the month of August it is expected.

Selig to Film "Mizpah"

The Selig Polyscope Company is soon to start work on the massive nine-reel adaptation from the celebrated play by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, "Mizpah." This production is to be made under the direction of Colin Campbell, the man who has given the motion picture screen such plays as, "The Spoilers" and "The Carpet from Bagdad." Kathlyn Williams and Tyrone Power will have the leading roles in this new production.

When completed, "Mizpah" will be released as one of the Red Seal Plays which are now a part of the regular output of the Selig Company through V. L. S. E. Inc.

Marie Cahill Signed

Marie Cahill, the well known comic opera star, signed a contract yesterday with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company whereby, for a consideration of $10,000, she will appear for it on the regular Universal program in one of her greatest successes, "Judy Forgot." Miss Cahill is the leading comic opera star on the stage today and her acquisition for films is one of the events of the present season. The star had been made a very tempting offer to go into vaudeville, but the inducement of the film company was too great to be resisted.

Miss Cahill's first work in moving pictures will begin just as soon as the scenario can be made ready and the company to support her selected. The work will be done at the Universal's studio at Coytesville instead of at Universal City in California, where the majority of the Universal's productions are put on.

Fifteen Out-of-the-Ordinary Views which Commemorate the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's Cross-Country Trip to Universal City, Cal.

BY ED MOCK

THE plot thickens, but before introducing the next scene let us not forget Albuquerque—the most important city in New Mexico. It is noted for having the largest wool scouring and timber treating plants in the world. Some of us needed our wool scoured but all of the timber in our party was represented by the Mexican pepperwood sticks we had picked up in Harvey's stores. The timbre we had was something else. It was holding out strong. That is graphically portrayed in views 7, 8 and 9 across the center of an accompanying page. It is no trouble for the pictures to prove things. Small as the views have been reproduced, in No. 7 Henri Hoffman, R. Kershaw, Maurice Fleckles and F. A. Van Husan loom large. In No. 8 you will see how utterly helpless we were in an attempt to get into a theater showing Universal films. At the right is part of that famous band of Indian students I've mentioned before. Picture No. 9 is part of the parade through Albuquerque's principal streets. In the front row from left to right is Mrs. Fleckles, Patrick Anthony Powers, Mrs. Laemmle, Master Julius Laemmle, Carl Laemmle, L. M. Swaab and V. R. Carrick. Jim Bryson was on ahead with his 3A.

George Magie trying to decide whether to bolt it whole or take it in two bites.

Very few of the Universalites found time to visit the quaint Spanish quarters known as "Old Town." The modern Albuquerque was all sufficient. Those of us who ventured beyond the pavements were amply repaid.

* * *

Grand Canyon was reached at early dawn March 11. The day was clear and crisp. If I wasn't the first to beat it up the hill past the hotel to the Canyon's rim, I was a close second. I wanted to see the sun dissipate the clouds that filled the world's sublimest gorge. I nearly froze to death during that performance, but it was a glorious experience. Dying wouldn't be so bad, if the stage setting defied criticism. Men have been trying to describe the Grand Canyon of the Colorado ever since it was discovered by a detachment of Coronado's expedition into Tusayan in 1540 and all have failed. I won't attempt it. I try to finish when I start. I simply record the fact that we were all there and saw what others had seen. My right hand points heavenward and I swear to boost the Canyon forever and ever.

* * *

Look at the pictures again. This time we begin with No. 1. I'm proud of No. 1 for I got that one myself. It shows U. K. Whipple, the cameraman who slept with one eye open for a week. Of course other things appear in the picture—part of a hole, for instance. No. 2 shows how many cowards there were in the party—those not in the picture were down the canyon. For once, the Santa Fe was shy of mules. The Laemmle Joy Party chartered them all two days in succession. This picture was taken at the entrance of El Tovar Hotel. The hotel, incidentally, becomes a second wonder worth seeing. It is so far from civilization; so complete in its appointments; so unique in its accommodation; so restful to the weary, that we recall it reverently. No matter what the rates; they're cheap when you get a slant at the location and realize it's a hundred and fifty miles to water in a prohibition state. El Tovar has my full approval. I'm in Frank Flaherty's class when it comes to mules. No. 3 is another view of U. K. Whipple making a motion picture of the down-Canyon scouts on Jacob's Trail. No. 4 is the party on dress parade, doing the board-walk stunt on the rim. No. 5 is a group of Universal exchangemen with an exception or two. Beginning at the left: R. D. Craver, Charlotte; Geo. A. Magie, Los Angeles; the late C. D. Mattingly, Oklahoma City; an unidentified individual from Phoenix; Ned E. Depinet, Dallas; Clair Hague, Toronto; Geo. W. Weeks, Detroit; Chester A. Clegg, Calgary; Wm. Oldknow, Atlanta; A. A. Schmidt, Buffalo; Carl Laemmle, New York; R. C. Cropper, Kansas City; L. M. Swaab, Philadelphia; Louis Laemmle, Chicago; V. R. Carrick, Philadelphia; Patrick Anthony Powers; New York and Los Angeles; Claud R. Plough, Chicago; Frank J. Flaherty, Chicago. Sitting: Maurice Fleckles, Chicago; M. Henri Hoffman, New York, and Herman Fichtenberg, New Orleans. No. 6 was taken eight miles away from No. 5. These miles were seven horizontally and one vertically. In No. 6 you may be able to pick out J. J. Schnitzer and Jim Bryson, other Universal exchangemen; the former at Indianapolis and the latter at Minneapolis, claiming customers in unrestricted districts. No. 6 is luncheon time at the bottom of the Canyon. Harry Wolff is in the center foreground, Mattingly just back of him.

The picture No. 11 shows the Joy Party scattered about in front and all over Hopi House, Grand Canyon. Nos. 10 and 12 are two views taken at Old McCarthy's Indian Village. This point is accredited as being the oldest known Indian settlement in America. It is about 100 miles west of Albuquerque. Among other things we did a war dance in No. 10 and the natives must have enjoyed our antics. Probably no incident of the trip afforded so much fun and recreation as Old McCarthy's.

But it is difficult to classify the thrills. None of us will forget the two days spent at Grand Canyon. The weather was all in our favor. Those of us who did not go down the gorge, rode the rim and saw the storms from above the clouds and that never ceasing, ever-changing panoramic of lights and shadows and color. Hopi House, Bright Angel Trail, the Rim Road, Hermit House and Hermit Trail, Lookout Tower—became the patter for all of us. I found the Kolb Brothers, most delightful companions. The Kolbs have lived at the Canyon for twelve years and know it intimately. My acquaintance with these boys began when I travelled with them through the Colorado river from Green River, Utah to the Gulf of California. They actually made this wonderful trip, encountering amazing obstacles—flirting with death. I followed with them, lying on a comfy couch in my library. The story came to me through my membership in the National Geographical Society. They have some motion pictures that do not appear on the regular programs. Emory Kolb lectures his films before the crowned and uncrowned heads. They are building a m. p. theater on a precipice at the head of Bright Angel Trail. The pictures are projected with a Powers 6A. (I hope Bill Barry gets that!) Their house will seat 170 and the program will never change. To see the show you will probably travel a long way, but it will repay you. Through the kindness of the Kolb Brothers I was shown many courtesies. They pointed out objects of interest I would otherwise have missed. Through their telescope I learned how to point my binoculars. I crept up to many of the temples and amphitheaters. I saw Dripping Springs, Mohave Point, Kaibab Plateau, the pyramids, the Dragon Head, Isis, Ra, Shiva, Osiris, Horus, Zoroaster, Buddha, Watana, Solomon, Sheba, Apollo and Venus temples. All these were my playgrounds. Newberry Butte, Angel's Gateway, the Horseshoe Mesa became close-up stuff. I was directed to a spot where I could see all of Bright Angel trail without risknig my neck on a Santa Fe mule. The half-way house, the Indian gardens and many other points that have escaped my memory were made easily accessible because of the Kolbs. The world has folks in it, even in remote places. The Kolb brothers are likable humans. They were mighty kind to me.

* * *

And when we departed from the winter of Grand Canyon, we were to awaken next day in a strangely different country and climate. San Bernardino presented midsummer splendor. Orange and lemon and grape fruit groves as far as the eye could reach. Tremendous plams, roses, violets, fruits and flowers. It was there that Isadore Bernstein and R. H. Cochrane, with musicians and a great bevy of pretty girls in white dresses and scarlet ribbons, met us. It was this same crowd of roysterers who monopolized our diner all the way to Los Angeles. In picture No. 13 you have Vivian Rice, "Bernie," R. H. Cochrane and two girls whose names have been lost in the shuffle. I know Vivian, for I saved her life by getting some water to drink. And then I danced with her! No. 14 is another view of the girls who offered fruit and flowers to the wayfarers. I believe that each girl had a small bottle of Tipo wine. The plate rail in my home bears witness that some of the girls had wine!

* * *

And No. 15 gives you an idea how weary we were and what happened to the Universal girls before the train pulled out.

* * *

Hurrah! We hit Los Angeles next week.

"Flying A" Holds Big Rodeo

Santa Barbara's people were treated to thrills galore at the big rodeo given by the equestrian and cowboy contingent of the "Flying A" studios, at a local race track, for the benefit of the driving club on April 25. The affair was under the direction of P. G. Lynch, local manager of the American Film Manufacturing Company, and Chick Morrison, one of the popular members of the "Flying A" aggregation. The program offered was well worth the money, and a neat sum was raised for the club.

The offer of liberal prizes made the contests exceedingly spirited, especially in the race events. One of the features was a relay race, which was won by Harry Gant, who has won every race of this class he has entered in nearly every state in the West. Owners of "outlaw" horses, especially the ones that were supposed to be wholly unmanageable, brought their pets, but the "Flying A" experts soon brought them to a new understanding of equine propriety, much to the amusement of the spectators. A hippodrome race, the riders standing, and a Roman race, in which two horses were ridden by each man, furnished exciting sport, while all sorts of trick riding of both horses and steers added to the amusement of the afternoon.

Thornby With Knickerbocker

Robert T. Thornby, the director of the Knickerbocker Star Features at the studios in Flushing, is proving himself equal to the task of organizing and perfecting a new three-reel feature company. A new stage has been erected, making it possible to place a dozen or more sets at the same time, and other improvements are being made to meet the demands of the new company.

Mr. Thornby comes to the Knickerbocker studios with the recommendation of many dramatic successes, having been the director of all the Sterling kid comedies, and a successful Vitagraph director, producing such dramas as "The Passing of Joe Merry," "Daddy's Soldier Boy," "The Outlaw," and others.

A strong feature of Mr. Thornby's work is his mastery of photography and genius in getting perfect light effects. His work in directing is characterized by smoothness and ability to get just what he wants from the actors.

Considering the present outlook, Knickerbocker Star Features promise the General Film program some of the strongest three-reel features that have been offered to the public.

The Whartons Entertained

Ah Ling Foo, one of the real Chinese actors in Pathe's "Exploits of Elaine," gave a dinner at the Oriental restaurant in Pell street, New York, the other night to the Whartons, producers of the "Exploits," Mrs. Bess Wharton, E. A. MacManus of Hearst forces, Mr. Gordon, assistant to the Whartons, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Whitworth Buck.

A full line of Chinese delicacies was served, including real bird's nest soup, a rarity that costs about $5 a plate in this country.

The Fire Record of 1914

A FAIRLY complete list of the fires which occurred in motion picture theaters during the year 1914 shows a total of fifteen. Among these fifteen fires, which happened in the course of a year among upwards of fifteen thousand theaters, the number caused by film ignition was one—count it. Here is the list as compiled by Safety Engineering:

Jan. 16, 1914. Malden, Mass. Moving picture theater. Three stories, brick walls, wood floors, tar and gravel roof. Cause, cigar. Fire started third floor back of light shaft. Discovered, police. Alarm street box. Duration 1¼ hours. Fire stopped on third floor. Brick corridors retarded spread of fire. Value of building and contents, $98,900. Loss, $2,000.

Jan. 25, 1914. Grand Rapids, Minn. Gem theater. Two stories, frame walls and floors, shingle roof. Cause, overheated pipe in basement. Discovered by smoke. Telephone alarm. Duration 1 hour. Fire stopped at roof. Wall lined with tar paper caused dense smoke. No private fire apparatus. Value of building and contents $3,000. Loss, $200.

Feb. 5, 1914. Waco, Tex. Moving Picture Auditorium. Two stories, brick walls, wood floors, composition roof. Supposed cause, incendiary. Fire started in rheostat. Alarm, street box. Duration 35 minutes. Value of building and contents $8,000. Loss, $2,800.

Feb. 8, 1914. Clay Center, Kans. Rex Moving Picture Theater. Two stories in front and 1 in rear, walls brick and frame, wooden floors, tar paper roof. Cause, filling oil stove of a cafe while the stove was lighted. Alarm, telephone. Duration, 4 hours. Absence of fire walls permitted flames to spread from cafe to grocery and moving picture show. Fire department was handicapped by roofs falling in after one partition was burned. No private fire apparatus. Value of buildings and contents, $45,000.

Feb. 9, 1914. Emaus, Pa. W. George's moving picture theater. Wood walls and floors, tin-covered wood roof. Cause, unknown. Fire started at building front. Alarm, fire whistle. Duration, 2 hours. Tin covering about building retarded spread of flames. Fire department handicapped by water freezing as soon as applied. Value of building and contents $4,500. Loss, $3,000.

Feb. 17, 1914. Haverhill, Mass. Nickel Theater, two stories, wooden walls, floors and roof. Cause, unknown. Fire started in waiting room. Discovered by mail carrier. Alarm, street box. Duration, 3 hours. Fire started at next building. Two buildings involved. All-wood construction and front windows being boarded up favored spread of fire. Deep snow handicapped firemen. No private fire apparatus. Two men killed. Value of building and contents $25,515. Loss, $18,304.

Feb. 26, 1914. Hartford, Conn. Moving picture theater. Four stories, brick walls, wood floors, trussed slate roof. Cause, explosion of gasoline furnace in a trunk store, the flame jumping from a window back of the stage of the theater, thence into an open space under the roof which place was principally damaged. Discovered, by employes. Alarm, telegraph. Duration, 4 hours. Fire stopped at roof. Open attic and poor construction favored the spread of flames. Deep snow handicapped firemen. No private fire apparatus. Thirty people in building; 2 firemen injured. Means of escape, stairway. Value of building and contents $150,000. Loss, $52,548.

Feb. 27, 1914. Sackville, N. B. Bridge Street Moving Picture Theater. Three stories, wooden walls, wooden floors, boards, paper, tar and sand composition roof. Cause, unknown. Fire started in cellar near furnace room, spreading to coal room, storeroom containing tar, oil and paint. These exploded and spread the fire to the top of the building. Discovered through smoke breaking out through doors and windows at noon. Alarm, street box. Duration, 5½ hours. Fire was stopped by adjoining brick wall. A good wall with five windows retarded the spread of the fire, the fire fighters covering the windows on the inside and playing water on the outside of sashes. The overhanging roof was made of wood and gave some trouble, as did cold and snow. Fire escapes provided exit.

March 24, 1914. Rochester, N. Y. Monroe Moving Picture Theater. Theater occupied first floor of 4-story brick building, upper floors being used as tenements. The fire occurred on the fourth floor. Cause, unknown. Loss, $1,000.

Apr. 5. 1914. Bowbells, N. D. Opera House. Two stories. Concrete walls, hardwood floors, rubberoid roof. Cause, bakery oven. Discovered by passerby seeing fire in roof. Alarm, fire bell. Duration, 2 hours. Concrete walls stopped fire from spreading. Value of building and contents, $15,000. Loss, $7,000.

Apr. 18, 1914. Le Suer Center, Minn. Moving picture theater and two other buildings. Iron clad walls, wood floors, shingle and tar roofs. Cause, unknown. Fire started under stairway. Discovered by owner of one building. Duration, 4 hours. Iron cladding retarded spread of flames. No private fire apparatus. Value of building and contents $14,000. Loss, $3,000.

May 3, 1914. Anacortes, Wash. Moving picture and vaudeville show. Two stories, frame walls plastered and lathed inside, rustic outside; double floors, tar and gravel roof, fly loft rubberoid. Cause, unknown. Fire started near fuse box on stage. Discovered by people upstairs. Alarm, telephone. Duration, 2 hours. Fire stopped on stage. Smooth hard plaster retarded spread of fire. Shortage of men handicapped department. Value of building and contents $12,000. Loss, $1,000.

July 5, 1914. South Bend, Wash. Dime Theater. Two stories, wooden walls and floors, shingle roof. Cause, film igniting. Fire started in operating room. Duration, 2 hours. Value of building and contents $3,000.

July 24, 1914. Jasonville, Ind. Family Theater. One-story, brick and wood walls, wood floors, shingle roof. Fire department was handicapped as there was no water. Chemical fire apparatus was on hand. This fire was a conflagration involving 45 buildings. One man was killed.

Oct. 16, 1914. Whitewright, Tex. Scenic Theater. One-story, walls brick, floors wood, and rubberoid roof. Cause, unknown. Started in center of house. Discovered by passerby. Telephone alarm. Duration, 1 hour. No private fire apparatus.

Can any industry with over fifteen thousand units, scattered across the country show a better record than this? The evidence proves that the picture theater is actually a safer place than the church, the meeting hall, the school or the home.

Ten million miles of film traveled through the projection machines of this country's theaters last year! This inconceivably vast celluloid surface was responsible for one fire—in a frame theater, presumably not properly equipped with safety devices. Need more be said about the "danger" of the picture theater?

Motion Pictures in Medical Schools

THE motion picture has invaded the realm of medical school instruction. The specialists in diagnosis have discovered that there is no other way in which they can so vividly present to medical students the difference in diagnosis between similar physical appearances as by means of the moving picture, says a recent issue of the Scientific American. Dr. J. Ivan Dufur, professor of nervous diseases at the Philadelphia College of Osteopathy, is the originator of this method of teaching which, it is believed, will revolutionize medical instruction. Dr. Dufur has, as the result of a year's labor, succeeded in preparing a set of reels, including demonstrations of actual cases of every one of the principal nervous diseases. Harrowing experiences were necessary in the preparation of some of these reels. Dr. Dufur and the photographer were locked for four hours at one time in a room with a dozen insane epileptics waiting for a characteristic fit.

The osteopathic practitioners are greatly interested in this method of diagnosis and these reels are being exhibited at state conventions of that school of practice and are being used in their colleges.

Advocates Reserved Seats

A SUGGESTION that points the way to increase box office receipts comes from the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc. It is made in keeping with its policy of helping the exhibitors make more money, and while not a new idea in amusements, it is decidedly unique as applied to pictures. It advocates the advance sale of seats.

In discussing the idea, General Manager Walter W. Irwin said: "I believe, where real merit exists, the matter of advance sales will, hereafter, be of just as great importance in the management of picture theaters as it is in the management of the theaters playing spoken dramas; in every locality there are sufficient numbers of people willing to pay an advance in price for the convenience of having their seat reserved for at least one exhibition during the evening. I think that this showing could begin at 7:30 or 8 o'clock, and prices of the exhibitions before and after that time could be given at the regular admission charges.

"The big productions released on the V.-L.-S.-E. program are announced approximately three months in advance of their release dates, and on the days that these features are shown it is usually impossible to take care of all the people that come to the theater about 8 o'clock. Many of these, unwilling to wait in line, go away, and unquestionably much money is lost to the exhibitor. If, however, he would advertise that the 8 o'clock performance was a reserved seat showing, at which an increased price was asked, this loss would be overcome. The people willing to pay the premium would patronize the 8 o'clock performance and the others would attend the exhibitions before and after that time.

"The advance sale of seats will cause a better distribution of the attendance among the different performances, as well as bringing increased admission charges, and save to the exhibitor the loss sustained through patrons going away, rather than stand in line."

Frankly, we are desolated over Clarence's departure and will undoubtedly miss him more and more as time goes on and we discover that there'll be no more fishing parties in the office gaboon, no more awning surprises after a rainy day, and no more arguments with Fritz, the Kaiser. Episode Four: "The Dollar-Thirty-Nine Mystery."

(Part Two.)

"The moment I entered the place I was seized and bound," continued Flossie Gay, who was relating her story to the executives of the Jumbo Film Corporation. "Just as I had given up all hopes of being saved from the Fearsome Fifty, Tim Snorton and Smith, the chauffeur, stole quietly into the place and kidnapped me almost under the eyes of Crane, the chief of the conspirators. Once more at home I felt more at ease, but the Fearsome Fifty followed me and sought again to get me into their clutches. Crane was killed a day or two later when he dropped a bomb he had intended for me, and Countess Ollie was arrested and sent back to the old country, where she was wanted on a number of charges. The danger over, Smith, the chauffeur, disclosed himself as my father, he having disguised himself in this fashion in order to be near me, without disclosing his identity to the Fearsome Fifty. Tim and father led me to a huge fireplace in the living room and by pressing a concealed spring showed me a huge opening behind the fireplace, in which was concealed the certificates purchased by father for a dollar-thirty-nine. Instead of being stock certificates as I had supposed all along, the documents proved to be cigar store coupons of large denomination which father had received when buying a whole dollar-thirty-nine cents worth of tobacco at Christmas time, so we were immensely wealthy."

Some Current Releases Reviewed

Selig's "The Carpet from Bagdad"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine.

WHEN the Selig Polyscope Company selected the film adaptation of Harold McGrath's famous novel, "The Carpet from Bagdad," as its first release through the newly formed V. L. S. E., Inc., on May 3, it certainly made a happy choice, for this five-reel production is so far off the beaten path of screen subjects that it will attract and hold even the most weary screen follower.

It is a de luxe presentation of a de luxe story of romance and mystery. It combines action and thrills with spectacular effects and artistic treatment, to say nothing of the histrionic powers exhibited by each of the players appearing in the leading roles. There are fights which remind one of the struggle in "The Spoilers," sandstorm effects which are vividly realistic, wonderful settings representing streets in the ancient city of Bagdad and numerous scenes photographed in a desert which hold one enthralled by their magnificence.

Above all of these, however, stands the photography and tinting. "Beautiful" seems to say all that can be said about the way in which the finished film was treated. The various color effects, starting almost as soon as the picture is flashed on the screen and continuing throughout the 5,000 feet, will doubtless draw many expressions of admiration from the audience in any house in which the picture is shown. Especially worthy of mention is the closing scene, which shows a desert sunset, with all its grandeur.

The cast, which is headed by the far-famed Selig star, Kathlyn Williams, is an excellently selected one, each player being suited to the role for which he or she is cast. Wheeler Oakman and Guy Oliver share the honors as male leads, and Charles Clary does an excellent bit of character work as Mahomed, the guardian of the sacred rug. Eugenie Besseser is a convincing adventuress, and Frank Clark and Harry Lonsdale create fine types as her assistants.

The story deals with the stealing of a prayer rug from a sacred temple in Bagdad. The pasha tells Mahomed to guard the rug with his life and to punish any infidel who dares to touch it. A clever band of crooks, of whom Mrs. Chedsoye, an adventuress, is leader, are operating in Egypt, where they are joined by Horace Wadsworth, alias Ryanne, who was at one time a clerk in his brother's bank, but who was forced to sign away his birthright by his greedy brother because of a shortage in the funds left in his care. Fortune, Mrs. Chedsoye's daughter, does not know that her mother and uncle are members of the band, but, because of their many secret talks, is suspicious and unhappy.

Fortune repulses Mahomed.

George Jones, a rug buyer, arrives in Egypt to purchase rugs for his firm and secures the sacred carpet from Horace, who has stolen it. He also meets and falls in love with Fortune and, when she learns Mahomed has determined to kill him, she hides the rug in her mother's room. The guardian of the rug kidnaps Horace, Jones and Fortune and takes them into the desert, while the other crooks return to America with the rug. A terrific sandstorm takes place and, just after it quiets down, the three Americans make their escape from Mahomed and his followers.

The crooks, by a clever plan, manage to secure entrance into Jones' New York home, which is next to the bank of Horace's brother, and try to tunnel into the vaults. They have all but accomplished their purpose when Jones and Fortune return and trap them. Jones gives them two hours' start before notifying the police, and then he and Fortune find happiness in each other's arms. They do not know that Horace had really loved the girl and that giving her up had cost him much, or that failure to secure the rug, which becomes Jones' property, has been a matter of life and death to Mahomed.

Majestic's "The Absentee"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

AN allegorical prologue with such characters as Success, Might, Evil, Ambition, Justice, Happiness and Vanity for the leads makes this five-reel Mutual Master Picture, "The Absentee," one decidedly out of the ordinary run.

The story is from a scenario by "Spec" Woods and W. C. Cabane and features such players as Robert Edeson, in the role of Power, the absentee; A. D. Sears, Alfred Paget, Augustus Carney, Olga Gray, Loretta Blake and Wahnetta Hanson. The production was put on under the direction of W. C. Cabbane.

Splendid photography marks the production throughout, which deals with the problem of Big Business, and unquestionably points out a moral in a fashion that will impress business men the country over with their own shortcomings.

A prologue which occupies nearly one full reel of the five-reel production shows how Success, temporarily lured away by Extravagance and Vanity, is tempted by Evil to leave all his affairs in charge of Might, who abuses the trust reposed in him. Justice, noting the condition of things, calls Success to account, and as the prologue ends Success revokes the power of Might and discharges Evil, resulting in the happiness of all who were oppressed.

The story itself begins with the departure of Nathaniel Crosby, the absentee, from his huge factory, leaving his affairs in the hands of Sampson Rhodes, a newly appointed general manager. Rhodes, lured on by an evil adviser, symbolical of Temptation, takes advantage of the absence of the owner of the factory to crush down the employes by cutting their wages, and devotes the increased earnings of the factory to his own uses and the social ambitions of his wife and daughter.

The strikers prepare to charge the militia.

Ruth Farwell, a stenographer in the office, sees the way things are going and mourns the absence of Crosby, the owner, believing that if he knew the way Rhodes was managing the business, a change for the better would result.

One after another, we are shown the homes and problems of the various employes and see the helpless little daughter of Lee, the foreman in the factory, lured away by Edmund Rolfe, a sporty character, when the strike which results in her own and her father's poverty makes it impossible for her to marry Tom Burke, a steady-going young laborer in the factory, who symbolizes Ambition.

Tom himself has a problem to face in the care of his old mother, who is a victim of tuberculosis. Though Tom had planned on taking her into the country, where she may be cured of her disease, the cut in wages made by Rhodes makes it impossible for him to realize this ambition.

When the workmen finally declare a strike and resort to violence in an attempt to gain their ends, Rhodes, panic-stricken, summons the national guard and a squadron of police to defend the plant, and even goes so far as to declare that since might is right, he will be within his rights in shooting down the helpless men if an attempt is made to actually attack and burn the plant.

Ruth, the little stenographer, who symbolizes Justice, finally succeeds in making a direct appeal to Crosby, millionaire owner of the plant, and after she has impressed him with a need for his presence at the factory, the absentee returns.

Immediately following his return the militia is sent away, the police are ordered off the premises, Rhodes is deprived of his position as general manager and his evil genius is likewise discomfited, while Crosby once more assumes the reins of power and welcomes the men back to work at their old wages.

As the picture closes we see Crosby paying tribute to Ruth, who has used her influence to better conditions, and it is evident to all that Ruth and Crosby will find happiness as man and wife, Justice becoming the helpmate of Power.

"The Diamond From the Sky"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

SENSATION follows sensation and one spectacular event succeeds another in chapter three of the North American photoplay novel "The Diamond from the Sky."

It is in this installment of the story that the thrilling events occur which set Chicago exhibitors wildly enthusiastic over the picture, after seeing the first three chapters shown several weeks ago at a private exhibition.

Irving Cummings, the star of the novel, defies death by driving a high powered automobile directly in front of a speeding express train and so close does he come to actual death that as the car leaps across the tracks a portion of it is actually broken off by the pilot of the locomotive.

No sooner have your nerves quieted themselves after this exciting episode than you behold another even more sensational, for the car driven by Cummings swerves around a bend on the narrow edge of a cliff many feet above a river, and the momentum of the car being such that the driver cannot hold it in the roadway, you see the car swerve far out, balance for a moment on the edge of the cliff, and then plunge down into the river.

However, it must be clearly understood that the picture does not in any sense depend on thrills alone for its success, for the interesting theme develops to an amazing extent in this same chapter of the novel, and ere its finish, every man, woman and child who has seen the first three chapters will be eager and anxious to behold the next one.

In "The Silent Witness" which is the caption of this chapter, Blair Stanley, who has just killed Doctor Lee in the latter's home, rushes forth from the house in terror though he knows that Arthur Stanley, his cousin, who has appeared outside the house to serenade Esther, will undoubtedly see and recognize him.

On sighting Blair escaping from the house, Arthur sets out to pursue him and the men come face to face in a lonely cemetery, and beside an open grave, after a few hot words have passed between them, Blair challenges Arthur to a duel and the two settle their quarrel with a shot. As the smoke clears away Blair falls headlong into the grave apparently dead, and Arthur looking down beholds "the diamond from the sky" suspended about his neck.

Moved by a strange impulse, Arthur leaps down into the grave and appropriates the jewel, and then realizing that he has killed his cousin, he flees in terror to his own home.

Blair, however, has only been wounded, and after Arthur's departure revives enough to make his way to Judge Stanley's home where he reveals all to his mother, who sees in the act of Arthur a chance for revenge upon the family of Colonel Stanley. The mother immediately suggests to Blair that the murder of Doctor Lee like that of the supposed murder of himself can all be put upon Arthur by taking advantage of every opportunity that offers to cast suspicion that way.

When the sheriff sets out to find the murderer of Doctor Lee the following morning, the guitar, left behind by Arthur when he took up the pursuit of Blair, is at once recognized and a clue given the sheriff as to the identity of the murderer.

Arthur, at home, seeing the sheriff coming, leaps into a high powered automobile, which has just been delivered to him, and is in the car and away before the sheriff and his deputies realize his intention. Though they promptly take up the pursuit, Arthur is beyond their reach.

On the road running parallel to the railroad tracks Arthur boldly speeds his car in front of an approaching express train and barely escapes death beneath the wheels. The long train, in passing, detains the sheriff so that Arthur gains on his pursuers.

However, on rounding a curve where the road runs along the very edge of a cliff his car swerves from the path and goes plunging down into the river below.

As the picture closes we see the apparently lifeless form of Arthur drifting down the black current of the river, with one arm thrown over the gasoline tank which has broken loose from the car, and about Arthur's neck gleams the Stanley charm against harm —"The Diamond from the Sky."

Vitagraph's "The Goddess"

STARTLING only in its charming simplicity, devoid of glaring sensation, consistent in story, and not lacking in the things which make for distinctive quality and continued interest, the Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," made its debut at the Vitagraph theater on Wednesday morning, April 28. It was introduced by Albert E. Smith, who, with J. Stuart Blackton, is presenting it, and viewed by several hundred of the most prominent exhibitors in the East, guests of the Vitagraph company, and representatives of the trade press.

The great applause which followed the exhibition bespeaks the favorable manner in which the new serial was received. The wonderful resources which the Vitagraph organization has for producing a serial combined with the originality, ability and fame of its author, Gouverneur Morris, should make "The Goddess" a name familiar to all and synonymous with the best in the motion picture art. Charles W. Goddard picturized the story, which is being produced by Ralph Ince. The chapters are in two parts, and will be released weekly through the General Film Company. The story, in novelized form, will be syndicated in the papers of five thousand cities throughout the United States.

The action in the first chapter does not contribute much towards the progression of the plot, its mission being chiefly to establish a foundation which, substantial and deeply-laid, shall be a source of motive for each chapter to follow. And it accomplishes it. From present indications, if one be allowed to judge a fifteen-chapter serial by its first four parts, the theme will contain no unnecessary or abstract escapades or rescues. This story seems to be growing more powerfully impressive with each chapter and undoubtedly promises to become one of the year's best serials.

Stability and impressive dignity mark the opening of the story. Three men, a financial triumvirate which holds the fortunes of the world in its hands, are seen seated about a table discussing a means of reforming the people. Through religious channels they seek to quiet the feverish unrest of the masses; to make subservient the strike-declaring, rebellious laboring element; and to subdue still further those who have already succumbed in the battle against capital. In short, to bring the world to their feet.

An eminent psychologist offers, as a solution, that a baby girl be reared in a secluded Heaven-on-earth, a place where she will not come in contact with the outside world, men in particular. At the age of eighteen she is to come forth, imbued with a new religion of wealth which she is to preach to the people, converting them into satisfied, peaceful citizens. An orphaned eugenic child is chosen, and taken to a cave in the mountain wilds where she is brought up by the psychologist's housekeeper. Chapter two has to do with Celestia's introduction to the world and its people.

Anita Stewart, charming, pretty and clever, interprets the role of "the goddess," Celestia. Earle Williams plays the part of Tommy Steele, the good-looking, gallant young son of Millionaire Steele, one of the triumvirate. Neither of these two figure prominently in the first chapter, but later developments show the plot to be woven about them. Paul Scardon enacts a peculiar and exceedingly difficult role in a manner becoming a true artist. As the psychologist, Professor Stilleter, he promises to make the romance between Celestia and Tommy a most interesting affair.

Unusual effects and good, clear scenes testify to the sterling quality of the photography. To appreciate the serial fully one should see each of its chapters. This, however, is not the difficult problem that it seems to be, for once a person comes within the story's magnetic grip he experiences the same longing to see what developments the next chapter brings forth that accounts for the success of good magazine serials.

"The Altar of Ambition"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett.

IN THE American's two reel release of May 10, we are shown the inside workings of a newspaper office on the night of election. Although you cannot see beyond the window, from which the election returns are flashed, you can well imagine from the actions of the players, that a wild surging mob is waiting just below, eagerly watching the election returns.

David Lythgoe takes the part of John Farden, who is running for governor, and in his race, neglects his wife, Irene, played by Vivian Rich. The action of the play does not lack interest and the photography is excellent. Although not listed amongst the cast, the little girl who takes the part of John and Irene Farden's daughter is clever.

John Farden, after seeking the office of governor, finally comes to the conclusion that he will have to sacrifice his wife and daughter on "the altar of ambition," but through the confession of William Morris, they are both restored to him.

We first see Irene Farden turned over to the escort of William Morris, a friend of her husband's, who in his race for the office of governor, cannot find time to take her to a musicale.

Richard Barry, Farden's political enemy, meets Irene at the musicale, and realizing that his chances against Farden are doubtful, he decides to injure him by involving his wife in a scandal. He prevails upon

At a lawn fete Barry succeeds in coming upon Irene and Morris, while he is walking with a friend of Mrs. Farden's, and the friend seeing them together, goes to John Farden, who resents the gossip but cannot take time to look into the matter further.

The next day Farden drops into the club and Barry and other clubmen, who are standing at the open window, turn away as he enters and all look rather embarrassed at seeing him. He walks to the window and sees his wife driving past with Morris and just as they pass the club Morris places his arm around Irene's shoulder.

Upon his return home, Farden meets Morris, who, after seeing Irene to the door, has hidden behind a pillar of the porch until he sees John Farden coming, then calmly walks down the stairs, leading Farden to believe that he has been in his home. Irene is asked by her husband not to see Morris any more, but as Farden is busy in his race for governor, she does not give up Morris's friendship, but attends a party with him the next evening.

When Irene returns home with Morris he plays his final card, by taking her in his arms just as Farden comes down the stairs. Morris is ordered out of the house and Irene and her husband are quarreling when their little daughter, overhearing them, comes down and runs into her mother's arms. Farden pulls his daughter away from her mother and tells Irene to leave the house, and that he will keep the little girl.

The little daughter is taken very ill and under the care of two nurses continually calls for her mother.

Farden is elected governor by a big majority, but his cup of happiness is still far from full, as his wife is gone and the little girl not expected to live.

One morning Morris, while intoxicated, is thrown from his horse and fatally injured. The servants in Mrs. Deane's country home find him and carry him into the house, where Mrs. Farden has gone to live. Morris writes a dying confession, clearing Irene's name, and she returns to her home, just in time to save the life of her daughter and is reconciled to her husband.

ing hundreds of supernumeraries, but just a commonplace little story; yet so carefully is this little story told, so splendidly is it enacted and so keen becomes one's interest in the outcome that when it's all over you find yourself with a satisfied feeling, as though the time spent in producing such a picture was really well spent and the time spent in seeing it was equally worth while.

Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn have the leading roles in this production. Miss Mayo appearing as Irma Carson, a shop girl, and Bryant Washburn as Dick Hardy, a pickpocket.

to their humble lodging at the end of a day's work in a department store. Life has grown to be very sordid and commonplace for the two little shop girls and their home is only a narrow bedroom with scarcely room for the two occupants to perform their simple culinary duties after their return from work.

On this particular evening Irma, who is longing for a substantial meal and a bit of sunshine in her life, suddenly decides that she will deliberately go out onto the street with intention of flirting with the first man she meets, in the hope that she will be invited to lunch with him. Frances is horrified at the thoughts of such an action, but waiting for no further comments from her roommate, Irma saunters down the street, and there encounters Dick Hardy, who, after a brief flirtation, invites her into a brightly lighted cafe and orders a sumptuous meal.

Suddenly Dick glances over her shoulder, and then hastily explains that it will be necessary for them to leave the cafe immediately by a side entrance. Irma accompanies him, but on reaching home demands an explanation. Dick writes a little note which he leaves with her with instructions to open it after she goes to her room, and it is then, and then only, she learns that he is a pickpocket, and that their quiet little dinner was interrupted by his sighting a detective, who undoubtedly was seeking him.

Next day at the store in which Irma works, the pickpocket is captured just as he is nabbing a pocketbook from a woman shopper. Dick is taken to the superintendent's office, and Irma follows him there to protest against his punishment.

Getting the ear of the owner of the store, Irma tells her sad little story of her former meeting with Dick, and appeals to the woman shopper whose pocketbook had been snatched to pardon the man who took it.

The little story touches the lady's heart and she consents to pardon Dick, while the proprietor determines to give Dick a chance.

As the picture ends, six months later, we find Dick installed as manager of a country dry goods emporium, and Irma giving up her work in the department store to go to the quiet country town and become Dick's wife.

Episode Five, "Road O' Strife"

Reviewed by Clarence J. Caine.

SEVERAL interesting changes in the course of the serial's plot take place in episode five of Lubin's "Road o' Strife," and the action is spirited throughout.

The main incidents in this installment are the marriage of Abner Gray and Alene and the plot of the woman who has followed Jerome to the village to get the girl out of the way. The rural atmosphere is splendid, and the many little apparently inconsequential things the players do will not go unappreciated, for those who watch the by-play as well as the main action of a screen production are sure to notice them.

John Ince, Mary Charleson, Crane Wilbur and Florence Hackett do most of the work in episode five, and the performance of each is thoroughly enjoyable. The method of placing leaders within the scene to which they pertain makes it difficult for the players to appear natural while the lettering occupies part of the scene, and with a less accomplished cast the result of this system might not be satisfactory. As it is, however, there is not a hitch, and each player appears to be speaking the words just as they appear on the screen.

The opening scenes show Clara's jealousy of Alene. She determines that the girl shall not take Jerome away from her, and plots to get her out of the way. Alene, in the meantime, is terror-stricken at the thought of the fate which awaits Abner Gray. She determines to see a lawyer and try to save him. When she visits an attorney she learns that a wife cannot testify against her husband, and this apparently offers her a way out of her difficulty and an opportunity to save Gray.

The marriage, in Lubin's "Road O' Strife."

She hurries to the jail with a minister, and because the turnkey knows nothing of the law and cares less, the ceremony is performed. Gray impulsively kisses Alene when they are pronounced man and wife and she, frightened, runs back home, for she had not thought of the marriage except as a means of saving the villager's life.

In the nearby town, Robert Dane reads of Gray's trouble and also of the quarantine of Dr. Duncan, and hurries home to see that no harm comes to Alene. Clara manages to trick the girl before he arrives, however, and lures her to an old mill with a note to which Dane's name is signed.

Gray is released from prison because the prosecuting attorney realizes he cannot hold him without the evidence of the girl, who is now his wife. Dane meets Gray soon after his release and, when they discover her peril, they hurry to her rescue. The closing scene leads one to believe it is too late, however, for Clara has pushed Alene into the waters of the river below the mill and left her to her fate.

Majestic's "The Victim"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

THOUGH only three reels in length, "The Victim," the Majestic Mutual Master-Picture, scheduled for early release, in which Robert Herron and Mae Marsh are featured, is fully the equal of the longer Mutual Master-Pictures and both from a point of photography and interest the story will do much to make the series now being issued by the Mutual even more popular than the previous releases.

Robert Herron is cast as Frank Hastings, a young locksmith, who is imprisoned for a crime that he never committed, but he succeeds in escaping from the penitentiary through his aptness at picking locks.

James Darrow, a bookkeeper in the employ of the man who is robbed, was really the thief who committed the crime for which Frank was sentenced to prison, and after drunkenness causes his discharge, Darrow takes advantage of his knowledge of Frank's imprisonment to plan an easy life on the blackmail he plans to collect from Frank, for Frank is willing to pay Darrow any sum in order to keep from Mary, his wife, the knowledge of the fact that he is an ex-convict.

Things come to a head shortly after Frank, employed by a large safe company, has invented a new lock which has proven so successful that he is taken into the firm. On the day following that in which the

to a building adjoining the First National Bank, from the basement of which a tunnel has been constructed under the bank building, ending in an opening in the bank floor directly in front of the vault.

Sensational and thrilling in the extreme is the scene when Frank, Darrow and his criminal band assemble before the vault door and Frank manipulates the lock so as to open the vault.

The thieves rush in and Frank takes advantage of the opportunity to slam the door, and again locks the vault, with the thieves inside.

On returning home, Mary quickly discovers something ails her husband, and eventually succeeds in getting him to confess all that has happened during the evening.

The two later visit the bank, accompanied by a squad of police, and there, in the presence of the officers, Frank once more opens the vault, releasing the thieves within, who are promptly arrested.

Quarreling among themselves within the vault, Darrow has been badly injured by one of the other men, and when dying, confesses that it was he and not Frank who committed the crime for which Frank was imprisoned. His name and honor cleared, Frank returns to his happy home.

IN EPISODE number nine of this serial, or "Lost in London," the handling of the scenes is done with remarkable cleverness.

Craig, the ever-elusive, once more makes his escape. This time he escapes from a subterranean wine vault. After living under cover in foggy London for a few days, he manages through some mysterious agency to ship on a steamer bound for Port Said.

In the last episode of this serial, we are left in the sleeping room of Lord John, and see the curtains slowly parted and a pair of hands groping wildly for his throat. We are most certain that Craig is behind the hands, and in this episode our suspicions are forti-

The story of the episode, "Lost in London," opens in Hemblin House, where Quest, Lady Ashleigh, and the professor are breakfasting, when Lord John's man rushes into the room and tells them that his master is dead. While the trio are still in Lord John's room, word is brought to them that the gamekeeper of the estate has captured Craig and has him below. Quest has the man brought upstairs, and when he sees the body of the master of Hemblin House, his actions practically give proof of his guilt.

Quest imprisons Craig in the wine vault, which is supposed to be impregnable, and when the Scotland Yard men come for him they find he has escaped.

In London the Scotland Yard men are having a time in tracing a band of criminals, who have been enticing young girls on the streets and managing to hide them, so they are never heard from. They have information that a South American woman is the one that is working for them, but so far have had no clue as to her identity or where she is.

Lenora has received word from her aunt to call on her the following morning, and sets out in a dense fog. She becomes nervous, and upon entering a tea house to ask her way is told by a woman there that she lives next door to her aunt's and will take her there. Lenora goes with her, and as they arrive at the house she is pushed into the house and finds herself a prisoner.

Meanwhile the professor has received word to come to London, and he and Craig leave together. When Craig arrives at the hotel where he left Lenora, he is informed that she has not been there for some time and left no word. The detective has heard of the workings of the band of girl-trappers, and for fear Lenora has been captured by them he leads a raid upon the place, and finds Lenora and manages to help her escape.

Laura has gone on board a steamer bound for America, and while going up the gang-plank sees Craig, through her glasses, going on a boat which is bound for Port Said. She rushes off from the boat and goes to the hotel and tells Quest of her discovery. They all leave for the docks and arrive just in time to see the steamer that Craig is on, pulling out. They get a fast boat to carry them out to the ship, and hail the captain, who tells them that he cannot stop the boat for their search, but that they might board it and sail with them.

We last see Craig, Laura, the professor and Lenora boarding the steamer bound for Port Said.

Edison's "The Wrong Woman"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

"THE WRONG WOMAN," a three-reel picture, to be released by the Edison Company on June 1, tells the story of a girl who alienates the affections of her friend's husband and later, thinking her former chum dead, impersonates her at the home of her wealthy relative, hoping to win his favor and be named in his will. By a turn of affairs not too romantic to be feasible, the rightful heiress is rescued from the deserted island, on the shores of which she was left as drowned, and appears to refute the impostor's claims.

A beautiful Long Island mansion and lavishly furnished interior scenes succeed in suggesting the wealth which is the goal of the action, seen at its best in good photography. The cast, while not afforded much opportunity for distinctive work, carries its end of the production well. Mabel Trunnelle is seen as the impostor, Marion; Gladys Hulette as the heiress, Ivy Fairfax; George Wright as unprincipled Horace Dane; Augustus Phillips as Allan Mostyn; Bigelow Cooper as Sir Marcus Richardson; Harry Eytinge as Dr. Dane, Horace's father, and Mabel Dwight as Mrs. Fairfax. Richard Ridgely was the director.

While courting Ivy Fairfax, Horace Dane meets her invalid mother's nurse, Marion, and is greatly attracted by her beauty. Believing him sincere, Marion accepts his attentions, but later learns that he is engaged to Ivy and upbraids him for his conduct. Ignorant of the affair between Marion and Dane, Ivy, after her marriage to the latter, insists on Marion's accompanying them on their honeymoon, which is to be spent at the home of a rich relative in England, who has never met Ivy.

Their ship is wrecked at sea, and the three are washed up on Desert Island. Thinking Ivy dead, Dane and Marion desert her, and set out for Sir Marcus Richardson's home in a fisherman's boat which, on passing, chances to see their signal. Marion represents herself as Sir Marcus' niece, and is accepted into the household. Her only worry is caused by Dane, who demands money incessantly, threatening exposure.

Allan Mostyn, a neighbor and friend of Sir Marcus, takes a trip to Desert Island one day, and there meets Ivy, who has recovered from the effects of her experience in the water and is living like a wild creature. She returns with him, and comes face to face with Marion. The latter denies her claims, and convinces Sir Marcus that she is an impostor.

One night Dane enters the Richardson home, and attempts to rob the safe. He is discovered and shot. Unnerved by this tragedy, Marion confesses all. Mostyn, who has gradually grown to love her, accepts her love in spite of her deception. The closing scene shows Ivy playing the piano while her uncle, sitting beside her, listens, his glance revealing his great love and devotion for the girl.

Pathe's "The Saving Circles"

TRODITE, a new super-force in explosives, is the means taken by Wu Fang to forever put Craig Kennedy out of his way in the latest release of the Pathe serial entitled "The New Exploits of Elaine." This particular episode is known as "The Saving Circles."

The familiar players this time are called upon to perform even more than the usual allotment of hair-raising feats, and thrill piles upon thrill until the exhibitor booking this serial is beginning to wonder if there is anything impossible for these producers to attempt.

Wu Fang, the Chinese master criminal, finds a new ally in this latest episode, when Long Sing, his accomplice, brings to his apartment Sprague, a thoroughly unscrupulous aviator.

Wu Fang has learned the secret of trodite, the new explosive with which the American government has been experimenting, and is confident that if the bomb containing this explosive can be dropped on Kennedy's apartment house he will be instantly killed.

Accordingly a huge circle is painted on the roof of Kennedy's apartment to serve as a mark and guide for the aviator, high above. Kennedy, however, hears the Chinaman on his roof, and by means of a periscope, which he has constructed, peers out of his window and onto the roof, thus discovering the white signal.

Having learned that a quantity of trodite has been stolen from the government, together with a sheaf of aeroplane arrows such as are at present being used in the European war, Kennedy immediately surmises that Wu Fang is behind the theft and, putting two and two together, instantly orders Jameson to go to the roof and erase the circle, which would undoubtedly prove such a splendid land-mark for the aviator. Kennedy himself journeys across the street to a vacant building and on the roof of that paints a similar circle.

Accordingly when the aviator flies over Kennedy's apartment or what he believes to be the apartment, and drops his bomb, the explosive destroys the empty building across the street and Kennedy's life is saved.

The next day Elaine and Jameson go into the country to the home of Elaine's cousin and Wu Fang, learning she has gone there, sends the aviator out on another flight for the purpose this time of slaying Elaine by dropping the sheaf of arrows.

Kennedy, however, learns of the departure of Sprague in the aeroplane and securing the assistance of his friends at the government experiment station, he borrows an armored automobile and sets out to save Elaine, wiring ahead to her cousin that she must be called in from outdoors, lest she be killed by the aviator flying overhead.

Jameson gets the message and barely has time to conceal her when the aeroplane appears in the heavens and swooping over the meadow in which they had been but a few moments before, and in which Elaine's parasol still is one of the most prominent objects in sight. Just as the aeroplane hovers above the parasol the Chinaman leans over the edge and drops his bundle of arrows, wrecking the parasol, but doing no other damage since Elaine is safely away.

Kennedy's armored auto appears and noting the airship, the detective shoots at it with a high powered rifle which destroys an important portion of the mechanism and sends the machine crashing to the ground.

Sprague, the aviator, is killed by the fall, and Wu Fang escapes badly injured, as the picture ends.

Morosco's "Help Wanted"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

JACK LAIT'S drama, "Help Wanted," which ran so long and successfully on the stage both in New York and Chicago that its title almost became axiomatic, is the latest photoplay conversion of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and it is not overrating it in the least to say that on film it is a distinct achievement. Conventional acting and hackneyed developments are as foreign to the five-reel production as are poor photography and shallow settings.

The main theme of the play "gets over" with all of the force, humor, and appeal that made it famous on the stage. The action, without becoming farcical, might almost be termed snappy, so refreshing and full of life is it. The story is an absorbing one, dealing with characters not so much from life as of life, and visualizing situations which are both logical and, unfortunately, common in existence.

One point which stands out prominently is Scott's utter disregard as to what his stenographer, Gertie, might be to someone else; to her mother, sweetheart, brothers and sisters. To him she is merely a pretty little girl with a pleasing figure who is dependent for a living upon her employment in his office. Why should he care about her ambitions, future, or family connections? Her name and character are not sacred to him as are his own daughter's.

The graphic characterizations of the players seem, even upon the screen, to make them glow with life and energy. They reach dramatic heights with-on her stage career, makes Gertrude Meyer a demure little girl with a charming personality and an unpretentious but most effective way of capturing people's sympathy. Hobart Bosworth and Owen Moore do well in the difficult roles of Jerrold R. Scott and his son, Jack, while Adele Farrington, as Mrs. Scott, Herbert Standing as Crane, and Lillian Elliot as Mrs. Meyer, share the honors of the principal roles in the remainder of the cast.

The whole story revolves about Gertie Meyer's position as Jerrold Scott's stenographer. The last four girls who acted in this capacity resigned because of the fastidiously groomed man's weakness for making love to his stenographer, the qualifications for which position are youth and beauty rather than ability and diligence.

Jack Scott, a youth of about Gertie's age, falls in love with the girl. One night Scott, who has kept Disowned, he returns home, accompanied by Gertie, whom he presents to his mother, merely telling her that he and his father quarreled because of Jack's love for the stenographer. When the full realization of how faithless he has been dawns upon him, Scott hurries home, fearful that Jack will tell his mother all. On finding that it is not yet too late to turn over a new leaf, Scott gladly consents to Jack's marriage to Gertie, and inwardly resolves that never again will his family's good name be jeopardized by his conduct.

A HITHERTO unused phase of the eternal triangle is a decided novelty in this era of the motion picture art, but that it can exist is proven by "The Love Liar," the fourth three-reel release of the "Who Pays?" series, being produced by Balboa for the Pathe company. Here the betrayed husband, instead of attempting the lives of either his wife or the third party, as is usually the case when banishment is not the sentence, consigns both to a worldly hades by compelling them to live within constant sight of each other in his house. He knows full well that the agony of seeing the person whom one loves every day without being able to commune with him or her in any way is much worse than permanent estrangement or death.

This story is less vindictive than some of its predecessors, but it teaches a lesson fully as forceful and convincing. The technical and photographic ends of the production show great care and able handling. Much emotional acting is demanded by the theme, and portrayed by Ruth Roland as Selma Ashton, later Mrs. Dwight; Henry King as Dr. Lloyd Holland, the intruder, and Daniel Gilfeather as David Dwight.

Left almost penniless by the failure of her investments, Selma Ashton accepts the attentions of wealthy but aged David Dwight. His proposal to her is accompanied by the statement that he does not wish her to marry him unless she really loves him. Confronted by poverty on one side and a life of luxury and ease on the other, Selma overcomes the dictates of her conscience, and marries Dwight, who is all of twice her age.

At her husband's residence Selma meets Lloyd Holland, a young doctor employed by Dwight to watch over his failing health. As Holland lives with

During the scene which follows Dwight's exposé of Holland's attempt to poison him, the husband informs the young doctor that his plan to flee must be abandoned. And the manner in which he says it convinces Holland, in spite of himself, that it will be abandoned. Moreover, Dwight informs Holland that he is to continue living in his house and that, though he and Selma will see each other every day, there will be no intercourse between them. Lubin's "The Great Ruby"

The Lubin Company began the filming this week of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "The Great Ruby," originally produced in this country by Augustin Daly and a cast which included Ada Rehan, Blanche Bates, Charles Richmond and other well-known players.

"The Great Ruby" was written by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. The film version was made by Clay M. Greene and the production is being directed by Barry O'Neil. "The Great Ruby" is especially suitable for screen production, because of its sensationalism, the intensity of the story itself and the wide latitude permitted the director. Money will not be spared, according to Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, in making this production one of the most noteworthy features of the year. It will be released under the direction of the V. L. S. E.

Director Richard Ridgely

Director Richard Ridgely, during his three years' connection with the Edison company and motion pictures has been a strong force for the uplifting of the film into its rightful dramatic and pleasure-giving plane. He puts the best of himself into every picture he makes so that "It's a Ridgely picture," has a meaning of its own.

Richard Ridgely.

He came to New York as quite a young man and by chance joined a school of acting which at that time numbered many actors since noted. His first outside theatrical venture was with "The Geisha" at Daly's where in three weeks he jumped to a principal role. The second year he was in the lead. Then came three years which brought distinction in Grand Opera at the Metropolitan with H. W. Savage, when the opera was done in English. To acquire even greater finish, Mr. Ridgely then spent a year in Paris studying under Frank King Clarke. Returning he joined Richard Carle in "The Spring Chicken," later going with Anna Held.

Motion pictures then beckoned and Edison films recorded him as an actor for one year. While still acting, he began writing scenarios with such success that when a director was taken sick before the completion of a comedy, Mr. Ridgely finished it and earned his directorship thereby. Since then he has written many successful scripts, both funny and dramatic.

Director Ridgely is a faithful student of the world's masterpieces in oil and water color and ever strives to make his pictures as perfect in composition, harmony and balance and as pictorially pleasurable as is possible to do. He believes that every film should be a treat to the eye. Yet he does not let this artistic phase intrude upon the dramatic as the melodramatic force of his "Olive's Opportunities" series testifies.

Some of Director Ridgely's pictures are: "Hard Cash"; "The Blind Fiddler"—done by himself from an Irish fable; "The Southerners"; "The Two Van Revels"; "In the Shadow of Death" and the fine, tense double role picture of Marc MacDermott, "A Deadly Hate" which Director Ridgely scenarioized from an old English play.

The North American Film Corporation is mailing to exhibitors all over the country a handsome twenty-four-page booklet, entitled "How to Increase Box Office Receipts," which is devoted in its entirety to plans for the exploitation of the North American Film Corporation's new serial "The Diamond from the Sky."

There are several pages devoted to a story by President John R. Freuler, of the North American Film Corporation, giving specific suggestions for the increase of patronage at the box office; a page or two of suggestions for decorating the lobby and making the best use of posters, signs, photographs, etc.; another two pages devoted to how to herald a feature, describing the use of heralds, slides, pluggers, etc.; a breezy talk on newspaper advertising by President Joseph H. Finn, of the Nichols-Finn Advertising Company, of Chicago; a number of publicity write-ups for use by the exhibitor in getting his local paper to publish items regarding the serial; illustrations of a number of handsome electrotypes which the exhibitor can purchase at a trifling sum for use in his local newspaper, these comprising both advertising layouts and players' pictures; a mention of the use of such novel advertising as the Lottie Pickford dolls; fans which bear on their faces a large photograph of Lottie Pickford, and which will, undoubtedly, be much in demand by the exhibitors during the hot summer months, and the final page or two is devoted to crowd getting schemes based on results actually attained by exhibitors who have used them.

The intention of the company is to specialize in one-reel comedy films to be known as the Headline Funfilms. The first picture will have a well-known lilliputian comedian as its star, and it is said will appeal mostly to the women and children, which will undoubtedly make it a big matinee attraction. J. R. Big Mob Scene

With all the types which would, or could, be wanted by any director of "mob" scenes, seven cars left the Jersey City terminal of the Jersey Central Railroad Monday morning bearing more than six hundred inhabitants, men, women and children of New York's lower East Side, who were to take part in the big Kishinef massacre scenes, in the Cort Film Corporation's screen production of "The Melting Pot."

It was an impressive crowd which left the train at Bayonne and trooped to the Horsley studios, many wearing the Russian garb in which they were to appear in the picture. Scores of Jews, who had been hired for the day, were actual participants in the horrible happening at Kishinef and with them were several educated Russians who assisted in the staging of the scenes.

Previous to the departure of the train a freight train carrying the horse flesh for the scenes went down from Jersey City and the riders began early practice in riding their steeds within the narrow enclosure caused by the streets which had been built in the lot back of the studio.

Taken all in all, the day brought forth success to Oliver D. Bailey and James Vincent, the two directors who thus had under their direction perhaps one of the biggest single "mobs" ever handled in this country.

Tea at Dyreda Studio

Four o'clock tea at the Hotel Empire concluded a visiting hour at the Metro-Dyreda studio, on Friday afternoon of last week. Because the dining-room, which the studio is to have, was not in a completed condition, the guests were escorted across Broadway to The Empire, where tea and English muffins, pastry and French cream were served to the accompaniment of film talk.

J. Searle Dawley.

Harry Reichenback, acting in his capacity of Metro publicity manager, was host and J. Searle Dawley, who just returned from the south and the directing of the three pictures now in the making at the Dyreda studio, was guest of honor. He sat at the head of the long tea-table and chatted with Howard Estabrook at his right, Irene Warfield at his left and talked across the tea-cups and the plates of muffins with others, who flanked the table. Mr. Logue, of London, who is representing several writers of note, in the sale of rights to their books, was an intent listener, while Walter J. Kingsley, of the United Booking Office, and John Murray, of the Solax Company, carried on a two-some discussion. George Witherspoon, Alec Lorimore and J. Parker Reed, Jr., were other film men present.

The visit to the Dyreda studio was during the taking of a scene in which Mary Miles Minter figured. Mr. Dawley directed it. The studio is entirely of glass and occupies the top floor of an automobile building on Sixty-first street, just west of Broadway. The filming of six scenes at one time is the studio's space record, and Mr. Dawley is optimistic of the results to be obtained by the work to be carried on there.

Lewis Finishes "The Plunderer"

Edgar Lewis and his all-star company of photoplayers, headed by William Farnum, have completed the production of the big feature film, "The Plunderer," from Roy Norton's book of that name, for the Fox Film Corporation at Dahlonega, Ga., will leave for New York on Sunday. It is a thrilling drama of the gold mines and the locale in the heart of the Blue Ridge gold belt was ideal for it.

Some of the thrills were real ones, as for instance, when Harry Spingler took what was meant to be a twelve foot leap into a mine shaft, he chose the wrong hole, landing twice as far below the surface as he had expected to and badly twisting his back.

Claire Whitney also had a narrow escape. One day while Director Lewis was out looking up new locations, Mr. Farnum and George DeCarlton went out for a little pistol practice to while the time away. After the first shot they were alarmed by a cry from the direction in which it had been fired and found that it had missed by a narrow margin the handsome leading woman, who had been out for a stroll in the woods.

This marks the completion of Mr. Lewis' eighth big feature photoplay in a little more than a year. The others are "Samson," "The Thief," "The Littlest Rebel," "Capt. Swift," "Northern Lights," "The Gilded Fool" and "The Nigger."

Union Operators Strike

Houston, Texas, is suffering from a strike on the part of the moving picture operators' union, and in such places as the exhibitors themselves are not operating their own machines, nonunion men are now at work.

The walkout of the union men occurred on April 22, when the exhibitors refused a demand of the operators' union for the employment of one chief operator at each theater at a salary of $17.50 a week until January 1, 1916, when the salaries shall be raised to $20.00. A relief operator at $10.00 a week was also demanded.

Negotiations have been going on for several weeks between the union and the exhibitors, but without effecting a compromise. The exhibitors declare they cannot afford to meet the demands of the union under present conditions.

New Lobby Display

The American Film Manufacturing Company is supplying a very attractive lobby display in the form of 14x17 portraits of its various actors, personally autographed by each respective player. A nominal charge is being made.

Ochs Head New York League

Peace was declared between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of New York state at a joint meeting held at the Statlet Hotel in Buffalo last week, and all dissension between the two bodies is wiped out by the members of the Association all becoming members of the League. Leo Ochs of New York City was chosen president of the state league to succeed A. N. Wolff of Rochester, resigned, and E. M. Linton of Utica was elected treasurer to succeed W. C. Hubbard of Rochester, who retired on account of ill health.

The Two Gertrudes

Of course, Gertrude McCoy, the beautiful star of the Edison stock company, is known to the great majority of those who view motion pictures. The public loves her for her beauty, her personality and the intense earnestness that lies behind her dramatic work. But there is another Gertrude whose name has recently appeared on the screen as an author of scenarios — Gertrude Lyon—and it may not be generally known that the two are one and the same. For it is the Edison company's policy not to produce scenarios under the names of its players. Therefore, in venturing into the field of authorship, Miss McCoy assumed that nom de plume. Her first story, "What Could She Do?" was submitted last summer, considered with the hundreds of other plots received at the Edison studio, was accepted and produced in three reels in November. It made a triumphant success. With her pretty head not a bit turned over the reception given this play, Miss McCoy went to work carefully and slowly on another. This was completed in due course and, when read by one of the Edison directors, caused him to remark "That's the best three reel scenario I ever read. I hope I can produce it." He did, and the result was "On the Stroke of Twelve," released in March.

Large Estate for Movie Films

Nelson, Lee and Green, of New York City, leased to the Vitagraph Company the two hundred acre estate, known as "The Oaks," at Bayside, L. I. This estate adjoins the Oakland Golf Club and contains a large lake, thirty greenhouses, manor house, woods and an inlet of Long Island Sound. The property was leased to produce films.

Exhibitors Elect Officers

The Louisiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' association perfected its organization in the hotel at New Orleans, Saturday evening, April 24, 1915. Martin L. Costley, Jr., presided.

The following officers were elected, to serve until next January: President, Martin L. Costley, Jr., of the Pastime; vice-president Jac. Miller, of the Hippodrome; secretary, George E. Grusch, of the Coliseum; treasurer, Bernard F. Brennan, of the Iberville; sergeant-at-arms, George Saik, of the Elysium.

Estelle Allen, the new leading woman of the New York Picture Corporation, will make her debut under the Ince banner in "The Shoal Light."

George Kleine announces that he has secured the film rights to Cleveland Moffett's famous drama, "The Battle," work on which is already under way in the Kleine New York studios.

Eugene Pallette, the well-known actor, has become a Selig star. He is to take leading roles with Selig Pacific Coast stock companies.

The six-reel Sennett feature which has been in the making for the last two months and in which are being featured Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Ford Sterling, Owen Moore and almost all the other members of the stock company, will be finished within the next week if the good weather keeps up.

Gettinger has gone back to his work with Henry McRae and his company of 101 Bison players, with whom he was working before. He is known as one of the best riders, ropers and revolver shots on the coast.

Ad. Kessel, president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Keystone Company, who has been at the West Coast studios now for the past two months, has about finished his work there and will be leaving for the East in a very few days.

Giles Warren, who was recently on the Selig production staff and previously with Lubin, Victor and Whitman features, has become a Mutual director. As a beginning, he is staging "Gridley's Wife," a one-reel drama, in which Thomas Wilson, Claire Anderson and Raymond Wells appear.

Tom Walsh, who played Barcus in the "Trey o' Hearts" series, has been transferred from Henry McRae's Bison company to the position of assistant director with Bob Daly in the direction of Fritzi Brunette and company in the production of light comedies.

Lester R. Calvin and Anna Thornton have joined the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and are now at work at Universal City, Cal.

Ray Myers is the most recent addition to the staff of directors at the Griffith-Mutual studios in Hollywood. His first production is "Mike's Elopement," a one-reel Reliance drama with a light comedy interest. Violet Wilkey, the talented Mutual child actress, is featured.

Richard C. Travers is in Chattanooga, Tenn., where he will make a wild ride on a "Dynamite Special" in an Essanay photoplay. In the photoplay the train loaded with dynamite collides with another train and is blown to atoms. Travers has the ticklish job of running the special. While Travers is supposed to be on the train when it blows up, he has every anticipation of returning to Chicago without any parts missing. He will come back to play opposite Viola Allen in "The White Sister."

One of the Selig Red Seal plays which will be produced in the near future is "The Crisis," a film adaptation from the story by Winston Churchill. Hundreds of actors will be engaged for this big story. "The House of a Thousand Candles" is another Selig Red Seal play in course of production. The film play was adapted from the popular novel of the same name.

Following are the official release dates for Selig Red Seal Plays to be booked direct from Selig, 1600 Broadway, New York City: "The Carpet from Bagdad," May 3; "The Millionaire Baby," May 31; "The Rosary," June 28; "A Texas Steer," July 26.

Harry Lyons, brother of Eddie Lyons, of Nestor comedy fame, has joined the Universal forces at the western plant as a member of the Nestor company. Before coming to the Universal, he was on the legitimate stage.

Paul Panzer, famous as Owen in the "Perils of Pauline," has finished his vaudeville tour through the New England states, and is now back at the Pathé studio playing one of the principal parts in "The Fortunes of Pierre," a four-reel feature being produced by Donald MacKenzie.

Thomas Jefferson has been cast for the part of Father White in "Up from the Depths," the four-part Mutual feature now in rehearsal. Courtenay Foote will be featured in this play. Gladys Brockwell plays opposite him.

Miss Martha Boucher has joined Director Colin Campbell's company, Selig Polyscope Jungle Zoo. Miss Boucher played the lead in "Ben Hur" on the spoken stage and is a talented actress.

Harry Lyons, brother of Eddie Lyons, of Nestor comedy fame, has joined the Universal forces at the western plant as a member of the Nestor company. Before coming to the Universal he was on the legitimate stage.

The Smallwood Film Corporation has removed its executive offices from the Flatiron Building to the Knickerbocker Theater Building Annex.

Captain Wilbert Melville, manager of the western Lubin company at Los Angeles, has returned from San Diego, where for ten days he has been filming army and navy scenes for a forthcoming Lubin drama. The troops are shown in all sorts of manoeuvres, and one of the best scenes is a cavalry charge directly at the cameras.

Within the next few weeks the Smallwood Film Corporation will begin releasing its new brand through the United Film Service under the name of "Pyramid Pictures."

Catherine Carr, the photoplaywright, who picturized "The Melting Pot" for Walker Whiteside, has just finished doing the scenario for "The Price," in which Helen Ware will appear for the Cosmos Feature Film Company.

Frank Powell, whose most recent release, "From the Valley of the Missing," has been meeting with marked success throughout the country, will direct the new feature, rehearsals World Film Corporation.—Mr. George B. Cox of Cincinnati is the new president of the World Film Corporation. He succeeds Van Horn Ely. George A. Huhn of Philadelphia becomes chairman of the executive committee and John L. Rhinock was elected an additional vice-president. William W. Brady and Milton C. Work were elected to the board of directors.

Mutual Film Corporation.—It is not generally known to the stockholders that Mr. Thanhouser has been appointed a member of the executive committee. As his technical knowledge of everything that appertains to the film world is of a very superior order, this should mean that the actual molding and control of the policy of this organization has been strengthened in a very decided way.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.—Following the big feature program established by the General Film Company and the Mutual Film Corporation, the Universal has now organized a comprehensive program, including Nat Goodwin, Marie Cahill, Emmett Corrigan, Wilton Lackaye, etc., amongst the actors, and such plays as "Earl of Pawtucket," "Little Brother of the Rich," "Caleb West," etc. These features are not to be released as any special departure from the policy pursued by the Universal, but simply as a regular part of the Universal program.

Syndicate Film Corporation.—The 30 per cent dividend declared, payable the first week in May, is just another page in the brilliant financial history of the "Million Dollar Mystery."

North American Film Corporation.—When Marcus Loew booked the "Diamond from the Sky" for his circuit of theaters (which constitutes one of the largest groups in the United States) after a personal inspection of the first 7,000 feet of the film, he made complete what is now regarded as one of the most successful booking campaigns that has ever been inaugurated for a continuous film production.

New York Motion Picture Corporation.—Stock in this company has been strong and very little has come out at the present market level.

of which are now in progress at the Pathe studio in Jersey City.

Stuart Holmes, that capable, capital actor, who is rapidly approaching stardom through his excellent treatment of the roles entrusted him in several of the recently released Fox features, has been selected to depict the leading role in support of Nance O'Neill, who is to appear in "Princess Romanoff," founded on Sardou's famous "Fedora."

The Beauty company, of the American studios, boasts a new leading lady, Miss Neva Gerber, of whom great things are expected. Frank Cooley, the director, is at work on several stories that will show Miss Gerber in varied characters. Her first picture, "Life's Staircase," released shortly, threatens to launch the little lady on a popular "Beauty" career. Mr. Cooley is the co-author as well as producer.

Under the experienced hand of W. L. Merrill, manager of the United Film Service for Minneapolis, Minn., the new United Exchange for Sioux Falls, S. D., has been firmly established and placed under the able management of G. M. Hecklin.

Two more directors have been added to the Selig staff in California. George Nichols, who recently has directed many of Griffith's stars at the Mutual, has begun work at the Selig Jungle-Zoo. The second newcomer is Lloyd B. Carleton, who is producing "The Escape" from the fiction story of that name written by Charles Belmont Davis.

FILM FOLK FLASHES

During her mother's absence with her sister, Lillian, Dorothy Gish gave what she calls "a hen party." Fourteen Mutual leading ladies assembled at Miss Gish's Los Angeles home that evening and disposed of five quarts of lemonade and three pounds of strawberry shortcake, and had what Miss Gish describes as "a riotous affair."

Mabel Normand and Roscoe Arbuckle (Fatty) arrived back at the studios, having been at the San Francisco Exposition for two weeks, on the grounds of which they staged two hilarious comedies. They also brought back about one thousand feet of film of the Exposition, which will be used for educational purposes.

During her week's stay at the Orpheum in Los Angeles, Blanche Ring made a visit to Universal City to learn the mysteries of the picture game.

A floral Fying "A" is being set up by the gardener in front of the glass studio at the Santa Barbara Laboratories of the American Film Manufacturing Company.

After two months away from the studios, due to injuries sustained in an auto accident, Lillian Peacock, ingenue lead with Allen Curtis' Joker comedy company, has returned to work at Universal City.

Scene from forthcoming Bosworth feature, "Little Sunset," a Charles Van Loan baseball story.

Harry Mainhall, formerly author and director for the Essanay Company, is now in charge of the Smallwood Film Corporation script department. He is the author of "The Law of Nature," "Canned Curiosity," and "The Winding Way," the first three releases of Pyramid pictures, featuring Edwin August.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

By the Sea—ESSANAY—APRIL 29.—The inimitable Charlie Chaplin this week takes us to the seaside, where his remarkable feet succeed in getting him into even more trouble than he has experienced in past releases. Charlie has trouble in keeping his hat on in the stiff breeze which sweeps in from the sea, and when the cord by which it is attached to his buttonhole becomes entangled with the cord of another gentleman's hat, which has also blown off, Charlie and the other gentleman come to blows. A flirtatious, pretty girl, whom both men become interested in, also gives an opportunity for innumerable scenes in which knock-about comedy plays a prominent part. The picture will undoubtedly stir the risibilities of the most vicious "grouch."

The Jarrs Visit Arcadia—VITAGRAPH—MAY 1.—Sixth of the "Jarr Family" series, written by Roy L. McCardell, in which Harold Davenport and Rose Tapley have the leads. Jarr is given a rose bush by his friend, Jenkins, at the office, and goes through many hardships to safely bring it home to Mrs. Jarr. Upon his arrival, however, he learns that she cannot use it in her flower box, and throws it out the window. It lands on the head of a passer-by, and a red-hot mix-up follows. When things have quieted down, the Jarrs start out to visit the Jenkins, who live in Arcadia, a suburb. The transportation facilities are hopelessly poor, and the Jenkins' palatial home proves to be a tumbled down cottage. Countless other unpleasant happenings convince the Jarrs that their flat in Harlem is the only place in the world.

Hearst-Selig Pictorial No. 35—SELIG—MAY 3.—Mayor Mitchell reviews 8,000 police; boys of Washington, D. C., help clean up the city; polo championship games at Panama-Pacific Exposition; latest fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; forest fire near Dayville, Conn.; Harvard crew defeats navy in eight-oared race; Chicago White Sox open baseball season at home; factory fire in South Boston; war views from Canada and England.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 36—SELIG—MAY 6.—Vincent Astor's first hydroaeroplane given test; children of Philadelphia orphan asylums entertained at circus; lodges join parade on Fraternal Day, at Panama exposition; pupils of Cook County schools take interest in gardening; hot weather brings bathers to Coney Island; Grace Darling visits fair at San Diego; Boston newsboys trained by Jimmy Walsh; pictures taken near Belgrade show terrific effect of Austrian artillery fire on Serb defenses; night pictures of Panama Pacific Exposition, showing wonderful night illuminations.

A Much Needed Lesson—BIOGRAPH—MAY 10.—The young wife dislikes the demonstrative affection of her adoring husband, and continually snubs him. But when he pays gallant attention to her friend she is furiously jealous. Her conduct becomes so unbearable that her father proposes a plot that shall teach her a much needed lesson. Her husband and friend protest, but finally agree to flirt with each other. This they do so convincingly that the wife orders her friend from the house and upbraids her husband. Her father then steps forward and discloses the plot, whereupon she is so mortified that she promises meekly to endure her husband's lover-like attentions.

Her Proper Place—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—MAY 10.—Miriam Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott featured. On graduating from high school, Agnes Reynolds sets aside her ambitions, and devotes herself to the comfort of her aged parents. May, her younger sister, attracts the attention of Harry Cornell, who has been courting Agnes, and they become married. Little or no consideration is given Agnes. To the others she is just the drudge. Agnes tires of this, and leaves for Washington, where she obtains employment in an office. She is delighted to learn that the office across the way is occupied by her idol, Senator William Northrup. While in the office late one evening she hears sounds of a struggle in the senator's office, and rushes in to find Northrup unconscious on the floor, blood flowing from a bullet wound in his arm. The next day the senator inquires about the identity of the girl who restored him to consciousness and bandaged his arm, but no one seems to know her. Agnes, in the meantime, has returned home. To compel the others' respect she says that she has become engaged. A friend hears that it is to Senator Northrup, and gives a reception in her honor. The senator denies the rumor of his engagement, but attends the reception to see who it is that has claimed him as her fiance. He recognizes Agnes, and requests that she allow her statement to stand. Shortly afterwards they are married.

Home Coming—ESSANAY—MAY 10.—A one-act drama, with Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig in the leading roles. Hans and Gretchen are childhood sweethearts back in Germany. Hans leaves his mother country for America to have his voice cultivated, promising Gretchen that he will return. Hans becomes a great singer and Gretchen and her mother, being victims of hard times, come to America to get work. Gretchen becomes discouraged and is planning on returning to Germany, when chance throws her with Hans. They are again great friends, and one night Hans' worried manager receives word that he will not sing that night as he is to be married.

A Sister's Burden—(TWO REELS)—KALEM—MAY 10.—Martha, the eldest daughter of a selfish widower, is compelled to keep house for her father and younger brother and sister. She yields to Ned's pleading and plans to elope with him, but as she nears the parsonage she feels as though it were her duty to return to her father. Ned leaves for the city. In later years her sister marries and moves away and Martha remains to keep house for her brother and his wife, a lazy, good-for-nothing. Martha receives an invitation to visit her sister and while there meets Ned, who is still a bachelor and again pleads with her to marry him. Receiving a letter from her brother's wife, Martha feels it her duty to return to them, and so leaves. Ned, returning that evening and finding her gone, follows her home and finds that she is being imposed upon by her brother, and after making him promise to care for his wife, at last persuades Martha to marry him.

The Ingratitude of Liz Taylor—(Two Reels)—Selig—May 10.—A human interest story of a little newsboy and his faithful friend, a dog, and his success in securing employment for Liz Taylor and Ben Bradshaw, two chance acquaintances. Jimmie's friendship for Liz ripens into love, but he learns with amazement, when he proposes, that Liz is already engaged to Ben. See review on page 746, issue of May 8. N. G. C.

The Confession—(Two Reels)—Biograph—May 11.—When Paul Howard was four years old his little sister was born and his mother passed away. The passing away of his wife set John Howard, Paul's father, against the new-born babe and he hated her so much that he left her in the care of a nurse and went abroad with Paul. It was arranged that the girl should be reared in ignorance of her parentage. Three years later Mrs. Morton, the nurse, gave birth to a child, and the child of Howard's died, but knowing that the remittance for her upkeep would stop, the child's death was concealed. Paul was brought up in Paris and though he was an artist, spent little time in his studio. After a time his father sent him back to America to see if it would not reform him. Here he met Bessie Morton and under her good influence became a rising artist. His father came to see him, and entering the studio that the two lovers worked in saw a picture of his wife, which Bessie said was her mother. Howard told them that they were brother and sister, but after the confession of Mrs. Morton they were made happy once more.

An Innocent Thief—Edison—May 11. Bessie Learn, Augustus Phillips and Olive Templeton featured. Peggy obtains employment in the Mercer household, and finds an ever-ready champion in young Dick Mercer, whom she greatly admires. Beatrice Mills, Dick's fiancee, takes a dislike to Peggy without any apparent reason, though it really is jealousy. This strengthens the friendship between Peggy and Dick, he looking out for her interests when he thinks she is being imposed upon or rashly judged. Much against Dick's wishes, Beatrice sets a trap for Peggy, promising to show her fiance what a small place honesty and gratitude occupy in Peggy's nature. The result is exactly the opposite of what Beatrice expected. Chagrined, she returns Dick's engagement ring, and he joyfully sweeps little Peggy into his arms. C. R. C.

Means and Morals—(Two Reels)—Essanay—May 11.—A simple human interest tale by H. S. Sheldon, with the leading roles enacted by Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn. The story tells of a little shop girl, who flirts in order to be invited out to dinner. Her host, unknown to her, is a pickpocket, whom she later succeeds in reforming. See review on page 783, this issue. N. G. C.

Rushing the Lunch Counter—Kalem—May 11.—Ham and Bud blow into the Wayville station and find the lunch counter deserted, as the proprietor has just fired the waiter, and has chased him as far away as possible. The owner returns and finds Ham and Bud have eaten their fill and are preparing to leave. He offers them employment and they consent to stay. Their first customer is a wild and wooly westerner, who succeeds in beating them out of a lunch by flourishing what they discover to be but a toy fan, in the shape of a pistol. They run after him with a sledge hammer and knock him out. Not being able to supply the wants of a car full of passengers, Ham and Bud manage to get into a free-for-all and escape on a handcar.

A Hot Time in Punkville—Lubin—May 11.—Cartoon picture, showing Rastus landing in his native town in a box car. He tries to capture a chicken, but succeeds, after a fight, in capturing only an egg. He chases a cow and she jumps over the moon, where Rastus follows her and gets mixed up with the stars.

Who Stole the Doggies?—Lubin—May 11.—Picturing the troubles of Maggie and her suitors, Murphy, a cop, and Hogan, the chief. Rockerbilts give a dance and the wienerwursts are stolen. Murphy is informed and comes to the house and finds Maggie with the stolen goods. Hogan arrests her, but as he has the wienerwursts in his hands as Hogan comes in, he is blamed for the theft. After much trouble Murphy is released and goes with Maggie, while Hogan is seen dangling by his feet from a rope meant for Murphy.

The Yellow Streak—Selig—May 11.—E. J. Brady and Eugenie Forde are featured in this western production. Ed Merritt, a profligate son of an Easterner, goes west in the hope of reforming. He meets and marries Nancy, the belle of a western dance hall, and a year later, when his father dies, deserts her and goes east to become the head of his father's firm. A son is born to the deserted wife, and seventeen years later Merritt, in the west for his health, is saved from shooting his own son by Nancy. The father pleads for forgiveness, but the wife cannot forget his treatment of her. N. G. C.

The Girl Who Might Have Been—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—May 11.—Liggett, a master criminal, to his acquaintances appears to be a gentleman of leisure. Detective Cheney, who has been watching the operations of a gang of crooks, sets out to find the master brain who is directing them. Enid, an unwilling accomplice of Liggett's, is sent by the master criminal to kill Cheney, but the detective outwits her, and seeing that she detests the life she is living, gives her a chance to reform. Time passes and he falls in love with the girl. "Three-fingered Lew," Liggett's right-hand man, fears that Enid will "squeal," and kills her on the night that Cheney, who had fallen in love with her, was about to ask her to marry him. The detective at first is crushed by the blow, but he rises superior to his feelings and sets out to avenge the death of the girl who might have been his wife. He accomplishes his end, and "Three-fingered Lew" is placed behind the bars, while Liggett meets his death in trying to make his escape.

Nearly a Scandal—Edison—May 12.—Arthur Housman, William Wadsworth and Jesse Stevens featured. Otto writes Steena, his hired-girl sweetheart, for money, telling her to meet him in the park. Steena has her mistress, Mrs. Snitz, write her reply. Snitz, the jealous husband, gleans some knowledge of the date from the blotter, and, thinking that his wife is faithless, goes to the park intent on settling with Otto. Tragedy is narrowly averted in the mix-up that follows, and the affair is explained to Snitz's satisfaction. C. R. C.

Who Bears Malice—(Two Reels)—Lubin—May 12.—A dramatic story of the lumber camps. Story tells of a desperate feud existing between two of the men, which runs through many encounters and endangers the life of the lumberman's wife. The villain, a trapper, pursues his opponent, and uses every cowardly means to best him. In the final struggle, the trapper falls upon his own knife and is pierced through the heart. After months of anxiety the lumberman and his wife are restored peace and happiness.

Scotty Weed's Alibi—(Two Reels)—Kalem—May 12.—An episode of the girl detective series, wherein Scotty Weed, a notorious crook, is arrested for theft, through the working of Jean, the girl detective. Several mysterious robberies have been perpetrated, and finally the guilt is laid to Scotty Weed, who strongly denies that he is the guilty one. Jean happens to be in the office when Weed is accused and notices a peculiar mark on him. Later on a big ball is given by Mrs. Winslow, a wealthy widow, and Jean is invited. The crook, hearing of the diamond tiara which will be worn that night, manages to get into the ball, and as they are all masked, is not discovered until after he has stolen the tiara. Then Jean notices his hand and he is accused of theft. He holds the guests at bay with a revolver and escapes. The detectives follow him to his hotel, where he is found, and after a lengthy search the diamond tiara is discovered and Weed arrested.

Benton, a business man, goes west for his health and meets Mary, the daughter of old Burk, a moonshiner. Benton is suspected of being a revenue man, but he escapes, and years later Mary, who has gone to the city to learn stenography, becomes an employee in his office. When his business proves a failure Benton returns to the mountains and becomes a partner of old Burk. Mary, however, is able to save the business and several months later returns home and induces Benton and her father to return to the city to resume the business. N. G. C.

When a Feller's Nose Is Out of Joint—Vitagraph—May 12.—Sonny Jim feels that "his nose is out of joint" when his mother and father give all their attention to his newly arrived baby brother. His parents, not noticing his "jealousy," ask him how he would feel if the stork came and took his little brother away. This gives Sonny Jim an idea, for he has seen pictures of storks perching on barns with little babies hanging from their bills. That night he wraps his little brother in a bundle and takes him out to the barn to await the coming of the stork. A fire breaks out in the house, and the room in which the baby is left is enveloped in flames. Both the mother and father believe that the child has perished until Sonny Jim, who has grown tired of waiting for the stork, returns to the house with his little brother safely in his arms. He is then hailed a hero, and decides that the presence of his little brother is not such a handicap after all.

The Sheriff's Story—Biograph—May 13.—A young man has met a hermit, while on a fishing trip, but being unable to get into a conversation with him, he at last succeeds in getting the hermit's story from the sheriff. Years ago the cabin, wherein the hermit still lives, was attacked by Indians. The hermit and his young wife were the only ones there, and after a futile attempt to save themselves the girl realized their danger and implored her husband to shoot her, before the Indians entered. He granted her request and just then the Indians were dispersed and cowboys entered the cabin, only to see the young girl dying. Ever since then the morose hermit has had a dummy dressed in his wife's clothing, and will see no one.

Sweedie in Vaudeville—Essanay—May 13.—Wallace Beery, as Sweedie, has been the scrubwoman in a theater. She decides that she would be good on the stage, and one night when she holds five aces in a poker game she gets the necessary coin to start out. She is booked with Slivers, a three-hundred-pound dancer, and they finally hit the theater where Sweedie had been a mop artist. The jealous props decide to spoil the act, and while Sweedie is dancing the scenes and wings fall upon them. Sweedie and Slivers tame the props and then have the stage to themselves.

The Gray Horror—(Three Reels)—Lubin—May 13.—Ellis, an English barrister, saves a woman he has formerly loved, from her husband, Gray. In the escape Gray is shot and the affair is witnessed by Parr, an adventurer. Ellis takes Mrs. Gray to America, but on the steamer she dies in childbirth, and asks him to adopt the child. Parr is also on the boat, and knows of the adoption of Betty, Mrs. Gray's daughter. Years later he comes to purchase a vast estate, as he knows it is rich with ore, and is surprised to find Ellis and Betty living there. Ellis refuses to sell the property. Parr hits upon a scheme to make Ellis either sell the place or leave it. He hires another crook, and they nightly haunt the place. After a while Betty goes to visit her chum, Parr's daughter, and seeing Parr leave one night with a crook, she follows him. Upon her arrival home she finds her father and a young lawyer grappling with Parr and the crook. The mystery of the spirits is cleared up and Betty's engagement to the young lawyer is announced.

To Save Him for His Wife—Vitagraph—May 13.—Mary comes to the city from the country and secures work at the news-stand of a hotel. Robert Sundown, a young Westerner, who buys papers from her, falls in love with Mary, but a mischievous bellboy convinces her that he is married. Sundown succumbs to the wiles of an adventuress, and Mary becomes an adventuress, also, for a short time, in order to win him away from the other woman and save him for his wife. When she accomplishes her purpose she is about to return to her country home, for she has lost her position through the adventure, but Sundown tells her of his love and convinces her that he is not married and that she is the only woman he has ever cared for. Lillian Walker featured.

The Little Scapegoat—Biograph—May 14.—The scapegoat is left alone in the world and comes to live with her rich relatives. She is made a servant and her only friend is the butler. Her young cousin is loved by a rich young man and a count. The count proposes an elopement and after some consideration the cousin agrees and is ready to elope, when the scapegoat, who has overheard the plot, takes her cousin's place. The butler sticks up for the girl, after her aunt has doubted her word, and they are both discharged. Jack, the rich young man, hires them and finally declares his love for the scapegoat.

The Struggle Upward—(Two Reels)—Edison—May 14.—Helen, a settlement worker, is engaged to Philip Atwood, a man of wealth, apparently a capitalist, but in reality a gambler and crook. Jack, a young fellow embittered against the world because of the poverty in which he lives, meets Helen, and is reformed by her. One day he forgets himself so much as to embrace her, and an invisible barrier rises between them. Jack studies for the ministry, and becomes a curate in a distant city. After her marriage to Philip, Helen learns his true occupation and character, and leaves him. It happens that at the time they are in the same city in which Jack is living. Helen goes to the church for advice, and Philip, following, finds her in Jack's arms. He shoots and hits the curate, but the wound proves a slight one, and under Helen's care he soon recovers. Atwood becomes entangled in his own evil schemes, and pays for his wickedness with death. C. R. C.

The Other Girl—Essanay—May 14.—Featuring G. M. Anderson. The artist is engaged to a society girl, who, after coming in to see him, leaves to join some friends, who are selling tags for a charity organization. They go into a cabaret with a gentleman friend and there the girl is seen by her artist lover, who comes in with his chum. He reproaches her and she returns his ring. He leaves for the country, where he meets the "other girl," and she falls in love with him. One day the artist is injured by a falling tree and is knocked unconscious. He raves about the girl in the city, and the "other girl," feeling that she will save his life, sends for the girl in the city, who comes, and the artist is reconciled to her.

The Black Ring—(Three Reels)—Kalem—May 14.—An interesting three-reel drama dealing with the thefts of the "Knights of the Black Ring." A valuable necklace is stolen from Jean, the daughter of Worth Darnell, by the chauffeur, who hides his loot in the car. He is discharged for drunkenness before the theft is discovered and his place is taken by Jack Baldwin, a rich young clubman, who withholds his identity. He finds the black ring worn by the old chauffeur and wears it. Count Barnoff is a suitor for Jean's hand, and one night Baldwin, who has learned to love the girl, sees the count receive the stolen necklace from the chauffeur, who has gained an entrance to the garage. Baldwin follows the men and recovers the necklace. Jean and her father, suspecting him to be the thief, try to have him arrested, but the police, when they find out who it is, refuse to arrest him. Jack manages to trap the count and chauffeur as they are planning to make a wholesale robbery at a big affair given by the Darnells. Jack, wearing the black ring, gains entrance to the thieves' den and they are all captured. Jean marries Baldwin.

What Money Will Do—Lubin—May 14.—Joshia Manning, a well-preserved man of sixty years, returns from Alaska and is turned away from his son's door, as he and his wife do not wish to have a pauper on their hands. Flora, his son's adopted daughter, seeing him turned away, runs after him and gives him something to eat. The old man, gladdened at this act of kindness, buys a farm for Flora and her farmhand sweetheart to live upon, and decides to live with them. The old man, instead of being a pauper, has brought back a lot of money with him. His son hears of this and tries to railroad him to the insane asylum, but is unsuccessful.

A Matrimonial Boomerang—Selig—May 14.—A Selig comedy, featuring Tom Mix. Grace, a school teacher, takes charge of the Coyoteville school, and meets Tom Champion, sheriff, who falls in love with her. When the sheriff arrests some of the cowboys for gambling the men swear vengeance and threaten to hang the sheriff, until one of their men sees an old Indian squaw passing, and tells the sheriff that if he will marry the squaw they will save his life. The sheriff consents and learns later to his surprise that the squaw is Grace, disguised. The cowboys are thus beaten at their own game.

The Professor's Painless Cure—Vitagraph—May 14.—Waldo Emerson Peabody, a professor, has so completely buried himself in his books that his wedding causes him no end of trouble and inconvenience, because he cannot remember what he is supposed to do or which he has done. After a great deal of difficulty, his bride finally gets him home from their honeymoon and they settle down to a quiet life. After a while the dancing craze hits the town, however, and wifey persists in taking him to a nearby dance hall. In order to return to his books, the professor flirts with all the girls he meets. This proves to be a painless cure for his wife, and she agrees that dancing is not worthy of their attention and that he is better off studying at home. Mrs. and Mr. Sidney Drew featured.

The Oriental Ruby—Biograph—May 15.—Lola and Charles are serenely happy because of the fact that they are engaged, when their happiness is marred by the fact that their fathers have quarreled over a stone, which one claims to be real and the other man says is but a piece of glass. Charles persuades his father to go to the other man and beg his forgiveness. When he arrives he finds the other man dead, and fearing he will be blamed, he steals away without giving an alarm. In the morning the body is found and on the strength of the quarrel Charles' father is arrested. Lola has seen him leave the house, but will not testify against him. Charles calls on her and finds her grappling with the Hindoo servant, who turns out to be a notorious crook in disguise, who has stolen the oriental ruby.

His Peasant Princess—Edison—May 15.—The king of Steinfeldt and the king of Rodenkurst quarrel over a game of chess, and for years the principalities are on anything but friendly terms. The barons of both kingdoms try to effect a reconciliation by suggesting the marriage of Karl of Rodenkurst to the Princess Victoria of Steinfeldt. After much protest the kings consent to the marriage. Then comes the difficult part—the task of bringing Karl and Victoria together. Karl is in love with a girl employed in a beer garden near the academy which he attends, and refuses to even meet the princess. To the surprise of all present, instead of resenting Karl's turning his back, she greets him with "Will you have a stein of beer?" Amazed, he turns to find his Victoria in the royal robes of a princess. The lovers become married immediately, and peace is restored between Rodenkurst and Steinfeldt. Robert Brower, Frank McGlynn, Margaret Prussing and Thomas McEvoy play the principal parts.

The Awakening Hour—(Three Reels)—Essanay—May 15.—A well known cast, including Joseph Byron Totten, Harry Newton, Ernest Maupain, Nell Craig, Royal Douglas and Myrtle Healy. Rose Lane, a simple country girl, is persuaded under the influence of Jed Jermaine, an unscrupulous manager, to leave home and go to the office of Sam Caplan, a crooked producer, to apply for a position. Rose is rescued from Caplan's attentions by Arthur Merrill, a young leading man. Caplan is angered and plans revenge. John Herriman, a young country lad who is in love with Rose, is told by Caplan that Rose has been wronged by Merrill. Patricia, an actress, is in love with Merrill, and when she is repulsed falls into Caplan's plan to ruin him. Rose has a part in Merrill's company and overhears a plot to lure Merrill to a lonely house. She tells Merrill's manager, and they rescue him. Patricia leaves the company and Rose takes her place as leading lady, scoring a big hit. Merrill declares his love for the girl, but she tells him that she loves Herriman, so he assures the country boy of Rose's innocence, and plunges himself in renunciation.

A Fiend at the Throttle—Kalem—May 15.—Hopkins, a railroad engineer, is knocked unconscious, and is carried to a nearby cottage, and put under care of a nurse, who is told that he must not be disturbed by noise. Rita, the telegraph operator, is notified that a freight train is due to pass her station, filled with high explosives. Just before the freight is due, Hopkins is awakened by a shrill blast from a locomotive whistle and jumps out of bed and rushes toward the track. He overpowers the substitute engineer and opens the throttle wide. His train is a passenger train and rushes swiftly toward the oncoming freight. Rita leaps onto a hand car and speeds on ahead of the passenger train, which shortly overtakes the hand car and crashes into it. Rita scrambles onto the cowcatcher and into the cab of the engine. After a hard struggle with the fiend, she manages to overcome him and sidetrack the passenger train.

The Substitute—Lubin—May 15.—Billy Reeves visits a fashionable restaurant and meets a charming young lady, who joins him, at his table. They get up to dance and nearly wreck the place, knocking waiters down and spilling all the platters, etc. Billy also enters the skating contest and gets sadly mussed up. He suggests that the girl accompany him to his club, where a boxing match is to take place. Billy takes the place of the boxer, who is unable to appear, and knocks him out in a blaze of glory.

Tiger Bait—Selig—May 15.—Frank Mason, his wife and little son, Billie, live on the edge of the jungle. Bob Grant, a friend of Mason's, lives with them. Frank and Bob go out into the jungle to set a tiger trap. In the meantime little Billie has lost his dog and has gone out to hunt for him. He sees him ahead and runs after him. Billie becomes lost in the jungle and follows the dog right into the tiger trap, which is baited with raw meat. At the same time an immense tiger is near the trap, but it closes as the boy enters, and his father and Bob, after a search, find little Billie happy in his recovery of the dog.

The Valley of Humiliation—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—May 15.—Mrs. Hobart, who has a comfortable income from her first husband, loses it when she remarries. Her daughter, Rosemary, is therefore thrown upon the gerenosity of her stepfather, and is continually made to feel her humiliating position. When she protests to her mother, she is told that she should have married long ago. In desperation, she advertises for a husband, and though the majority of the replies are almost insulting she eventually meets Jim Aberdeen, a Westerner, and becomes his wife. Again she is placed in a humiliating position, for she believes that she does not belong in his home. He sees this and tells her that she shall be his wife in name only until she has learned to love him, but also says that he has loved her from the moment they met. An unscrupulous friend of Aberdeen's steals some money from his cabin and Rosemary attempts to secure its return. Failing in this, she believes that it was she who was responsible for this theft, and decides not to return to Aberdeen. She wanders about the prairies, heartbroken, until Aberdeen finds her almost exhausted. He takes her home and tenderly cares for her, and upon her recovery they realize that the one obstacle between them has been removed, for she has learned to love him.

Mutual Program

Love and Money—THANHOUSER—MAY 9.—Count Nervi, a fortune hunter, pays court to a wealthy American widow living in Paris with her daughter. Nervi really loves the latter, and hits upon a plan which he thinks will accomplish his ends. He induces the mother to sign over her money to her daughter, telling her that he can then marry her without being thought a fortune hunter. In the meantime, however, the daughter's American lover arrives with his uncle, a wealthy rancher. Nervi tells the girl that if she will marry him secretely, she may immediately divorce him, and with the family fortune in her hands, wed the man of her choice. She consents, and the ceremony is performed. Then the count informs Celia that, without her husband's consent, she is powerless to achieve her freedom, and that he has no idea of giving her up to another man. At this point the minister unmasks, revealing himself as Celia's American sweetheart. He and the girl had been married the day before, and had conspired to bring disgrace upon the nobleman. The widow weds the ranchman who is rich enough for them both, and Celia and her husband keep their fortune.

The Altar of Ambition—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—MAY 10.—The story of a man's neglecting his wife, in his race for the governorship. The wife is the victim of a lot of scandal which is started by her husband's political enemy. Eventually she is ordered out of the house by her husband owing to the scandal and her daughter is taken very ill, and continually calls for her. Finally, through the dying confession of the man who has brought scandal upon the governor-elect's wife, her name is cleared and she is reconciled to her husband. For review see page 782 of this issue.

At the Hour of Eleven—RELIANCE—MAY 10.—Leila Sands forgets her love for her husband and her little daughter in her infatuation for George Gray. Little Genevieve overhears the plans for her mother's elopement with the intruder, and determines to prevent it. After her mother and father have retired, Genevieve slips downstairs, and locks the window which Mrs. Sands left open for Gray's entrance. At the appointed hour, eleven o'clock, Leila, ready to elope, steps cautiously out of her room. She stumbles over Genevieve, who has fallen asleep while on guard at the top of the stairs, and the child is thrown headlong to the bottom of the staircase. Sands, aroused, hears Gray at the window, and fires. When the lights are switched on, he realizes the situation. Leila's confession and pleas are of no avail until Genevieve intercedes for her. Then Sands is moved to compassion and forgiveness.

Life's Staircase—BEAUTY—MAY 11.—An excellently photographed story, featuring Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber. Jack Bentley and Gladys Turner are seen in their respective homes, all dressed for their wedding, and each one takes out a box of letters and keepsakes and looks them over. As the letters and tokens are looked over the young people see the past which is connected with them. The spirits of their past loves follow them down the staircase as they descend to be married, and remain with them until the minister has pronounced them man and wife.

The Smuggler—MAJESTIC—MAY 11.—Sampson and Wilson, at the expiration of their prison terms, separate, Sampson taking the road to honor, and Wilson drops back into the rut of his former career. Some years later, Sampson, now a prominent exporter, is bringing his daughter, Betty, home from an art school abroad. On the ship is Wilson, wanted for smuggling. Conners, a secret service man and an ardent admirer of Betty, is also a passenger on the boat. Wilson recognizes his old pal, and, on the threat of exposure, forces him to conceal in Betty's hat the diamonds which he is smuggling. Conners catches Sampson in the act, and learns the whole story. By a clever ruse, he manages to put the jewels back in Wilson's cane just before the latter steps ashore. On the wharf the smuggler is searched, and is dumbfounded on seeing the diamonds taken out of his cane. Conners has performed his duty, and saved Betty and her father from disgrace at the same time. Raoul A. Walsh, Billie West, Ralph Lewis, and Jack Dillon are the principals in the excellent cast seen in this production.

The Song of the Heart—THANHOUSER—MAY 11.—Arthur Ashley and Mignon Anderson featured. Arthur Von Bauer, a German composer, puts his sorrow for the loss of his parents into music, and calls it "The Song of the Heart." Stephen Richards, a pianist in a low dive, steals the music, and has it copyrighted under a different name. Mignon Ober and Arthur, employed in the same cabaret, are in love. When both are discharged because Arthur has defended Mignon from the proprietor's insults, the German composes an operetta, in which Mignon is prima donna, singing "The Song of the Heart." Richards then comes forward with his copyrighted air, and Arthur finds himself an outcast from the musical world. Mignon tries to establish her lover's right to the song, but in vain. Richards, shot in a brawl, confesses the theft, and Von Bauer, reinstated as one of the leading musicians of the day, marries Mignon.

The Broken Window—AMERICAN—MAY 12.—A clever comedy, featuring Winifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen. The professor is sitting on his porch watching a ball game when a ball whizzes past him and breaks a window. He calls the maid, played by Winifred Greenwood, who calls the repair man, Ed Coxen. After fixing the broken pane, the repair man, that night decides he must see the maid again, so goes to the house and breaks the window. The maid telephones for him the next morning and their friendship ripens. That night the maid steals downstairs and breaks the window. The repair man is called again the next morning and after declaring his love for the maid, they both confess their guilt in the breaking of the windows. The professor overhears them and telephones for a minister, cancelling his first call for a detective to come and solve the mystery of the broken window.

The Son of the Dog—RELIANCE—MAY 12.—For his assistance in helping the government in an Indian uprising, Dog-

Who-Never-Leaves-The-Scent is bidden name his reward. He asks that his son be educated as a white man. John Graham, the son, wins a medical degree at Carlisle, and later marries Mary Penton.

He is assigned the post of surgeon on the Indian reservation. At John's request, the colonel tells the Dog that he is not to disclose John's identity to the boy's white wife. The old Indian grows fond of his little grandson, and one day saves him from springing a bear trap with his hand. The son acknowledges his father, and the final scene shows the old Indian enclosing John, his wife, and his son in his blanket.

His Affianced Wife—Broncho—(Two Reels)—May 12.—Vera Ashton's brother, Jim, forces her to be his accomplice in crime. Jim is captured and sent to prison. Vera makes her get-away, and determines to live straight. She becomes a stenographer for Dixon and Company. One day Dixon, who is in love with Vera, goes out without closing the outer door of the safe. Suddenly, Jim enters. He proposes to Vera that they rob the safe. She refuses. Jim overpowers her, and breaks open the safe. Vera seizes his pistol, and commands him to replace the loot. He refuses, and she shoots him. Dixon returns, and Jim accuses Vera of being a crook. The police recognize the girl, and are about to arrest her when Dixon intervenes, saying that they are mistaken, as Vera has been his stenographer for years and is now his affianced wife. Jim lives only a few minutes, and after his death the police have no way of proving anything against Vera, so release her.

The Shoal Light—Domino—(Two Reels)—May 13.—Ezra Tucker, for thirty years keeper of the Shoal Light, receives a letter from the government, stating that he has reached the age limit and is to be succeeded by Lynn Coates. This arouses Tucker's enmity against the man. Coates' son, John, captain of a fishing vessel, arrives in port, meets Hettie Tucker, and loses his heart to her. John's first mate, discharged for drunkenness, seeks revenge by turning off the light at the shoal lighthouse on a foggy night. Tucker realizes the situation at the lighthouse, and forgets his enmity in his anxiety for the sailors and his pride in the lighthouse. He and Hettie go to the rescue, and relight the huge lamp just in time to save John Coates' vessel from going on the rocks. The mate, however, becomes lost at sea in a small craft. The following day there is a reconciliation between Tucker and his successor, and John and Hettie become engaged. Charles Ray and Estella Allen are seen as John and Hettie.

The Human Octopus—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—May 14.—John Kelcey, supposedly a reputable business man, is in reality president of the Beggars' Union, an organization composed of fakers who prey upon the sympathy of the public. Kelcey's daughter, Ruth, is in love with Tom Horton, a newspaper reporter greatly disliked by Ruth's father. Horton is assigned to investigate graft conditions in the underworld. Disguised as a tramp, he enters the tenderloin, and becomes a member of the Beggars' Union. The information which he furnishes the police enables them to raid the headquarters. He trails the chief to a cheap hotel, and, looking over the transom, recognizes John Kelcey, who has thrown off his disguise. Kelcey, threatened with exposure by the young reporter, consents to the love affair between Ruth and Tom. Walter Edwards featured.

Mike's Elopment—Reliance—May 14.—Twelve-year-old Mike and Bridget elope. Pete, a gypsy, plans to steal the children who have wandered into his camp. An old fortune-teller sees bad luck in the cards, and sends the children off. Pete attempts to catch them. While Mike is gallantly defending Bridget, he falls over a high bank. The gypsies, thinking him dead, flee in terror. Bridget takes Mike home, and they decide to wait until they are grown up before carrying out their plans of elopement.

Ferdy Fink's Flirtations—Falstaff—May 14.—A comedy romance, starring Riley Chamberlain. Ferdy Fink is quite some important personage in his home town. After dancing attendance upon several generations of young ladies, he is still a gay beau. At last he determines to settle down, and is considerably surprised to find that none of the fair damsels to whom he proposes will have him. One day, passing an apartment house, he sees a woman wave a handkerchief at him from a window many stories up. Thinking that he has found romance at last, he dashes up the stairs, and is promptly thrown down again by a brutal giant whom he meets. The next day he catches a glimpse of the coquette from the building across the way, and is shocked to see that it is a darkey maid cleaning the window with a white cloth.

Casey's Tribulations—Royal—May 15.—Casey, on his way to work in the morning, nods amicably to the widow Nolan. The gossips take note, and soon it is the talk of the neighborhood. Rumors of trouble between Casey and his wife circulate, and public sentiment runs high. It is decided to tar and feather the widow Nolan, but the attempt proves a failure. Then they advance upon the Caseys. Casey gets a coat of tar and feathers, and when he reaches home his wife finishes the job.

Added Fuel—Reliance—(Two Reels)—May 15.—Irene Hunt, Jack Conway, and Charles Lee featured. Jane Pepper, reporter on The Daily Mail, hears that her father's and brother's financial difficulties are being aired upon "the street." She begs Sim West, reporter on The Express, to suppress the article. West publishes the entire scandal, scoring a scoop. Shortly afterwards, Jane's father is found murdered. The guilt falls upon her brother. West repents his abuse of Jane's confidence, and assists her in hunting down the real murderer of her father. The butler, confronted with the evidence secured by the reporters, confesses, and Jane's brother is freed.

At the Stroke of the Angelus—Majestic—(Two Reels)—May 16.—John Ford leaves his dying sister, Alice, and her little girl in their stranded emigrant wagon while he scouts for help. He places a child, the last survivor in a neighboring party, in the wagon beside the sister. Outlaws ransacking the wagon, find both Alice and her little girl dead. Pedro, the chief, takes the chain from about the dead child's neck and clasps it around the throat of the other girl. He makes her his foster daughter, and brings her up to be a thief and street-dancer. Anita meets and falls in love with the wealthy "gringo," John Ford. Anita saves the latter from death at the hands of Pedro. In her hut, as the Angelus strikes, Anita lifts her crucifix. Ford recognizes the chain as that which once belonged to his sister. Thinking that Anita is his own niece, he goes sorrowfully away. Pedro is surprised while robbing a mission altar. In his fear he confesses, among other things, that Anita is not Ford's niece. The lovers are reunited. Charles Clary and Francelia Billington featured.

Ethel's Romance—Komic—May 16.—This is chapter twenty-three of the Bill series. As Ed is hurrying to keep a luncheon appointment with Ethel, he comes upon a woman having difficulty with her automobile. To avoid being impolite, he is compelled to drive her home. From the window Ethel sees him enter the car with the strange woman, and, on his return, greets him coldly and gives him back his engagement ring. Bill, partly dozing, hears the dispute between Ed and Ethel, and dreams that he proposes to her. Accepted, he loses no time in securing a marriage license, and having the ceremony performed. Ed, wild with jealousy, seizes Bill by the throat—and then Bill wakes up. Over in the corner Ethel and Ed are making up their little misunderstanding.

Billy dolls up as the count, and Johnny acts as his valet. The girls all fall in love with the fake count, but when the village boys bribe the gigantic Belgian cook to play a practical joke on him, his real character is disclosed. Rita scorns him and marries her former lover. Billy Reeves and Johnny Doyle starred.

Tony—Imp—May 7.—Tony, influenced by the wonderful tales of America's generosity, leaves for New York, promising to send for his wife and little girl as soon as he has earned enough for their passage. When, after a few years of hard toil, he goes to the bank to draw out his savings, he is greeted by a printed notice that payment on deposits has been suspended. Armitage, a millionaire, decides to help the institution out of its difficulties. Tony mistakes him for the bank president and follows him to his home. While hiding in the hedge, Tony sees the millionaire's little girl approach a mine used in excavating for an artificial lake. He forgets all thoughts of revenge and rescues the child, though at terrible cost to himself. During Tony's delirium, which lasts for days, Armitage learns of the man's financial condition, and sends for his wife and child in Italy. They are the first to greet the invalid on his regaining consciousness. The final scene shows Tony working for Armitage, while their two little girls play together near by. King Baggot, Jane Gail and Ned Reardon play the principal parts.

Almost a King—(Two Reels)—Nestor—May 7.—The King of Smearcase dies, leaving no male heir to the throne. Jerry, the next of lineage, is summoned from his delicatessen store in America. The new king must be unmarried, so, for the time being, Jerry forgets his wife and children. At the dock he meets an old friend, Jack, who is sailing to Europe in the interest of his firm. Jerry is greatly attracted to the pretty princess who is to be his wife, but she objects to the match, not liking Jerry's looks. Jack calls at the palace and meets the princess. They fall in love, and several times the young suitor is cast into prison for calling on the king's future wife, but each time he manages to get out. The day for the wedding arrives. As Jerry and the princess are about to be married, there is a great commotion at the door and Jerry's wife enters with all of the children in her wake. This disqualifies Jerry for the throne. Jack seems to be the only logical person to take the place, so he is chosen, to the princess' great delight. Lee Moran, Jack Dillon, Stella Adams and Billie Rhodes take the principal parts.

Wanted—A Chaperone—(Two Reels)—Nestor—May 7.—Through peculiar circumstances Jack and Eddie meet Victoria and her sister, two charming girls. Jack writes his father, asking permission to bring the girls down to their beach home. Father consents on the provision that they get Eddie's mother to act as chaperone. As she is away, Jack and Eddie induce their pal, Lee, to impersonate mother. He is so successful that even the girls do not penetrate his disguise. Eddie's mother arrives at the beach, and complications follow. In the end, things are all explained, and Jack's father and Eddie's mother decide to get married.

Gene of the Northland—(Two Reels)—Bison—May 8.—Gene Gauntier and Jack Clark featured. Jeanne and Jacques La Roche live together in the great Northwest. Jacques is arrested for robbery, and Jeanne is taken into the home of the proprietor of the post. Several years later, Donald McLean wins her for his wife. Jacques escapes from prison and hides in his sister's house. McLean sees the two in an embrace, and shoots the man, leaving him for dead. He locks his wife in the cabin and returns to town to drown out his jealousy in liquor. Jeanne dresses up in one of her husband's suits and follows her brother's footprints. Jacques is taken care of by some Indians, and Jeanne finds a home with the Cox family. Jacques, fully recovered and flush with the proceeds of a successful hunting trip, flashes his money in town, and is killed by a half-breed. Suspicion rests upon McLean until the murderer, dying, confesses. A reconciliation takes place between Jeanne and her husband.

in the roles of John Carew and Bess. Doris Meade is the sweetheart of her father's hired man, John Carew. All goes well with the country lovers until the arrival of the Thornbys. Not knowing that Clayton Thornby is married, Doris accepts his attentions, ignoring her former favorite, Carew. Nothing daunted, John exposes Thornby, determined to save Doris from humiliation and disgrace, whether or not he regains her affection by so doing. Doris is angry at this rude awakening from her dream and refuses to notice her rescuer. Not at all discouraged, however, John Picks her up and carries her to the house. When he arrives there he finds that the girl has undergone a change of mind, and the closing scene shows Doris resting her head on her lover's shoulder.

The Blood of His Brother—(Two Reel)—Bison—May 8.—Holden sends his secretary, Wright, west, in the endeavor to force his daughter to forget him. Grace promises Wright that she will wait for him. In the west Wright is a victim of a hold-up; among the highwayman's loot is a picture and letter that prove to Wright that the robber is his brother. He goes to find him, and en route locates a gold claim. He and Wright work it and become wealthy. Holden, Grace and Kingsley, the man Holden wants Grace to marry, go west. Their train kills two Indians, and in the riot that follows Grace escapes, meets Wright, and the latter comes to Holden's rescue. Kingsley had proved himself a coward, and Holden is glad to consent to the marriage of Grace and Wright.

The Toll of Youth—Laemmle—May 9.—Roderick Long decides that his son, Herbert, shall see life before marrying, and accordingly supplies him with funds with which to carry out his plans. One night Herbert returns home intoxicated, to his father's disgust. The latter sees an article in the paper, telling of the passage of the eugenics law requiring a physical examination of both parties prior to marriage. He dreams that his son fails to pass the test, and all because he had bidden him to see life before marrying. In reality, Herbert is disgusted with fast life. His father is overjoyed on learning that the medical board has pronounced his son to be in perfect physical condition.

He Fell in the Park—Nestor—(Split Reel)—May 11.—A novelist keeps a date in the park with an admirer who signed "Alice R." Mr. Crabb and his flirtatious wife go to the park, where Mrs. Crabb flirts with the author who is then attacked by Crabb. The novelist later mistakes Mrs. Crabb for Alice R. who has gone for a soda; Crabb mistakes Alice R. for his wife; his wife flirts with stranger, a policeman is summoned and peace is finally restored.

The Torrent—(Two Reels)—Bison—May 11.—Simpson hires Lindsay, expert engineer, to build a big dam. Hardy, recognizing in Lindsay the son of a man who once thrashed him for licking a small boy, determines to revenge himself upon him. The latter is already in love with Simpson's daughter, Marie, whom he is to marry when the big dam is satisfactorily completed. Hardy hires men to undermine each day's work of Lindsay, and when the dam is opened it sweeps the men and straggling villages away with it. Lindsay is saved and he and Marie ride to warn settlers. Hardy, about to drown, is saved by Lindsay. Later he confesses to his being the cause of the dam's breaking, and Lindsay is restored to grace with the Simpsons.

A Shot in the Dark—Rex—May 11.—Captain Holmes and his wife, Helen, attend the ball in honor of Major Nevins. Years prior, Helen had fancied herself in love with Nevins and had written him undated letters. These he taunts her with, and says he will return same to her if she will come for them. She does, he taunts her further, and Captain Holmes, who has come with a message for the major, hears and sees. A shot is fired and the major drops dead. At the trial Saka, Nevin's servant, confesses to the killing to avenge the honor of his sister.

A Stool Pigeon's Revenge—L-Ko—May 12.—Hank tries to double-cross the gang by tipping-off the police to one of their planned burglaries. After his pals are placed under arrest, he returns for the swag and the girl. In the meantime, however, the others have escaped, and return. Hank hides in a trunk which is carried off by the crooks. When the police attack them, Hank is kept pretty busy warding off bullets inside of the trunk. The swag is lost in the shuffle. When the crooks find Hank inside of the trunk, they give him the time of his life.

Profit and Loss—(Two Reels)—May 12.—Julie marries Baxter because of his wealth, though she loves Van Kuran, the artist. Grace, sister of Julia, conceals her love for Baxter. Later he becomes blind. Julia and the artist decide to elope about the same time that Baxter discovers his sight can be restored. He plans this as a surprise to Julia, but the surprise is on him, as he returns to find Van Kuran kissing her. He pretends blindness; Julia and the artist elope and Grace tries to assuage the hurt of the announcement to the blind man, but he relates the double opening of his eyes—to Julia's worthlessness and Grace's worth.

Pokes and Jabbs—Sterling—May 13.—Mr. and Mrs. Jabbs and Mr. and Mrs. Pokes have respective quarrels because Mr. Pokes bestows much admiration on Mrs. Jabb's fur coat. The women go out, and Mr. Jabbs, in female attire, attends a masque ball with Mr. Pokes. Many mishaps lead to Jabbs losing his key, and Pokes invites him to spend the night with him. A new series of troubles start for both men when their wives return and fail to recognize Jabbs in feminine attire. Considerable confusion results before explanations are credited.

An Idyl of the Hills—(Two Reels)—Rex—(May 13.—Kate Graham is beloved by two mountaineers, Lafe Jameson, a moonshiner, and Dick Massey, who studies in secret that he might go out into the world and make good. Kate discovers him studying, and ridicules him. Later she meets a foreigner, Frank Collins, and becomes ashamed of her ignorance. Lafe, jealous, threatens Frank. The latter explains to both Kate and

Lafe that his interest in the former means nothing, as she is but an ignorant girl. Kate and Lafe are enraged. Lafe convinces the mountaineers that Frank is a revenuer, and they draw lots to see who will kill him. Dick is chosen. Kate threatens to kill Frank herself. Dick, on meeting Frank, is convinced of the latter's straightforwardness, and walks away. He hears a shot and, returning, finds Frank has been shot. Dick, thinking Kate is guilty, takes the blame, but Frank recovers in time to explain that he shot himself. Kate and Dick are united and together study the primer.

A Child of God—(FOUR REELS)—RELIANCE.—Sam DeGrasse, Francelia Billington and Richard Cummings are the featured players in this drama from the pen of Cyrus Townsend Brady. Sam, a rough but wealthy rancher, seeks Frances's love. She scorns him till he rescues her from a half breed's advances, but leaves for home without giving him any hope. On her arrival at her father's she finds Chet, an old admirer, owns a mortgage on the home and is also anxious to marry her. This mortgage he is using as a lever to force the acceptance he wishes. While Frances is debating whether she should sacrifice herself for her parents, word comes from her sister, whose husband has died and left her penniless, that she is returning home with her baby. When she is told the news by her father, Frances realizes that it would be a hopeless struggle, and consents to marry Chet for the family's sake.

The train bringing the sister and her baby East is wrecked by collision with another train just outside the town where Sam lives, and Sam himself goes to help rescue survivors. The sister, fatally injured, prevails on a minister to christen the baby before her death and Sam is pressed into service as godfather. The minister promises to take the baby safely to its grandfather's home.

Impressed by this incident Sam buys a Bible, and defends himself from the taunts of the "boys" when accused of "pulling freight for Heaven" and becoming a "child of God." Interest in his godchild leads him to take a trip East to see it. On his arrival he finds himself in the home of Frances, who has just accepted Chet. Sam and Chet immediately clash over Frances, and when Sam learns that Chet is using the mortgage as a club he kicks the bounder out. This done, he assures Frances, who has shown that she loves him, that he will take care of the mortgage and her, too.

The Absentee—(FIVE REELS)—MAJESTIC—Robert Edeson is featured in this five-reel picture produced by W. C. Cabanne. It depicts the problem of Big Business which will appeal to business men the world over, since it points out many evils to which Big Business is subject. A splendid allegorical prologue precedes the telling of the story. See review on page 779, this issue. N. G. C.

The Victim—(THREE REELS)—MAJESTIC.—A splendid story from the pen of Paul West, produced by George Seigmann. Robert Harron appears as Frank Hastings, who escapes from the penitentiary after being sentenced for a crime of which he is innocent. After Frank has invented a new safe, James Darrow, played by Eugene Pallette, under threat of exposing his past, compels Frank to open the vaults of the First National Bank, that Darrow and his companions may rob the safe. Frank locks the men within, summons the police and later Darrow, dying, confesses the wrong he has done Frank. See review on page 784, this issue.

North American

The Silent Witness—(THIRD CHAPTER "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY")—(TWO REELS)—NORTH AMERICAN.—Blair Stanley, after murdering Doctor Lee, flees from the house, pursued by Arthur, and in a lonely cemetery the two men fight a duel, Blair falling into an open grave, and Arthur, believing himself a murderer, flees. Blair revives and makes his way home while Arthur, suspicion cast upon him for the murder of Doctor Lee, flees in a high powered automobile when pursued by the sheriff. After escaping death in front of an approaching train, Arthur's car plunges over a cliff and the latter is seen floating down the river, as the chapter ends. Unquestionably one of the most exciting episodes in any serial now before the public. See review on page 780, this issue. N. G. C.

Paramount

Help Wanted—MOROSCO—(FIVE REELS)—Lois Meredith and Owen Moore have the leads in this filmatization of Jack Lait's clever play. Gertie Meyer is employed as a stenographer in the offices of Scott & Son, New York importers, but though her shorthand and typing are mussy and her spelling weird, she is seventeen and beautiful, which seem to be the only requisite necessary to satisfy

Scott senior, who employs two stenographers, one to do the work and the other to flirt with. Gertie is totally unsuspicious of the man until one night he keeps her after hours, has a wine supper brought up from a nearby cafe and locks her in a private office with himself. Unknown to the father, Gertie has received the attentions of Jack Scott, the son, and just as the girl has given up all hope, Jack bursts in to save her from his father, though by doing so he is thrown out of the office and cut off without a cent. Later Jack conceals from his mother the actions of his father and by his gameness so touches the father that the latter, on regaining his senses, is extremely Pathe News No. 31—Pathe—In this issue of the topical will be found views of the delegates to the women's international peace conference at The Hague, sailing from Hoboken, New Jersey; the observance of Arbor Day at St. Louis, Mo.; the tenth annual field day and meet of the English Setter Club of America at Medford, New Jersey; the wreck of the two-masted schooner off Narragansett Pier, Rhode Island; President Wilson attending the opening ball game of the American League in Washington, D. C.; Australian troops sight seeing in Egypt, and an animated cartoon by cartoonist Bray.

Unfounded Jealousy — Pathe—(Two Reels)—Lillian Wiggins featured. Lil visits her sister, Phyllis. The latter's husband admires the city girl, and enjoys her company. His intentions, however, are misunderstood by his wife, and one day she cuts the reins of the horse on which Lil intends riding into town. After her sister's departure, Phyllis is horrified to learn that she has taken her little girl with her. A cowboy rescues the child, and Lil narrowly escapes death when the horse plunges down a steep hill. A general understanding follows explanations. C. R. C.

Pathe News No. 34—Pathe.—This issue of the topical pictures the work of the Surgical Dressings Committee, which is preparing bandages for the war zone in Europe, in New York City; a display of French bull dogs at the Hotel Astor, New York City; the annual parade of the police department, New York City; the track meet at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia; the varsity crew race between Harvard and the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and in the war section views taken near Paris and in the vicinity of the Dardanelles.

Universal Special

The Black Box — (Episode Nine) — (Two Reels)—Universal.—Lord John is found murdered, in this episode, and Craig is captured by the gamekeeper of the estate. The prisoner escapes and Quest and the professor leave for London. In London, Leonora has become lost in the fog, and captured by a gang of white-slavers. She escapes, with Quest's aid. Laura has seen Craig taking a boat for Port Said and reports this to Quest. They all board the boat on which Craig is on. Review appears on page 785 of this issue. J. C. G.

World

Opened by Mistake—World Comedy Stars—(One Reel).—Richard Carle is featured in this comedy, as Phillip Page, famous author, who writes his stories on the backs of envelopes. After his marriage he receives an order to write a best seller and locks himself in a room to begin the novel. His wife has stocked the room with pens, ink and fine paper, but no envelopes. Page, in desperation, writes a hundred letters to himself and on receiving them uses their backs on which to write. His wife fearing he has gone made summons an alienist, but Page opens the reply by mistake, and is on the watch for the man when he arrives. Though Page is captured, bound and examined by the doctor, he is finally able to explain all and is released.

The Butterfly—(Five Reels)—World. Howard Estabrook is featured in this adaptation of Henry Ketchell Webster's famous novel, which relates how a hunchback, in revenge against a woman who had repulsed him, lures her stepdaughter to the stage and assists her to become a dancer. The girl, who is named Elaine, has two lovers, for one of whom, Jack Butler, she forms a sincere attachment. Her stepmother goes to see her dance, and the hunchback, still enraged, murders her. The hunchback goes mad, and is later killed by falling from a cliff. Butler, Elaine's lover, is accused of killing the hunchback, but Elaine clears him of the charge by proving the hunchback was the murderer of her stepmother. Elaine and Butler marry ere the film ends.

Miscellaneous

The Bulldogs of the Trail—Picture Playhouse—(Four Reels).—John Graham and his daughter, Peggy, arrive in Blackfoot, Canada, to visit Inspector Creighton of the mounted police. At about the same time a young lieutenant of the corps arrives to assist in running down a notorious outlaw. While riding through the woods one day, McLoyd and Peggy find Graham's dead body hidden under a pile of underbrush. Peggy, thinking that the policeman killed her father in firing at a bird near this pile a few minutes before, accuses him of the murder. McLoyd determines to clear up the mystery. Creighton's strange actions cause McLoyd to center his investigations about his superior officer. Finally, after the inspector's death, McLoyd succeeds in clearing up the mystery and rescues Peggy from the clutches of a certain secret Hindoo society, which is responsible for the two murders. Kenneth MacDougal and Sydney Shields featured. C. R. C.

The Middleman—(Five Reels)—Cosmofotofilm.—Albert Chevalier, the famous British actor, is featured throughout this photoplay adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' drama, in the role of Cyrus Blankarn, and his wonderfully expressive face undoubtedly goes far toward making the production a successful one. The play is highly melodramatic and the acting throughout powerful. It deals with the time honored ingredients of the rich but unscrupulous employer, and the humble inventor, whose daughter yields to the blandishments of the wealthy employer's son with dire consequences to herself, the father's final revenge through the discovery of a trade secret which revolutionizes the business and makes the inventor independent while ruining the haughty employer, and naturally ends with the marriage of the girl to her supposedly false, but in reality faithful, lover.

The Commuters—(Five Reels)—George Kleine.—Larry Brice and his friend, Rolliston, are suburbanites, and both phone their wives that business detains them, and spend the night amid the bright lights. Larry takes home with him Sammy, an orchestra director, and next morning, on waking, forgets about his friend. When the latter is discovered in bed by Carrie, the maid, there is a rumpus and Hetty, Larry's wife, guessing the truth, orders Sammy from the house. The latter, whose clothes have been mislaid by Larry, insists on remaining until a suit of clothes is provided. After acquiring a new suit of clothes, sent out by Larry, he butts into a suffragette meeting downstairs. The ladies put the wrong interpretation on his presence and Hetty is much embarassed. Meanwhile, Mrs. Rolliston has discovered her husband was out the night before, and the two ladies, together with Sammy and later Rolliston and Larry, who return home, become involved in many complications before things are straightened out. It is built purely for laughing purposes, and Irene Fenwick is featured.

World Film Disposes of Foreign Rights

OTHER NEWS OF THE WEEK

THE World Film Corporation last week completed arrangements whereby the entire feature rights for the world, with the exception of the United States and Canada, were disposed of to Hyman Winik and Henry J. Brock of London, England, the transaction involving millions of dollars and insuring the World Film Corporation profit through its foreign output of $200,000 a year—that is, 12 per cent of its capital stock.

Messrs. Winik and Brock, upon their return to London, will, if the established copyright laws permit, establish a firm to be known as the World Film Corporation of London, and if this title is found impossible, the name of Winik, Brock & Company, Inc., will possibly be adopted.

The new company will operate in the British Isles territory itself and expects to dispose of the rest of the foreign rights to other concerns.

Both men involved in this gigantic deal have an excellent reputation in motion picture circles, Mr. Winik being a pioneer film importer, who many years ago organized the Acme Feature Film Company and has three film theaters in Tacoma, Washington. He is now on his way to the Pacific Coast, where he will remain for several weeks before returning to London to take up his duties as president of the new corporation.

Henry J. Brock of Buffalo is one of the big figures in the American trade and general manager of the famous Mark-Brock theatrical enterprises, which controls eighteen of the largest and best known theaters in the East. Mr. Brock was recently made president of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Corporation, and is a managing director of the United Motion Pictures, Ltd., which controls ten film theaters in Canada and the United States.

The World Film Corporation is delighted over the new arrangement since it will necessitate its dealing with only one concern and guarantee it an assured market for all its products. The new company, on the other hand, will be taking only the films which have proven successes by a thorough tryout in America and will thus have an established prestige when they are released on the European market.

Thomas A. Edison Honored

"Inventor and World Benefactor" is the inscription on the gold medal with which the Civic Forum in New York last week honored Thomas A. Edison as a national testimonial. President Butler, of Columbia University, who presided and made the presentation, said:

"This gold medal is not awarded for any particular achievement, but for distinguished services and great scientific achievements and in recognition of a great career, which has a place among the very highest in the roll of human history."

Not all the friends and admirers of the inventor and scientist who went to Carnegie Hall to pay him honor were able to get inside. All the seats from gallery to stage were occupied when Mr. and Mrs. Edison walked with the speakers to the front of the platform. The great audience of men and women stood when Mr. Edison and the others on the stage arose as the presentation was made. Those who expected that Mr. Edison would talk to them were disappointed when he resumed his seat after a whispered conference with Dr. Butler, who thereupon announced:

"Mr. Edison has whispered to me that 'actions speak louder than words in appreciation.'".

President Wilson sent this message to Mr. Edison, through Isaac W. Seligman:

The White House, Washington, D. C., May 6, 1915.

Please present my sincere and most cordial greetings to Mr. Edison this evening, and say how happy I would be if it were possible for me to be present to express my great admiration of his distinguished services and achievements.

WOODROW WILSON.

Letters from ex-President Theodore Roosevelt and ex-President William H. Taft, Alexander Graham Bell and others were read by Robert Erskine Ely, a trustee of the Forum. Those who lauded the work and personality of Mr. Edison in addresses were Nicholas Murray Butler, ex-Governor J. Franklin Fort, of New Jersey; George McAneny, Guglielmo Marconi, President Richard C. MacLaurin, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Charles A. Coffin, chairman of the board of the General Electric Company; Dr. John A. Brashear, the Pittsburgh astronomer, and Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz.

Harry Weiss Promoted

In appreciation of the splendid way in which Harry Weiss has been conducting the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation, Mr. Selznick has appointed him assistant to W. R. Scates, central division manager. Harry will still supervise the local office, for the time being at least, but C. A. Dickinson, who has been assistant manager, will have charge of most of the details, so that when Scates is out of town, which he is quite frequently, Weiss will be able to handle his work.

Succesful Minnesota Convention

In the closing hours of the convention and exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest the following officers were elected: H. H. Green, Minneapolis, president; V. B. Valleau, Albert Lea, vice-president; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, secretary; and O. C. Stelzner, Minneapolis, treasurer. The executive committee elected was as follows: James Gilosky, St. Paul; D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis; H. P. Green, Minneapolis; W. A. Scott, Red Wing; and E. A. Nelson, Duluth. Vice-presidents were as follows: Wisconsin—J. D. Sherman, Madison; North Dakota—J. M. Freeman, Hillsboro; South Dakota—C. W. Gates, Aberdeen; Iowa—J. E. Boile, Dubuque; Montana—Mrs. Myrtle Vinton, Bridger; Northern Michigan—D. J. Kulaszevicz, Bessemer.

There were thousands of visitors connected indirectly with motion pictures present at this convention, which was one of the most successful motion picture conventions ever called to order.

The meeting was held at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, where many exhibitors displayed their wares in handsome booths. Among the prominent manufacturers who exhibited at the exposition were:

Lubin Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia; Ohio Picture Frame Company, Minneapolis; Zenith Feature Film Co., Duluth; World Film Corporation, Minneapolis; World Film Corporation, New York; National Carbon Company, Cleveland; National Carbon Company, Minneapolis; Barnard & Babcock, Chicago; Wisconsin Seating Co., New London; L. Bauman Floral Co., Chicago; Mid-West Feature Film Co., Minneapolis; Camera Craft, Minneapolis; Western Motion Picture Advertising Association, Minneapolis; Moving Picture World, New York; Herbert Pagel Co., Minneapolis; Western Motion Picture Advertising Association of Minneapolis; Billboard, Cincinnati; Radium Brand Sanitary Spray Co., Minneapolis; Feature Film Co., St. Paul; Minnehaha Film Co., Minneapolis; Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Northwest, Minneapolis; W. J. Dyer Bros., St. Paul; Northwestern State Film Co., Minneapolis; Amusement, Tom Hamlin, Minneapolis; Rowe Walker Features, Minneapolis; Exhibitors' Photoplay Co., Minneapolis; Minneapolis Costume Co., Minneapolis; Cushman Motor Works, Lincoln; Milwaukee Poster Mounting Co., Minneapolis; Twin City Film Supply Co., Minneapolis; Arcus Ticket Co., New York; Jerome H. Remick, New York; R. L. Lunt, Minneapolis; Great Northern Film Co.; National Cash Register Co.; George Kleine Features; Minnesota Theater Advertising Co.; MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago; Twin City Renovating Co.; Metro Feature Film Co.; Western Kriterion Film Service; General Film Co.; United Film Service; Bartola Music Co., Chicago; Fox Film Corporation; Famous Players Star Feature Film Corporation; Selig Polyscope Co., Chicago; Quality Film Service, Minneapolis; Carter Theater Curtain Co.; Sterling Electric Co.; Pathe Film Co.; Laemmle Film Exchange, Universal Films; Osborn Music Co., Minneapolis; Rosenberg Feature Co., Minneapolis; Bryan-Marsh Electric Co., Minneapolis; Oliver Typewriter Agency, Minneapolis.

The official title of the association was changed and hereafter it will be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest. This association includes the exhibitors in the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Nevada and Northern Michigan. At the Tuesday afternoon session Mayor Wallace Nye of Minneapolis delivered an address of welcome; at Thursday's session the election of officers occurred and Miss Beverly Bayne of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, whose presence was secured through the assistance and co-operation of William J. Sweeney, treasurer of the Chicago local, was introduced and made a short address.

A large and varied program of entertainment, which provided amply for the ladies as well as the men, included a big frolic and gambol costume parade, athletic entertainment, Bohemian lunch and elaborate banquet, constant musical entertainment, theater parties, and closed with a grand ball on Friday night. Credit for the unprecedented success of this great convention and exposition is certainly due to the following officers and committees:

Program Committee—Messrs. H. P. Green, chairman; A. L. Hill and F. B. Benno. Entertainment and Reception Committee—J. P. Agnew, chairman, assisted by, Minneapolis—Messrs. D. W. Chamberlain, Thomas W. Saxe, C. E. Van Duzee, E. Hinz, J. Carlson; St. Paul—Messrs. O. H. Raths, S. R. Thompson, George Grandstrom, Charles Elsworth, W. H. Carey, Willmar; R. W. Parker, Duluth; E. A. Nelson, Duluth; W. A. Scott, Red Wing; Wisconsin—John Saxe, Milwaukee; Bert Sherwood, Madison, and Messrs. Muss of Madison, Scheiber of Plymouth; Wodke of Lakemills and Loibl of Cedarsburg; North Dakota—Messrs. C. R. Blades, Bottineau; C. F. Smith, Bech; Clavier, Fargo; McCarthy, Fargo; Treat, Fargo; A. J. Cavanaugh, Grand Forks; Gus Meyers, Grand Forks; South Dakota—Messrs. C. T. Smithers, Aberdeen and Watertown; P. R. Dix, Mitchell; Lean, Madison; Iowa—Messrs. J. Boyle, Dubuque; Relf, Decorah; Illinois—W. J. Sweeney, Chicago. Marshals for Frolic and Gambol—Thos. Patrick Gleason, chief marshal, assisted by, J. F. Cubberley, Duluth; H. J. McCoy, Minneapolis; O. C. Stelzner, Minneapolis, S. Zimmerman, Minneapolis; S. R. Thompson, St. Paul. Publicity Committee—William S. Steffes, chairman, assisted by David Rogers, Jake Barnet, James Gilosky, Otto N. Rathe, Harry H. Green, D. W. Chamberlain. Committee of Grand Ball—James Gilosky, master of ceremony, assisted by members of locals No. 1 and 2.

New Ince Stars

Willard Mack, author and actor, and Frank Keenan are to join the Thomas Ince forces in southern California very soon. They are slated to appear in forthcoming Mutual masterpieces. Willard Mack is the author of "Kick In" and "So Much for So Much." As character actor and leading man Keenan has few equals anywhere.

Mr. Ince's "Big Six" now includes Keenan, H. B. Warner, Dustin Farnum, George Beban, Mack and William S. Hart. Julia Beane, the character actress, is also under contract.

Will Visit El Camino Real Trail

Guests of the Selig Motion Picture Special will be privileged to travel over the historic way known as El Camino Real, when they go to California next July. It follows the trail broken by Father Sierra and the Franciscan fathers who followed in his footsteps, missionaries among a people who have vanished from their ranchos and who are scattered in poverty today.

For El Camino Real takes the curious traveler to those famous landmarks, the missions, with their clinging lore of legends and appealing memories. Many have crumbled into dust. Others are forlorn in their tumbled state but here and there, throughout the state, the most notable of these adobe structures have been preserved through the offices of a society which cried out against the despoliation of these edifices, and set on foot an organized effort to save them.

As the Selig Motion Picture Special moves southward from San Francisco, it will cut El Camino Real trail at every historical point. The missions of Santa Barbara, quaint but wholly beautiful, will be visited. Other fine specimens will be seen along the way while, at Los Angeles, the oldest edifice of this character in the rancho land will be opened for inspection. It still is used as a place of worship by thousands of Mexicans, many of whom may be seen daily, in siesta at the adjoining plaza.

Again at famous Capistrano, a noble pile representing a very large mission of earliest days is to be seen, while San Diego will reveal even more interesting sights. In addition to adobe town, with its curious streets, Ramona's home and gardens will be visited by the guests of the special.

To the uninitiated, there is no subject in the Land of Gold which will make greater appeal than these missions, with their altars, paintings and ancient decorations. These alone are worthy of the trip across the states.

Kleine's Italian Studio

George Kleine's beautiful Italian studio, work on which was completed recently, is probably the most unique institution of its kind in the world. The new Kleine studio is located on the site of an old walled estate about five miles from the city of Turin. This beautiful demesne, surrounded by eighteen-foot walls, comprises ten acres, superbly laid out, its crux being a spacious villa four centuries old surrounded by a magnificent grove of ancient trees. The grounds are charmingly diversified with many varieties of shrubbery and flowering plants, beautiful vistas with the distant foothills and mountains shadowy in the background, and a delightful lake fairly alive with plant and animal life, enhance the natural view.

Throughout the grounds are avenues of stately trees, planted in cross effect, and many formal gardens. On the property are splendid examples of Swiss chalet, characteristic German and French buildings and several other styles of architecture, ancient and modern, that can be used for pictorial purposes.

The administration building is an ancient villa. The entire plant follows the modern unit system throughout in arrangement.

The first building erected was a studio of medium size, 100x40 feet, with glass sides, in which has been installed an American heating and ventilating plant, assuring warmth in winter and coolness in summer. Close by is the building for developing and printing; while a large depot for properties, together with a well-equipped carpenter shop and a spacious scenic department are located across the plaza. This unique, artistic reservation, with its lovely groves of ancient trees, its wealth of flowering plants, its luxuriance of shrubbery, its fairy lake bordered with myrtle, furnishes environment and inspiration that is really rare.

The architectural planning and equipment of this remarkable plant is thoroughly modern, including rest places and dressing rooms for an army of people (a detail generally disregarded in European picture plants), a large restaurant and many modern conveniences for artists and auxiliaries. These are comprised in a structure known as the long building (310 feet in length), which nestles along the shadow of the north wall of the enclosure. It hardly need be remarked that the mechanical and optical equipment of this establishment is second to none—it is a unique and complete settlement, sufficient unto itself, isolated; yet in easy reach of the thriving city of Turin.

Beginning at the left, as one looks at the accompanying illustration, one will see the long building in the background and in the front and to the right of this the main studio, while at the extreme right hand corner of the long building is the developing and printing plant. Just over the roof of the building nearest the center of the picture one beholds the German cottage, and a portion of this is devoted to the property room and scene loft, while just beyond it is visible the canal or lagoon which will be used for water scenes. A clump of trees near the center of the picture is known as the California wood, and will be used for many beautiful exteriors, while the building just to the right of the center of the picture is a villa and is several hundreds of years old. Still farther to the right is a winter garden, while just beyond the garden is a Swiss cottage, its architecture typical of the Alpine structures of Switzerland, and adjoining this cottage is a whole street of buildings adaptable to costume or period productions, since there are buildings whose architecture conforms to that of many European countries.

Farrar Films on Paramount Program

The Lasky Feature Play Company announces definite decisions on two of the most important points connected with the photoplay productions in which the world's supreme diva, Geraldine Farrar, is to appear under the direction of this concern.

Firstly, Cecil B. De Mille, director general for the Lasky Company, will personally direct all the productions in which Geraldine Farrar appears.

Secondly, these Farrar productions will be released absolutely, entirely and exclusively through, and only through, the Paramount program. Any exhibitor who signs for the Paramount program will positively have these marvels of the art; and there is no price at all at which other exhibitors can get them or hope to get them. Farrar is Lasky and Lasky is Paramount.

Samuel Goldfish, who is now on his way to the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Cal., to consult with Mr. Lasky and Mr. De Mille, made these two announcements just before his departure for the coast. In fact, one of the chief reasons for his western trip is to see to the final arrangements for the productions in which Miss Farrar will star.

Herbert Standing

Herbert Standing, whose powerful characterizations in the Bosworth-Morosco feature pictures are attracting much attention, has a brilliant record in the history of the London stage for the past forty years, where he shared honors with such men as Irving, Wyndham and Hare, who were subsequently elevated to the peerage.

Mr. Standing came from a family of devout Quakers with whom any mention of the playhouse was absolutely tabooed. But genius is as inexplicable in picking its abiding place as it is in finding ways to assert itself, and one of the Standing family, a brother, gained fame as head of the famous English Opera Company under the name of "William T. Carleton." A sister, one of the foremost grand opera contraltos of England, a Mme. Normand, became subsequently the soloist at Henry Ward Beecher's church. Herbert Standing himself never saw a theatrical performance until he was twelve, when he earned a half crown "seeing people home" from the Derby and purchased with it a ticket to a melodrama given on the village green by strolling players.

New V. L. S. E. Offices

Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., announces that arrangements have been completed for a new branch to be located at Boston, Mass. This will make the eighth distributing point for the features of the "Big Four" and will be in charge of Charles H. Webster, who is personally known to, and numbers among his friends over 75 per cent of the exhibitors in the New England states.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., Inc., is now in Boston negotiating for a suitable location for the offices. The New England branch will supply the theaters in New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and in Connecticut, east of the Connecticut River. All of this territory has been taken from the New York office.

Announcement is also made of the permanent location of the San Francisco branch. These offices are located at 986 Market street, San Francisco, in charge of C. B. Price.

To relieve the Chicago and Philadelphia offices, which are already working to capacity, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., will leave for Pittsburgh and Columbus at the end of this week, and if suitable arrangements can be made, will establish branch offices in each of these cities. While the big four expected a large volume of business, the direct booking system and the quality of the features have so interested the exhibitors that immediate action is necessary in reducing the territory covered by the eight branches already opened.

Ince Recovering

The whole industry will be pleased to learn that, according to the last reports from Santa Barbara, Thomas H. Ince, vice-president and general manager of the New York Motion Picture Company, who recently was nearly killed when his automobile turned turtle with him while he was returning to Los Angeles from the Ince studios, is now on the road to recovery.

The doctors who have Mr. Ince under their care, after a thorough examination, feel safe in declaring that he has suffered no serious internal injuries, and since he has a splendid physique they believe it is possible that within a few weeks at most he will be himself again, though there were few men who would have been able to go through the experience which Mr. Ince suffered with any hope of recovery.

Arthur Johnson Ill

Word comes from Philadelphia that Arthur V. Johnson, leading man and one of the directors for the Lubin Film Manufacturing Company, is dangerously ill in that city, his condition being so serious that his attending physicians refuse to hold out any hope for his recovery.

Mr. Johnson for the past six years has been rated as among the best of leading men on the picture screen and is well known through the innumerable releases of both the Biograph and Lubin brands in which he has appeared. During the last four years he has been continually in the employ of the Lubin Company.

Since his wonderful constitution has stood him in good stead so far during his illness, his host of friends trust that he will still be able to recuperate in spite of the adverse verdict given by his physicians.

New Charlie Chaplin Novelty

The R. & L. Company, of Meriden, Conn., has recently put out a neat little fob, with the head of Charley Chaplin on the charm. It is a leather fob, with a silver buckle and silver charm on the end of it. The same company has also put out a clasp pin of the same design as the fob, only a pin is on the back instead of a strap.

Lionel Barrymore For "Elaine"

Pathe has added to the fine cast of the new "Exploits of Elaine," Lionel Barrymore, celebrated brother of the famous John and Ethel Barrymore, and nephew of John Drew. Never in pictures has such an aggregation of real stars been identified with one production as in "Elaine," — Arnold Daly, Edwin Arden, Pearl White, and Lionel Barrymore.

Lionel Barrymore.

This is not Mr. Barrymore's first appearance on the screen — he has had important parts in several big productions, but it is with the legitimate stage that his name has been most associated. He was broken into the profession by his uncle, John Drew, with whom he played for a number of years. Among the famous plays with which he was identified were "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," "The Other Girl," Barrie's play "Pantaloon," "The Best of Friends," and "Sag Harbor," with James A. Hearne. After playing in "The Other Girl," Mr. Barrymore fulfilled youthful aspirations by going to Paris to study painting, an occupation so fascinating that it held him in France for three years. Mr. Barrymore says that when he returned to America he found his fellow artists in the cast of "The Other Girl" all famous—Richard Bennett, Wally Eddinger, Doris Kean, and Tully Marshal, which caused him to think hard upon the old saw about the cobbler sticking to his last. Then he decided there was more money in acting in pictures than in painting them and worked in a number of feature productions.

Mr. Barrymore owns a fine summer home at Rocky Point, Long Island, but says that he has been trying in vain for four years to get acquainted with it. No sooner does he start to leave town than he is offered a fat engagement which no sane man could refuse.

The Whartons expect to move the "Exploits of Elaine" Company to Ithaca in a week or two, and take the future installments on their fine new property there. This is what reconciles Mr. Barrymore to another summer spent away from Rocky Point, his summer home.

Alabama's Beauty Ball

Alabama's greatest state function, the Alabama Beauty Ball, which is to be held by the Birmingham News in conjunction with the Universal Film Company, will be held in the Tutwiler Hotel in Birmingham on the night of May 12.

This is to be the greatest ball in the history of the state. All Alabama is talking about it. That night will be chosen the most beautiful girl in Alabama, and, as a prize for her beauty, she is to go to California for four or five wonderful weeks as the guest of the Birmingham News and the Universal Film Company.

The boards of the Neighborhood House and the Woman's Auxiliary of the Associated Charities agreed to take charge of the Alabama Beauty Ball, look after all the arrangements and make it one of the most successful affairs of the kind ever held in the state. The proceeds are to go to charity.

Governor and Mrs. Charles Henderson will lead the grand march, in which all the beauties of the ball will take part. Senator and Mrs. Oscar W. Underwood, Senator and Mrs. John Hollis Bankhead, Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison and members of the National House and Senate will also be in the grand march.

Discusses Film Industry

Returning to his Chicago office from New York, where he, with other leading motion picture manufacturers, completed the work of organizing the V. L. S. E., to release special multiple reel photoplays direct to the exhibitor, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Manufacturing Company and pioneer in the industry, consented to talk on the years of careful planning that made such special releases possible, and of the future of the photoplay.

George K. Spoor.

"To the uninitiated it might seem that this step was the work of a week," said Mr. Spoor. "Those who took active part in it know that it was the result of looking into the future years ago, of months and months of planning and hard work to perfect details. The final plans of organization were completed quickly, but the basis of these plans grew out of long and careful study.

"Essanay was making definite plans for feature releases more than a year ago. Photoplay rights on novels that had been stamped with the approval of the public and written by authors of world-wide reputation were being purchased and the books put into dramatic form. Before the consummation of the plans several features had been completed and were ready to offer to the public.

"This is but one step forward in the line of Essanay policy. It is but one step forward in the progress of the photoplay industry. Other and greater steps will follow.

"The motion picture industry has gone through a more rapid evolution than almost any other. It now has reached a solid and lasting basis, but there is no limit to its continued advance. It is the man of today who is planning for the needs and demands of the future who will be making a success ten years from now, just as it was the man who dreamed of the possibilities of the present time ten years ago who is in the producing business now.

"In 1895, when I was first making pictures, anything that would move on the screen would pass. Moving pictures were a novelty and everything was accepted. Then was conceived the 1,000 foot film with some connecting idea, though loosely constructed, and the motion picture was born.

"This gave way to the photoplay of the present, a play with a genuine plot, a picture with a problem of human life to unravel. And the photoplay still is in the process of making.

"Essanay has fought to bring the photoplay up to its present standard, to make all its plays of consistent worth, standardized plays; to inject realistic action into its dramas and do away with the old time fake camera tricks. It has aimed to make its plays of high moral standard, to raise the artistic value and to better the photographic work.

"It is not content, however, to stand on this. It is looking into the future. It hopes to raise the standard as much in the next ten years as it has in the past. It is seeking to find what the public wants tomorrow, that it may be first on the ground to supply the new needs and the new demands.

"It is still dreaming dreams and hammering away to make these dreams a reality, so that the photoplay of tomorrow will be a thing of art and beauty, while losing none of its human interest touch, the touch which always has and always will endear it to the mass of the people."

Lowry, a Hero

Ira M. Lowry, treasurer and general manager of the Lubin Company, distinguished himself last week by capturing a runaway horse after a wild chase of three miles through the streets of Philadelphia. Mr. Lowry was on his way home at 1 o'clock in the morning in his big racing car. As he reached Broad and Diamond streets another automobile shot around the corner and smashed into and wrecked a farm wagon. The farmer's horse, with part of the wagon still hitched to him, bolted. Lowry swung his car around and started in pursuit. The Lubin official raced ahead, blowing his siren, and warning everyone to get out of the way. Time after time Lowry tried to block the horse, but each time it swerved like a polo pony. At Diamond and Tenth streets Lowry slowed up long enough for a policeman to jump on the running board and then the chase was continued. At Second street Lowry took a long chance and shot his big car directly in the path of the horse. That was the end of the runaway. The Lubin treasurer was warmly congratulated by the police officials for his bravery and for the skillful way in which he handled the big racing car.

A Youthful "Producer"

"Hey, youse! 'Taint time fer de huggin' stunt! Wait till we gets to de end of de fillum!"—Los Angeles Tribune.

Eugenie Forde

To Miss Eugenie Forde, playing the role of Hagar in "The Diamond from the Sky," has fallen one of the most difficult characterizations thus far presented on the screen—that of a Gypsy mother whose infant son is sold for gold. To portray all that the gypsy Hagar endures, always fighting, struggling, battling, requires a dramatic investment that few players in motion pictures possess. When "The Diamond from the Sky" was in its productive inception, the character of Hagar caused some apprehension, for it was felt the person selected to play it must be a most unusually gifted player.

Eugenie Forde.

A survey of available players was at first disheartening, until it was learned that Miss Forde could be obtained. In every way she qualified for the part, being equipped with a physical daring second to no woman in pictures, and possessing a dramatic knowledge gleaned from long association with the most resplendent stars on the American stage. That her selection was a happy one is proven by the recent showing of the first chapters of the North American Film Corporation's big offering. We find Miss Forde, as the gypsy Hagar, her heart torn by the anguish that only the mother of a first-born can know, but with a spirit undaunted and a courage unlimited, except by the demands of her aching heart's cry for revenge.

Originally Miss Forde made her stage debut in musical comedy, understudying Jennie Hawley with Francis Wilson in "The Toreador." Despite her mellow contralto voice, the speaking stage, with its hard, up-hill climb, lured her. Blanche Walsh chose her for an important part in "The Kreutzer Sonata" and, because of her success, later cast her in "The Straight Road." Miss Forde had important engagements with John Drew in "His House in Order," Maxine Elliott in "Her Own Way," and lastly with "Polly of the Circus"—an experience and equipment which she uses to full advantage in "The Diamond from the Sky."

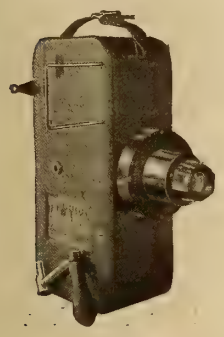
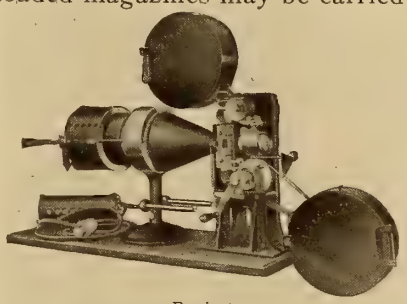
The "Alamo" Camera

The Simplex Photoplay Products Company of Morris Park, Long Island, New York, is now placing on the market its Alamo motion picture camera, which is intended for the use of the amateur and will undoubtedly open an entirely new and fascinating kind of entertainment and instruction, enabling the amateur to keep an accurate photographic record of the experiences within his own family circle upon which he will look back with pride and delight in after years. The prediction is even made that the day is not far distant when motion pictures in the home will be as universal as the popularity of the phonograph today.



Camera.

The film capacity is fifty feet in one loading, which in no way limits its usefulness in the class of work for which it is planned, since any number of loaded magazines may be carried and used in taking successive subjects, and the resulting negatives can then be joined for printing continuous positive film for projection.



Projector.

The new camera loads in daylight, uses standard motion picture film, has an aluminum body with a grain leather covering and weighs with its loaded magazines only about five pounds, while the bulk is so reduced that the entire outfit may be carried in a suitcase and still leave plenty of space for clothing, etc. The lens regularly furnished with the Alamo is ideal for all work in a good light and is said to have an excellent depth of field at its fixed or general focus, thus rendering the camera most simple to use. After gaining some experience with the camera, the user may replace the regular lens equipment with the Zeiss Tessar f 3.5, which is the same as is used on high priced professional cameras.

In the accompanying cuts an exterior view of the camera is given, together with a picture of the projector by use of which the amateur can screen his own films.

"The Middleman" for Metro

By an arrangement made between Paul E. Cromelin and the directors of the Metro Pictures Corporation, the wonderful five reel production of Henry Arthur Jones' famous play, "The Middleman," starring Albert Chevalier, will be released on the Metro program Monday, May 17. The securing of this remarkable dramatic subject by the Metro Pictures Corporation again illustrates the activities and prompt workings of the men at the head of that corporation.

A public demonstration of "The Middleman" was given at the Broadway theater, New York, several weeks ago and the picture was voted one of the biggest subjects yet shown on the screen and bidding for it became very lively, but Mr. Cromelin, representing the producers, decided to place the picture through the Metro Corporation and exhibitors on that roster can look forward to a sterling screen sensation.

The acting of Albert Chevalier in the role of Cyrus Blenkarn, the old potter, is, without the shadow of a doubt, one of the most remarkable pieces of character acting yet seen on the screen, and this character, given great prominence by E. S. Willard, who appeared in the role for years, will attract more than usual attention because of the virile personification of the old inventor and the attractive personality of Mr. Chevalier.

Salisbury Opens Office

Dr. Edward A. Salisbury, whose features have been running at the Strand during the last two weeks, has just opened an office in the Candler building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, for the purpose of not only promoting his "Wild Life Pictures," which have already been sold throughout the United States, Canada and England, but for the establishment of a further series of educational pictures, to be booked in the finest theaters throughout the United States. It has been suggested to Dr. Salisbury that he prepare from such material as he already has on hand, and also from the best of the world's productions of scenic and educational features, a program which shall be placed as a regular feature program, running in the neighborhood of 500 feet of scenic and 500 feet of educational film, for a week. Several hundred theaters, both on the Atlantic and Pacific Coast, have already applied to Dr. Salisbury for bookings on this service, so that it may be reasonably stated that he already has the foundation for a successful service.

Dr. Edward A. Salisbury.

"My Ship O' Dreams"

Will Rossiter, the song publisher of 136 West Lake street, Chicago, has just published a beautiful waltz ballad, entitled, "My Ship O' Dreams," the lyric of which was written by Francis X. Bushman, while the music was prepared by Frank M. Suttle, author of "Dear Old Girl."

Exhibitors can obtain a splendid poster featuring this song, the poster being printed in orange and blue. It is decidedly attractive and in the center bears the title page of the song which is a portrait of Mr. Bushman, the former Essanay leading man, and now a lead in Quality Films, a release of the Metro program.

BY ED MOCK

THE rattle and bang of infantry and bands; the yipping and yowling of cowboys and Indians; the explosion of day-light fireworks; the approving shouts of hundreds of citizens attracted by the preparation of the Pacific Coast Studios of Universal City, made certain the end of the Joy Party's pilgrimage to Los Angeles. We were busy with transferring of baggage and finding places in the scores of automobiles and autobuses that were to convey us to Hollywood Hotel, eight or nine miles away. No similar parade ever invaded the peace of Los Angeles. Nothing short of a full understanding with the department of police would have permitted such wholesale disorder. It was the climax of more than two thousand miles of thrills. The women of the party still clung to their bouquets of violets. The Hollywood Hotel was advised to prepare luncheon for those who had been famishing for three hours. The whole house was turned over to the Universal party. It was ours at so much per day. It looked mighty good and refreshing. There was confusion in every room—an extraordinary demand for bath towels; valets; hair-dressers; pressers; laundresses. When the party sat down to dinner you could see the result with half-an-eye.

* * *

That was the first Saturday, following our departure from Chicago the previous Sunday. What a wonderful week it had been. The weather man had joined arms with Carl Laemmle and his proverbial luck. We couldn't ask for more propitious weather. During our sojourn in lower California, the native sons were in their element. They testified that every day was like the one we were then enjoying.

* * *

And Saturday night a great throng piled into machines and went far beyond Levy's, to a road house in the wilds. They didn't get home till morning.

* * *

Sunday was spent sight seeing. There is a lot to see around Los Angeles. All roads lead either to the ocean, the mountains or to Pasadena where lamp posts are made of bronze and cost $300 per post. That is where the multi-millionaires build mansions for their servants. It is where the extremely wealthy people go to die—where everybody would care to be when death stalks in to claim the body. It is such a tiny little step to the great unknown, and it is so beautiful. The roses were trying to crowd each other off the bushes. The oranges were wilting on the ground. The hucksters were selling them at 5 cents the bucketfull. I saw lots of interesting sights.

Me and the Missus and J. Warren Kerrigan.

Monday morning March 15 was to be the big day. That was the day we got into our flannels and wore our white hats. That was the greatest day Carl Laemmle ever knew. He was to open his very own city with his very own key. He was to pull up Pat Powers' monster green flag and unfurl it to the breeze while Pat himself did like honors with Old Glory. It was a truly imposing picture and I'm sorry you get such a small slant at it. And when Mr. Laemmle received the big gold key from his chief of police, Miss Laura Oakley, who instructed him in its use, the moment was tense. When that same key turned the lock it was the agent that set off numerous explosions and unfurled hundreds of flags. It was also the signal for a shower of cut flowers that were flung from adjacent roofs. The parade passed through Laemmle Boulevard into the city, crushing underfoot every conceivable flower that grows. Then we sang, "I Love You California" and there wasn't a doubt left that we did.

* * *

Once through the gates the thousands of spectators found entertainment lavished in every quarter. There were reviews of cowboys, cavalry and Indians; inspection of the various Universal producing companies and their directors and camera men, all arranged in studio sets strung along a quarter of a mile in the largest single studio building ever built; a tremendous flood scene; battle scenes; courtroom scenes; a trip to the animal quarters; aviator's spectacle; visits to the various and numerous buildings; conversations with actor folk—something for everybody to do. The restaurant, large as it was could not cope with the demands made upon it. There was no thought that everybody could be taken care of. There were refreshment booths all over the lot and it proved to be some lot.

* * *

Universal City is built upon two hundred and eighty acres which is owned outright by the company, but it will be remembered that we were seeing the new, rather than the old city. Prior to the building of this new city, there was a leased campus, comprising 1,200 acres and it, too, was equipped for making pictures. The 1,200-acre tract is still retained and the old city is still used for numerous purposes.

* * *

Scattered over this great land area were tens of thousands of people and no less than 2,000 automobiles. The traffic record of the Pacific Electric Company was shattered that and the two succeeding days. Everybody took advantage of seeing films in the making.

* * *

If there is a lingering doubt that the opening of Universal City, California, was anything but a success of the greatest kind, I'm ready to lick the grumbler. The scheme may have been small at the start, but it grew into the most unique celebration ever conceived before it was all over.

* * *

The day's festivities did not end at sun down. The great indoor studio was the scene of a splendid assembly at night, where the Pacific Coast employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company gave a ball in honor of the board of directors, visiting exchange men and guests. The guests included those who had made the long journey from all parts of the United States and Canada, delegates from Los Angeles Commercial Clubs, bankers of Los Angeles and other local dignitaries. There were some speeches; a wealth of flowers for Isadore Bernstein and a general hurrah of high favor.

* * *

And now I want to go on record with the declaration that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has everything that any concern may require to make motion pictures of the best sort. Nothing is lacking in equipment or facilities.

* * *

Universal City is the most unique place in this or any other country. It is a real city, planned to make make-believe things. While it is always to be Universal City, there is no reason why it may not be ancient Troy tomorrow; modern New York the day after and an African jungle by Saturday afternoon at three o'clock. The buildings present something of uniformity, taken as a whole, but they have four sides and no two sides are usually of the same architectural design. The administration building at once becomes the mecca in the maze. It is from this point where all operations radiate. It has its conning tower, where the coast manager's view is unobstructed. There is the great reception room; the director's rooms; the accounting department with every modern device; a great suite of offices for the scenario department; the library; stenographic quarters; a telephone exchange with a dozen trunk lines and a hundred extensions to all parts of the place; a telegraph office. The laboratory building; the camera men's building; the great restaurant building; the tremendous stage; the indoor studios; the scores of homes for player-folk; the dressing rooms by the hundred; the immense property depots; the theater; the zoo; the bunk houses for cowboys; the teepees for Indians; the barracks for soldiers; the great stables for horses and cattle; the garages for forty automobiles—service vehicles for the business of the day; hangers; monster property buildings; scene painting and carpenter shops—all these things are there—you see 'em in bewilderment and pleased surprise. There is a fire department; complete water works system; electric light plant; two hospitals, completely outfitted, and while I know that it is humanly impossible to include everything from a mental storehouse, it is safe to assert that I have seen the wonder city of the film world.

* * *

This, then, ends the cruise of the Universal Joy Party. Its members scattered after the third day at Universal City—some going to San Diego, others to San Francisco and others back to their homes by the shortest route.

* * *

I stuck around a while. Maybe I'll be inclined to tell you how to kill two or three birds with a single stone. I know Mr. Laemmle made no mistake in finding room for some of us on his train.

* * *

In addition to the two great panoramic views shown in this issue, there is a picture of one leading lady that Mr. Laemmle failed to acquire. There is one homely guy and Jack Warren Kerrigan in her wake, but she couldn't see either of them. Don Meany got two-thirds of the picture and U. K. Whipple the rest. Strange things happen to photographs when they find my desk.

Public to View House Dynamited

Director Ricketts, of the American studios, has invited the general public to see a house blown up by dynamite for a scene in the four-part American distinctive creation, "The House of a Thousand Scandals." A whole mansion has been erected for this special purpose, and as there is plenty of action in the scenes prior to the explosion, it is presumed that a large assemblage will be present to see the fun. The rehearsing of about four hundred extras as members of the mob, which are to swarm about the house, has been progressing for over a week and it is predicted that the pictures will present one of the most wonderful scenes ever produced for the screen.

Will Immortalize Charles Frohman

Although Charles Frohman's career as the leading theatrical producer in the world ended so tragically on the Lusitania, the great dramatic successes made possible through his energy and enterprise will be immortal—not only in the record of the printed and spoken word, but in a manner more physical and substantial. Through his affiliation with the Famous Players Film Co., of which his brother, Daniel Frohman, is managing director, and which has already presented on the screen several of his dramatic properties, all the great Charles Frohman successes, several hundred in number, will be reproduced on the screen and thus preserved for posterity in essentially their original form.

Toward this end, and also because this was the oft expressed wish of Charles Frohman in the discussion of the possibilities of the screen development of his plays, unusual efforts will be exerted by the Famous Players to obtain as many of the original casts as is possible in the film versions of these noted dramas.

With that unerring judgment and keen artistic appreciation that made him the foremost factor in the theatrical world, Charles Frohman sensed the vast possibilities of the silent drama, and was one of the first important theatrical managers to become allied with the new art. His affiliation with the Famous Players Film Co., shortly followed the alliance between that company and Henry W. Savage, and the interest he possessed in film dramas was already characteristically intense and sincere. With that devotion which he gave to all matters in which he was interested, it was commonly known that the Charles Frohman offices were already seeking for screen possibilities in the new plays they accepted for production, and the results of this policy will still be evident in the newer Famous Palyers-Charles Frohman subjects.

"The Lure of the Mask"

The Monte Carlo gambling scene in "The Lure of the Mask," the film version of Harold MacGrath's successful novel, is considered by motion picture experts to be the best of the many gaming scenes that have been filmed. Director Tom Ricketts, of the American force at Santa Barbara, is justly proud of his achievement in reproducing to an absolute exactness, the scene from the fost famous temple of chance in the world.

"We went to a deal of trouble to make that scene exact," Ricketts declared, "and those of you who have been on the Riviera can see that our trouble has been rewarded. And here is a curious fact. One of the croupiers in "The Lure of the Mask" scene at one time was one of the best known of 'the boys' at Nice. Luck broke against him. He drifted to this country. We picked him up in California and put him in this MacGrath picture. He is one of the reasons why I consider that Monte Carlo scene so complete. You know there is no one who can play the reel part so well as the fellow who has played the real part."

Secures New Directors

William J. Bauman and Lawrence B. McGill, two prominent motion picture directors, were this week added to the long list of Metro Pictures Corporation accessions and from now on will devote their time entirely to that company's productions. McGill, formerly a noted stage director, first came into prominence with the French Eclair Company, with which he stayed a year, after which he produced "Arizona" and "Checkers" for the All-Star Corporation and "The Greyhound" for the Life Photo Film Corporation. Of late he has been with the Mutual Film Corporation and severed his connections there only last week to join the Metro staff.

William J. Bauman, remembered for his screen work as "Shylock" in Thanhouser's production of "The Merchant of Venice" has been with Thanhouser, K. B., Vitagraph and American, produced such noted features as "Ghosts," "The Yellow Streak," "White Feathers," and "The Lure of the Violin." Bauman will devote himself entirely to the productions of the Quality Pictures Corporation, in which Francis X. Bushman will star, supported by Marguerite Snow and special Metro casts.

Kleine's Seattle Office Moves

George Kleine's Seattle office has moved from 213 Orpheum Theater building to more spacious quarters at 204-5-6 Orpheum Theater building. Two additional traveling men have been added to the local force, in E. J. Moskowitz and C. H. Feldman, both well known to exhibitors throughout the West.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

SCREEN PROBLEMS

AS EXPLAINED in the first article of this series, a perfect screen would be invisible, at least while pictures were upon it. It would have many important qualities, however, and it is the absence of some of these good qualities that makes us notice the difference between the screens in the various theaters.

It has been customary to divide screens into two general classes, "reflecting" and "diffusing," but this is misleading, as all screens are both reflecting and diffusing, else they would not serve the purpose for which they are intended.

A better way to distinguish the two classes of screens is to consider the first class as comprising those having surfaces which do not reflect enough, and

In the former class are muslin and canvas, plaster and whitewash, etc., and in the latter class are the many and variously named mirroring or reflecting screens, some of which are coated with finely divided reflecting particles, such as bronze or aluminum, while others have as a foundation a single large mirror.

Too direct a reflection will not do, as will be explained shortly, so various methods are used by the manufacturers to make their reflecting screens scatter just the right amount of light, so that everybody in the audience can see the picture distinctly. The most common expedient is to "pebble" the surface, or rather to put the "secret" coating on a pebbled or rough surface, which will scatter some of the light coming from the projecting machine.

The reason for this will become apparent after consulting Figs. 36 and 37.

One of the first principles of reflection is covered by the law that "the angle of incidence is equal to the angle of reflection," so when a "pencil" of light rays coming from the projector strikes a flat or "plane" mirror, it leaves the mirror at a similar, but opposite angle, but it is still a pencil and the separate rays of which it is composed remain at the same angle with each other as before reflection. Now unless the eye of someone in the audience happens to be in the exact line which these rays are travelling they will be wasted. (Fig. 36.)

PEBBLED SURFACES

On the other hand, let the pencil of rays strike one of the "pebbles" of the rough surface, shown enlarged in Fig. 37, and its separate rays become scattered, as each strikes a differently slanting part of the surface, and, following the first law of reflection, each ray having a different angle of incidence will also have a different angle of reflection. Therefore some ray from that particular pencil is likely to reach the eye of everyone in the audience.

With so-called naturally diffusing screens there is never any doubt that every one will be able to see, but the trouble is in seeing enough, as the ordinary white surface does not reflect anywhere near all the light that strikes it, usually most of it being "absorbed" by the substance with which the screen is coated, or scattered just behind the surface and hence lost so far as the audience is concerned. When a cloth sheet is used much of the light goes clear through the sheet, as you can be sure if you are able to see the picture from the other side of the screen.

Before going further into effects of a semi-reflecting screen, let us consider what kind of a picture we should see if the screen were a perfect plane mirror. Well, we would not see any picture at all (assuming that the projector was focused for the usual screen) for the following reason.

LOOKING-GLASS REFLECTIONS

We have just said that the separate rays composing the pencils keep on traveling in the same direction with relation to each other, but their paths upon leaving the mirror are at an angle equal and opposite to the angle at which they strike it. Now each pencil has the same size, which is as follows: It is a "cone" whose "base" is the lens or "objective" of the projector, and whose point is at the screen (Fig. 38.) There is another pencil corresponding to each of those which have their points at the screen, and these other pencils have their points at the film, but their bases are at the objective. In fact, these two sets of cones all have the same base, and a straight line from the point of any long cone (at the screen) to the point of its corresponding short cone (at the film) would pass directly through the center of their common base (the objective.)

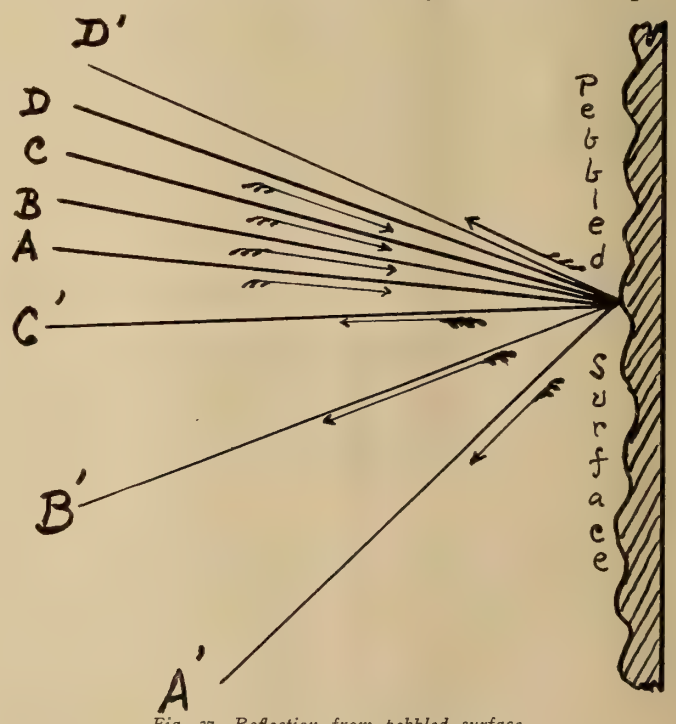

Fig. 37—Reflection from pebbled surface.

Thus we have a new light on what is meant by "focus," and it is seen to be simply the place where the rays of light come to a point. There are always two "foci" (which is Latin for "focuses" and is pronounced fo'-sigh), when projecting a picture, and if either the screen or film or objective is moved after once being adjusted the others will have to be moved also, or else the picture will be out of focus and blurred on account of the overlapping of the various pencils.

CONJUGATE FOCI

These two foci are called "conjugate" foci on account of their dependence one on the other. The rays of light leaving the film comprise a "divergent pencil," while the same rays after passing through the lens or objective have been gathered together so as to form a "convergent pencil" whose rays get closer and closer until they unite at the screen.

Now suppose that we move the screen farther away, so that the rays will "cross" and start diverging or spreading again before they strike it. The pencils will, of course, overlap and the picture be out of focus. (Fig. 36.) Then suppose that you should take the screen away entirely, and go some distance beyond where it should be, and turn around and look toward the projector. What would you see? You would see an intensely bright spot of light coming through the projector lens, and that is about all.

Now go back in the auditorium and sit down while we place a true plane mirror where the screen ought to be, and then take a look at the mirror. Will you see it? Not at all if it is clean and perfect. Neither will you see anything except the self-same spot of light that you saw when you were the same distance behind the mirror's place that you are now in front of it. For a mirror will behave just the same in a theater as it will anywhere else under similar conditions, and, as you know, a mirror simply permits you to look the other way without turning around.

How then are we going to use reflection to make a visible picture? There are two principal ways which have been proven to be practical within certain limits. One of these is to erect a large plane mirror such as we have been imagining, and then do things to it which will trap the picture and make it unusually bright.

MIRROR SCREENS

In front of the mirror (usually on the surface of the glass) is a whitish "translucent" film (which means a thin coating through which light can pass, but which you cannot see through.) The surface of the glass may be "ground" or slightly roughened, or some liquid, or "ground glass solution" may be painted upon it. This translucent surface has some of the qualities of an ordinary screen, in that the picture is partially focused upon it, but it does more than this, for it lets most of the light pass through, and when this "transmitted" light strikes the mirror and is turned back, it again illuminates the translucent surface so that we have the picture "coming and going."

Comparatively little light is wasted by passing through the mirror, and while theoretically the focus would not be as sharp as with a single surface, this is not a practical defects, as the "depth" of focus of the ordinary objective is much greater than the distance from the translucent surface to the mirror and back again. This means that the rays do not come to an actual point anyway, and a difference of an inch or two in the position of a screen is unnoticeable so far as the sharpness of the picture is concerned.

The main thing is that the audience may look at the screen and see a satisfactory picture. So let us consider just what a satisfactory picture is, and why an ordinary white surface does not always give a pleasing effect. One trouble with ordinary black and white pictures is that the light parts may be too "glary" white, and it is in these parts that the flicker is most noticeable, so anything that will soften the "contrasts" will help to please. And this is one of the things that patented and "secret process" screens accomplish.

SCREEN COLORS

An important consideration is the color of the screen, but when an ordinary white screen is colored much light is absorbed and lost. However, it happens that the substances used in making the different types of reflecting screens are in themselves colored, with the result that certain rays which distress the eye are absorbed without undue loss of total light.

This is as true of a silver coated mirror as of the bronze or aluminum coated screens. There seems to be an honest difference of opinion as to whether a bluish or a yellowish cast is most desirable, some claiming that it is the ultra-violet rays that most distress and strain the eyes (these rays being most absorbed by the yellowish screens) and others that a grayish-blue is more pleasing and restful. Here also the matter of taste enters, as well as the tinting of the film itself, and the subject.

A moonlight scene, for instance, might show up better on a gray blue screen, while a sunset would glow brighter on a yellowish screen. Neither would give the true colors (provided the film itself were properly colored), and when the naturally colored pictures arrive this screen matter is going to undergo some further changes and advances.

Let us now consider how the other type of reflecting screen produces its unusually brilliant yet soft pictures. As already stated, if the surface were flat and uniformly coated with reflecting substance, there wouldn't be any picture, for it would act like a mirror. However, if the reflecting substance were made up of finely-divided particles like metallic aluminum and were painted on a flat surface, and you should sit directly in front of the screen, at the proper angle below it, you would see a very bright and "flashy" picture, which would "fade away" as soon as you moved your eyes to one side or the other. Then let this screen be replaced by one whose surface is much rougher, or pebbled, but with the same reflecting qualities.

ADJUSTING THE FADE-AWAY

The picture will not be quite so bright, as some of the light is being scattered, but as you move to the right and left you can still see a satisfactory picture, for the very simple reason that the little bumps on the screen are curved in all directions, and some of the rays from each pencil of light go one way and some another after reflection, so that when you are in one place a few (but enough) of them enter your eye, while in another place in the audience certain other rays from the same pencil enter the eye of some one else. Therefore, everybody sees the picture, provided nobody is sitting too far to one side or the other, for it is here that the screen manufacturer is obliged to act on the principle of "the greatest good to the greatest number." If he makes the screen surface too rough (so that the Amen corner can see) then the picture is not bright enough for anybody. On the other hand, if he makes it too smooth, then only those in the middle of the house are likely to get their money's worth. Usually two or more kinds are made, the smoother for narrow houses, and the rougher for the wide ones.

Another interesting advantage of the reflecting screens is their property of softening the contrasts. This is because a mirror will reflect about as large a proportion of faint light as of strong light, while a white dull surface favors the stronger rays. Therefore a contrasty picture is still more contrasty when shown on a whitewashed wall, while the specially prepared screens tone down the highlights, but send you the halftones and shadows practically unaltered.

To Release Through World

The All-Celtic Film Company, of 1400 Broadway, New York, producer of the Rafferty series of Irish comedy films, announces that its output will be released through the World Film program, the first release date being May 31. These comedy films are said to be funny without the aid of slap-stick or vulgarity, and to gain their laughs through the excellent acting of the players and their capable direction.

Charles O'Hara, the author of the stories, is well known throughout the United States as a short story writer as well as a scenario writer. James A. Fitzgerald, the director of the films, was formerly with the Universal, Mutual and Photodrama companies, where he gained a good deal of knowledge of picture producing which he is utilizing to good advantage now.

Secures New Features

The United Booking Office Feature Picture Company, Inc., with offices in the Palace theater building, New York City, announces the securing of the booking rights for the United States and Canada of three new features, namely, Jackie Saunders in "Reaping the Whirlwind," "Where Cowboy is King" and "The Vengeance of the Wilds." It has also secured the state of New Jersey rights for Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter," and the New York state rights for "Les Miserables."

Isn't This a Record?

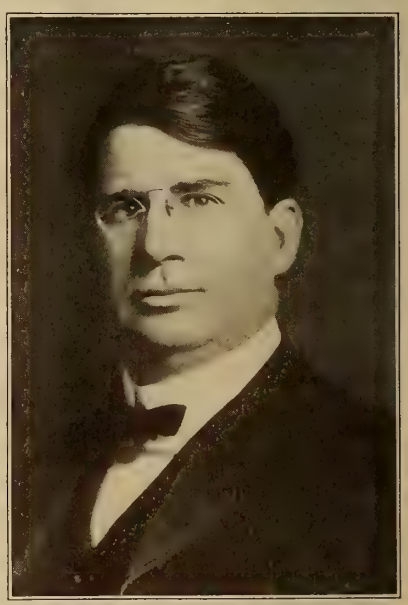
When Mr. Presburg, president of the Arena Amusement Corporation, decided to use motion pictures in Madison Square Garden, the largest amusement place in America, and where many of the most notable events in the world have taken place, he was confronted with many difficult problems, chief of which was the projection of the pictures.

Many suggestions were made as to the location of the booth for the projecting machines and among them was one to hang the booth from the iron girders and place the machines therein. W. C. Smith, the well known projection engineer of the Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of projection apparatus, suggested placing the machines at the end of the hall and projecting the pictures a distance of three hundred feet.

This is the longest throw on record and subsequent tests by Mr. Smith proved the practicability of the long throw with the result that he was given carte blanche on the matter of projecion, and the Nicholas power apparatus was installed, consisting of two Power's Cameragraph No. 6A machines.

How the Prize Was Won

Roy L. McCardell, winner of the $10,000 prize for the North American Film Corporation's "Diamond From the Sky" picturized novel, knows that the element of luck didn't enter in the fact that he was adjudged the winner. Asked to tell of how he wrote the scenario for "The Diamond From the Sky," he said: "I have been earning my living as a writer since I was thirteen years of age. My early experience was of an amateur nature, but I soon drifted into professional work. I spent some twenty years as a member of the editorial staff of the New York Herald. I was in turn reporter, rewrite man, city editor, Sunday editor, and for a long period had charge of the Sunday magazine section. My editorial experience formed a good ground work for my career. Later I began writing for magazines and newspaper syndicates and for quite a number of years my work has appeared in leading newspapers and magazines throughout the United States.



Roy L. McCardell.

"Although I was confident of winning the $10,000 prize when I submitted 'The Diamond From the Sky,' I was, nevertheless, surprised when I was notified that I was the winner. I knew that competition would be keen. This simply proved an incentive to me. I worked harder on this competition than I have ever worked on any prize contest which I have entered.

"First of all, I knew I had a good idea for a continued photoplay in 'The Diamond From the Sky;' then I sought to write the story as I believed it could be best enacted by a star cast.

"I set to work. I wrote and rewrote, wove and rewove my story along lines I thought would be most popular and convincing. I decided on a picturized novel. I put aside all other work and night and day devoted myself to achieve a thrilling story of youth and adventure, of love and hate; a clean, sweet and wholesome story, despite the dramatic and villainous counterpoint and contrast necessary. I turned it in, carefully and succintly told, sparing no pains or effort. I could not believe that any other contestant would take the pains that I did to present a manuscript in this prize competition.

"When I was notified that my manuscript had been selected, I could only believe that it was the reward of hard work, together with my complete knowledge of literary work and motion picture production. I believe that by the time the final chapter of 'The Diamond From the Sky' is shown to the millions of people who are bound to see it, I will have established a standard of excellence in continued photoplays that will be recognized throughout the world."

Famous Dramatic Critic Joins Lasky Staff

Hector Turnbull is giving up his position as Dramatic Critic of the New York Tribune in order to become associated with the scenario department of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Mr. Turnbull is the brother of Miss Margaret Turnbull, the noted author and playwright who is assisting William C. De Mille in the preparation of scenarios for the Lasky productions.

Hector Turnbull has been widely known as one of the most popular and gifted of the younger metropolitan newspaper critics. Before he joined the staff of the Tribune some two years ago, he had already acquired a substantial reputation as a magazine writer for the most desirable publications.

Oil Paintings of Stars

After carefully examining the work of a number of prominent artists, the V. L. S. E. has made arrangements for special oil paintings made from enlarged portraits of the stars appearing in its big features. The pictures are intended for permanent lobby display, and are in two sizes, 30x40 inches, and 36x60 inches, mounted on compo-board and framed in handsome three inch gold frames.

The artistic excellence of the work, the perfect reproduction and warm coloring, recommend them as the richest of theater decorations. Through the arrangements made with the artist, exhibitors booking the V. L. S. E. productions will be able to secure these pictures at a very reasonable price.

Eclair Executive at Front

Claud Patin, secretary-general of Eclair, this week gave out the interesting information that E. Maurice, technical manager of the famous French film company, is now serving at the front in the capacity of sergeant with a leading French aviation corps, and fully equipped with a motion picture camera and telescopic lenses, will take many thousands of feet of the actual warfare and fighting. M. Maurice is absolutely the first man to be granted such a privilege, and Mr. Patin confidently expects to shortly startle the American public and exhibitors with films of war in all its reality and horror.

Contest Booms Business

Exhibitors who were well into the running of the Reliance serial, "Runaway June," when the free-trips-to-California contest started, and who began the contest late, are now congratulating themselves that they did so. Many of these exhibitors are writing to the Reliance, telling of their experiences in this connection.

The Reliance plan, which was worked out in response to the demands of exhibitors, permits any exhibitor to start the contest with any episode of the serial up to and including the eleventh, and they can continue the contest on terms of equality with the theaters which begin the contest with the first episode. This is accomplished by means of extra votings at which the film is not shown.

The exhibitors who have tried the plan, write to the Reliance that they have found many profitable uses for the extra votings.

One Philadelphia exhibitor, whose theater is in the shopping district, found that his matinees were not well patronized, as the neighboring department stores occupied too much of the attention of Philadelphia women. He had run six episodes of "Runaway June" before he began the contest, so a number of extra votings were necessary. He writes that he is holding these on what would be otherwise dull afternoons.

The serial is not shown on these occasions but the women vote for their candidates. He says that his afternoons have now become crowded affairs, even when there is no voting. The contest drew the women to the theater in the afternoon and they discovered that it was a very pleasant thing to go to a photoplay matinee and rest during a wearisome round of shopping.

Pretentious Fox Features

The coming summer will see a most ambitious program offered exhibitors of the country by the William Fox Film Corporation.

Such noted stars as William Farnum, Betty Nansen, William E. Shay, Claire Whitney, Nance O'Neil, Jean Suthern, Theda Bara and Ethel Kauffman are hard at work under Fox directors on a number of big multiple reel productions made from the adaptations of great screen dramas or noted novels.

Among the producers at work in the Fox studios are Herbert Brennon, Frank Powell, Edgar Lewis, Marshall Farnum and J. Gordon Edwards, while among the plays and novels for which the screen rights are held by William Fox are "The Payment," "Beggar on Horseback," "Rachael," "The Galley Slave," "The Mediator," and "The Gunner's Mate." In the case of the latter production special permission has been secured from Josephus Daniels, secretary of the navy, to take scenes in and about the United States naval stations, and on board the United States battleships, both in port and at sea.

Many exhibitors over the country are calling the combination of the V. L. S. E., Inc., the "Big Four."

Bill Wing, King-Pin Scenariosmith

BY ED MOCK

HERE is a page torn from the every-day-life of Bill Wing, king-pin scenariosmith. Bill Wing lives in Los Angeles. He gets as much fun out of living as it is possible for a hard-working horny-handed son to get. And he works hard—with his head and his hands. I saw him dine. He makes a full job of it. Gosh, how he eats! And the horns on his hands are superinduced by handling the steering gear of his automobiles. He has more than one. He needs more than one. Bill Wing may have corns on his feet, but they are on the bottom instead of the top. His shoe soles are worn smooth with contact, not of the street, but of the brake and clutch. Why walk when there is so much beautiful pavement.

From which it may be inferred that I know something of Bill Wing. If it was as easy to know folks as it is to know Bill Wing, this would be a perfectly acceptable little world worth while. Bill Wing is the easiest man to know there is. You walk right into his welcome. You know him straight through the very first minute. Then you settle down and visit like you've known him always, but haven't seen him for a string of years. Bill Wing is the kind you want to know. And as a film fan—he qualifies 100 per cent plus. There is one cyclopedia to Los Angeles film colony and you'll find it under Bill's hat. He knows everybody and everybody knows him. He knows where they are today; where they were yesterday and where they'll be tomorrow.

Bill Wing just naturally fits in. He saw Los Angeles first. He got in on oil and put comfort behind him, long before they began to make motion pictures in California. He lives on the top of a hill among the oil wells. They look good to him. Of course, he has a beautiful home up there and a charming wife, who does a lot of script writing on her own account, and then there are his delightful daughters—all leaning hard toward the same game that has made father and mother famous—a fame that is bound to endure.

Script-writing is Bill Wing's hobby. He knows that there wouldn't be a great deal to the film business if it wasn't for the scenarios. Everything must start at the beginning and the script is both the start and finish. That is Bill's whole belief—a simple little thing like that. He has written so many of them, of the sort that have been the vogue, that he claims proper equipment for the work to come. The business is beginning to veer around toward Bill Wing's ideas of it. He claims that script-writing will eventually come to its own.

But aside from all that, I wouldn't have missed Bill Wing for anything. A trip to Los Angeles and a visit to its film colonies is only half begun if you overlook Bill. Incidentally, should you require his services, tell him to go to it and let him send a bill—a Bill Wing bill. He uses beautiful stationery decorated with an owl and a quill pen and a great blotch of spilled ink. Bill Wing doesn't believe in platitudes—that's why you find none here. He believes thoroughly in his work and a full measure and a fair wage. If there was more room on the page he could have it and welcome, but there are two pages here, already—one beautifully illustrated. It is somewhat difficult to understand just why Bill went outside the family circle to find the picture he used, because he has daughters Dorothy's size. But after all, he's a wonderful stickler for culture.

William Everett Wing

IN AN INTERVIEW WITH HIMSELF BY REQUEST OF ED MOCK

"BEG pardon but am I addressing the right party?"

"Do you wish to borrow or lend?"

"I mean I was sent here to secure an interview with the greatest photoplay writer the world has—"

"Pause, gentle stranger; pause! What you want is a ticket to New York. You still are in Los Angeles."

"Well, anyway, isn't your name Bill something or other?"

"Mother calls me Willie."

"What might your last name be?"

"There you go again, jumping into glittering generalities."

"You haven't that distinguished appearance that I was led to expect. Where is your cane and high-water trousers?"

"I loaned them to Charles E. Van Loan. He wanted to get atmosphere for a swell, society story."

"And your face; have you met with an accident recently?"

"What right have you to criticise the handiwork of nature, anyway?"

"Beg pardon; beg pardon! Let's get along with the interview. I understand you are a western man. Tell me some of your thrilling experiences."

"Well, I married a woman who outweighed me at the time."

"No; I mean fighting Indians, subduing bad men and stampeding whole bunches of heavily armed cowboys."

"Oh; those trifles! Huh."

"I hear you traveled with outlaws at one time."

"Not long. Organized baseball soon busted us up in business."

"Show me your chaps, the notches on your trusty Colts and your pet gila monster."

"I seem to have mislaid them."

"I suppose you were born in a lonely cabin, surrounded by howling savages."

"No, Maine was about half out of aborigines when I startled the world by my advent."

"Maine? Why that isn't one of the wild and woolly states."

"Someone has been giving you inside information."

"How did you happen to go out west?"

"I received private advices that the Custer massacre was due and thought it time for intervention. I was only three years old at the time, but I made the trip in record time, three weeks. Upon arriving in the immediate vicinity of Sitting Bull, death, and disaster, I decided upon a watchful waiting program. I have followed this plan ever since to such an extent that I never need insurance of any kind."

"But your advent into literature—tell us about that."

"I hate to talk about myself, but I was sporting editor of our high school monthly once."

"When did your genius first assert itself?"

"At the age of two."

"Remarkable! Give me the details, please."

"I was visiting at the home of a young married couple at the time together with others. While seated on a blonde's lap I succeeded in getting a small handful of her hair in my cute, little fist. Later I transferred these to the host's coat thereby creating my first situation, as it were. It was very dramatic, they tell me. I was given no credit although the wife secured the biggest alimony ever granted in that county."

"Mention some of your greatest inspirations."

"Thirst, appetite and fear of Anthony Comstock."

"What was your first work?"

"Tunneling. Father kept the apples in a dirt cellar."

"When did you begin to attract general public attention?"

"About the time the community began posting bulldogs in melon patches."

"What was your first story?"

"I told it to a police judge but forget what it was."

"What do you consider your best effort?"

"Escaping from a Chicago widow."

"What is your opinion of the motion-picture business?"

"I refuse to answer on advice of counsel."

William E. Wing pronouncing the hard words for Dorothy Gish

"Do you consider writing for the pictures more enjoyable than your former vocation?"

"Are you referring to my remarkable progress in the laundry business?"

"Oh no! I have heard you once were an inmate of a newspaper shop."

"That was after I had tried journalism and porch-climbing. I decided to elevate the general standard. Therefore I allowed a newspaper to join me in the effort."

"But you abandoned that profession for the film game.

"Tell me how you go about it to write those wonderful plays."

"First I get an inspiration. I eat a mince pie, a mess of doughnuts and a deck of waffles. Then I waft away into heavenly slumber. With my system full of commissary my mind naturally loads up with golden thoughts. When I awaken in my luxurious boudoir my valet dresses me. I call on friends about luncheon time. After we dine I borrow a dollar and go to the ball game. By the time I return I find a message from the boss to hurry along a scenario or return some of his loans. My muse comes immediately. I sit down and dash off a two or three-reeler and rush it to the studio. Then I rush right away again before the boss can read it and get full command of his language. At such times he is a languager, believe me. He almost hurt my feelings once when I didn't escape in time."

"To close, Bill, what is your advice to beginners and amateur writers?"

"Take the gas route. It's shorter."

A "Close-Up" of Isadore Bernstein

WHOM YOU PROBABLY KNOW

THIS is the brief story of Bernie, the responsible builder of Universal City, California, and until recently the Pacific Coast manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It is the simple narrative of a prematurely old boy who has risen by individual effort and merit from the lowest level of East Side New York's poverty to the pay-roll importance of three hundred dollars a week. As chief executive of the strangest municipality in the world, Bernie at once commanded attention. There are few like him—none with a larger capacity for accomplishment.

Speculation is rife concerning what Bernie plans to do in the future. Right now he wants you to know that he's taking a rest. His great concern for the present is to find a mountain trout big enough to prove he's been afishing. Possibly some interest can be found in what Bernie has done in the years gone by. He isn't dead. Let's take him some sweet scented posies while he lives.

His latest and most prized portrait.

Isadore Bernstein was born in New York City, November 26, 1876, and became familiar with hard work and long hours at the toddling age. His life started right off being hard and his earliest thought inclined towards correcting such conditions. His life differed in no particular from his ghetto associates, but he knew something was wrong with the scheme of things that made his lot so treacherous. With no means to acquire education and no time to give it, he drifted instinctively into settlement work. For seven years of his boyhood life he was superintendent of the New York Boys' Institute, and his remarkable success with this occupation attracted the managing editor of the Christian Herald, who offered Bernie a place on his staff. He began as a special writer on Biblical and Jewish topics, but eventually became an associate editor—a position attained by none other of his race. Bernie was identified with the Christian Herald for fourteen years—the only Hebrew ever employed in an editorial capacity by that great paper.

His advent into films goes back to the early days of the business and recalls old organizations which, for various reasons, have disappeared. He was general manager of the Paramount Film Company; exchange manager of the Republic Film Company; general manager of the Monopol Film Company and associated in a small way with Herb. Miles, Bill Steiner and Pat Powers when the sailing was none too good.

But they called him Bernie; kept him alive and regarded his persistency to work twenty-five hours a day for twenty-five dollars a week as the redeeming qualification, whether they saw beyond that condition or not.

It was about this time that Carl Laemmle was needing a Pacific Coast manager. He sent for Bernie and put his proposition up to him, offering seventy-five dollars a week. In his embarrassment, Bernie hesitated and mumbled something about thinking it over. Mr. Laemmle raised his bid to a hundred, while Bernie stood on one foot and fussed with his hat. Before he could find words, the offer stood at a hundred and a quarter. Bernie's blood had taken the alabaster from his brow and he stammered that his answer would keep till tomorrow.

So it was that he went to the coast—out in the valley north of Hollywood, and built Universal City for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. He did it with some mighty fine help, to be sure, but Bernie was the little man who must approve and suggest; initial the bills and pay the costs. He did it on a fixed weekly remittance from New York, and he must have had a world of problems.

Isadore Bernstein didn't work with a slide rule; his was a foot rule. He forced through his dream city by treating with the conditions as they existed, and with people who helped. There grew to be a great colony—hundreds of workmen. Besides building a film city he must supply the films of the Universal Program—satisfy the demands of scores of exchange men—thousands of exhibitors. It was a large sized man's job and Bernie is such a little fellow!

And while he is fishing in the shade that spreads so comfy along the banks of San Gabriel river, he is also planning to get back into the battle with a full program of his own. He is expecting to use his large experience, his own money and the funds of other people who have confidence in him, to further the cause of a great company he will organize after the first short vacation he has ever known. For further particulars, see small bills. This is merely a testimonial. Isadore Bernstein has earned his spurs.

Safety in Picture Theaters

A BOOKLET, published by the Travelers' Insurance Company, Hartford, Conn. (Copyright, 1914), gives a number of suggestions for the construction, equipment and operation of motion picture theaters. The ideas advanced are excellent, but to call them "suggestions" almost implies that they originated with the author of the booklet, which is not true. As a matter of fact, they are merely a summarized description of what is actual practice among picture theaters today. Some of them are so self-evident that they are hardly necessary even as suggestions; others are incorporated in the building laws of every city in the country; but a few of them are worth consideration by exhibitors who are not sure that they have adopted all possible precautions to insure the safety of their patrons, or rather let us say, to inspire the confidence of their patrons.

In general construction details, walls of masonry, steel and masonry, or concrete are advised, with fireproof inside partitions, sashes and doors, quarter-inch wire glass windows and even a concrete floor. The latter is desirable, especially for sanitary reasons, as it is easily swept and flushed. An objection is raised to mirrors because they sometimes have the appearance of exits—a good point to keep in mind.

Cantilever trusses, or plate girders, instead of columns for the support of balconies are approved, and far better in affording an unobstructed view of the screen from all seats. The edge of the balcony should have a guard rail at least three and a half feet high, of two-inch pipe, supported at intervals of ten feet or less. Balconies should stand a safe load of at least two hundred pounds to the square foot.

The subject of ventilation, while emphasized, is not given very much space. The following rule is given, however, which is of help in calculating the capacity of the ventilating plant necessary:

To find the greatest permissible time for completely changing the air of the audience room, divide the volume of the room (as expressed in cubic feet) by the number of seats, and divide the resulting quotient by 40. This gives the maximum number of minutes that should be allowed for replacing the entire air of the audience room by fresh air from the outside.

Electric circulating fans, when fixed by brackets to the walls along the side aisles, should be placed not less than seven and one-half feet above the level of the floor, and should be protected by wire guards. Fans arranged to swing, or oscillate, in a semi-circle are now quite commonly used.

Entrances to the theater should be at sidewalk level, if possible, and in any event more than six feet difference between the sidewalk and the floor should be avoided. At least two separate balcony entrances should be provided for a capacity of over two hundred seats. A good entrance door figure is twenty inches of width for each hundred seats. At least two sixty-inch exits with out-swinging doors, opening on the street, are necessary, and a self-opening door is recommended. A theater between other buildings may well have a six-foot clear passage at each side, separated from the theater by a fire wall.

Balcony stairs should have risers not over 7¾ inches high and treads at least 10½ inches wide. Where stairs lead downward from exits there should be at least one foot between the door and the top step, and all stairways should have substantial hand-rails. Non-slip stair treads are recommended.

Care should be taken to have all seats (except box chairs) securely fastened to the floor. Good spacing allows eighteen inches width for each seat and thirty-two inches between rows (back to back).

Indirect lighting is advisable for all interior illumination except, of course, the red exit lights which burn all the time. Two separate supply connections with the street mains—one for the projection room and the other for the lighting circuits—are recommended. Either should be able to carry the entire load in an emergency. Where a theater has its own generating plant it is well to provide storage battery also, of sufficient capacity to take care of the whole demand for sufficient time to allow ordinary repairs on the generating plant.

A number of recommendations are made regarding the projecting room; but most, if not all, of those are now common practice; made so, in many cases, by legislation, and in all by good common sense. The projecting booth today is not the narrow, dangerous closet it was five or six years ago.

As we intimated before, instead of the picture theaters taking their cue from compilations of this kind, these suggestions are actually based on current practice. And while there may be a good many exhibitors who can get one or two minor ideas for improvement from such a list, it is safe to say that not one will find all its recommendations new. That could not have been said a few years ago—which is only another proof that the picture theater business is advancing as rapidly as the manufacturing end of the industry; and it has become just as substantial and permanent.

The Frohman Influence

THE passing of Charles Frohman, who went down in such good company with the ill-fated Lusitania, has brought his memory a shower of tributes from the newspaper writers of the country. The important part he played in the development of the American theater and drama has already been told again and again. His great influence on the motion picture, just reaching its maturity when he was cut off, will continue to work for the exaltation of the art.

Mr. Frohman's affiliation with the Famous Players Film Company made possible the immortalization on the screen of a great list of successful dramatic achievements whose reproductions will impress upon posterity the strength of this man in his chosen work. The motion picture itself has developed its own great men; but if it were not for the Frohmans who bring to it the wealth of wisdom they have gleaned from other sources, its star would not now shine so brightly in the constellation of dramatic art.

Frohman died a hero and a gentleman; he entered the unknown gulf in the spirit of adventure, expressing no vain regrets. It is not incumbent upon us to dispute his philosophy by assuming a melancholy that he would not approve. Let us rather rejoice that before he was taken away he had opportunity to mould a mark of excellence upon our art.

Film Opportunities in Cartagena

(Consul Ross Hazeltine, Cartagena, Colombia.)

MOTION pictures have not attained the popularity in Cartagena that they enjoy in other parts of South America. There are no manufacturers or exchanges, and only two theaters, one of which is rarely used. One theater shows French films two nights a week. The admissions charged are very reasonable considering the quality and length of the films.

During the calendar year 1914 cinematograph supplies were imported into Cartagena to the value of $936, of which $850 came from France and the remainder from Germany. Most of the films shown are said to be entered at Barranquilla. The import duty on developed films is $5 per kilo ($2.27 per pound), gross weight; the duty on unexposed films is $0.10 per kilo ($0.045 per pound), gross weight.

The films are purchased and resold when possible. American films are not shown, although there is little doubt that sensational western dramas would prove popular.

The opportunity for American producers does not exist, however, in the sale or rental of films, but rather in the manufacture of historical films.

Cartagena has the most romantic history of any city of the old Spanish Main. The remarkable walls, which are said to have cost $59,000,000, were constructed during the reign of Philip II of Spain, and today they are in a perfect state of preservation. Some of the forts have been destroyed, but several are in excellent condition. The ancient Palace of the Inquisition (now private property), completed in 1706, is also in excellent condition. The picturesque fort of San José at Bocachica, dating from 1698, has scarcely been touched by the passage of years. The Castle of San Felipe, begun in 1630 and completed 27 years later at a cost of $11,000,000, but now in ruins, is situated on a hill overlooking the city and harbor. These and other historical structures give Cartagena a scenic background not excelled in all Latin America.

Episode Five: "What Happened to Marie"

(Part One.)

"Yep, I feel right to home in a studio," laughed Marie as she seated herself on a property stump in the studio of the Jumbo Film Corporation and prepared to relate her story to the assembled throng. "You see I've been in the movies now for several seasons and it's all 'old stuff' to muh." "Yes, I remember you when you were playing leads for the Eddie Sun Company," volunteered "Di" Rector, who had enjoyed a few experiences of his own with different concerns. "That right," answered Marie, "and it's right there my sad story commences. I was the featured lead of the Eddie Sun Company and had grown quite accustomed to having my name flashed in big letters on the twelve sheets, and portraits in one-sheet size issued to the exhibitors when I began to get restless. Things were coming my way all right, but not quite fast enough. I longed for the bright lights and wanted to be written up in the Ladies' Home Companion like the other dimpled darlings of filmdom. And then one day it happened, just as I had always dreamed it would. As I came down to breakfast, there on my table I found a big envelope bearing the globelike trademark of the Gigantic Film Corporation and inside was an offer from Phil M. Aker, the little giant of the film industry and founder of Gigantic City, the world's greatest motion picture colony. Was I tickled? Say, I could have kicked the torch out of the hand of the statue of Liberty I was that pleased. However, that was only the beginning of the fun, for when I got to the studio then things did begin to happen.

Some Current Releases Reviewed

Vitagraph's "The Goddess"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

THE action in the second, third and fourth reels of "The Goddess" transpires some fifteen years or more after the time which marks the beginning of the eugenic baby's hermitage which closes the first reel. Professor Stilleter, who is responsible for the idea which is to work out to the monopolization of the world's industries by the financial triumvirate, hypnotizes the goddess, Celestia, and leads her forth into the world, beautiful, resplendent, and prepared to propagate a belief which will set at rest the ceaseless turmoil of the working classes.

It happens that Tommy Steele, the son of one of the mighty triumvirate and earnest exponent of socialism, is camping in the mountains near the cave in which Celestia has been reared. He comes upon her at a time when she is not under Stilleter's hypnotic influence. The goddess is greatly impressed by young Steele's appearance, for until now she has never seen a man, and she gladly accepts his offer to help her escape from the professor.

Scene from Vitagraph's "The Goddess."

Stilleter summons his assistants, four mountaineers, and they take the couple's trail. The chase leads them up and down hills, through thickets and across streams, finally ending at the edge of a river. Steele and his companion, meanwhile, have crossed over the river in a canoe, and have camped for the night at a deserted cabin. Tommy's diplomacy is put to considerable strain in his efforts to explain to Celestia why she should sleep in the cabin and he outside, but he finally convinces her that it is one of the world's conventions, and she agrees to abide by it.

The professor and his men obtain the services of an old Indian, who picks up the trail, which has become a maze to them, and leads Stilleter the next morning to the cabin which shelters Celestia. Steele at the time is down at the river enjoying his morning plunge, a concession which Celestia granted only after much hazy discussion. Pursued by the professor and the Indian, the goddess hastens down to the river, and implores Tommy to come to her aid. She cannot understand his jumbled refusal, and is led off by the sneering professor and his accomplice, who also take Steele's clothes with them.

From here on the story develops fast. Celestia, accompanied by Stilleter, boards a train for New York and is later seen to emerge from the Pennsylvania station, leading a crowd of people. Tommy, in the meantime, has hurried to town, where he creates quite a stir in his fur garments. Learning that Celestia has boarded a train for New York, he snatches his clothes from the Indian, runs back into the woods, and a few minutes later reappears prepared to follow his goddess to the metropolis.

Lubin's "The College Widow"

Reviewed by Mabel Condon

WHEN the Lubin Film Manufacturing Company picked the George Ade play, "The College Widow," to convert into a film play, it made a choice that would have daunted a less courageous group of players than that which had Barry O'Neill as their director and to whom was entrusted the fate of "The College Widow." For the action of the story runs so fast and so far that it taxes even the elastic limitations of the camera and the screen. So much of the humor of the play is contained in the lines that an overabundance of sub-title is required, and while the capable Lubin cast, headed by Ethel Clayton, George Soule Spencer, Clarence Jay Elmer and Joseph Kaufman inject the proper spirit into the six-reel play, one feels instinctively that the task set is a big one.

One of the points where they laugh in Lubin's "The College Widow."

The locale as regards exteriors is exactly as it should be, for the reason that a Pennsylvania college furnished the back-ground for the picture's out-of-door scenes. The big foot-ball game in which Billy Bolton (George Soule Spencer) brings the year's biggest success to Atwater, is the filmization of an actual game on the college gridiron. The grand-stand with its human flag swaying as one person, is easily one of the most touching sights of the picture. The biggest scene and the one that contains the "punch" of the picture is the burning of the hotel where the victory banquet is in progress, and from which all escape with the exception of Jane, the "college widow" (Ethel Clayton), who is finally brought to safety through the heroism of Jack Larrabee (Ferdinand Tidmarsh). Peter Lane has the suitable role of Hiram Bolton, father of the popular half-back, Billy Bolton, who is coerced into serving on the Atwater team after his father has departed for Europe, having first placed a bet of $1,000 on the supremacy of the Bingham college team, for the position of half-back on which his son had been named.

An unusually large cast was necessary for the making of the play and the number of extras used runs into the hundreds.

"The College Widow" is a Lubin release of the V. L. S. E. output, and so well known is the Ade play from which the screen story is made, that the bookings for it will undoubtedly be large. The work of the principals is good, Ethel Clayton being an ideal choice for the title role. The story concerns the rival colleges of Atwater and Bingham. The former has a president opposed to rough football, but despite that fact the team shows itself to be in possession of a sufficient amount of this quality. The Atwater team is weak; it needs bolstering. The acquisition of an outsider, big and husky, seems of little avail. Then Billy Bolton, famous half-back of Bingham, visits the college with his father. The Atwater team decides he must be kept, and "the college widow," daughter of the president, is appealed to to fascinate Bolton into staying. She succeeds and the big Thanksgiving victory is Atwater's. Then follows the banquet, at the outset of which the fire starts in the kitchen, spreads unchecked throughout the hotel and the banqueters seek safety. Jane's former accepted suitor, Jack Larrabee, returns into the smoke-filled building and rescues Jane, placing her hand in that of Bolton.

"Rumpelstiltskin"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

IN "RUMPELSTILTSKIN," the five-reel Mutual Master-Picture produced by Thomas H. Ince for the New York Motion Picture Company, the public will find a feature decidedly out of the ordinary, one which is refreshingly different from the usual run of features and which makes use of many of the tricks of photography that made the trick pictures of several years ago so fascinating.

Rumpelstiltskin, as everyone knows, is a famous fairy tale that depicts the wicked machinations of the little dwarf with magic power and his ultimate undoing by his own wiles.

In the photoplay Rumpelstiltskin is played by Clyde Tracy, who proves himself a character actor of note, for he creates in the title role a being without precedent on the screen, one whom the public will admire in spite of his wickedness, for Rumpelstiltskin performs all the tricks such as exhibitors used to delight in securing in their feature productions made in the olden days when Pathe, Melies and Gaumont were producing their inimitable productions. At the wave of his hand human beings are turned into pigs and gigantic dragons are transformed into frogs, while no feat of magic seems beyond his power to attempt.

Elizabeth Burbridge makes a beautiful and attractive "Polly," and Kenneth Browne a handsome and manly Prince Cole, while such characters as old King Cole, Jim Crow, the miller, the good fairy and Simple Simon are all splendidly portrayed.

Scene from "Rumpelstiltskin."

Briefly, the story tells how Rumpelstiltskin covets the miller's beautiful daughter, Polly, and when the miller refuses to sell her for gold, tells King Cole that the girl can spin gold from straw and that she must be beheaded in case she refuses to do so.

Polly and her father, therefore, are imprisoned and faced with this impossible task, but Rumpelstiltskin offers to himself accomplish the miracle if she will agree to give him her first-born, provided it is a girl. To save her father's life she consents, and after Rumpelstiltskin has spun the gold from the straw, Polly and Prince Cole, her lover, obtain from the good fairy a magic carpet on which they fly away to a distant land to elude Rumpelstiltskin.

Years later he finds them and demands the child which has been born to them, and which is a girl. The good fairy aids them, however, in rescuing their first-born, and meanwhile the king, whose treasury is empty, demands again the appearance of the girl who can spin straw into gold. The old miller cannot produce his daughter and is about to be killed when Polly and her prince appear before the king, and the latter, after hearing their story, punishes Rumpelstiltskin by condemning him for life to the spinning of straw into gold. It is a picture that as a matinee attraction for children is unequaled.

Sixth Episode, "Road O' Strife"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

ACTION aplenty is found in episode six of the Lubin serial, "The Road O' Strife," for this latest chapter of the serial in which Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson are being featured is the snappiest of any that have preceded, and the story advances a good bit ere the reel ends.

As episode five closed, it will be remembered, Clara, in love with Jerome and consequently jealous of Alene, had thought to put the girl forever out of her way by pushing Alene into the waters of the river below the old mill, and as this chapter begins we see Alene still struggling in the waters, while Clara stands above, scornfully laughing at the drowning girl.

To be sure of the girl's certain death, Clara turns on the water that flows over the old mill wheel, thus assuring the drowning of the helpless girl, but just as she leaves the lever that has turned on the water she is startled by footsteps outside and has barely time to hide herself in a gloomy corner of the old mill when Robert Dane and Gray appear.

They hear Alene's feeble cries for help, and Dane, throwing off his coat, plunges in to rescue his sweetheart. While Gray is standing in the open doorway through which Alene had been hurled into the water, Clara takes advantage of his distracted attention to push him also into the mill pond, and departs, thinking that she has brought about the death not alone of Alene, but also of Dane and Gray.

Clara flees to the room of Jerome, who is preparing to return to the city, and there relates what she has done. Jerome is amazed at her crime, but offers to shield her, and is jubilant over the fact that now that Alene is out of his way no one can attack his fortune. Ere leaving the village, however, Jerome secures the silver cup which stood for so many years by the old spring and takes it with him as a trophy of his visit to the country village.

With much difficulty Dane succeeds in climbing into the old mill and rescuing Alene, but no sooner has he the girl in safety than he notes Gray, who is still in the water, is sinking, so he once more plunges back into the mill pond to effect the latter's rescue, while Alene rushes out onto the road in the hope of finding help for Dane.

Several farmers passing by are summoned to aid and both Dane and Gray are drawn from the water, though Gray is unconscious and apparently dead.

Alene is led away.

Realizing the importance of capturing Clara ere she can escape, Dane and Alene rush toward the little village in the hope of finding the sheriff and putting him on Clara's trail. As they arrive at the station, they learn that the train has just departed for the city, bearing away both Jerome and Clara, and the sheriff as a passenger. The situation is thus as the episode ends.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew"

THE best manner of expressing the swing and tempo of Metro's "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," is by quoting its first sub-title:

> Dog-dirty and loaded for bear.

The scene which this introduces grips with a strength that lasts and is reinforced as the picture progresses. Can anything be more weird than the sight of a famished-looking, unkempt prospector, fresh from the snow-covered trail, stumbling into the dim light of a mining camp barroom, and sitting down at the piano to play like a virtuoso, drinking in the melody as a wanderer on the desert would the water of a cool, clear spring? The contrast here of appearance and nature is a study in itself.

Throughout the story tingles this wild note of fascination, borne out in environment by exterior scenes and interior settings that smack of the severe weather and pioneer advancements of the country about the Yukon. It is hardly necessary to mention that the action is fast and filled with excitement, as life in Alaska at the time and place in which this plot was laid was nothing but a series of stirring, and sometimes fatal, incidents. It took red-blooded, able-bodied men to survive in Alaska in those days, and he who, in addition to these requirements, was quick with a gun was doubly fortified to survive both the weather and his fellowman in the mad hunt for gold.

Made by the Popular Plays and Players Company, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," a five-reel adaptation of Robert W. Serviss' famous poem of the same name, is now being released by the Metro Pictures Corporation. Edmund Breese is being featured in it as Jim Maxwell, "the man who dropped out of the world." Although most of his work is done in the roles of the clean-cut family man and the stalwart prospector, he will nevertheless be long remembered as the haggard, dirty, wild-eyed miner who found so much solace in the piano. It is a masterful characterization and deserves to live. Others in the cast are: William A. Morse as Dan McGrew; Katheryn Adams as Lou Maxwell; Audrine Stark as Nell; Betty Riggs as Nell (twelve years later); and Wallace Stopp as Nell's husband.

The opening scene is of the interior of the Malamute saloon. Dangerous Dan McGrew and "the lady that's known as Lou" are seen seated at a table in one corner. A dog-sleigh stops outside, and its owner, a tired-looking, bedraggled miner, stumbles through the door. After treating the house, he sits down at the piano, and begins to play. Into the soulful, stirring music he pours his pent-up feelings of hatred, sorrow, love, and regret.

Years before, Jim Maxwell's best friend, Dan McGrew, had deceived his wife into believing him unfaithful. Their elopement completely unnerved him for a time. But finally he resolved to forget about it—until he next met Dan McGrew. Years afterwards, while prospecting, he met his daughter, now grown to womanhood and married. Her husband had been arrested for a murder committed by McGrew, and Maxwell assisted in effecting his escape. Just previous to the miner's entrance, Nell's husband had been captured in the saloon by the sheriff.

As Maxwell finishes playing, he turns about, faces Dangerous Dan McGrew, and tells him, in uncomplimentary language, what he thinks of a man of his type. The lights go out, two guns blaze in the dark, and both men fall. Maxwell recovers and is reunited to Lou, his wife. McGrew dies.

Hagar finds Arthur's body lying in a stream, near the gypsy camp, and after carrying him to the wagon there revives him. She has taken the diamond from his neck and hidden it in a box, where she keeps the papers pertaining to Arthur's adoption.

Luke Lovell does not want Arthur with them as he is with Esther all of the time, so he shows Hagar a newspaper item, telling of the murder of Dr. Lee and the disappearance of Arthur Stanley, who is thought to be the guilty one. Hagar goes to Arthur and tells him that she is his mother and shows him the paper wherein it says that should he turn out to be worthless he should be told of his parentage.

Arthur leaves the camp and after bidding farewell to Esther goes to Richmond. Hagar finds that he has taken the "Diamond From the Sky" with him, and so she and Esther and Luke Lovell also go on to Richmond.

Arrived in the city, Arthur finds that he has no money, so takes the diamond to a pawnbroker and there gets a loan on it. When he is coming out of the place he sees his cousin, Blair Stanley, who, being very much in debt, has come to borrow money. The cousins are reunited and leave together.

Vivian Marston, a woman of the world, receives an invitation to a big affair in Richmond and decides that she needs a new necklace to wear that evening. She goes to the pawnbroker's and there she gets the "Diamond From the Sky."

Arthur and his cousin have also received an invitation to the ball, and upon their arrival are introduced to Miss Marston. They both notice the necklace at the same time, and their astonishment is plainly read on both faces as they stare at the diamond and then look dazedly at each other.

Meanwhile the gypsies have arrived in town and Hagar goes to the detective that she has hired to trace the murderer of Dr. Lee, and he tells her that the two cousins are to be at the ball that night and that he will get them in as Gypsy fortune tellers. They come to the house, and as they enter Vivian Marston passes them and Hagar calls Luke's attention to the fact that she has on the "Diamond From the Sky."

Vivian Marston is sitting near a window, waiting for an ice, when a brawny hand comes through the velvet hangings and snatches the diamond necklace, then disappears.

American's "The Greater Strength"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett

THE two-reel American production, featuring Ed Coxen and Winifred Greenwood, to be released on May 17, contains an unusually convincing plot, and the producers have done full justice to the story provided for them in "The Greater Strength."

The settings, in the mining camp at Big Creek, are excellent. The rickety old stage-coach in which Ed Coxen, as Dr. Hart, rides into the camp, is without a doubt a regular stage coach and the manner in which the coach careens around the mountain side makes you fully appreciate our civilized means of transportation.

There is an extremely well balanced cast in this production, and although Coxen and Winifred Greenwood are featured, the rest of the cast does very good work.

As the story unfolds itself, we see the mining town of Big Creek, and an injured man is brought into the town's saloon and given whisky as medicine. The foreman of the camp realizes the necessity of having a doctor there, so an advertisement is sent to a city paper for a young doctor to come to the town.

In the city Dr. Hart is run down and one evening being unusually tired he goes to the gymnasium to exercise. In a bout with his best friend his great strength gets away from him and he seriously injures his opponent. He is brooding over the fact the next morning, and tells his mother of the affair, and she cautions him never to use his God-given strength except to save lives. The next morning Dr. Hart sees the advertisement for the mining town and straightway decides to leave for the camp.

meets the teacher and they become good friends, much to the dislike of the gambler, who plans to get even with him.

One morning Bob is trying to incite the men of the camp to strike, and is talking to them when Dr. Hart comes along, takes the stand opposite Bob and finally wins the men to his side. For this act Bob vows vengeance, and he and the gambler get together and are thinking of some way to injure the doctor, when they see him walking with the school teacher. They follow the couple and come upon them seated on a tree trunk. Bob insults the teacher, and the doctor, though angry, does not raise his hand to him. The teacher is provoked at this and leaves the doctor alone.

In the meanwhile Bob's little daughter has been taken ill, and the school teacher upon her arrival home goes to see her at Bob's wife's call, who goes after the doctor. Bob is in the saloon drinking, and when his wife tells him of the little girl's illness he rushes home just in time to see the doctor preparing to inject a serum into the little girl's arm. Bob, thinking the doctor is going to kill the girl to get even with him, attacks him. The doctor throws him on the floor and after tying his hands and feet goes on with his work.

After a while the little girl shows signs of improvement and Bob, who has been released, takes the hand of Dr. Hart and thanks him for his aid.

The doctor turns to the school teacher and tells her that he uses his strength to save lives, not to take them, and her reply is that his is the "greater strength."

Reliance's "Strathmore"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

"STRATHMORE," the famous novel by Ouida, has been done in pictures by Francis Grandon of Reliance and his four reel production will be the Mutual Master-Picture release of next week.

The tragic story of the love of Strathmore is splendidly photographed and acted by a cast composed of Charles Clary, as Strathmore; Alfred Paget, as Bertie Errol; Francelia Billington, as Mrs. Errol, and later as the daughter; Wilber Higby, as Vavasour; Howard Gaye, as the Count de Valdor, and Irene Hunt, as the Gypsy girl.

The story begins with the love of the Gypsy girl for her Spanish sweetheart, who is enchanted by the dancing girl. The dancing girl is won by Lord Vavasour, an English traveler visiting the country, who takes her back to England with him as his mistress.

There she is introduced into society as Lady Vavasour, and is courted by numerous titled men of the realm. Bertie Errol, attracted by her beauty, pays court to her, despite the fact that he has a wife and daughter, and when Strathmore, a woman hater, sees her, he, likewise, falls a victim to her charms, and rebukes his friend Errol for forgetting his wife.

The men quarrel and Errol in anger declares that the Vavasour woman is thoroughly bad and not really Vavasour's wife at all.

This results in Strathmore challenging Errol to a duel, which takes place at sunrise the next morning, when Errol is killed.

Errol leaves a letter addressed to Strathmore in which he explains that the pretty Lucille, who is the daughter of an exiled but noble Russian, is really his wife, though he has kept the marriage a secret for fear of offending his family. The letter beseeches Strathmore to care for Mrs. Errol and her baby daughter.

The news of Errol's death causes Mrs. Errol to die of shock, and Strathmore adopts and rears the daughter, who has been named Lucille for her mother.

the dancing girl, but each time is prevented by bystanders.

Strathmore succeeds in driving the fraudulent Lady Vavasour from society and exposes her as a low born dancing girl, the result being that she leaves the continent and goes to Paris where she is unknown.

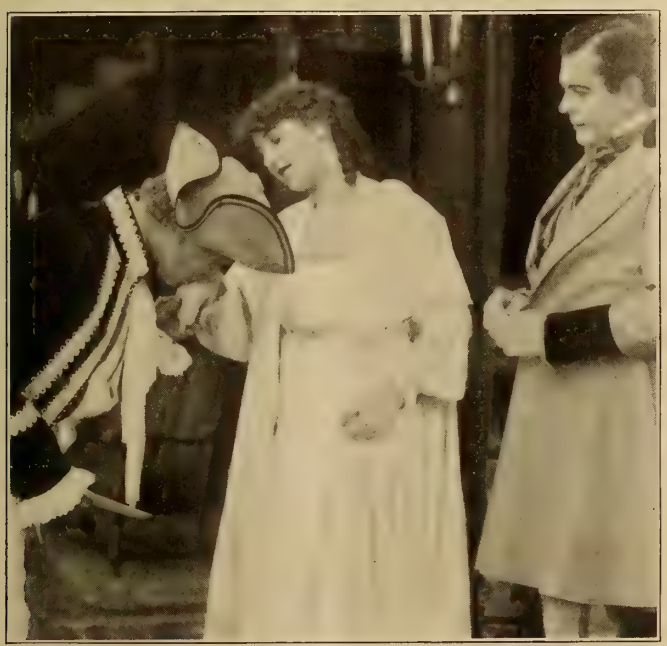
Years later, Lucille, now a beautiful girl, is courted by Count de Valdor, but the latter discovers that Lucille really loves Strathmore, her guardian, and when he makes this fact known to Strathmore, the latter hesitates about proposing since it was he who killed her father in the duel.

The dancing girl, now an humble street singer, returns, discovers the situation and in an effort to blight the happiness of Strathmore, tells Lucille her guardian shot her father.

The Gypsy girl arrives at this moment and kills the dancing girl and then commits suicide. Strathmore confesses all to Lucille, who, when she understands everything, finds it in her heart to forgive him and the two are married.



One after another pays court to "Lady" Vavasour.

"According to Their Lights"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

THE Cumberlands, with their wild beauty, squalid habitations and slattern residents, stamp with distinction and instill with life the oft-used plot of "According to Their Lights," the Edison two-reel release of May 28. The drama centers about the misinterpretation of a young northerner's mission in the mountains. His rival in love thinks him a revenue officer, and only the noble sacrifice of a wild mountain girl, who loves him, saves the northerner from being shot.

The company's trip to the mountains, where most of the picture was made, proved unusually fruitful. True atmosphere, ideal environment and realism of the kind that spells "punch" were secured, and the photography, a most important factor, turned out to be rich in attractive lighting effects and clear throughout. The most stirring scene, naturally, comes in the climax, but it has a close competitor in the scene in which Pat O'Malley and Yale Benner, playing the part of deadly enemies, meet in the middle of a mountain stream, and proceed to wipe out their differences. Embraced, they roll down the step-like bed of the racing stream, almost drowning themselves, but injecting realism, the main object, into the picture.

Pat O'Malley makes Bob Mason an unassuming but business-like and fearless fellow of the type likely to appeal to an attractive, refined girl such as Grace Snowden (Margaret Prussing). Eric Allen's crude love-making and villainy is interpreted by Yale Benner, while William West appears fully as austere and uncouth as Nate Tracey, the father of shy, vivacious Meg (Bessie Learn), who, uneducated and invariably barefooted, gladly sacrifices herself for the man she admires, though she knows that her love is not returned. Charles Sutton and Robert Brower are dignified and satisfying in the roles of Colonel Richard Snowden and Judge Harvey. Director Nolan produced the picture.

Meg tells Grace of Bob's peril.

In the interests of the National Lands Developing Company Bob Mason journeys to the Cumberland mountains to negotiate with Colonel Snowden for the sale of certain coal lands. He is doubly successful in his mission, for not only does he win over the colonel, but he also wins the affections of his daughter, Grace. Unknowingly, Bob becomes the idol of Meg Tracey, a little mountain girl whom he meets. Eric Allen, her lover, fathers the belief that the north-

He believes his suspicions confirmed on overhearing Bob say that he intends going to Madison Hills, the hiding place of the still. Eric and Bob meet in the woods, and in the fight which ensues Eric is badly beaten. He plans to ambush Bob the next day as he is on his way to Madison Hills.

Meg hears of her suitor's plans, and hurries to notify Bob. Unshaken in her purpose, on learning from Grace that she and Bob are engaged, Meg follows her rival, who has already left. She overtakes him just as he enters the range of Eric's rifle. The latter fires at Bob, but Meg, flinging herself forward to shield him, intercepts the bullet. A moment later Colonel Snowden's gun cracks, and Eric pitches forward, dead. Dying, Meg joins Bob's and Grace's hands, and breathes her last while wishing them happiness.

"Otherwise Bill Harrison"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

AN ENTIRELY new system of sub-titling is one of the features that will make unusual the two-reel Essanay release of Saturday, May 22, entitled "Otherwise Bill Harrison," which features Joseph Byron Totten and Ruth Stonehouse.

In this picture the director fades in and out all the sub-titles that appear on the screen, the moving picture being on the screen at all times and each subtitle being a sort of vision that fades in and out of the picture without in any sense distracting the attention of those witnessing it from the action that is going on. So far as this reviewer knows there is only one other manufacturer that ever used this system of sub-titling, though it seems likely that it will become more common as time goes on, for it is exceedingly pleasing.

Mr. Totten and Miss Stonehouse appear first as a newsboy and his best girl, and later as the hero and heroine of an exciting mystery story, which at the finish of the picture proves to have been all a dream of the newsboy's.

The newsy comes down the street and meets a little girl, one of his favorite customers, who comes out from her home to buy a paper. As the newsy glances over her shoulder at the first page of the newspaper he notes a scare-head story to the effect that the government has offered a big reward for the apprehension of a ring of dope merchants.

Bill Harrison faces the dope merchants.

As he thinks of his admiration for the girl, and the opportunities that would open up before him were he to win the big reward, he day dreams, and suddenly finds himself to be Bill Harrison, a government detective sent to apprehend the ring of crooks that is disposing of cocaine, morphine and other drugs.

The girl is transformed into the star reporter on a big metropolitan newspaper, and her city editor assigns her to the story of the dope trust, with instructions to secure whatever evidence she can against the band.

The girl goes forth on her mission and, tracking a suspect to a lonely house in the poorer districts of the city, is trapped by the crooks when she opens the door to their headquarters. As the girl finds herself trapped and apparently without any hope of being rescued, an individual who has apparently been sleeping on a bench in the corner suddenly comes to life and by putting out the lights in the room so dazes the crooks that in their confusion he is able to reach and rescue the girl.

Once outside the crooks' hangout, the girl discovers her rescuer to be Bill Harrison himself, who had pretended to join the band for the purpose of securing evidence against its members. He is aided in his work by Ayura, his Japanese valet.

Later on, however, Harrison is himself captured by the dope merchants and compelled at the point of a revolver to accompany the leaders of the gang to the handsome mansion in which resides their chief.

He is bound and imprisoned in a room in the upper story of the house, and there later on the girl finds him, after having obtained entrance to the house by changing places with the maid. She aids Harrison in freeing himself and overpowering his guard.

The girl, Harrison and the Japanese valet succeed in tracking the crooks to their headquarters, and catch them red-handed in their illicit traffic in drugs. A policeman is summoned and the crooks are turned over to the law, while Harrison impulsively clasps the girl in his arms and kisses her.

Just at that point he awakens to realize that he is only a humble newsboy, and had taken advantage of an opportunity offered to kiss his pretty little customer. The girl, frightened, runs back into her home, while the newsboy trudges along the street thinking of the wonderful dream he has had, and wishing it all might have been true.

Pathe's "New Exploits of Elaine"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

IN THE latest episode of the new Exploits of Elaine, which is entitled "Spontaneous Combustion," Wu Fang, the Chinese criminal, becomes even bolder than he has been in the past, and ere the picture ends, himself confronts Kennedy, supposedly bound and helpless in an underground Chinese opium den, and taunts him with the fact that his death will occur immediately unless he ceases to aid Elaine Dodge.

The Chinaman does not depend alone on his own efforts, for Long Sing, his former accomplice, is again in evidence in this picture and a woman of the adventuress type, known as "Innocent Inez," also plays an important part in bringing Kennedy and Elaine into the net spread by the crafty Chinaman.

"Innocent Inez" receives her instructions.

Wu Fang, after some chemical experiments, contrives an ingenious concoction which can be timed most accurately to cause spontaneous combustion, and set afire any flimsy material that may surround it.

With this devilish device as the basis of his plot, the Chinaman sends Innocent Inez to the home of Elaine, helping her to obtain entrance to the place by pretending to kidnap her in front of the house and allowing the kidnappers to be apparently frightened away by the butler, who rushes out from Elaine's home.

Inez is carried within the house, tells a pitiful story, and is finally given employment as a maid. Once in the house the girl installs her trunk in a vacant attic used for discarded clothing, and from the trunk removes a trick chair which has been specially built by the crafty Chinaman and which is equipped with steel bands, which automatically fly into place and grip anyone who is seated in the chair.

After arranging this device, Inez takes from her trunk the chemical concoction of her Chinese employer and places it in such a position that at a given hour it will cause a fire. She then writes a note to Elaine, asking the latter to send some cast-off clothing to a certain Baptist missionary society, her thought being that Elaine will go to the attic in search of the clothing and there be trapped.

hideouts and visits the opium joint in question. However, he is detected, though disguised, and tied to a post in the basement of the opium joint. By a clever trick he manages to free himself when left alone for a few moments, and having learned that Elaine's life is imperiled, he knocks down Wu Fang and the other Chinaman who seeks to interfere with his escape, dashes out of the opium den, jumps into a taxi and is whirled to Elaine's home, barely in time to rescue her from the attic where she has been imprisoned in the chair and is about to be burned to death in the fire which has been started by the chemical explosion caused by the Chinaman's device.

laid in a big machine shop, a big factory, a police court and a prison. Not only is this production thrilling in its startling genuineness, but is educational, in that it depicts the inside workings of a prison. One is shown how the prisoners have their measurements taken, by the Bertillion system, and also the futility of circumstantial evidence and of the third degree and the long, long arm of the law.

A humorous moment from Selig's "The Quarry."

Frederick Hand, as the hero, is excellent, and his mother, played by Mrs. Marston, the detective and Bill Hawkins all deserve credit for their convincing work.

Jim Montgomery is supporting his widowed mother and crippled sister. The mill shuts down and he goes to seek work in a factory on the north side of Chicago, in order that he may buy a hip brace for his sister.

With his bag of tools he applies at the machine shop, but as it is Saturday they close early, so he leaves without securing the position and is followed by a couple of crooks, who are planning to rob the safe at the factory. They take Jim's tool bag and succeed in blowing up the safe but are caught by the watchman and are struggling with him, when Jim comes into the factory after them. In the struggle the crooks kill the watchman and escape through the open window. Just as Jim is leaving a detective comes in and finds him with the tool in his hand that the crooks had killed the watchman with.

After a long trial, Jim is convicted of murder and given a life sentence.

His cellmate, Bill Hawkins, manages to help Jim escape, by hiding him in a box supposed to contain old machinery, and which was carried out of the prison. When Jim's escape was reported, detective Kearney, who had arrested him, begins an endless search for him, until he is found. Jim manages to get home and there finds that his sister has died in his absence. He leaves his mother and escapes across the marshes.

In the meantime Kearney decides to have Bill Hawkins paroled, thinking that when he is free he will go to Jim and that he can follow him, but Bill sees through the detective's scheme and foils him.

Years later we see Jim, the superintendent of a large factory, in a distant city. He is in love with the owner's daughter, but after declaring his love, tells her he is an escaped convict and cannot marry her on that account.

One day Jim sees a blind advertisement in the paper, one that he and Bill Hawkins had decided upon, before he escaped, and he answers it. Bill Hawkins comes to see Jim and tells him that he will find the man who murdered the watchman and bring him back with him. Montgomery gives Bill some money to take to his mother and in delivering it, Bill is seen by Kearney and when Jim's mother goes to see him, the detective follows. Although Jim has grown a beard which partially disguises him and has assumed another name, the detective is sure he is Jim Montgomery and at last asks him to give him his thumb-print, and by that he can soon tell, but Jim with a sudden resolve plunges his right hand into the cog wheels in the machine shop, and just then, Bill, who has found the real murderer, brings him to the factory.

Jim's name is cleared and he and Mollie Bryan, the factory owner's daughter, are happily married.

Universal's "The Black Box"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett

IN "The Ship of Horror," the tenth installment of the serial, "The Black Box," to be released the week of May 10, we are again confronted with the mysterious black boxes. Two black boxes are thrown into the rooms of the professor and Quest by some unseen hand.

The photography in this episode is splendid, and the scenes laid in Port Said and the surrounding desert country are artistically executed.

A bit of humor is cleverly introduced, when the professor, who with Quest, Laura and Lenora is watching a harem dancer, suddenly rises from his seat and grabs the dancer's ankle. After much excitement he explains his rash act. The dancer had on an anklet of a rare design which he had wanted for a long time for his collection.

Craig cannot be found on the steamer Barton, and now that the search for him is over, the captain tells Quest and his party that they are on a mail steamer and must sail as far as Port Said. The party makes the best of it and the captain tries to entertain his unexpected passengers. They are seated at the captain's table for their meals, and one night Quest, hearing a school teacher who is on board ship complaining because of the slowness of service, tells the waiter to give her the cup of bouillon which was meant for him. Lenora calls Quest's attention to the fact that he had sent the bouillon meant for him to the teacher. They take the remainder of the contents of the cup and after having it analyzed, discover it contains a deadly poison. The mysterious hands naturally have the blame laid at their door, and the party are quite certain that Craig is aboard ship.

Meanwhile Laura, who has been promenading the deck, sees Craig suddenly appear on one of the upper decks and then pass out of sight. She and the captain rush to the spot but see only the steward, who tells them that no one has been there but himself.

The boat is again searched but no trace of the man is found. The ship docks at Port Said, and the captain's steward is told by the captain that his services are no longer needed, so he leaves, carrying with him his baggage and having a long box carried from the steamer.

Just before the detective and his party leave the ship the professor rushes to Quest with a black box which has this message in it, "Foiled again. How easy it is. All of you together have not the cunning of a Mongar child. Don't try to follow me." The note is signed "The hands." The professor is at a loss to know what a Mongar child is, so the captain's aid is asked and he tells them that the Mongars are a tribe of desert people just outside of Port Said.

Quest and the professor decide that Craig has escaped to the desert and gone to the Mongars for protection, so they set out on a search for him.

They camp on the desert over night and one of the desert men and Laura are taken very ill. The natives of Port Said thinking that the white people are cursed, decide to leave them alone on the desert.

Craig is now amongst the Mongars and in their "LITTLE SUNSET," the latest picture to be released by Bosworth Inc., is one of the best that the Paramount program has had. Viewed by the press shortly before midnight after the evening's last show at the Broadway theater, it was unanimously declared to be a splendid picture; and the lateness of the hour was forgiven the pleasant representatives of Bosworth Inc.

While the story of "Little Sunset" has to do with baseball it is not a baseball story, in that, to be understood and enjoyed, it is not necessary that the spectators know who, what or why is first base, nor how many strikes put one out. So it is a play for everybody, and one that undoubtedly will find general favor. In it, Hobart Bosworth portrays the role of Bergstrom, the "Terrible Swede," famed as a centerfielder. To motherless "Little Sunset" Jones, whose father is also a professional ball-player, the "Terrible Swede" is an idol. Jones takes his small son with him on all his trips and eventually Bergstrom becomes a member of their team. A wonderful friendship develops between him and "Little Sunset."

Mr. Bosworth as the "Terrible Swede" is an enjoyably real character. He fits the part as he did that of "The Sea-Wolf." His work was a genuine pleasure to the midnight spectators, and there is no doubt but that those who have seen it since enjoyed it equally well. Gordan Griffith, as "Little Sunset," is the real boy for which the part called; loyal to the "Terrible Swede," his enthusiasm is sustained throughout the picture's four reels in which the action never lags. He is good, genuinely good, and makes of "Little Sunset" a role to which he justly can refer with pride.

Joseph Ray as Jones, and Marshall Stedman as manager of the Apaches, completes a title cast that in itself is good and has the additional strength of a professional baseball team, the members of which classify as "extras." There is splendid photography instanced throughout, and the direction is one of the picture's splendid qualifications.

First All-Celtic Releases

WITH the release of "Rafferty Settles the War," a new style of comedy appears on the motion picture horizon. It partakes of the slap-stick in general idea but adheres to the finer class of action in interpretation. As the name of the producers, the All-Celtic Film Company, implies, the pictures play up the humorous Irish character which is so familiar and popular in plays and stories. "Rafferty Stops a Marathon Runner," is the second of Rafferty's adventures, and it surpasses the first in theme, characterizations, and humor. J. A. Fitzgerald and Charles C. O'Hara are collaborating on the productions, the former directing and the latter writing the scripts.

A brief story of "Rafferty Stops the War" follows: Not having anything else to do, Rafferty takes it on his hands to stop the neighborhood quarrels. Sometimes the task of mediating becomes a strenuous one, but he settles war after war without great trouble, ending by calling together the rulers of Europe and effecting a general reconciliation between them—in his dreams.

"Rafferty Stops a Marathon Runner" precipitates poor Rafferty into an awful mix-up. On being told by the asylum authorities that one of their inmates, a self-appointed marathon runner, has escaped, he promises to watch for him. Rafferty meets a real marathon runner on the road, and holds him until the arrival of the asylum guards. In the meantime the lunatic has elected himself a contestant in the marathon, and, coming in first, is hailed as the winner. Shortly afterwards the asylum attendants appear, and lead the "hero" away.

Chicago's Strand Prospering

Orchestra Hall, now in the hands of the Strand Theater Company, devoted this, its second week of de luxe motion pictures, to the Famous Players' feature "Fanchon the Cricket," in which "Little Mary" Pickford is the principal member of the cast. A comedy with those inimitable funmakers, Weber and Fields, in the lead helped to balance the bill, while a travelogue subject, a Strand Topics-of-the-day release, and a tinted film entitled "Pups at Play" rounded out one of the best programs yet offered the Chicago public. The large orchestra, of which Arthur Dunham is conductor, rendered appropriate music for the pictures and between reels offered selections and accompaniments for the all star quartette and the soloists, who have really become one of the most enjoyable offerings on the program. Capacity houses still continue to be the rule at all hours. Next week's feature picture is to be "Betty in Search of a Thrill," in which Elsie Janis is starred.

Litchtman's New Plan

Al. Lichtman, recently general manager of the Select Booking Agency, has severed this connection in order to establish a direct method of contact between important producers and exhibitors.

Mr. Lichtman has opened offices in the Times building, New York City, and it is his intention to align a number of important theaters throughout the country with whom he will arrange to book as many feature attractions as can be obtained and that will conform to the highest existing standards.

In Mr. Lichtman's judgment, when the leading feature producers realize that an important chain of theaters are booking features through one central office, they will be prepared, regardless of their present program affiliations, to issue through his offices their most notable attractions, because of the wider commercial possibilities these subjects would possess, distributed and exhibited individually in a circuit of select theaters.

It is this plan of co-operation between producers and exhibitors for which Mr. Lichtman has organized the Al Lichtman Film Booking Agency, believing that the necessity for a feature program has been greatly minimized by the inception of the number of feature producing alliances now in existence, and that it is entirely propitious at present for the introduction of an independent method of booking extraordinary feature attractions too superior to the ordinary feature for inclusion on the regular programs.

De Luxe Paper

During the past year considerable attention has been given to the matter of improving the paper for multiple reel productions, and the composition and quality of the posters prepared by the Vitagraph for its V. L. S. E. release, "The Island of Regeneration," is a striking example of what can really be accomplished with care and thought.

All the paper for this big subject is printed in soft warm pastel shades, but so arranged that, while harmonious and pleasing to the eye, the reds, yellows and blues stand out and command attention.

The figures are all idealized paintings, representing scenes from the film story; the minor details on the stills from which the artist drew his inspirations are eliminated and artistic color combinations substituted. This brings out the principal figures in bold relief.

Paper of this kind is expensive, but it is appropriate to the dignity and present standing of the picture art. It will attract the class of paronage the picture deserves, and in fulfilling this mission, it is well worth the expense.

Celebrated Players Moves

The Celebrated Players Film Company is now located in its new home, 207 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, and business is going on as usual, though another week will see the office even better equipped for taking care of its patrons. The company has, as exhibitors well know, a number of excellent features already on hand, and new ones are being added at the rate of one each week.

To Book "Buffalo Bill" Pictures

The W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation of Chicago announces that it has made arrangements with Col. W. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill) Historical Picture company for the exclusive central states distribution rights on "Indian Wars Re-fought by the United States Army."

Brevities of the Business

Among the most honored names among the constantly growing ranks of the scenario writers of the country is that of A. W. Thomas, author of How to Write a Photoplay, and for a long time intimately connected with the Photoplaywrights Association of America. Motography has already commented on the worth of Mr. Thomas' book and gone on record as considering this volume one of the best that has ever been prepared for the aid and guidance of the struggling amateur, anxious to become a "regular." A San Francisco writer of note comments on the work thusly: "The book is the result of Mr. Thomas' long years of study and mastery of his subject, and is instinct with his sincerity and devotion. For years Mr. Thomas has been known for his excellent work, and his continuous, untiring efforts to aid every struggling writer who sought or would accept his assistance. By his associates Mr. Thomas is acclaimed the loyal, sincere and conscientious friend of all students of the motion picture technique, and they do not fail to give him credit for his uplifting instruction. What impresses me most is the kindly, helpful tone which pervades the book—none of that mocking, self-superior, 'I-am-wiser-than-thou' air, which is so offensive, repellant and discouraging to the earnest student or the aspiring amateur. Mr. Thomas must be a gentle, kindly soul, whose satisfaction is service; 'one who loves his fellow men.' He is a philosopher and analyst as well, and his book is full of information and inspiration. While it may humble the too-assured tyro, it will bind up his wounds and set him up again." Mr. Thomas' host of friends will learn with sorrow that he is now critically ill in a Cleveland sanitarium and under the care of two physicians, and all will wish for his speedy recovery and ultimate return to the field in which he has proven such a power.

Thomas Bedding was born in England, July 4, 1869. He was educated privately by tutors from Oxford and Cambridge, St. Mary's (R. C.) College, St. Andrew's (R. C.) College, and Gospel Oak Grammar (High) School. His course consisted of special courses on law, architecture, chemistry, photography and motion pictures. He worked in London, England, as managing editor of the Bicycling Times, the Surrey Magazine, Croydon and County Pictorial, Photographic News and British Journal of Photography, and was also an advertising man, reporter and dramatic critic on a daily London newspaper. In 1908 he came to New York and there has been the managing editor of Photographic Progress, The Moving Picture World, The Implet, The Universal Weekly and The Exhibitor's Times and Motion Picture News. Last year Mr. Bedding was sales and advertising manager for the Itala Film Company, involving a nation-wide publicity campaign for "Cabiria," one of the best motion pictures ever made. At present Thomas Bedding is at liberty to make a new affiliation in the film industry.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation has started its new feature, "Just Out of College." Eugene O'Brien, now playing in "The Celebrated Case," Jack Boynton Sherrill, who was in "The Builder of Bridges," Wright Kramer, late of "Androcles and the Lion," Ben Hendricks, Marie Edith Wells and Kate Jepson have been cast for this breezy, bright comedy. Mark Swan wrote the scenario and George Ade, himself, will edit the titles.

Harry Spingler, excellent portrayer of juvenile roles, and popular Screen Club member, will have the juvenile lead in support of William Farnum, who is slated to appear in a picturized version of "The Bondsman," founded on Hall Caine's famous novel of the same name. The Fox Film Corporation, which stands sponsor for the new feature, has selected Edgar Lewis to direct the photoplay.

Director Archer MacMackin gave a birthday party last evening at his Victoria street house in honor of Wallace MacDonald.

Harris Gordon appears in the leading role of "The Four Seasons," a Thanhouser Mutual Master-Picture, being produced under the direction of W. Eugene Moore. Arrangements have been made with the Pennsylvania Railroad for the use of the railroad yards in Long Island City in filming many of the important scenes. It was in this picture that Mr. Gordon was severely burned while jumping from the roof of a burning house in New Rochelle.

The branch managers of the central division of the World Film Corporation were all the guests of W. R. Scates and Harry Weiss, of the Chicago office. The day (Sunday, May 9), was spent in discussing conditions. In the evening R. H. Fox took the visitors out for a tour of the city, and from reports, they saw everything that was to be seen. Among those present were: Clay E. Brehm, manager Cincinnati office; R. I. White, manager St. Louis office; Jos. Klein, manager Detroit office; W. W. Kulp, manager Cleveland office; Ph. Goldstone, manager Omaha office; E. M. Lane, manager Indianapolis office; E. D. Selden, manager Minneapolis office, and M. J. Burnside, traveling representative for the Cleveland office.

The film market has been quiet during the past week, owing to the general market on the New York Stock Exchange absorbing most of the attention of the public. It is a notable fact that when the general market puts in evidence one of its dramatic declines, the film market does not follow suit. In other words—there is some satisfaction to a holder of film stocks that these securities exhibit a firmness and stability in the face of a general decline.

New York Motion Picture Corporation—This stock has been the leader in the last week in point of strength. The demand has been in evidence all over the United States, but very little stock has been offered for sale.

Mutual Film Corporation—The concensus of opinion amongst exhibitors seems to be that the new service—"Mutual Master Pictures"—can now be called a success. "The Quest," "The Devil" and "The Cup of Life" have all scored heavily and there seems to be no question now but that this policy, which may have been inaugurated in something of a tentative spirit, will be continued as a regular part of the Mutual's output. Stock has ruled a little easier as was to be expected since an advance of about 14 points would naturally invite some profit taking.

Biograph Company—Offerings have been very numerous during the last week, but the discrepancy in the bid and asked prices has limited trading. Since Mr. Griffith left this company there is an absence of the "big, dominant, commanding note" in many of the company's productions. The stock, in the face of its recent advance, has met with little support at the new levels.

The second Vitagraph "Blue Ribbon" feature on the V. L. S. E. program to be released May 17 will be "The Island of Regeneration." In this feature the "Big Four" is presenting one of the strongest as well as one of the most subtle plays ever produced in motion pictures. Miss Edith Storey, S. Rankin Drew and Antonio Moreno, are in the leading roles, supported by a cast admirably selected for the presentation of the vital subject handled in the story.

Marshall Neilan has signed a contract to direct and appear in Selig motion picture productions. He has been playing opposite Mary Pickford and was formerly a successful director with other motion picture companies. Al Filson, well known in both the spoken and silent drama, has also joined the Selig Company.

Beginning with the release on the licensed program for Thursday, June 3, the maker of MinA films announces that all future releases of this brand will be made at the newly and especially constructed and equipped studios in Los Angeles.

Miss Martha Boucher, a young, pretty and talented actress from the legitimate, has joined the Edendale company, giving the Selig studio there a number of stars. Miss Boucher played the lead in "Ben Hur" on the stage, was with William H. Crane and enjoyed a splendid experience in the line of roles before entering motion pictures.

Arthur Shirley, one time famous matinee idol of Australia, and at present with the Kalem Company at Glendale, Cal., has signed a contract with the Universal Film Company, to be starred in a number of big reel dramas.

Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, "West Winds," is being prepared for the screen by the Vitagraph Company, under the direction of Lionel Belmore, who, with a party of Vitagraph Players, has just returned from Texas, where the principal scenes were taken.

Essanay has purchased the photoplay rights for the famous "Braga" detective stories, by Henry C. Rowland, which have been appearing in the Cosmopolitan. There is a touch to these stories that is irresistible, and critics declare they are excellent for photoplay production. They include "Braga's Double," "The Rajah's Tunic," "Jabez's Conquest," "Business Rivals," "Legrand's Revenge," and "The Return of Gentleman Joe."

Society was represented in numbers at the plant of the Centaur Film Company in Bayonne, N. J., last week. As the guests of Mr. W. H. Natter, assistant treasurer of the Centaur Company, a party including Miss Janet Fish, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Redmond, Mrs. Burke Roche, Mrs. J. Lowell Putnam and Miss Lota Robinson was given a peek into the inner workings of a big, modern film plant.

The week for the showing of the John Cort film, "The Melting Pot," at the Hippodrome, has been changed from that of May 9 to May 16.

Booth Tarkington's story, "The Turmoil," last week became the property of B. A. Rolfe, who purchased the screen rights from the author. "The Turmoil" ran in serial form in the Century Magazine, and was later published in book form, attaining a large sale. Mr. Rolfe is selecting a star for the picture version from the many under contract with him.

Ollie Kirkby is appearing to great advantage in the Kalem detective series under the direction of James Horne. She is a painstaking and accomplished young actress, who entered the picture world three years ago under the guiding hand of George Melford, with whom she worked two years for the Kalem Company. Miss Kirkby appeared for a time with the Favorite Players Company with Carlyle Blackwell, but later returned to her earlier love.

Estelle Allen has joined the staff of the New York Motion Picture Corporation forces and will be seen in leads under the Domino brand. Miss Allen recently returned to the screen after a needed rest in a Vitagraph picture produced at Santa Monica.

Webster Cullison, for two years managing director of the Eclair western studios, will leave that organization on June 1. His plans for the future are not yet decided upon.

Madame Ada Dew Currier, whose accomplishments as a dramatic coach include the training and bringing out of Julia Marlowe and the advancement of many other stars well known to the dramatic stage today, was a visitor at the Smallwood film studio the other day, where she witnessed the working of her protege, Miss Ruth Blair, who is appearing in Pyramid Pictures in the United Film Service as Edwin August's leading woman.

Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Spottiswoode Aitken and Jennie Lee, old favorites, and Elmo Linkenhalt, a muscular young actor specially engaged to play the blacksmith, are busily rehearsing "Her Shattered Idol," by Ella Woods, under the direction of John B. O'Brien, who produced "Captain Macklin" and "The Outcast." "Her Shattered Idol" will be released in four parts as a Mutual Master-Picture.

For the first time in the history of the moving picture industry an entire circus aggregation has been in the hands of a film-producing company. The circus in question was the Sells-Floto and Buffalo Bill Wild West combination and the 101 Bison Company of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company had it in tow, or, rather, worked in co-operation with the whole-souled entertainers of the sawdust ring. It was all due to the creation of "Patsy of the Circus," a three-reel drama, by Hugh Weir for Henry McRae's 101 Bison Company.

The combination of Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, author, and Charles Richman, actor, in the making for the screen of Doctor Brady's "Heights of Hazard," spell immediate success for Mr. Richman's initial appearance as a Vitagraph star. "Heights of Hazard" was picturised by Eugene Mullin and is being produced in five parts under the direction of Capt. Harry Lambart, with Mr. Richman as Billy Williams, the unknown, Eleanor Woodruff as Olivia Martindale and Charles Kent as Mr. Martindale.

Tod Browning, who was recently made a director, is now staging his fifth Mutual picture. "The Lucky Transfer" was the first. It was followed by "The Slave Girl," "The Highbinders," "The Spell of the Poppy," and "The Electric Alarm."

Victor M. Shapiro, formerly assistant publicity and promotion manager of Hearst's Magazine, and late publicity manager of the Leslie-Judge Company, is now associated with F. C. Gunning, who conducts "The Films and Film Folk" under the name of "Wid" in the Evening Mail.

Miles F. Gibbons, manager of George Kleine's Denver office since its establishment, has been promoted to the managership of the Pittsburgh branch. E. W. Biederstadt, associated with the Chicago branch, succeeds Mr. Gibbons as Denver manager.

Francis Carpenter is the present leading man of the Mutual's juvenile troupe. Francis is three years old and his supporting cast includes Olive Johnson, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen de Rue, and Harold Goodwin.

Edward J. Peil, formerly with Lubin and the Santa Barbara Motion Picture companies, has been cast for a leading role in a Mutual drama now being produced under the direction of Tod Browning. Peil is an excellent actor and has a large following among film fans.

Catherine Carr, who wrote the scenario for the Cort Film Corporation's screen production of "The Melting Pot," has just finished writing the picturization of "The Price," in which Helen Ware is to be featured by the Cosmos Feature Film Company. Mrs. Carr finished the script in record time, delivering it to the producers within three days after getting the commission to write it.

The entire Lubin studio is to produce "50 Miles From Boston" the latter part of the month in Philadelphia for the benefit of the Lubin Annual Beneficial Association. Every leading man and leading woman among the Lubin players has volunteered for the occasion and in order that the public may have an opportunity to see all their favorite players, a different cast will appear in each of the three acts. Practically every player in the studio, who hasn't a part, will appear in specialties and in the chorus. Percy Winter will be the stage director.

David Horsley, head of the Centaur Film Company, is in New York this week, coming from Los Angeles, to dispose of some important business matters that required his attention. He expects to remain in the east for about a week before returning to the west coast, where his producing forces are now at work in new studios. On his trip East he was accompanied by G. J. Lounsbury.

Captain Wilbert Melville, manager of the Western Lubin Studio at Los Angeles, California, has come east for a few weeks on a business trip and is making his headquarters at the Lubin studio in Philadelphia.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Lottie Pickford, playing the lead in "The Diamond From the Sky," has purchased the famous saddle horse, "Ave Maria," which she will exhibit at the horse shows along the coast the coming year and perhaps in Madison Square next winter.

Harry Linkey, who has been on the road with "The Poor Little Rich Girl" for some time, is the new leading man opposite to Adele Lane, and under the direction of Burton King, who is producing "The Opening Night," a theatrical story, in which Miss Lane again takes the part of an actress. This is the second photoplay in which Miss Lane has been featured at the Universal.

Carlyle Blackwell has been quite sick the last few days, and on two occasions his director had to send him home from outside locations.

Mae B. Havey, who went to the coast in December with the Biograph Company, resigned from its scenario department and has returned to New York.

Catherine Henry, of the Reliance and Majestic studio, is recovering from her recent illness and will soon resume her work in Mutual pictures.

W. J. Tedmarsh, playing Quabba, the Italian, in "The Diamond From the Sky," was formerly a member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and also served with the Cape Colony Mounted Rifles in the Boer war.

W. T. Hickey and Jas. A. Dowding, of Chicago, have completed arrangements to convert the Masonic Hall in Markesan into a photoplay theater. It will be known as the Star and operated one night a week.

Al. G. Howard is the owner of the Adams moving picture theater. A new machine has been installed and the new manager will make every effort to please the citizens of Adams.

The South Side branch of the public library, Milwaukee, has installed a moving picture equipment, which will be used to illustrate free public lectures. The library assembly hall has a seating capacity of 550.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Strength of Love—(Episode No. 6 of "The Road O' Strife")—Lubin—May 10.—Clara, as this episode opens, pushes Alene into the waters of the old and abandoned mill in the hope of drowning her and thus preventing Jerome from a marriage with her to save his fortune. Dane and Abner Gray visit the mill in search of Alene, and Clara pushes them both into the mill pond also, and flees in terror from the scene. Gray is rescued in an unconscious condition and seems likely to die, but Dane and Alene rush away to get the sheriff and arrest Clara. Jerome and Clara board a train for New York, however, and elude arrest as the sixth reel of this exciting serial ends. See review, page 831, this issue. N. G. C.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 37—Selig—May 10.—Yacht Sea Call launched at Neponset, Mass.; Centennial celebration in honor of Bismark in Berlin, Germany; big suffragette parade in Philadelphia on May Day; "Uncle Joe" Cannon arrives in San Francisco for the exposition; latest fashions by Lady Duff Gordon; Lord Wimborne, new Governor General of Ireland, arrives to take up his duties; recruits called to near Dieppe, France; Germans held as prisoners at Southend-on-Sea on big war steamer; soldiers take charge of Maldon, 40 miles from London, where Zeppelins tore great holes in the earth and demolished buildings. J. C. G.

Manners and the Man—Essanay—May 12.—Featuring Beverly Bayne and Joseph Byron Totten. A club discussion results in a wager between Jack Forsyth and Kent Harding, that Harding can pose as a butler in a rich man's home without fear of detection. Kent, to win the wager, takes service in the home of Mr. Westevelt. Claire Westevelt, the daughter of the house, has seen Kent in college. She recognizes him, and having learned of the wager from Jack Forsyth, determines to become a maid in her own home. This is possible because of the absence of her father from home. Kent falls in love with the new maid and affairs are progressing finely when the old gentleman returns. He sees his daughter in maid's costume and demands an explanation. Meeting Kent, she tells him that her employer has scolded her without reason. Kent, angered, goes in and reprimands Mr. Westevelt. Then he asks Claire to marry him. She consents and they elope right under Mr. Westevelt's nose. He tells her he is not a butler, and she also confesses. Kent loses the wager but wins a bride.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 38—Selig—May 12.—Fleet gathers for formal review by navy department and President Wilson; story of the west is told in historical parade, Los Angeles; torpedo boat destroyer, Tucker, launched at Fore River Yards, Mass.; Maharajah of Kapurthalia brings his favorite of four wives to Panama Exposition; veteran corps of artillery act as escort of honor at special service of Colonial Historical society; school ship Newport sails with 1,500 cadets for Honolulu; famous aerodrome transformed into an aeroplane base at Hendon, England; pictures of the great liner, Lusitania, as she appeared on her fatal voyage, showing one of the German submarines now patroling the war zone off the British coast.

The Cancelled Mortgage—Biograph—May 17.—In holding up a stage coach one of the robbers is shot by the stage driver. The robbers stop at a lonely cabin, where a widow and her daughter live, and ask for aid. The wound is dressed by the widow and the men fed. Learning that she is about to be dispossessed by a landlord for her inability to meet a mortgage, the men give her part of their loot, to meet her debt. They hide outside the cabin and when the landlord emerges with the money, they hold him up. The landlord runs from them and meets the posse which is going after the stage robbers. He leads them to the scene of the holdup, and they follow the trail and arrest the kindly road agents.

The Lure of Mammon—(Three Reels)—Kalem—May 17.—Fania Marinoff is featured in this production. Dorinda is on the vessel, which is destroyed by fire, and is washed ashore and rescued by Thorston, a millionaire, and he falls madly in love with her. Just before her wedding Ladue, Dorinda's father, dies, and, bound by her promise, Dorinda marries Thorston. One day, in the midst of a quarrel, a bolt of lightning crashes through the window and kills Thorston. The young wife keeps the secretary, with whom she is in love, to look after the estate, but believing him in love with Celeste, her chum, she endeavors to further the match. Dorset, a fortune hunter, soon learns the true state of affairs, and also learns that he must get Hastings out of the way before he can marry Dorinda. Dorset levels a pistol at Hastings, but the girl disarms the would-be murderer, and she and Hastings fall into each other's arms.

The Jest of Jealousy—(Two Reels)—Selig—May 17.—Featuring Frances Marion and Frank Mayo. Cyrus Green and Edith Hines, daughter of Sheriff Hines, are practically engaged to marry. During Sheriff Hine's term of office several murderers have escaped capture, and he receives a letter to the effect that unless he makes good they will have to appoint another sheriff. Mexican Pete, a notorious outlaw, shoots a mail carrier and escapes, but the search they make for him is fruitless. Edith, returning from school, brings with her an Eastern friend, Bradner Phillips, and Green believes that she is in love with him. He sees the young people riding one day from town and fires at Phillips. Another search is made for the outlaw and he is captured. Phillips recovers and Edith tells Green that he is to marry her girl chum at college.

Mr. Jarr and the Dachshund—Vitagraph—May 17.—Featuring Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley. When Jarr finally gets in, after a lodge meeting, his wife scolds him. The following day Jarr buys a dachshund dog. The same day a big Polack coal heaver also buys a dachshund like Mr. Jarr's, for his family. While Willy Jarr is out with his dachshund, Izzy Slavinsky, the glazier's son, takes Willy's dog and leaves a dead cat in its place. Jarr, thinking that the coal heaver has stolen his dog, sallies forth to the Polack's domicile, and after a royal battle returns home triumphant, only to find his own dachshund on the front doorstep.

Felix Holt—(Two Reels)—Biograph—May 18.—Bycliffe, a prisoner of war in France, changes place with another prisoner, who is a forger, and returns to England to claim the Transome estate. Jermyn, who is in possession of the estate, denounces Bycliffe as the forger and he is put in prison. His wife and daughter are found by the Rev. Rufus Lyon, and after the mother's death Esther, the daughter, is adopted. When she grows older, Felix Holt falls in love with her. Jermyn calls on The Rev. Lyon and loses his pocketbook. This is found by the minister, and upon opening it he sees a picture of Esther's mother. He tells Jermyn this, and he holds this fact over Harold Transome's head, who goes to Esther and tells her that she is the rightful heir to the Transome estate. Esther and Felix Holt are happily married.

Their Own Ways—Edison—May 18.—Silas Gray and his wife are visited by their daughter, Elizabeth, and her husband. The young couple insist upon the old folks visiting them in their city home, forgetting their farm and its cares for a time. But, on arriving at the beautiful city residence, Mr. and Mrs. Gray cannot forget their country ways or the old home, and are continually taken to task for endeavoring to assist the servants in the housework. One day, while Elizabeth is out with some friends and her husband is at his office, the old couple sneak out of the house, and board the train for home. Elizabeth and her husband insist on their returning, but they have decided that their own ways and old home are good enough for them, and they refuse. C. R. C.

A Lesson in Romance—(Three Reels)—Essanay—May 18.—Richard Walton, a wealthy society man, disgusted with the schemes of every marriageable woman to get him into their net because of his wealth and social standing, flees from the city. He goes to the home of his friend, Sidney Wright, who has a beautiful sister, Emily. She, however, is romantic and has no use for social lions. She leaves a note for her mother saying she prefers Gypsies to society men, and goes to her aunt. Walton thinks she must be the girl for him and pursues. He kidnaps her and takes her to a Gypsy camp, where he poses as the chief of the Gypsies. After her first anger she falls in with the spirit of adventure and, dressing in Gypsy costume, tells fortunes. Finally she tires of it, and the climax comes when two women accuse her of stealing a watch. She has learned to love Walton, but does not want to marry a Gypsy after all. Great is Emily's surprise on entering the reception room that evening to find her Gypsy in conventional clothes. He begs her to become his Gypsy queen for life, and she consents.

The Liberty Party—Kalem—May 18. Featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan. Ham and Bud take French leave of prison, and seek refuge in a paperhanger's store. They receive a telephone call from a Mrs. Smith, asking them to come at once. Donning overalls, Ham and Bud grab all the necessary utensils, and arriving at the Smith cottage start right in to work. In the meantime Mrs. Smith has phoned her husband to come home. The police discover the convicts' escape and the guards are sent out in search of them. Mr. Smith arrives home and Ham and Bud paint his clothes into a resemblance of prison garb and turn him loose. He is captured by the police and Ham and Bud flee from the house, but before long they grow lonesome for their prison home, and donning the striped suits they return and ask the jailers to lock them up.

The Lucky Strike—Lubin—May 18.—Nellie Crehan and her niece, Elinore, answer an ad in which Bill Meyers, a rich miner, advertises for a home and a wife. The letter arrives, and Bill goes at once to call upon the writer of the letter. The aunt and niece decide to carry the joke further and have Nora, the cook, pose as the writer of the letter. He falls in love with the girl and proposes to her. Gray and Vincent, financiers, trace Bill to the house and there give him a check for one million dollars for his mine. Realizing the opportunity they have lost, Nellie and her niece decide to show Bill that Nora is the cook. He asks Nell if she baked the pie which he samples, and she scornfully denies it and points to Nora. Bill is delighted, and Nora goes back with him.

Across the Desert—Selig—May 18.—Bess receives a message from her sister, asking her to come and rescue her, her daughter and their gold. Marsh, a mountaineer, accompanies her and they arrive too late, as Bess' sister, Madge, has died. They take the baby and gold and start back across the desert. The horses run away and Bess and the mountaineer are left alone. Hooper, another of Bess' suitors, finds the horses and goes to their rescue, but finds Marsh has been overcome and has died from exhaustion. Later Bess shows her gratitude to him for having saved their lives.

The Awakening—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—May 18.—Featuring Earle Williams and Anita Stewart. While on a tour through the tenement district Roscoe Thane, who is engaged to Vivian, a society girl, meets Jo, a beautiful girl of the slums, and Jim, her brother, who is a cripple. He is touched by their condition and has his father operate on Jo's brother, and the operation proves successful. Jo's gratitude develops into intense love and devotion for Roscoe, and he also finds that he is in love with the girl of the slums. He takes Jim under his tutelage and makes a doctor of him. He goes to live in the poor quarters of the city, as he believes he and Jim should work there. Vivian visits them and is disgusted at everything. Thane is overcome by a contagious fever and Vivian refuses to go near him for fear she might catch it. He is nursed back to health by Jo, and Vivian, who condescends to visit him, finds the girl in Thane's arms and leaves them to their happiness.

Chinks and Chickens—Edison—May 19.—William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman are here seen as two farm hands, who take their employer's order to "close up the chinks in the hen house" literally, and make a canvass of the laundry shops in the nearby village. The Chinamen demand financial balm for their confinement in the hen house, and the owner, to avoid trouble, complies with their request. Waddy and Artie are then instructed in the art of closing up chinks. C. R. C.

The Fable of the Two Sensational Failures—Essanay—May 19.—Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford Wilton told their son, Oliver Cornwall, that he was going to be a great diplomat. As soon as Oliver was planted in college, the parents turned their attention to Eloise, their daughter. While they worried, they got word that they might expect Oliver home any time now. He had refused to meet the professors, except socially. The two apples of Paradise had turned out to be a lemon and stringbean. Oliver was some dancer. After the music started he was the big chief. Eloise went to see the great hedressmaker. The world was going crazy about dances, from Argentine to the Barbary coast. No wonder the queens of the smart set sent for Oliver to teach them the latest steps. Well, while Oliver was becoming a notorious character, Eloise put on one of the new gowns and she married a millionaire. Old Rutherford was just going into bankruptcy when Oliver showed up with the week's dancing receipts. He is still a respected member of the wholesale district. Ruth Stonehouse featured.

The Closed Door—(Two Reels)—Kalem—May 19.—All star cast. Mabel, a bride of a few weeks, discovers that her husband has married her for her money. She enters a room which the doctor has forbidden entrance to, and she is tied to one of the chairs by him. In order to get money from her he resolves to hypnotize his wife, and Mabel pretends to succumb and makes out a check for $25,000. While Keene is on his way to the bank, Mabel releases herself and phones the bank not to honor the check. Bertha, a detective, is sent to investigate. In the meantime, Keene returns home and decides to place his wife in an insane asylum. Both Mabel and the girl detective are placed in the sanitarium, but Bertha turns upon the guard when he enters with food, and disarms him, forces him to surrender the keys and then locks him in the cell. They return home, and while the girl detective covers Keene, Mabel phones for the police.

In the Dark—(Three Reels)—Lubin.—Rex Mansfield paints the picture of Julia Duval, an actrees, who, after the picture is completed, confesses her love for him. He tells her that he does not care for her and in a moment of anger she throws a bottle of acid in his eyes, thereby blinding him. Mansfield's wife, Edith, believes that he has had an affair with the actress and elopes with Lechmeer. Lechmeer leaves his apartments to get steamer tickets, which he had forgotten, and is run over by an automobile and killed. In his desk Edith finds a letter which shows her the true state of affairs, and she returns to her husband, who, after another consultation, has found out that he will have his sight restored to him. Ethel Clayton, Joseph Kaufman and Jack Standing featured.

Love Finds a Way—Selig—May 19.—Prudence Gordon eludes her aunt and goes into the woods, where she meets Ned Warner of the Continental army. Captain Gordon, of the English army, comes upon the scene, and tells Ned that no soldier of George Washington shall marry his daughter. As punishment, Prudence is put in the attic of her home, and there she finds her mother's diary. Later love finds a way and Ned and Prudence are united.

Almost a Hero—Vitagraph—May 19.—Archibald Masher, a fresh traveling salesman, arrives in Slumberville at the same time as a meek, inoffensive little man, Mr. Jabb, does. The two men are assigned rooms across the hall from each other, numbers 13 and 15, respectively. Masher meets Lil, the village flirt, and they are seen by her steady beau, Si Heck. Masher returns to the hotel and tells Jabb that he is very superstitious of the number 13, and asks him if he will not change rooms with him, the real reason being that he learned that Si and some of his friends were coming to the hotel to kidnap him. Jabb changes with him, and succeeds in knocking the three men downstairs, and tells Masher he wants his own room back. The next morning the news of Masher's supposed heroism spreads, and he is made a hero, but his heroism is short-lived. Otto Benninger featured.

For Her Happiness—BIOGRAPH—MAY 20.—To support her invalid husband, the young wife seeks employment. She meets no success and is turning disconsolately away when a friend of the manager asks to speak to her. He is an artist and she is just the type he has been looking for. She accepts his position, but her husband deplores the necessity. When the picture is completed, she again faces the problem of employment, because the artist has confessed his love for her. Her husband, realizing that he is the obstacle in the way of their love, secretly spills his medicine and leaves her free to marry the artist.

Sweedie's Hero—ESSANAY—MAY 20.—Sweedie gets a job as mop artist. Arrived at the hotel, she is given two pails and a mop and she starts to work. The first thing she does is to mistake a train on a woman's gown for a mop. The bell-hop in charge of the elevator will not let her ride, so she walks up the ten flights of stairs and falls down the whole ten again. She goes out on a ledge on the steenth floor of the hotel to wash windows, loses her balance, and almost falls. The bell-hop appears and pulls her back to safety and she falls on his neck, calling him "My hero." Wallace Beery featured.

A Decision of the Court—LUBIN—MAY 20.—Judge Hall sentences a youth to a long term in the penitentiary, and thereby makes a lifelong enemy of the culprit's mother. A year later the boy dies. Years pass before Madge Cord, the mother, and Judge Hall meet again. She has prospered and remarried. Her hatred for the Judge is revived, and she makes the acquaintance of his son, Elwood, determined to ruin him by teaching him to gamble. Young Hall is heavily in debt through gambling, and cannot pay, and Mrs. Cord uses these debts to force Elwood to obtain an advanced copy of his father's decision on a case involving railroad rates. Through his son's story Judge Hall learns that it was an early draft of the opinion which Elwood gave out, and he shows Mrs. Cord that this decision was written before new evidence had come to light, and is just opposite to the original.

"Where's Oliver?"—MINA—MAY 20.—Harry dreams of the "kindness to prisoner" system at Ting Ling prison. His dream takes him to the prison window, where he sees the members holding a singing club rehearsal. Refreshments and cigars are passed to prisoners after rehearsal. Ting Ling prison is a haven of bliss, and he makes application for membership. He pounces upon an officer, but is not arrested. Then he starts a roughhouse in a cafe. All the participants in the cafe are carried off in the wagon but Harry. He then steals a Flivver car and runs down pedestrians, but runs across the state line and is arrested and put on the rock pile in another prison. Harry awakes and decides that he is happy in that his experience was only a dream.

The Two Natures Within Him—(THREE REELS)—SELIG—MAY 20.—Featuring Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton. A remarkably clever story, based upon scientific studies. The Rev. William Morris is a director of a small church, near a state penitentiary. He has one idea in life, and that is to save criminals. Dr. Bishop and his daughter, Mary, with whom the rector is in love, are also interested in this work. One night a thief enters the rectory, and after a hard struggle the Rev. Morris is slugged, and after regaining consciousness his "other nature" asserts itself, and he becomes a thief, and boards a passing freight. He arrives in a near-by town and there meets with the thief who had slugged him, and asks him to not desert a pal but go with him. The thief returns to the rectory to see if the rector is still there, and here Rev. Morris, now a criminal, follows him. Mary and her father are now living in the rectory, and when the former rector enters she rushes up to him, but he does not recognize her but roughly throws her aside. Just then her father comes in and both the former rector and the thief are arrested. The thief confesses to his crime of a few years past, and after an operation William Morris is restored to his former self and he and Mary carry on their work of saving criminals together.

"Dimples," The Auto Salesgirl—VITAGRAPH—MAY 20.—Featuring Lillian Walker and Billy Quirk. Van Dyke, agent for the Flivver car, goes for a spin on the boulevard. His car breaks down and Dimples, in her own big car, comes to the rescue. Van Dyke and Dimples fall in love, and he asks Mr. White for his daughter's hand in marriage. Mr. White will not hear of this, as he says that no man can make a living selling Flivver cars. Despite Van Dyke's prospering business, Mr. White still proves obdurate, after Dimples sells some cars, so one day Van Dyke steals Dimples and they set off at full speed in a Flivver car, chased by Mr. White in his big touring car, but thanks to a stroke of luck at the railroad crossing, Van Dyke and Dimples escape and turn to the right to the minister's house.

Bobby's Bargain—BIOGRAPH—MAY 21.—Bobby has had many toys, but wants a baby sister or brother to play with. The teacher at the kindergarten asks the children to bring toys for the poor children who have no playthings. One little girl had nothing to bring but her baby sister. The teacher refuses the child, but Bobby barters with the little girl and gets the baby. The child's mother, after finishing her work, comes to claim it, but Bobby will not hear of the child's leaving until it has been dressed up in clean white rompers.

The Wrong Woman—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—MAY 21.—The story of a girl who alienates the affections of her friend's husband and later, thinking her former chum dead, impersonates her, at the home of her wealthy relative, hoping to win his favor and be named in his will. By a turn of affairs the rightful heiress is rescued from the deserted island, on the shores of which she was left as drowned, and appears to refute the impostor's claim. For further review, see page 786 of issue of May 15.

Jean of the Jail—KALEM—MAY 21.—A Carlyle Blackwell-Alice Joyce re-issue. Due to the aid rendered by Jean, his daughter, who is engaged to Jose, Pedro boasts that in all his years as keeper of the jail he has never lost a prisoner. Garcia, a notorious bandit, is captured, and the same day Pedro is suddenly taken ill. Jean fails to notice that Garcia, aided by his sweetheart, Luisa, is making an attempt to escape, and not until they are mounted on their ponies does she discover what is taking place. The knowledge that the alcalde is coming for his prisoner fills Jean with fear, and she summons Jose and promises to wed him on condition that he bring Garcia back. Jose pursues the bandit and a wild struggle follows, in which Jean's sweetheart proves victorious. He brings his prisoner back just in time to give him into the hands of the alcalde.

Just Retribution—LUBIN—MAY 21.—Will Duncan, a wealthy man, has a dissolute nephew. His daughter is in love with the old man's lawyer, Harry Campbell. The father dies, and the will is made out bequeathing all his money and property to his daughter, and if she should die before having an heir herself, it would revert to the nephew. Meanwhile the nephew plots to put the girl out of the way. She is abducted, but the lawyer gets a clue and learns where she is imprisoned. He gains entrance to the upper part of the house. Downstairs a quarrel ensues and a lamp is overturned which sets fire to the house. The men, thinking the girl has not been able to escape, leave when they see the house fall. The nephew makes application for the estate but is told to come back, and when he does he finds the lawyer and the girl awaiting him.

Cupid Puts One Over on the Shatchen—VITAGRAPH—MAY 21.—Wally Van and Nitra Frazer featured. The widow Greenberg goes to Shatchen Meyer's to arrange for a match for her daughter, and after a little argument Rosie, her daughter, is placed on file. While Mrs. Greenberg is there, Mr. Goldstein, a widower, whose son, Bennie, is in love with Rosie, enters his name and is introduced to Mrs. Greenberg. Bennie and Rosie are broached on the subject, but no names are mentioned, and they refuse to enter into the contract. The young people elope and wire their parents that they are married. The parents rush to the Shatchen's, but Shatchen will not give up the money, so they return home to find Bennie and Rosie married, and they prepare for a regular marriage feast.

The First Piano in Camp—Biograph—May 22.—Rumor reaches camp that a box is on its way, and when the box arrives it is opened in a saloon and found to contain an old grand piano. Presently a tattered old man comes into the saloon and sits down before the piano and draws from it music which kindles the memories of all present. The old man is asked to sit down and rest on the sofa. He tells them that his name is Driscoll, and the saloonkeeper remembers one of the loungers of the same name and goes after him. He returns and finds the money gone from the bar safe. He rushes to the cabin of Driscoll, whom he could not find in his first search, and finds him removing the disguise of the old man.

A Hazardous Courtship—Edison—May 22.—Thaddeus tires of his bachelor existence with Timothy, and asks his young married friend, Devine, to introduce him to some marriageable girls. Mrs. Devine gives Thaddeus a letter of introduction to all of the girls at the athletic club. Flushed with his success in being accepted by the girl whom he meets at the door, Thaddeus proposes to every girl in the club. When, on coming together, the girls learn that they are all engaged to the same man, they plan revenge upon Thaddeus. Pieces of his coat, shirt, hat and trousers tell their own story when the Devines call to see how he has progressed in his love-making. C. R. C.

Edison's "According to Their Lights."

Otherwise Bill Harrison—Essanay—(Two Reels)—May 22.—This two-reel production features Ruth Stonehouse and Joseph Byron Totten, first as a newsboy and his girl, and later as the hero and the heroine of an exciting detective story, which proves to be only a dream of the newsboy. Oney Fred Sweet, one of the star men of the Chicago Tribune, appears in one of the minor roles of the production, which is unique in that instead of the usual subtitle, conversation is thrown on the screen, and the characters are introduced as they appear by a very brief sub-title, which is double exposed in and out of the picture, giving a very pleasing effect. See review on page 836, this issue.

The Broken Train—Kalem—May 22. An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Express car No. 7 is robbed of a package containing $10,000 in gems. Hearing the rapping of a transmitter and guessing the import of the message, Norris and Wheeler, the crooks, sever the wires and then make a dash for a passing freight. Helen, upon seeing them climb into the car, jumps into a racing automobile and goes in pursuit. The engineer of the freight finds his airbrake is out of commission, and decides to bring his train in by the handbrakes, but the coupling gives way and the train breaks in two. A mile further, the road runs parallel with the tracks and Helen, running her machine along the side of the freight train, leaps on a flat car, runs forward and informs the train crew of what has taken place, and Norris and Wheeler are captured.

The Clubman—Lubin—May 22.—Billy Reeves, as a ridiculously inebriated man about town, is summoned home by his wife. Billy's tour of inspection of his rooms leaves in its wake the debris of an earthquake. He wanders into the music room and becomes entangled in a tiger-skin rug and somehow gets between his jaws. His wife, awakened by her husband's frenzied howls, rushes downstairs and finds him deliriously trying to escape the beast. He escapes, and after battling with a pillow becomes almost stifled by the cloud of feathers which rise from the scene. He silences the innocent canary by eating him, and exhausted he falls into a deep sleep.

The Jaguar Trap—Selig—May 22.—A Selig jungle-zoo wild animal story in one reel. Wild beasts enact the important parts in this release. Every Friday a jungle-zoo wild animal comedy or drama is released, and they are deservedly popular.

In the Days of Famine—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—May 22.—Jan De Bar is sent out from the Hudson Bay Company's post to burn the plague-stricken cabins of those who have died from the dreaded smallpox. He finds Jeanette, a little girl, in one of them, who has escaped the plague. Five years later Jeanette, now a beautiful young lady, who has been educated by Jan, returns from school. Walker, a young sergeant in the Royal Mounted Police, falls in love with the girl, and Jan, noticing this, awakens to the fact that he no longer cares for Jean in a fatherly manner, but he hides his love from her. Just before the two men start out on a long journey Jean places a note confessing her love in what she supposed to be Jan's sack. Walker finds it in his pack and then Jan gives up all hope. Later their guns and food are stolen in the North, and Jan breaks his leg. Walker returns and learns from Jean's own lips that she loves Jan, and Walker goes back after him. Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison featured.

The Mission of Morrison—Reliance—May 3.—Douglas Kent sends his secretary, Arnold Morrison, to Iviswold, the Kent country home, with a valuable necklace, his wedding gift to his niece, Dora Kent. In order to escape a loveless union with Count Luigi, who has been betrothed to her by her matchmaking mother, Dora runs away. It happens that she and Morrison both decide to stop at Mountain Inn for the night. Count Luigi appears on the scene and attempts to force Dora to return to Iviswold. Morrison intervenes. In the fight which follows the necklace drops to the floor. The innkeeper sees it, and tells the count. Morrison, unaware of Dora's identity, gives her the jewels for safe keeping. Dora's mother misses her, and 'phones Douglas Kent. Passing the inn, the uncle hears a girl's scream, and investigates. He saves her from the count, and rescues Morrison who has been imprisoned in the cellar. The necklace proves to be a wedding gift after all, as shortly after their meeting Dora and Morrison marry.

Three Roses—Thanhouser—May 16.—Time does not change the old colonel's hatred for all Northerners. When his daughter Rose, named for her mother, seeks his consent to marry a Northerner, he haughtily refuses. The young lovers elope. Years afterwards, the old Southerner loses his property. Then his wife dies. Her last request is that he find Rose and make peace with her. The old man goes North, but is unable to locate his daughter. He is befriended by a little girl who takes him home to her mother. It is the third Rose who has found her grandfather. Reconciled to his daughter, the colonel's declining days are happy.

The Greater Strength—(Two Reels)—American—May 17.—Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen featured. Dr. Hart comes to the mining camp and falls in love with the pretty school-teacher. As usual the mining camp is possessed of a bully and coward. He being out of work tries to incite the rest of the men into striking. Failing in this, because of the doctor taking sides against him, he decides to "get even." The school teacher is insulted by the bully, but the young doctor does not raise a hand against him. The bully's little daughter is taken ill and in order to inject a serum the doctor has to tie the bully to the floor. After this the school teacher realizes that he uses his strength to save lives and not to take them. For review, see page 833 of this issue.

When Cameron Passed By—RELIANCE—MAY 17.—Cameron, living in the open by doctor's orders, sees a rascally-looking man pursuing a girl along the roof of a lonely house in the country one day and decides to investigate. Hiding, he overhears them talking, and learns that the man is going to force the girl to marry his pal. Cameron meets the minister on the road, holds him up, and, dressed in the other's garb, returns to the house to perform the ceremony. Suddenly he draws a revolver, holds up the crowd, and escapes with the girl. They are pursued to a deserted house, where they wage a fierce battle in which Kalt, the girl's guardian, is killed. Meanwhile the bound minister has been found and released by the sheriff's posse. He tells his story, and they trace the "highwayman" and the gang to the scene of the fight. Cameron and the girl are rescued, and later marry.

Naughty Henrietta—BEAUTY—MAY 18.—Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell featured. Henrietta is the town flirt and one night at a dance she sees Dan Matthews, who refuses to even notice her. She decides to make him pay attention to her and hits upon a clever plan. For six succeeding months she posts a picture of herself on a monthly calendar and mails it to him. In the meantime her friend, Alice, has become engaged to Bob Henshaw and Henrietta is chosen maid of honor. On the day of the wedding she discovers that Dan Matthews is to be best man. After the ceremony Dan secures a confession from Henrietta that she is the author of the calendars and proposes marriage to her.

The Electric Alarm—MAJESTIC—MAY 18.—Dick Ray, a young electrical engineer, is installing a fire alarm system in a Pennsylvania town. All that yet remains to be done is to connect the wires from the alarm boxes with the bell in the Town Hall tower. While Ray is waiting for his assistant to bring some more wire, he discovers that a distant railroad trestle is afire. Remembering that his mother and sweetheart are on the train due in a few minutes, Dick grasps the loose ends of the wires with his hands, completing the circuit with his body. The alarm is sounded and the train saved. The young engineer recovers from his injuries, and receives a check from the railroad company big enough to permit him and his sweetheart to marry.

The Heart of Princess Marsari—(TWO REELS)—THANHOUSER—MAY 18. — Marguerite Snow and Harry Benham featured. An Indian prince marries an American girl. On his wife's death he sends their little daughter to America to be educated. Some years later, her father joins her there. Princess Marsari falls in love with a young artist. When Paul Leighton is accused of his uncle's murder, the girl is the only one who believes in his innocence. One point especially weighs with her. The victim's body, on its discovery, was stone cold, though he had not lain long dead. She sets her wits to work, and traces the crime to a half-crazed painter. Liquid air was used to kill Leighton's uncle. Marsari forces the artist to confess, but just as she is about to give him up to the police, he meets with a still stranger death than did his victim. The Indian prince recognizes "kismet" in all of these happenings. The story ends with Paul's marriage to the princess.

At the Edge of Things—AMERICAN—MAY 19.—David Lythgoe and Vivian Rich featured. Tom Carter is a gambler on the stock market. A sudden drop in the price brings him to a realization that he is ruined. His wife learns of this and goes to her father to ask him for aid, leaving a note telling her husband of her errand. In the meantime the butler, who has also been dabbling in the same stock, decides that he can use the money in his master's safe and goes back at night just in time to save his master from committing suicide. He ties him to a chair and rifles the safe.

The wife, not succeeding in getting the money from her father, returns to the house and finds her husband bound. The next morning the stock market rises and the broker is thankful to the robber for having saved him from committing suicide.

The Operator at Big Sandy—(TWO REELS)—BRONCHO — MAY 19. — Featuring Rhea Mitchell and Thomas Chatterton. Nell Oakley begs her father to leave the gaming table in the saloon at Red Fock, Arizona, but he refuses. Losing his pile, he bets his daughter's hand and loses again to Jack Ransom. A young miner takes Nell's side against her father and the gambler, and the latter, after a general melee, makes his getaway. Nell makes her way to Big Sandy where she is taken care of by Tom Loomis and his mother. Tom, a station agent, teaches Nell telegraphy. Meanwhile, Jack Ransom and his band plot to rob the treasure train. Tom is overpowered, but Nell succeeds in notifying Red Rock of the planned hold-up. Ransom is killed, and Tom and Nell marry.

Grigley's Wife—RELIANCE—MAY 19.—Claire Anderson starred. U. S. Marshal Grigley, with his wife and mother, lives on the South West border. While he is away on an opium smuggling case, his new secret service agent, Clarence Kirby, whom he has not yet met, arrives. He falls desperately in love with Mary, Grigley's wife. Grigley's mother, thinking that Mary returns his love, notifies her son who hurries home. While waiting for Kirby to keep a midnight appointment with his wife, Grigley sees her meet him at the door, and threatens to shoot him. Convinced that his wife is true, Grigley forces Kirby to drink to her health.

Her Alibi — (TWO REELS) — DOMINO — MAY 20.—Joe Bailey is drawn into debt and then implicated in an embezzlement by his chum, Jim Channing. He is sent to prison. Marion, his sister, obtains employment in a store in a distant town, and later marries Latimer, the general manager. Channing blackmails Marion, and she promises to meet him at a road house to pay him hush money. Latimer becomes suspicious of his wife's actions, and follows. When he sees her enter a private room with Channing, he bursts in upon them. Channing, thinking him an officer, opens fire on him and escapes. The blackmailer is wearing a suit very much like the one worn by Joe Bailey, for whom the prison authorities are searching in the vicinity. They mistake Channing for the escaped convict, and fatally wound him. Latimer and his wife, hurrying into the taxi, find Bailey hiding within. Marion makes a clean breast of everything to her husband. They get Joe away in safety. Channing dies of his wounds.

The House That Jack Moved—Falstaff—May 21.—Arthur Ashley and Mignon Anderson are seen in the principal parts. The reform nominee for mayor has the political boss so worried that the latter decides to rid himself of his rival by having his house, which is on the outskirts of the city, declared out of town. Joan Seldon, daughter of the editor of the ring's newspaper, overhears the conversation between Sheehan and the public surveyor, and warns Mitchell. Together they work out a scheme which more than meets the boss' plans. Mitchell's house is moved into the center of the city, and he wins the election by a large majority. He also wins Joan.

"Bad Buck" of Santa Ynez—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—May 21.—William S. Hart starred. Westward bound in a prairie schooner, Mary Gail's husband dies, leaving her and her little girl, Honey, alone in the world. "Bad Buck" of Santa Ynez, pursued by the sheriff, comes upon them, gives in to little Honey's pleadings, and buries Gail. He then takes the woman and child to his shack in the hills. Some days later, Honey is bitten by a rattlesnake. Buck, taking his life in his hands, rides to town for a doctor. He returns pursued by the sheriff's posse. The doctor saves Honey, but Buck, with his face pressed against the child's, breathes his last.

The Huron Converts—(Two Reels)—Reliance—May 22.—A Jesuit missionary and Abasan, one of his Indian converts, are tortured by a tribe which resents their teachings. Awed by their "miracles" the Indians allow them to continue their work. Among their converts is Monoka, the daughter of a witch who, angered at her daughter's new belief, places the girl under a spell during which she becomes blind. The Jesuit drives out the evil spirit and restores Monoka's sight. Soon afterwards, she is dragged off to the mountains by her mother's spies, and bound to a rock to perish unless she denounce the Christian faith. The Jesuit and Abasan find Monoka in the wilderness just in time to save her. Abasan and Monoka are later married by the missionary.

When Beauty Came to Koskob—Royal—May 22.—A charming young lady opens up a beauty parlor in Koskob. The villagers flock to her for treatment. One farmer, whose nails have become sore from her manicuring, decides to be revenged by mixing the contents in the bottles. In the meantime, the jealous village belle buys the beauty parlor. Her treatments prove horrible. Her establishment is raided, and she is drenched with her remedies.

The Rivals—Komic—May 23.—George and Willie are rivals for the smiles of Nell, the neighborhood beauty. A third party enters the race in the person of Johnny. He and Nell plan to elope, and meet at a certain barn at eight o'clock at night. Willie and George interfere, and a fight starts, during which Nell kicks over the lamp, setting the barn afire. George rescues Nell, and Johnny and Willie later discover him kissing her good-night at the gate. They shake hands and swear off on girls. The next morning Johnny's mother is surprised to see on her son's nose a big scratch which was not there when she put him to bed the night before.

Eleven-Thirty P. M.—(Two Reels)—Majestic—May 23.—Lloyd James, a banker lures away the wife of Thomas Main, a farmer. One night, years later, a policeman hears sounds of struggling near the James mansion. While listening, he glances at the tower clock which indicates exactly eleven-thirty. Hearing no further noise, the policeman passes on. The next morning the banker is found murdered. Circumstantial evidence points to either Ralph Windsor, the lover of Muriel Main, the farmer's daughter, or the butler as the guilty one. One of the detectives notices the imprint of a hand near where the banker fell. One of the fingers is peculiarly mangled. This new clue leads to Farmer Main. Before he can be brought to justice, he contracts a severe illness and dies.

The Corsican Brothers—(THREE REEL)—MAY 14.—Louis and Fabian are born as the Siamese twins; the ligament binding them is severed, but they are just as closely united, mentally. The girl Louis loves is married to an elderly officer, who goes to war, leaving his bride alone. A noted libertine ensnares her into a compromising affair, and Louis fights a duel with him and is killed. At that moment Fabian, in the mountains, has a pain in his side, and finds it covered with blood. He has a vision of the duel, and sets out in quest of his brother, and after killing the libertine, returns with the body of Louis.

A Stranger in Camp—VICTOR—MAY 14.—Baits, visiting with his chum in the woods, drinks too much, hits his chum, and thinking he has killed him escapes to a lumber camp, where he becomes cook. The sheriff, on the search for a convict-murderer, enters. Baits, thinking it is he the sheriff wants, hides in a bedroom. A bureau is knocked over, and the convict-murderer rushes from behind it into the arms of the sheriff. Baits returns to his kitchen, spills soot over him and the boys, thinking he has small-pox, run from him. He returns to his chum's home, where he finds his chum is all right, and the two start out for a good time.

The Smuggler Lass—(TWO REEL)—BISON—MAY 15.—Donald informs the authorities that Bryan is smuggling brandy. Sheilla, Bryan's sweetheart, goes to warn Bryan, but is not in time, and a fight ensues but Bryan escapes. He goes to Sheilla's cottage next morning, and is apprehended there and arrested. Sheilla sends him a loaf of bread; in it he finds a rope by which he escapes. He meets Sheilla and her mother and the three of them set off for America and freedom.

Nothing Ever Happens Right—JOKER—MAY 15.—A young author decides to try for the prize offered for the best scenario by the "Avalanche Motion Picture Company." While seated in a Mexican restaurant he witnesses an amusing incident—a girl's wild hunt for a coat which is not lost but only out of sight. He falls asleep, and dreams in a melodramatic strain. He is awakened by the waiter's shaking him. Realizing that his dream contains some splendid material for a play, he submits his script to the contest judges, and, of course wins the prize.

Framed — POWERS — MAY 15. — Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn featured. Ned Benton, wishing to try his luck in the West, has his mother mortgage their home to pay his expenses. At a time when he is without a cent, thanks to the gaming tables in the town's one saloon, he receives a wire from his mother stating that unless she receives five hundred dollars at once, the deacon will 'foreclose the mortgage on the house. Downhearted, Ned accepts the treats offered him, drinking himself into a stupor. Doris, the gambler's daughter, who has won Ned's money by dishonest methods repents on finding the telegram on the floor, and telegraphs one thousand dollars to Ned's mother. The next day as he is passing the gambler's cabin, Ned hears him threaten his daughter because a bag of gold dust has been lost. He rescues her from her father's anger. The gambler's dishonest methods are discovered, and he is driven out of town. Ned learns that Doris is the one who sent the money to his mother, and they come to an understanding.

When Brains Are Needed—(Two Reels)—Big U—May 16.—Tom is discharged from the detective force on account of his age. His granddaughter, Agnes, obtains a position with the heiress, Marion, whose fiancee, Henry, gives her a beautiful necklace. That night the orang-outang escapes, enters Marian's room and takes the necklace. Agnes is accused of the theft and arrested. Tom begs to see the room, finds the orang-outang's hand-print and follows the clew to a den of crooks, where the necklace is taken for disposal. He clears the name of Agnes, and is returned to his desk at headquarters, where brains are needed.

Fate's Alibi—Laemmle—May 16.—Ruth Hope, a cartoonist, sees fine material for a cartoon in the person of Daggett, a down-and-outer, who sits next her in the street-car. Arising, Ruth drops her purse. Daggett keeps it and with the money purchases new clothes, and thereafter becomes successful. Ruth, indignant, sketches the features of Daggett and gives the cartoon to the police. Daggett, remorseful, writes to the address on the card which the purse contained, and explains why he had not returned the money previously, but does so now. Daggett is arrested, but Ruth explains away the charge and Daggett accompanies her to her home.

Baby—(Two Reels)—Victor—May 17. Harry is so absorbed in his little child that he forgets about everything else when playing with it. Times without number he does not get downstairs until dinner is cold. More than once Mr. Vale, his employer, warns him that unless he turns over a new leaf and gets to the office in time and tends to his work while he is there, he will be looking for a new position. But through it all, Harry is contented and happy. The answer to it all is—baby. Almost at her wits' end, his wife hires a maid to care for the child and keep it from its father. One day the girl calls Harry up at the office, and tells him that he is wanted home by three. Thinking, of course, that she means three o'clock, he explains to the others that his wife is expecting a child, and goes home. There he finds, not one new arrival, but three. The scene fades out with his falling out of the window backwards.

A Day at the San Diego Fair—Joker—May 17.—The Shultz family visit the fair and from the moment of their entry, to the final disappearance of "Pa" Shultz into the clouds hanging to the basket of a balloon, all is confusion of domestic entanglements, engendered by the mischievousness of the Shultz kids and the flirtatiousness of "Pa." There are many laughs throughout the film.

The Dancer—Gold Seal—(Three Reels)—May 18.—Gerald Temple, to please his dying mother, consents to marry his foster sister, Myrtle, though he really loves Stella, a celebrated dancer. Myrtle was adopted into the Temple family years before, when she was found deserted upon the steps of their mansion at Wilshire. Gerald is unable to control his love for Stella, and, after a few weeks of married life, he returns to her. Unknown to Gerald, Stella is a mother. She left her babe, when she found herself unable to care for it longer, upon the steps of the Wilshire mansion. Now, her maternal longings return with renewed force, and she engages private detectives to trace her child. Stella and Gerald plan to elope. On the day set for the elopement Stella learns from her detectives that Myrtle, Gerald's wife, is her daughter. The young husband, stunned, on being told by the dancer that she will have nothing more to do with him, returns to his wife. Before leaving to fulfill a London engagement, Stella steals up to one of the windows in the Temple mansion to see again her daughter, whose life she so nearly ruined. The affectionate manner in which Gerald and Myrtle embrace assures her that all differences have been smoothed over. Cleo Madison, Joe King, and Agnes Vernon are among the members of the cast.

When Cupid Crosses the Bay—Nestor—May 18.—The boys flirt with Billie, a "peach," on board a ferry boat crossing from Oakland to San Francisco. This arouses father's ire. The boys see Billie again at the Golden Gate Hotel, and one of them makes an appointment with her. She slips away from her sleeping father's side, one of the boys taking her place on the bench. When father awakens, he attempts to have the boys arrested, but when Billie insists that she, too, go to jail, father relents, and forgives the boys.

From Italy's Shores—Laemmle—(Two Reels)—May 19.—A real life story of immigrant joys and sorrows. Accidentally separated in a great city, an immigrant girl and her brother both find good friends, and are, finally, happily reunited through the girl's remarkable gift of song. A picture which should meet with popularity everywhere.

Love and Sour Notes—L-Ko Comedy—May 19.—Billy, a cornetist and Oscar his rival, who plays a trombone, are suitors for the girl's hand. She prefers Oscar's music and that makes Billy sore. Oscar gets a job as soloist in the village and that is the job that Billy had been trying to land. The night of the first concert Billy brings a lemon and squeezes it into the trombone. A big row follows, in which Oscar chases Billy onto the roof, the roof caves in and the audience are given a plaster-bath.

A Fireside Realization—Rex—May 20.—Richard Thornton is interested in literature and neglects his frivolous wife. She asks him, one night to take her to the theater but he tells her that he is too busy. She goes into the bedroom and Thornton gets out an old diary, and drawing his chair up before the fireplace begins to read. He falls asleep and has an awful dream, in which he thinks that his wife goes to the theater with a friend of his. Afterward they go to a cafe and the friend persuades his wife to elope with him. Thornton awakes and rushes into the bedroom, tells his wife to hurry and get dressed, as they are going to the theater, when a friend comes in with three tickets for the theater but Thornton refuses the invitation and takes his wife himself.

Courtmartialed—(Three Reels)—Imp.—May 21.—Jules, son of General Bleriat, steals valuable papers from his father. He wears a mask. In a scuffle Jules is wounded in the arm. He escapes and exchanges the papers for two bags of gold, with which to pay his gambling debts. Going to the home of Marie, whom he loves, he learns that his rival, Jeffry, is successful. Feigning to attempt suicide with a knife, Jules is rescued by Jeffry, but not until the latter has received a wound corresponding to that on Jules' arm. Jeffry is convicted of stealing the papers on the evidence of the wound. Marie implores Jules to help her save Jeffry. Jules confesses the crime to his mother, who begs the general not to convict him. The general frees Jeffry; Jules is convicted. The general promises his wife he will substitute blanks for cartridges. He does so, thereby making the heart of his wife happy, but feeling that he has betrayed a trust to his country.

They Were Heroes—Nestor—May 21.—Mr. Smith invites his man-chum out for his vacation. Mrs. Smith invites her girl-friend. They arrive at different depots before the Smiths reach the stations to meet them and they find their respective ways to the Smith home. There, Eddie mistakes the girl for a burglar; the girl mistakes Eddie for a thief. Eddie summons the police; each accuses the other and both are arrested. Mrs. Smith goes to bail out her friend; Mr. Smith goes to bail out Eddie. Each tell how he and she saved the Smith home. They confront each other in the Smith kitchen and decide that neither is a hero.

When Love Is Love—REX—(Two REELS)—MAY 22.—An unusual story of life in a department store. Amy has had to renounce a career as a singer to work as a stenographer. Will Braddon, the cashier, befriends her against the sneers of her fellow clerks. Dick, his brother, is a handsome, reckless spendthrift, who finally cashes a bogus check. Will and Amy buy tickets in a big lottery. Meanwhile, Dick gets into the hands of a blackmailer. To enable Will to help his brother, Amy changes the tickets after it is announced that she has won the big prize. Although Will accepts the money, he finally discovers Amy's love and her secret. Pauline Bush and William Clifford featured.

The Lady Doctors of Grizzly Gulch—JOKER—MAY 22.—Dr. Shultz finds Grizzly Gulch, a disgustingly healthy town. Then Dr. Helen Hurtmore comes to establish a practice and immediately all the boys need treatment. Dr. Shultz disguises himself as a woman and soon the Hurtmore practice flows toward the new lady doctor's office. Then Dr. Hurtmore penetrates the disguise and the boys string Dr. Shultz to a tree. But the lady doctor cuts the rope and they decide union is better than opposition and are married.

Diamonds of Fate—POWERS—MAY 22.—Valentine, who poses as an artist but practices burglary, is in the power of Hargreave, a millionaire. The latter threatens to expose him if Valentine does not place his beautiful model, Doris, in Hargreave's power. Valentine gives Doris a stolen necklace to wear and tells Hargreave. The latter accuses Doris of the theft of the jewels and forces her to accompany him to his home. Grant, Doris' lover, follows the pair and rescues Doris, then returns in time to intercept Valentine's escape and have him placed under arrest.

The Old Doctor—BIG U—(Two REELS)—MAY 23.—Doctor Jones, modest and unassuming, is of national fame under the name of "Old School," his nom de plume in a medical journal. His home is in the village of Condon, where he struggles along with a large but unremunerative practice. This, however, is the least of his worries, as his main desire is to aid the people. Richard Carleton, a young doctor, arrives in Condon with a letter to John Emerson, its most prominent citizen. Carleton and Enid Emerson become sweethearts, and the girl's father fits up a luxurious office for him. Jones is glad to hear of the new doctor's advent, and, thinking to be friendly, offers his good wishes and assistance to the young man. But Carleton is too self-confident to pay any attention to him. Jones' remunerative patients are attracted by the splendor of Carleton's offices, and soon Jones has none but the poor for his patients. By self-denial he keeps his wife and "Blackie," his horse, from want. One night, at an affair at which Enid's and Carleton's engagement is announced, the girl is taken ill. Carleton's petty skill proves inadequate, and he sends to a distant town for two specialists, but they, too, fail to diagnose the case. One of the doctors suggests that they get "Old School." A wire to the editor of the journal brings the reply, "See Jones." The old doctor, whose aid was at first scorned, succeeds in saving Enid. A new understanding comes between Carleton and Jones. Murdock MacQuarrie featured.

One Kind of Friend—Laemmle—May 23.—Bill Westcott, a civil engineer in Her Majesty's service on the desert, becomes somewhat of a drunkard, owing to the monotonous life. Danny Bowen, an especial friend of Westcott's, notes the latter's neglect of his pretty wife, and constitutes himself her friend. This makes Bill jealous, and in one of his drunken rages he strikes her. Cecil leaves him, and wanders on the desert. Danny sees her farewell note, and starts out to overtake her. Luckily, he finds her, and brings her back home. Bill has a terrible dream in which he sees the evils of drink. He awakens in the morning, cured. A happy reconciliation takes place between the husband and wife. Francis Ford and Grace Cunard featured.

The Melting Pot—(Five Reels)—Cort Film Corporation—David Quians, a young Jewish violinist, is left an orphan through the massacre of the orthodox Jews under the leadership of Baron Revandal, Governor of Kishineff. Vera, daughter of the baron, while on an errand of mercy attracts the attention of the Czar's spies and is made a prisoner. Her father refuses to recognize her, and she is sent to Siberia. She changes places with a Jewish woman, and makes her escape to America. David is exiled with the Jews to America. Vera, in America, finds employment in a Russian mission and there attracts much attention by her beauty and culture. David interests a German music master in a wonderful symphony, symbolic of the amalgamation of all the foreign races in the great "melting pot" of America. Much to the horror of David's uncle, David and Vera fall in love with each other and some one cables Vera's father of her engagement to a common Jew peddler. The baron hastens to America and meets David, who recognizes in him the specter of the past and declares that a river of blood separates them forever. The great symphony finished, David appears before a brilliant audience and is proclaimed a genius. Overcome by his success, David goes out into the night, where he is followed by Vera, who convinces him that here in the new land all race prejudice has been swept aside and love and liberty can walk unmolested together.

The Shooting of Dan McGrew—Popular Plays and Players—(Five Reels).—A strong story of lawless Alaska during the gold rush, splendidly staged, clearly photographed, and finely acted. Years after Dan McGrew has stolen Jim Maxwell's wife, the two men meet in the saloon at Malamute. Maxwell, bearded, dirty and savage-looking, plays the piano for a while, then whirls about and faces his enemy. The lights go out, two guns blaze forth, and both men fall. McGrew dies, but Maxwell recovers and is reunited to Lou, his wife. Edmund Breese featured.

Mutual Masterpictures

Rumpelstiltskin—(Five Reels)—New York Motion Picture Company.—The famous fairy story of the wicked dwarf, the miller's beautiful daughter and the handsome prince, who falls in love with her, is splendidly told in this Ince production. Numerous trick effects are used that will make it a matinee attraction for children of unbounded worth. See review on page 830, this issue.

N. G. C.

Strathmore—(Four Reels)—Reliance.—Charles Clary and Francelia Billington have the leading roles in this splendidly photographed adaptation of the Ouida novel of the same title, which tells of Strathmore's love affairs with several women, and his final marriage to Lucille, the daughter of his friend, Bertie Errol. See review, page 834, this issue.

May Blossom—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—May Blossom loves Richard Ashcroft, a Southern officer, and agrees to marry him, though her father prefers Steve Harland, who loves her madly. Richard is arrested by Union officers, who suspect his frequent trips across the river to see May are caused by the fact that he is a spy. Richard begs Steve, who sees the arrest, to explain everything to May and tell her that she must remain faithful, as he will return some day and marry her. Steve tells May that Richard has fled and May, believing it, after a long period has elapsed, agrees to marry Steve. The husband is bothered constantly by the remembrance of his perfidy, and years later when Richard returns and faces May, the latter summons Steve and he mutely confronts the man he wronged. Richard is sent away by May and Steve goes to war, returning finally to be forgiven.

The Woman—(Five Reels)—Lasky.—A political story, dealing with the attempt of machine politicians to ruin Matthew Standish, who is trying to defeat the Mullin bill, which favors railroads. The leaders of the ring are Jim Blake and his son-in-law, Mark Robertson. A detective hired by the conspirators discovers that Standish had once become involved with a young woman of good family, whom he did not marry. They attempt to trick him into phoning the woman in the hope that they may learn her name. Wanda Kelly, a telephone girl, who has been told of the plan by Blake, learns that the woman is really Robertson's wife, and she foils their plan. The telephone girl later disrupts another plan of the conspirators and is threatened with arrest, but Mrs. Robertson comes to the rescue, and when Robertson realizes it is his own wife who was involved with Standish, he calls the plan off, while the telephone girl finds happiness with the son of Jim Blake.

Little Sunset—(Four Reels)—Bosworth—May 6.—Little Sunset Jones, son of a professional baseball player, is a great friend of Gus Bergstrom, nicknamed "The Terrible Swede" for his phenomenal batting and fielding. As "Little Sunset" is motherless, his father is obliged to take him on all his trips, and he becomes the pet of the team and a particular friend of the "Terrible Swede's." In mid-season Bergstrom loses an important game and is roasted by the manager. The star out-fielder quits the team and devotes himself to his business interests. His fellow citizens make him come back to take part in the pennant race, in which he is badly needed. But their indignation is as nothing compared to the scorn of "Little Sunset." By a timely home run he cinches the pennant, appeases the fans, and by giving the boy a gold watch and using much diplomacy, Bergstrom again gains "Little Sunset's" friendship.

Fanchon the Cricket—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—This is the first Mary Pickford release in many weeks and will consequently probably be heavily booked. Mary appears as Fanchon, the elfchild and granddaughter of a reputed witch, who suffers on account of her relative's unpopular reputation and her own mischievous nature. Fanchon falls in love with Landry, the son of a rich merchant, and he grows to love her, though he is betrothed to Madeloh, daughter of his father's friend. Landry boldy professes his preference for Fanchon, but that little maid will not consent to marry him until his parents ask her to do so. Landry, to forget her, goes away on a long trip, and while gone Fanchon's grandmother dies and the girl is left alone. How Landry returns; how he is in peril of his life and is saved by Fanchon, and how his humbled and penitent parents are finally forced to beg Fanchon to marry their son, is pleasingly unfolded in the little drama.

The Moth and the Flame—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—The famous Clyde Fitch play done in pictures, with a cast consisting of Stewart Baird, Adele Rey, Edward Mordant, Irene Howley, Bradley Barker and Arthur Donaldson. The moth is Marion Molton, a fashionable New York girl, who loves Edward Fletcher, though she is warned against him by her friends, who know his real character. She defends and loves him all the more because of his enemies, and openly declares she does not believe the stories of his past. As she is about to marry him, another woman with a child presents herself and claims the name of the man, who is the father of the child. The moth, blinded by the flame, cannot see the perils threatening her until this dramatic climax is reached, and with the extinguishment of the flame the moth, though her wings are singed, manages to fly away to safety.

The Saving Circles.—(FIFTH EPISODE, "NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE")—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—Wu Fang, the crafty Chinaman, endeavors to take Craig Kennedy's life by dropping a bomb of trodite from an aeroplane above Kennedy's apartment, but the crafty detective erases the circle which has been painted on the roof of his apartment as a mark for the aviator and places a similar circle on a vacant house across the street, so that the bomb is dropped in the wrong spot and no one is harmed. Later, Wu Fang attempts to take the life of Elaine by dropping a bundle of aeroplane arrows from high above her, but she is warned in time and only her parasol is wrecked. Kennedy brings the aeroplane to earth by means of a powerful rifle and the aviator is killed, but Wu Fang escapes. See review on page 786, issue of May 15. N. G. C.

Oxford to Windsor, England—PATHE.—A splendid scenic on the same reel with "A Giraffe Hunt in Africa," "Some Interesting Birds," and "The Bay of Ha-Long," all in natural colors. C. R. C.

Ima Simp, Goat—PATHE.—This is a slapstick comedy, detailing the experiences of one Ima Simp, who is operated upon for hook worm. The doctor substitutes the brains of a goat for Ima's gray matter, and the odd youth runs wild, thinking himself a goat. Even the enthusiasm of a goat, however, cannot stand the hot pace which Ima travels. C. R. C.

The Ladder of Love—(TWO REELS)—PATHE—John Rogers, disowned by his father, reads of the wonderful opportunities for investment offered by the Union Consolidated Mining Company, one of his father's ventures. He buys stock with the money which he and his young wife saved at much sacrifice to themselves, believing the proposition to be fair. He is almost panic-stricken on reading, shortly afterwards, of the crooked deal engineered by the mining concern. He visits his father, and threatens his life for ruining him. Later, he returns to rob the safe, but is prevented by his sister, who discovers him in the act. They return to John's home to find there Mr. Rogers, who has repented his action in the mining deal, and has made up for his son's losses. C. R. C.

Wiffles and the Emperor—PATHE—Wiffles' uncle is stricken with jealousy on seeing his nephew impersonate the great soldier, Napoleon, in a play. So great is his rage that he cuts poor Wiffles off from his will. The former heir is so worried by his uncle's action that he has a nightmare, in which he sees himself about to be executed on Napoleon's order. He is awakened by falling out of bed. Further slumber is prevented by the entrance of an author, who would like to have Wiffles look over some of his plays. The first one the actor picks up is "Napoleon." Then things begin to fly. C. R. C.

The Carpet From Bagdad—(FIVE REELS)—SELIG—MAY 3.—A precious prayer rug is stolen from the temple, in the city of Bagdad, by an adventurous American. He sells the rug to an American rug buyer, Jones, who has fallen in love with Fortune Chedsoye, who is the daughter of the woman who is at the head of a band of crooks. The three young Americans are kidnapped by the keeper of the rug, and kept on the desert until they escape during a sandstorm. For further review see page 779 of issue of May 15. J. C. G.

The College Widow—(FIVE REELS)—LUBIN.—The inimitable George Ade story has been splendidly done in films with Ethel Clayton as the college widow and George Soule Spencer as Billy Bolton. Atwater and Bingham, rival colleges in the middle west, are bitter enemies on the football field, and when Billy Bolton arrives at Atwater to secure a tutor a plot is laid to induce him to remain at Atwater and play on the football team, though his father is a staunch Baptist and an alumnus of Bingham. Jane Witherspoon, daughter of the president and the "college widow," ensnares the heart of Billy and induces him to remain, resulting in Atwater's winning the annual football game from Bingham. When the game is over and it's too late for him to interfere, Billy's father arrives to denounce him as "a hell of a Baptist," but the father likewise falls under the charm of the "college widow," and the celebration the night after the game ends in the engagement of Billy to Jane.

his father, a wealthy man, succeeds in having the marriage annulled and sends the boy to South America. A son is born to the divorced girl and when Dick returns from South America he goes to work in his father's office and in time forgets his wife and marries another girl. The second marriage being childless, Mr. and Mrs. Hartley adopt the dancing girl's little boy in ignorance of its origin. Twenty years later the boy is a successful doctor in a New York hospital. Dick's father, meeting with an accident, is taken to the hospital for treatment, and in that hospital encounters the dancing girl, now Sister Ursula. Though Hartley recognizes the dancing girl and she understands that young Doctor Hartley is her son, she voluntarily keeps silent, and thus young Hartley and his wife do not have their happiness menaced.

The Builder of Bridges—(Five Reels)—Frohman.—Alfred Sutro's famous play, "The Builder of Bridges," done in pictures by the Gustav Frohman Corporation with a cast headed by C. Aubrey Smith, G. W. Anson, Marie Wells and Helen Weer. Edward Thursfield, chief engineer of a bridge construction firm, returns to the New York office of his company and meets Arnold Faringay, who is in charge of his accounts. Faringay's sister, Dorothy, at their father's death, was entrusted with the care of Arnold and the responsibility of their fortune. Arnold has been playing the market and is $20,000 short in his accounts when Thursfield returns. Unable to borrow the money from Walter Gresham, his sister's fiance, Arnold confesses to Dorothy that he has stolen the funds and charged it against Thursfield. Dorothy, desperate, follows Thursfield to Atlantic City and leads him to propose to her, though in so doing she falls in love herself. Thursfield, returning to New York, discovers Arnold's theft, pays the shortage with his own check and discharges Arnold. Gresham learns what has happened, and on finding Dorothy and Thursfield together denounces her as having wilfully lured Thursfield on to propose in order to save her brother. Dorothy admits the charge, but declares she now really loves Thursfield. The latter, however, does not believe her and leaves in anger. Still later, Arnold is able to effect a reconciliation, and as the film closes Dorothy is in Thursfield's arms.

Miscellaneous

She Lost Her Dog—O. K.—Frenchie, a young lady attired in a very modern costume, goes for a stroll with her dog, and while her attention is distracted the dog is captured by a small boy and sold to a strolling couple. Later, a tramp secures the dog and the young lady, discovering it with him, claims the animal. The two are quarreling when a policeman appears on the scene, and gives the dog to a passing dog catcher. Later, Frenchie, arriving at home, gets into trouble with the neighbors and the janitor, and just as things begin to look serious the neighbor who had started the trouble notes Frenchie's good looks and begins a flirtation, which is interrupted by his wife. As the picture ends Frenchie secures her dog again after an exciting chase after the dog catcher. This is one of the first releases of the O. K. Comedy Company on the program of the Foreign Films Corporation.

Rafferty Settles the War—All-Celtic.—Written by Charles C. O'Hara and produced by J. A. Fitzgerald, this one-reel picture is filled with Irish humor. The characterization of Rafferty is typical of the man who has nothing to do but stop wars, domestic, neighborhood, street, and international. Priding himself on his tact in stopping four wars with a total expense of one quarter, Rafferty returns home, and sits down in his easy chair to smoke. He falls asleep and dreams that he, as president of the United States, acts as mediator in the European troubles. As the last of the rulers affixes his signature to the peace declaration, Rafferty awakens, and finds himself in the act of writing his name on the arm of his chair.

Rafferty Stops a Marathon Runner—All-Celtic.—On learning from the asylum authorities that one of their inmates has escaped, Rafferty institutes himself one of the searching party. All bare-legged runners look more or less freakish to Rafferty, so, on seeing a runner approach along the road, Rafferty grabs him. In the meantime the lunatic has started along the same course followed by the runners, and, being the first to break the tape, he is hailed as the winner. The illusion is short, however, for the asylum attendants appear and lead off the hero.

Without a Country—(Four Reels)—Great Northern.—The members of the "Sidi" sect are informed that the chancellor of state intends to submit to the prince a bill calling for their persecution. Judith, daughter of Samuel Hurst, a member of the sect, loves the prince, though rebuked by her father. Gregory, a clerk in Hurst's employ, who loves Judith but is not loved in return, discovers the letter from the chancellor to Hurst and brands him as a traitor at a meeting of the sect. Though a mob storms the old man's house, the prince himself appears and disperses it. Judith elopes with the prince and Hurst is again denounced, but promised exoneration, if, through the daughter, he can influence the prince to reject the bill. He succeeds, but the chancellor mobilizes the army and issues an order for the expulsion of the sect from the country. The prince and Judith ascend the highest mountain peak, bid farewell to each other and the world and leap to eternity, and as Hurst leaves the country that night he comes upon the lifeless bodies of his daughter and her sweetheart.

Who's Who in Society—(Four Reels)—George Kleine.—Mrs. O'Brien, newly rich, vainly aspires to social prominence, though her chess-loving husband does not sympathize. Mrs. O'Brien sends invitations to a party, but has them rejected by the Van Dusens and the Van Astorbilts. While she is mourning over this incident an automobile breaks down in front of the house and a young man who introduces himself as Lord Algernon St. Clair enters and is invited to stay for the party. Shortly afterwards a rough looking character alights from a car, but later re-enters it and at the club that night, immaculately dressed, challenges O'Brien to a game of chess. The game over, O'Brien invites him to attend the party, and on arriving at the O'Brien home a vigorous suit for the hand of pretty Mary Ellen O'Brien begins on the part of Lord Algy and the stranger. Late that night Lord Algy draws a string of pearls from his pocket when alone in his room and is amazed to find the stranger facing him with a gun in his hand. The latter reveals himself as a government detective in search of Lord Algy, who is a crook. O'Brien rejoices, Mary Ellen smiles upon the stranger, and Mrs. O'Brien, disgusted, hurls a volume of "Who's Who in Society" into the waste basket.

The Press Agent Says—

During the production of one of the first episodes of "Under the Crescent," Princess Ibrahim Hassan, formerly Miss Ola Humphries of Oakland, Cal., lost a five-carat diamond ring. Seven hundred men and women, together with camels and horses innumerable, had trampled over the ground during the day, but that night, with the aid of lanterns, the stone was found—and by no less a personage than Burton King, director of the serial.

In Filmdom the players are noted for many accomplishments, but it remained for Grace Cunard, the Universal star under the direction of Francis Ford, to set a standard which will be difficult to surpass. This beautiful girl, famous for her finished and artistic acting, for her ability to write wonderful scenarios and for many other enviable talents, is now conceded to be the finest crackswoman in the movies. She can handle a rifle or any other firearm with the abandon of an Indian scout.

Bernstein Hopes to Found New Film City

OTHER NEWS OF THE WEEK

ISADORE BERNSTEIN is in New York city and plans to stay there until his pockets bulge with the sum of two million dollars, whereupon he will flash the one word "Grade" to the coast, and the erection of the film city that "Bernie" has in mind will begin.

Though the huge sum which Mr. Bernstein insists upon having in his possession before beginning any operation of his city scheme, is at present but partially raised, he has already worked out every detail for the launching of the program which shall emanate from the film city he means to build.

Briefly, his plans provide for twenty-two directors, each to work with a male or female star. Seven will be one-reel comedy directors, and fifteen will make three-reel features; the directors with their respective companies will be hard at work for three full months before a first release will be made. Thus there will be a twelve weeks' program on the shelf in reserve at all times.

"First, I am going to establish thirty exchanges," said Mr. Bernstein when discussing his plans in the lobby of the Lindeman on the morning after his arrival in New York. "I am going to pay good salaries to all my people. My directors and acting force will get more than they have been accustomed to; and at the end of the first year of their service, they will be allowed to take stock in the company, and on their leaving, the stock will revert to the company.

"I have a feature proposition that will fit into this program idea, yet will be distinct in itself. The directors will each have a chance to make a big feature, which, if it comes up to expectations, will mean that for the time the director and star have been engaged in its making they will receive double pay, by way of a bonus. Ernest Shipman will exploit these features.

"Regarding the scenarios themselves, they will be scenarioized short stories. I shall arrange to buy a certain number of short stories weekly from well-known writers. I shall read every story, as I did at Universal City, and I shall have a staff of scenario writers who will make these short stories into working scripts. This applies to dramas only as comedies cannot be produced this way."

The foregoing is a skeleton of the plan upon which Mr. Bernstein means to found his new film city on the coast. Its elaboration will come with the development of the plans which have brought him east.

Viola Allen Now at Work

Viola Allen now is located at the Essanay studios in Chicago, where she is engaged in the production of the five reel photoplay "The White Sister," taken from the novel of F. Marion Crawford, in which Miss Allen made such a signal success on the stage.

This is Miss Allen's first experience in photoplay work and she is quite enthused over it. The famous stage star has proven an excellent photographic subject, and with her genius in acting, "The White Sister" undoubtedly will be one of the greatest masterpieces ever put on the screen.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay, returned from Chattanooga, where he was working with Essanay's Tennessee company, to play opposite Miss Allen. "The White Sister" is released July 19 through V. L. S. E., Inc.

Selig Discusses Regular Program

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, in an interview of recent date granted our Los Angeles representative said: "Don't overlook the importance and worth of the one, two and three reel productions. There will always be an important place for single, double and three reel plays in a film program. While it is true that feature film productions have made great strides in the past year, and that we are bending every resource in order to make our Red Seal plays finished productions in every respect, yet you can say that our single reel productions are not being permitted to suffer.

"During the past few months, we have engaged a number of versatile directors and stage artists and many of these will devote their talents particularly to our one, two and three reel picture plays. No time nor expense will be spared in improving and holding the regular Selig program up to and beyond the standard.

"I wish to call especial attention to our 'Diamond Specials' in three reels, released every Thursday in the regular service of General Film Company. We appreciate the encomiums we are receiving on the merit of these three reel Diamond Specials. They were originally planned as feature productions but are to be released in the regular channels. You may quote me as saying that they are away above the average."

Making Big Bookings

Within the past three weeks the Metro Pictures Corporation has leaped to the front in a remarkable manner by reason of the substantial releases already seen and reports from the eighteen distributing centers of the organization, which predict a tremendously big summer season throughout the coming months. Among the big circuits which have signed for Metro service are the S. Z. Poli circuit, which began last Monday the showing of Metro films and will continue with each release of the future; B. F. Keith circuit, which has already contracted for the full Metro program of plays throughout the Keith houses; the B. S. Moss circuit, which has contracted for the entire output of Metro pictures, using each release three days at each house; the F. F. Proctor houses which are using Metro service several days a week; the new Adelphi theater in Philadelphia, said to be the most elaborate picture house in that city, which opened last week with "The High Road" and will follow with other Metro releases; the new Hippodrome at St. Louis, which will play all Metro features, in addition to the Hippodrome at Los Angeles, the Portola at San Francisco, the Nemo, Riverview, Morningside, Eighty-first street and One Hundred Seventh street, all of New York City, which are being booked through the New York Metro exchange, which claims to be booking thirty-five per cent of the New York houses for Metro films.

Rose Coghlan

One of the most remarkable women on the American stage today is Rose Coghlan, who will shortly be seen in Lubin's six-part Liberty Bell feature, "The Sporting Duchess." Miss Coghlan played Lady Teazle in "The School for Scandal," the first attraction presented at Wallack's theater in New York City. That was thirty year's ago and marked the opening of what was then America's most fashionable playhouse. Recently this famous theater closed its doors forever, and Miss Coghlan had the honor of being the last star to appear on the stage in the performance that closed its history. She was a star at its opening and at its close. She will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of her stage debut next October, and from her appearance, it is hard to believe that for half a century she has been constantly before the public. Speaking of her picture play experience, in the production of "The Sporting Duchess," she said "Everybody at the Lubin studio was perfectly lovely to me, and while the work is all so different to that on the stage, I enjoyed every minute of it. I think I surprised them just a little bit, especially when the scenes were made in which the hunt takes place. Mr. O'Neill, who directed the picture, came to me and inquired if I would 'just sit' on a horse and be photographed. When I told him I intended to ride, he seemed worried about my personal welfare. I will confess that I half regretted this declaration, for I had not been on a horse's back for twenty-five years. However, I had made the bluff and I had to make good."

Rose Coghlan.

Thanhouser Adds Another Star

Edwin Thanhouser has again reached into the "legitimate" and pulled forth one of its most charming daughters—Louise Rutter, the girl with the chime-voice. He has robbed Broadway and robbed her, too. For one of the most talked of and written of features of Miss Rutter's work has been the gift of the most remarkable speaking voice on the stage. She is a gem of the first water, for she played leads—real leads—with William Gillette, Arnold Daly, Richard Bennett, Douglas Fairbanks, Edwin Stevens, Dorothy Donnelly and Ethel Barrymore. She was seen in "The Devil," "Mid-Channel," "Passers-by," "Sins of Society," "The Man of the Hour" and in all the plays of Mr. Gillette's revival. So there is nothing more to be said about her being a sure enough star of the first magnitude, as the astronomers say.

Louise Rutter.

She is to take leads in the regular Thanhouser releases, and is now in New Rochelle studying the mysteries of the film studio. She has never been in pictures before, but very seldom has any performer come into the work bringing as much natural equipment and distinctive personality as Louise Rutter. The first release in which she appears will be announced shortly.

Buying American Films

That England, despite war conditions is still a strong film exhibiting country, is evidenced by the buying activities of Albert B. Ladick, American representative of the American Film Releases of which organization Richrad S. Edmondson is proprietor.

From his office, Suite 1005, 220 West Forty-second street, New York city, Mr. Ladick has recently plunged on American features of merit. Among his recent purchases were: "The Three of Us," a Rolfe feature; Dyreda's "A Daughter of the People"; the Masterpiece Film Company's "Hoosier School Master"; Dr. Salisbury's American Wild Animal Pictures, and California Motion Picture Company's "Mignon." All the feature product of the Life Photo Film Corporation and the Conness-Till Film Company, Toronto, are handled by Mr. Edmondson abroad. Ladick says that he is in the market for high class dramas of four and five reel length, Broadway successes and adaptations of famous books being particularly desirable.

Seelye With V. L. S. E.

C. R. Seelye, until recently director of sales for the World Film Corporation, this week accepted an offer from V. L. S. E. Inc., to become assistant to the general manager of that feature concern, and will assume his new position immediately. Mr. Seelye has a wide experience in the film business and will undoubtedly prove a valuable assistant to V. L. S. E. Inc.

Nowland's Troubles

Director Eugene Nowland of the Edison Company set out with a few carpenters, six cameramen, four lifesavers and his daredevil trio, Pat O'Malley, James Harris and William Fables, Friday morning, May 14, to stage what was intended to be one of the most hazardous thrillers ever seen in pictures, as a scene of the forthcoming release "McQuade of the Traffic Squad."

It was planned to drive the machine off the embankment of an old bridge, wrecking the car and spilling out its occupants. Perhaps because it was Friday and an unlucky day, the bridge tender refused to permit the taking of the film without black and white authority from his superiors, and consequently Nowland and his trio switched their plans, crashed the car through a fence on the roadside, allowed it to plunge down the embankment, and got almost as thrilling a picture as they really planned to take.

Augusta Evans Wilson

Through a typographical error, MOTOGRAPHY announced last week that "God's Witness," the Thanhouser Mutual Master-Picture release of this week, was written by Augusta J. Evans, whereas, the author's name should have been Augusta Evans Wilson.

Nielsen's New Feature

F. O. Nielsen, 611 Schiller Building, Chicago, in this issue of MOTOGRAPHY announces to state rights buyers that he has for sale a new five-reel feature entitled "Guarding Old Glory," that by its timeliness and patriotic nature should prove a box office magnet of immense drawing power. With every man, woman and child thinking and talking of military conditions and with a possibility that the United States and Germany will be at war within the near future, such a picture as this is sure to appeal to every theater patron, rich or poor, man, woman or child.

The five-reel picture offered by Mr. Nielsen is produced from comprehensive official motion pictures, that show every phase of Uncle Sam's activities in guarding "Old Glory," his national banner. One sees every step of a soldier's career from the minute he enters the recruiting office until he is turned out a finished soldier and the film depicts types of battleships, torpedo boats, cruisers and other naval equipment of the American government. It is filled with snap, dash and action, and bound to carry an audience through scenes that will bring it cheering to its feet, so patriotic is the nature of the production. Territory can be secured by letter, wire or phone, and elaborate photographs, slides, heralds and posters in four colors will aid the exhibitor in giving publicity to the feature on the days that he shows it.

"The Blindness of Virtue"

Edna Mayo, Essanay's clever leading woman, will take the leading part in "The Blindness of Virtue," a great five-reel feature which is now being prepared. This masterpiece, written by Cosmo Hamilton, is being filmed at the Chicago studios. Miss Mayo is peculiarly fitted through her simplicity, natural grace and beauty, and her thorough comprehension of character to play the part of the minister's daughter, who is brought up in absolute ignorance and innocence of sex. Bryant Washburn takes the part of the young man who falls in love with her and arouses the ire of the minister because of the girl's unconventionality. The two play with exceptional harmony. The play itself is strong in emotions and gives full play to the clever acting of both leads.

Edison Day at Reading Pa.

Harry Eytinge, Edison, was the man of the hour —night and day—as the specially invited guest at the Rex Theater, Reading, Pa., recently where an Edison day and night was held in honor of the visit of the player. Five performances were given and Mr. Eytinge appeared three times during the day and night, giving a talk from the stage on the making of motion pictures and the life of a cinema player. Manager Frank A. Gould, a personal friend of the Edison actor, had advertised the event widely and Mr. Eytinge received a rousing reception, flattering to both the player and the company. A number of films, in which the visitor appeared, were shown. He was compelled to hold an informal reception after and between performances. Manager Gould is most enthusiastic about the event and is already looking forward to the opportunity to hold another Edison "carnival." As Mr. Eytinge had appeared several times at the local theaters when he was connected with the stage, he found himself among friends formed by that association as well as made by his screen work.

Exhibited at the Palace

The Essanay Film Manufacturing Company sent out some very neat invitations to a private exhibition of George Ade's comedy drama "The Slim Princess." This exhibition took place at the Palace Music Hall, Chicago, Ill., on Thursday morning, May 20.

"The Millionaire Baby" Filmed

Gilson Willets has dramatized for motion pictures "The Millionaire Baby," Anna Katherine Green's wonderful story of mystery and adventure, which will be released as a Red Seal play of the Selig Polyscope Company on Monday, May 31. Miss Grace Darmond, one of the youngest leading ladies in motion pictures, will make her initial appearance in this Selig Red Seal play. She will support the distinguished actor, Harry Mestayer, who takes the leading male role. Anna Katherine Green is known as one of the greatest originators of fiction plots and her riddle "who stole the millionaire baby" is not solved until the finale.

Film to Feature Sulzer

Every voter will be interested in the new five-reel film, "The Governor's Boss," which features William Sulzer, impeached governor of New York. Whether or not one would support Sulzer need not enter into the matter; this play deals with a big subject in a big way: Who controls civic affairs? Ex-Governor Sulzer portrays the part of the servant of the people, caught in the net of a tricky political boss, and through a woman. The "woman" is ably portrayed by Pauline Hall of "Robin Hood," Wildfire" and "Ermine" fame, and she brings to this play all her natural cleverness and all that years of experience on the stage have taught her. The film production will be completed in about ten days.

Excel Company Formed

Following the announcement of the organization of the Excel Photoplay Company capitalized for $1,000,000 with general headquarters at San Antonio, Texas, comes the news of the appointment of Ed. Sedgwick, formerly identified with the Lubin forces as chief of the producing end of the company. Definite announcement of Mr. Sedgwick's appointment was made during the current week; negotiations having been in progress between the ex-Lubinite and the company's officials for several weeks.

Lubin Lead Receives Offer

Ormi Hawley, the popular blonde leading woman with the Lubin players, is reported to have received an offer to be featured as a snake charmer by the proprietor of a one-ring circus and menagerie because George W. Terwilliger, who is making a caveman type of feature play for the Lubin Company, the action runs through many different ages, called for her to rescue a child from two snakes in one of the big scenes. Terwilliger's idea of a snake is something at least a dozen feet long, and the more vicious looking, the better the rating. For many days he hunted for just the sort of snakes he wanted and finally located them with a one-ring circus. Both were pythons, one twenty-four feet long and the other eighteen feet from mouth to tail. Miss Hawley didn't even blink an eyelash when Terwilliger told her the size of the snakes. "You get them and I'll act with them," she said, and Terwilliger himself was surprised, for he never expected that his leading woman had the nerve. The two big pythons were wrapped around Miss Hawley in the big scene and the camera clicked off film. The one-ring manager saw the feat and offered Miss Hawley a "job," but she smilingly refused.

Ormi Hawley.

Two More Directors Added Selig Staff

Two more directors have been added to the Selig staff in California, according to the general plan outlined by Manager Berst in his initial announcement to the public. George Nichols, whom film fans everywhere will remember far back in old Biograph days, and who recently has directed many of Griffith's stars at the Mutual, has begun work at the Selig Jungle Zoo. His first production is "The Isle of Content," a story of beautiful theme. The second newcomer is Lloyd B. Carleton, who made his mark with several well-known manufacturers, including Lubin and the Fox Corporation. Mr. Carleton is putting on "The Escape," adapted from the fiction story of that name written by Charles Belmont Davis.

Billie Reeves

The recent debut of Billie Reeves, the English international comedian, as a Lubin star, created a great deal of interest throughout the world. Reeves, who created the famous role of the drunk in "A Night in an English Music Hall," is even funnier on the screen than in vaudeville. In his first comedy, "The Substitute," Reeves does his famous burlesque boxing stunt.

Winner of Popularity Contest

Miss Florence Frey, daughter of Mayor Frey, of Findlay, Ohio, has been declared winner of the popularity contest, conducted by the Cleveland Leader, and will be guest of the Selig Polyscope Company on its seventeen-day tour of the west, aboard the Motion Picture Flyer, leaving Chicago, Thursday, July 18. There will be four other young ladies from Ohio and they will be chaperoned by Mrs. Champ Clark.

Essanay Has New Stars

A company of Essanay players have gone to Dowagiac and other Michigan towns, where Charles Hoyt's success, "A Bunch of Keys," is being produced by an all star cast. This is one of the first photoplays ever produced, with all the leads being stars. Essanay has engaged three new stars for this four-reel comedy. June Keith takes the part of Miss Tessy Keys; William Burress that of Grimes, while Johnny Slavin will take the role of Snaggs. Other parts will be taken by prominent players already connected with Essanay.

Little Territory Left

If present indications count for anything, before another month has passed all available territorial rights on "Prohibition," the big "anti-booze" melodrama, will have been disposed of. Robert T. Kane, president of the Prohibition Film Corporation, owners of the feature, says that he has already received offers from every state in the United States as well as for a number of the foreign countries. Almost without exception the offers have been attractive ones, but the actual closing of contracts on a great deal of the territory has been held up until such time as other offers, already tentatively made, can be officially recorded.

Griffith's Next Big One

Much discussion has been evident in film circles as to the subject selected by D. W. Griffith for his next photo-drama, to follow the sensational success, "The Birth of a Nation." He is said to have now under consideration for immediate production, "The Quest of the Holy Grail," suggested by the famous Edwin Austin Abbey frescoes that adorn the walls of the Boston public library.

"The Holy Grail" is a legend that deals with the famous talisman of Arthurian romance, the object of quest on the part of the Knights of the Round Table. It is mainly known to Americans through the medium of Edwin Austin Abbey, an American painter, who was occupied for many years on the preparation of the large frescoes entitled "The Quest of the Holy Grail." Also known to English readers through the well known Malory's translation of the French "Quete du Saint Graal," where it is the cup or chalice of the Last Supper in which the blood that flowed from the wounds of the crucified Savior has been miraculously preserved.

Students of the original romances are aware that there is in these texts an extraordinary diversity of statement as to the nature and origin of the Grail, and that it is extremely difficult to determine the precise value of these differing versions.

Broadly speaking, the Grail romances have been divided into two main classes: (1) those dealing with the search of the Grail, the Quest, and (2) those relating to its early history.

In the meantime while Mr. Griffith's consideration is pending, a careful search is being made for all literature containing information as to "The Quest of the Holy Grail." Should Mr. Griffith decide upon the filmization of same, he will possibly go to the Boston public library and photograph the famous Abbey frescoes. Reproduction for these frescoes is controlled by Mrs. Edwin Austin Abbey, the artist's widow, and negotiations are being made with her and also her brother-in-law, Charles Scribner, the New York publisher, who manages her affairs for the rights to photograph the frescoes.

Mr. Griffith when questioned as to the photodramatization of same, replied: "'The Quest of the Holy Grail' will make a beautiful film classic, and it has long been my desire to reproduce it in a film play. I candidly am of the opinion that its picture possibilities are vast, and no doubt would be an exquisite subject to base a multiple reel feature on."

Those knowing Mr. Griffith's efforts as a motion picture producer, bearing in mind his recent success, "The Birth of a Nation," which is at the present time playing to a two dollar audience in New York, Boston, San Francisco, and also playing its return engagement at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, can picture for themselves the results he will achieve should he undertake to film "The Quest of the Holy Grail."

In a recent number of the Theater Magazine, Mr. Griffith was termed by Hettie Gray Baker, the talented Metropolitan writer, "A Poet Who Writes on Motion Picture Films," and his poetic visualization of the subject in question should place it in the ranks of his other instantaneous successes. "Judith of Bethula," "The Battle of the Sexes," "Home, Sweet Home," "The Avenging Conscience," and "The Birth of a Nation."

Harlan a Selig Star

It is rumored that Otis Harlan, the world famous light comedian, will sign a contract with the Selig Polyscope Company to appear in Selig comedies under the new Red Seal brand. Otis Harlan is known as one of the wealthiest of stage stars. His home is in New York. He achieved an enviable reputation throughout this country as a star in the late Charles Hoyte's comedies. He also supported Elsie Janis in "The Vanderbilt Cup," and has appeared in many other high class productions. It is said that Harlan will soon arrive in Chicago to begin work in the Selig Chicago studios.

Extended to Canada

The "Runaway June" contest, which is providing free trips to the California Expositions for the winners, was extended this week by the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation to Canada. This action was taken because of the deep interest among photoplay patrons in Canada and their subsequent demands upon exhibitors that they run the contest in their theaters. So great was the pressure brought to bear upon the Canadian exhibitors that they got into communication at once with the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation and by the latter organization were placed in touch with the Serial Publication Corporation which is marketing "Runaway June."

The extension of the contest to Canada means that seven women—one from each of the provinces—will be added to the original forty-eight who go free to California upon the Reliance special train. One Canadian winner is to be selected in each of the seven Canadian provinces.

Van Riper Gets New Trial

Judge Hunt of the New York Federal District Court granted a new trial of the suit of W. J. Robinson against Lewis C. Van Riper. Mr. Robinson was claiming compensation for an alleged breach of contract to sell the patent rights of the Vanoscope Company, of which Mr. Van Riper is president. It was stated in the first trial that the company had sold its patent rights in England for $670,000 and counsel for Mr. Van Riper stated that this should not have been put up to the jury as it gave them an inflated idea of the value of the patent rights.

Sherrill's Pure Food Show

General Manager William Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Corporation had planned on using the actual setting of the Annual Pure Food show for the big scenes of the food exhibit of George Ade's "Just Out of College," but as there will be no show this year, an especially large set which will house the exhibit is now being constructed over at Fort Lee. It will contain display booths of the various commodities that go to make up a modern food exhibit.

Press Club Hosts

The Press Club of Los Angeles gave a "Dutch Lunch" to the Static Club of America (moving picture camera men) in the Press Club quarters, 814 South Spring street, Thursday, May 13, at 8 o'clock. Captain Jack Poland was chairman of the day. A special program was arranged and there were short talks by President R. T. Van Ettisch of the Press Club, President Edward G. Uullman of the Static Club and Secretary Harry H. Jones of the newspaper organization and William C. Foster of the Statics.

Other prominent film men who are members of the Press Club and who attended, included Carl Laemmle, D. W. Griffith, Henry Walthall, Jesse L. Lasky, Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennet, E. D. Horkheimer, Charles M. Peck, George A. Magie, M. R. Jonas and others.

Films Well Advertised

The Overland Monthly, in recognition of the fact that Bret Harte was its first and most famous editor, prints in its June number a twelve-page article on the work now being done in turning his famous California stories into motion pictures. Mrs. Josephine Clifford McCrackin, associate editor under Harte in the sixties, has written the account, "Bret Harte in the 'Movies,'" describing the productions finished and contemplated by the California Motion Picture Corporation. The article is handsomely illustrated with halftones from "Salomy Jane" and "The Lily of Poverty Flat."

Staging of "Barbara Fritchie"

Harry L. Reichenbach of the Metro Picture Corporation, of New York City, is in receipt of a letter from the mayor of Frederick, Maryland, asking him to bring his company there, to stage the production of "Barbara Fritchie." The scenes there are properly laid and the incidents relative to the production can be secured. Lewis H. Fraley, the mayor of Frederick, assures Mr. Reichenbach of the hearty co-operation of not only the city officials but all of its citizens.

Lincoln Players' Studio

Plans for a three story concrete studio and factory have been filed with the town clerk's office of Grantwood, N. J., and already ground has been broken, preparatory to laying the foundation. These studios, which the architect claims will eliminate many of the flagrant evils of our present "hot houses" and "congested scenery vaults," will house the newly organized Lincoln Players, at whose head is none other than the former Vitagraph star, Ed. Lincoln.

"Four Feathers" Nearly Ready

"Four Feathers," the new five reel Metro feature, in which Howard Estabrook is being starred, is almost completed; the final scenes are being made up at the big Dyreda studio on Sixty-first street, New York City, and J. Searle Dawley is working night and day to finish in time to allow Mr. Estabrook to fill a two weeks' vaudeville engagement.

Upholds Sunday Shows

According to a decision handed down last week by the New York court of appeals at Albany in the case of Walden Keilly of Yonkers, municipalities are not empowered to prohibit moving picture shows on Sunday.

Supreme Court Justice Harrington of the Appellate division, in sustaining the writ, held that "the legislature alone may command how Sunday shall be kept, and hence no city can independently compel and enforce Sunday closing by means of fines and imprisonment, unless such power is part of the law and policy granted by the legislature." The decision was warmly welcomed by New York exhibitors and Sunday shows will occur for the first time in many New York towns in the near future.

Players Heavily Insured

A $300,000 insurance policy has been written to cover the cast of "The Diamond From the Sky," the North American's big continued photoplay, for which Roy L. McCardell was paid $10,000. In a picture of any length, and especially where the members of the cast are called upon to do daredevil stunts, it is a matter of business judgment to protect them through insurance.

In "The Diamond From the Sky" the principals are required to take more risks than was ever done before in a picture. Ordinarily the principals are doubled in the death-defying stunts by someone who makes a business of looking eternity in the face and never flinching. When this company was organized and it was known there would be many stunts, professional death teasers applied for work.

But they reckoned without the only and original "dare devil" troupe of real actors. All the members of the serial company said they would not permit any doubling; if the action called for their character taking a chance they would take it. And they are all doing it.

New Turner and Dahnken House

Sacramento, Calif. is to have a new theater, which is to be devoted entirely to motion pictures, but at the same time, outstrip anything else in town, in the line of theaters. Turner and Dahnken will erect the new theater and expect to move into it, from their present location, in about a year. The theater will have a seating capacity of three thousand and will be constructed on the most modern lines. Turner and Dahnken also contemplate constructing new houses in Reno, Eureka, Oakland, Stockton, Los Angeles and other cities of California, and in this behalf were issued a certificate to sell one million dollars worth of stock, by State Corporation Commissioner H. L. Carnahan.

Accused of Manslaughter

Wallace Reid, motion picture star, was, on April 28, formally charged with manslaughter by Detective Fitzgerald, of the Los Angeles police department, and later released on $1,500 bail. The cause of Reid's arrest was an unavoidable accident a week or more previously, when Harry Craig, a citizen of Los Angeles, was run down and killed when Reid's machine ran down the car driven by Craig. Coroner Hartwell held an inquest over Craig's body and the coroner's jury returned a verdict of "an unavoidable accident," but despite this fact the district attorney asked that a manslaughter charge be brought, and accordingly Reid was arrested, though later released on bail.

Artone Film Company

The Artone Film Company, capitalized at $100,000, has been organized with offices at 79 Woodward avenue, Detroit, Mich., to stage big moving picture spectacles in and about Detroit. Several sites are being considered for the location of a large studio, and a definite location will be decided upon within the next week or ten days, it is expected. The company plans to base all its moving picture productions upon adaptations of popular songs.

The officials recently elected are William H. Goodfellow, president; Louis B. Jennings, vice-president; August Froebel, second vice-president; William C. Canfield, treasurer, and Francis Reno, secretary. Mr. Jennings is also president of the American Laboratories Film Company and vice-president and treasurer of the Alliance Film Corporation of New York City. The other officers all reside in Detroit, Mr. Canfield being associated with the firm of William A. Neer & Company, investment bankers.

The Southeastern Film Corporation

Plans for establishing a moving picture studio in Norfolk, Virginia, for the manufacture of heavy scenic films have been perfected by the Southeastern Film Corporation of Norfolk, which will apply for a charter this week and which, according to promoters, will be in operation in three or four weeks. Captain H. H. B. Holland will be at the head of the new corporation, which will be capitalized at $100,000. Associated with Captain Holland will be A. R. J. Wigg of Norfolk. Edward Goldschmidt will probably be secretary of the corporation. He is now holding the position of assistant general manager.

Offices for the new concern have been established in the Board of Trade Building on the fifth floor. Negotiations for studio property have been begun and the studio will likely be located near the Jamestown Jockey Club.

Kenneth F. Mason and Harold Hopkins, two expert picture operators, have arrived from New York. Mr. Mason will be chief electrical engineer and Mr. Hopkins stage director. Mr. Mason has been associated with Captain Holland about four years. He assisted in the production of the six-reel play, "Evangeline."

The new company will, according to Captain Holland, specialize in large scenic productions and comedy. A scenario is now being prepared illustrating the battle of the Merrimac and the Monitor and another illustrating the battle of the Crater. The former production will be staged in Hampton Roads and the second in Petersburg.

The company will employ from fifty to a hundred people to begin with and will probably enlarge the force as needed.

Apparatus for Changing Motion-Picture Reels

In the accompanying illustration is shown a diagram of connections which illustrate a method recently devised for changing reels without interruption on the screen. The equipment used in this method consists of a Westinghouse type AL rectifier designed for motion picture work, an auto-transformer and a four-pole, double-throw switch. When the No. 1 machine is operating the switch is thrown to the left. About one minute before the end of the reel is reached the operator throws the switch to the right, operating the arc on machine No. 2 through the rectifier. Machine No. 1 is then connected to the alternating-current circuit through the auto-transformer until the operation of the reel on No. 1 machine is completed. When it is time to operate the No. 2 machine, the electrodes are burning at their proper brilliancy and are ready for the second reel. The process is repeated toward the end of the second reel on the No. 2 machine. The procedure may be reversed if desired—that is, by starting the No. 2 machine on alternating current and later throwing on the direct current. However, the first-mentioned method will be found more satisfactory, it is declared, as it takes a few seconds for the direct-current energy to consume the electrodes properly while the alternating current causes them to splutter under all conditions, but less when they are already heated by the direct-current energy.—Electrical World.

Irvin Cobb in Pictures

"From Paducah to Popularity," which portrays the life of Irvin Cobb, will have a special showing for the press on Wednesday afternoon next at 5 o'clock at the Vitagraph theater, Forty-fourth street and Broadway. This will be the first public showing of the picture which previously had been seen only by the guests at the Cobb dinner recently. The rise to success of the celebrated author and war correspondent is thrillingly depicted.

New Photoplay Book

A new book on photoplay writing, by Howard T. Dimick, has just been published by The Editor Company, Ridgewood, N. J. This is a practical book, which applies common-sense principles of dramatic technique to photoplay writing. The book is notable for its logical expositions of means to be followed in developing plots from ideas and propositions.

Two New Companies Start Work

A recent issue of a Santa Barbara, California, newspaper contains an item to the effect that two companies have begun work at the American studios in that city. William T. Taylor, former director for Carlyle Blackwell, began work on a single reeler with a company headed by Joseph Harris, Robyn Adair and Beatrice Van, while James Douglas, who has been assistant to Harry Pollard, started a new comedy company in which the principals will be Nan Christy and Wallace McDonald.

Bosworth Business Booster

The latest advertising novelty from the Bosworth-Morosco offices is a baseball, to be distributed by exhibitors as a matinee booster, in connection with the presentation of their next release, "Little Sunset," a Charles E. Van Loan story featuring Gordon Griffith, the wonderful child actor.

The balls are appropriately imprinted and will bear the compliments of the local theater. The demand for this box-office stimulator has already exceeded all expectations. On "Help Wanted," featuring Lois Meredith, a novel car card, as well as a clever picture puzzle has been gotten up to create interest. The manner in which theater managers are taking to these special publicity ideas plainly indicates their effect on the house receipts.

Offers to Assist Campbell

Noting the similarity of the case of Allen A. Campbell of Cincinnati, Ohio, who recently saw and recognized in a motion picture film in that city his wife, who deserted him several months previously, to that of Ned Warner, husband of "Runaway June," in the film of that name, the Western Import Company, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City, which is European agent for the Reliance "Runaway June" serial, has written Mr. Campbell that it is ready to place at his command all its foreign facilities, to the end that Mr. Campbell may succeed in locating and communicating with his wife.

To Examine Operators

The Fogarty bill providing for the examination of motion picture operators and their assistants, and for the inspection of all the projection machines in every city in Florida, passed the Senate on April 23, and will become a law immediately it is signed by the governor.

Keystone Plant Enlarged

When Adam Kessel, Jr., and his brother, Charles, left for New York last week, after a visit to the Keystone studios in Edendale, Cal., they had the satisfaction of knowing that the entire equipment of the company was as perfect as money and brains could make it. But the enlargement of the company, which has been necessitated by the increasing demand for Keystone comedies, has brought about a crowded condition of the stage space. As a result the entire city block directly across the street from the present studio has been purchased. A concrete garage and a stage one hundred by three hundred feet in dimensions are being constructed. The new auxiliary plant will be ready for occupancy in about thirty days. When the work is completed the Keystone plant will be the largest in the world in which comedy films are made, exclusively.

At a recent meeting of the Motion Picture Operators' Local No. 164, held in Milwaukee, the following officers were installed: President, George Harris; vice-president, Arthur Weaver; recording secretary, Burt Grote; financial secretary, Jack Black; assistant secretary, Charles Trampe; treasurer, C. A. Colter; business agent, Edward Medower; sergeant-at-arms, C. Hoover; trustees, E. J. Bigelow, George Wittmann; delegates to Federated Trades' council, Jack Rotter, L. P. Langford and Dave Koppel.

William Russell, better known as "Bill," who has an important part in the coming North American serial, has purchased a chicken farm near Santa Barbara, Cal.

Mina Cunard, sister of Grace Cunard, the Universal star, is being featured in a two-reel Universal comedy-drama, "Betty and the Boys."

San Jose Film Company

California is soon to have a new motion picture company, if the report published in the San Jose Herald of April 21 is correct.

That paper states that a thirty-acre tract of land has been selected as a site for the new plant of the San Jose Film Company, which will soon begin the erection of an outdoor plant, studios and laboratories and work rooms.

The San Jose Film Company is a San Jose concern, founded by Melville Jeffrey, who has long been a resident of that city. The company expects to stage large productions with prominent stars in the leading roles. The officers of the new concern are: President, Melville Jeffrey; vice-president, T. C. Barnett; secretary, F. E. Granger; treasurer, Howell D. Melvin; and head director, Dana C. De Hart. Offices of the concern have been established in rooms 524 and 526 in the Bank of San Jose building.

Take School Pictures for City

Motion pictures showing how New York takes care of its dependents and also the special training given pupils in the public schools of the greater city will be taken by the Vitagraph Company of America for the city exhibition at the Panama Fair, San Francisco. The school for crippled children, the vocational and training schools; the school for the deaf, the classes for the blind, and the tubercular classes on the converted ferry boats, as well as many others, will be visited and pictures made showing the schools in active operation. This will be the first complete record of the work that has ever been made, and after the fair closes will be returned to New York and placed in the city vaults.

Prosperity Parade Pictures

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., entertained Mayor Thompson, his wife, cabinet members and friends with a motion picture of the prosperity parade, which took place on the day Mayor Thompson took office. Essanay took nearly 7,000 feet of film which was shown the new Chicago officials. The exhibition was given in the projection rooms of Essanay's downtown office in the First National Bank Building.

Picture Players Entertainment

M. G. Watkins of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation presented at the Sportsmen's Club of America in Chicago, on the evening of Friday, May 14, "An Evening with Picture Players." M. G. Watkins, Betty Subject, C. F. Seastrum, Hazel Webster, Wilma Minor, Baby Sylvia, Billy West, Frank Minor, who was featured on the program, and Cora Mickle Hoffer, all of the American Standard Picture Corporation, took part.

There are now fifteen directors at the Griffith-Mutual studios in Los Angeles, and more coming. The laboratory turns out sixteen thousand feet of film weekly, exclusive of the Griffith features.

Francis Ford and his company of special feature players are at work on the second installment of their big serial feature, "The Broken Coin."

How to Increase Box Office Receipts

BY JOHN R. FREULER

EVERY exhibitor who expects to prosper, or even to survive, must seriously and continuously study his business.

I began in this business as an exhibitor and am still an exhibitor. I now own a number of theaters. I have made them pay. What I propose to tell you is how I made them pay, why the things I did made them pay, and how the same principles may be applied to the management of your theater.

I began back in the early days of the business when it was in the "store show" stage. The motion picture house I had then was typical of the time—an old store with a remodeled front, a cloth screen, camp chair seats and a few exits. At that time the show ran one reel to a change and the entertainment lasted fifteen minutes. Of course, the admission was five cents. In that day the moving picture show was always known as the "nickelodeon," the "five-cent show" or the "nickel show."

My house had a seating capacity of 225. This house was a success and made money, so far as the money-making capacity of that kind of a house goes.

Several of my associates wanted to make investments, when a larger house was decided upon to take the place of this "store show." I early saw the advisability, in fact the necessity, of increasing the price of admission.

I saw that, to raise the price, we would have to have a better show. The new show ran three reels to a change and the admission was 10 cents. I changed the program four times a week.

This house also was highly successful. My associates decided to put up another house. They got ambitious, while I was away concerning myself with other business, and they put in vaudeville along with the motion pictures.

Soon they found that they were losing heavily. The reason was not hard to find. At the price of admission they could not put on good vaudeville. They had bad vaudeville and good pictures. The public would not stand for the mixture. The vaudeville could not stand comparison with the pictures.

Meanwhile my associates found that they had increased the expense of the house from 50 to 200 per cent—all of which was to no purpose.

John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Corporation.

When I got back on the job I cut out the vaudeville and ran pictures, pictures, pictures, nothing but pictures and good pictures. Before long I had the house making money again, and my judgment was vindicated by the balance sheet.

This experience involves directly the matter of policy and the process by which changes of policy can be instituted.

Put this down strong—never make a change of policy without taking the public into your confidence.

It is easier to start right in a new house than it is to change the wrong policy of an old house.

But in either case you can establish a 10-cent admission price and get it. That is the first step in beginning right.

The 5-cent house is fated to disappear just as rapidly as the old "store show" disappeared. This is not a matter of opinion. It is an absolute certainty. The public is continually improving in taste and demanding better pictures. The cost of manufacture of these better pictures is steadily increasing. The manufacturer's costs have doubled, trebled and quadrupled in a short time.

The significance of this to the 5-cent house is obvious. Hereafter the 5-cent house will be unable to meet competition with the best pictures, because of the limited admission charged. Failure to meet competition, which is another word for the demands of the public as awakened or created by a competitor, brings only one result. That spells the very near end of the 5-cent house.

The Butterfly theater of Milwaukee, Wis., was a 5-cent house up to the time I got control of it. It was a well-located downtown house. It was one of the best of the houses in the downtown district. Yet up to the time I got control it had never paid any dividends.

In sixty days it commenced to pay monthly dividends and has continued to since. The house is now operating with 1,152 seats and an admission of 10 cents.

I had to change the policy of the house. I had to increase the admission price to 10 cents and, at the same time, make the public willing for me to raise it.

The discipline of the house was bad. The projection was bad. They were trying to project too large a picture. The house had a fine ventilating system—and never used it.

I studied how to improve the pictures. How to make them steady, clear, crisp, living pictures.

I made it an unbreakable rule never to show a "cold" screen. I installed a pair of plush curtains which covered the screen when there should be no picture or announcement on the screen. This removed that painful expanse of cold white before the eyes of the patrons. A cold screen makes a house look chilly and bare. It is likely to make the patron feel lonely. It is the absolute negative, the reverse of entertainment—the thing the patron came to get.

Then we dressed up the boxes, and in the evenings only charged 20 cents for box seats.

By way of making the enforcement of discipline and order swift and certain, I put in a new manager and new force of ushers. We decided upon girl ushers and gave them a set of rules for their relations with the public.

After these changes were all put in effect and the reconstructed machinery of operation was running smoothly, on the following week the price of admission was raised to 10 cents.

It was necessary, of course, to make the public feel satisfied. I had the task of doubling the price of admission to a dime and then making the patron walk out with the feeling that "the show was worth a quarter." I wanted the patron to feel that way and to talk that way.

With that end in view, I got a special attraction I could talk about, something to hang my publicity on—an attraction like "The Diamond From the Sky" for example.

I turned my attention to the musical program, and had it made up to harmonize with the pictures.

But, having done that, it was not enough to stand on the lure of one feature. It was, and always is, necessary in making such a change to follow up for three or four weeks more at least with other equally attractive features "to talk about." By keeping the specials running this way for a number of weeks, the habit of your patronage is re-established on the dime admission basis.

We took the Blue Book lists and sent out neat letters of invitation to 500 persons a week. This letter told of our music, the orchestra, the screen, the ventilating system and the special attraction. The 500 letters of invitation for the week were dated to cover every day in the week, except Saturday and Sunday. The invitations were free admissions, of course, and were intended to bring the Blue Book class into the house. Their attendance was a sort of stamp of quality upon the house.

Also reguar advertisements were placed in the daily papers, calling attention to the house consistently and regularly.

In these newspaper advertisements, a great deal depends upon the "set up." I suggest that you have two things foremost to impress on the reader of the advertisement: the name of the theater and the main attraction. Play them up boldly, thus:

THE BUTTERFLY THEATER

$10,000 for a Suggestion.

If your feature has such a special prize offer, don't fail to capitalize it. That's why the manufacturers put it there. People are fond of making suggestions and offering solutions. Most of them are willing to do it for a chance at $10,000.

In considering the neighborhood house and its special case, let us take another concrete example.

I took another theater, we will call it the Empire. It was a good house with a seating capacity of 1,000. It was located in a good street and in a good neighborhood. It had been fairly successful as a vaudeville house. The competitors put in pictures and the Empire put in pictures. Then the whim changed and they put in stock.

From vaudeville to pictures to stock and around the circle again, always with changing prices. The result was that the patrons of the house never appeared at the box office window knowing surely what the attraction would be or the admission to be paid.

I have observed that an audience may be restless even though it applauds a vaudeville turn or a singer. No matter what the turn or skit is, it is pretty certain that it will not hold the eye and the interest as properly chosen pictures do.

The Empire was losing money. I put it back in pictures, and pictures only, played to the demands of the neighborhood, put in an effective cost system, studied the locality and in a short time the Empire paid dividends again.

Let me put emphasis on the necessity of giving the people what they want. The people know what they want, and they will go where they can get it.

The accounting of a motion picture house is one of the most vital considerations of the exhibitor. A proper and adequate system of accounts can be made to tell the exhibitor a great deal about his business that he would otherwise learn too late and only at heavy cost.

There should be a daily report from the box office showing the number of shows, separately listing the admissions for afternoon and evening, the weather, the opposition, and with a total showing the total admissions, receipts and cash balance.

I want to make it clear that no guess work goes in the keeping of these records. Every item is charged at a daily rate of cost. Take the item of insurance, for instance. It is paid perhaps but once a quarter, or even once a year. Yet, that is divided into the cost by the day, an easy computation. Here is a chance for a mistake. If the house is open but six days a week, the cost of the week's insurance should be divided by six instead of seven for the purposes of the cost sheet. For costs are valuable only as they measure against income.

Get the actual figures. There is the item of electricity and lighting, for example. It is billed to the exhibitor by the month, but, on receipt of the month's bill, the total can be divided between the days of operation and accurately apportioned. The same apportionment of salaries, repairs and improvements, taxes, rents, film rents, heat, postage, express charges, telegrams, telephones, and the like, can be made.

Concerning the giving of premiums, let every specialty that goes out of your house, and everything that is connected with the house, bear on the one important thing—the pictures.

I have found it effective to give away on certain advertising days, choosing the days when business is lightest, photo reproductions, pictures of film stars who are appearing in the pictures shown at the house from time to time. It is possible to get these pictures, good ones, printed or lithographed, for say from $4 to $5 a thousand.

Don't give away junk. Don't show advertising slides. Don't do anything that tends to cheapen the atmosphere of your house. The moving picture public is mighty fond of "class."

Have "class."

Frank Reicher, Lasky Director

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces that it has entered into a contract with the illustrious dramatic star and stage director, Frank Reicher, whereby Mr. Reicher is to become associated with Cecil B. DeMille, director general for the Lasky Company, and will be one of the leading directors of Lasky productions. Though Mr. Reicher was born in Germany, being a member of one of the most distinguished families in the world, and won his first fame as an actor there he speaks flawless English and has been in New York so long that he is regarded as an American artist. His fame as a stage director is largely due to his work in this capacity for the late Henry B. Harris, who put him in chief command of all his producing and placed in him the most implicit faith. It was under his supervision that the most notable of the Harris dramatic offerings—especially those of the "modern" dramatic school—were presented to the public.

Before leaving New York for his trip to the Lasky studios in Hollywood, where he is due to arrive about the date on which this is published, Mr. Reicher said:

"I expect to act for the camera as well as to direct. In fact the very first thing I mean to do is to act. If I can only do a brief role myself, then have the film projected again and again for my benefit, I will learn more about directing others than I could learn in far more time by any other method. I know just what I do to obtain every effect, and if I can see in my own instance just how well I get the effect I had in mind, or how far I missed it, I feel that I shall have the key to the entire situation.

"At the present time I must confess that I have never produced a moving picture or acted in one. However, I have for some months become more and more interested in the ambitious feature offerings and have seen most productions of note released during the current reason. This has naturally led me to some rather close investigation. I will naturally be given ample time to learn the rudiments of camera effects before I direct a picture myself.

"It is my belief that there is a great artistic future in the field of photo drama, and that fact alone accounts for my entrance into this new and extraordinary art."

Dorsey's Japan Pictures

Chicago's Studebaker theater was veritably a little corner of old Japan, on Friday evening, May 14. The foyer was tastily decorated with hanging Japanese ornaments, lanterns and Japanese umbrellas, while kimona-clad maids gave out appropriately prepared programs and served tea during the intermission.

The occasion was the initial showing of the United Photoplay Company's "Dorsey Expedition Motion Pictures," and the subject was "Japan." The invited audience well filled the theater and everyone expressed the same opinion, that the pictures were beautifully photographed and interesting, as well as educational. The public showing of these films began on Saturday, May 15.

Recent Patents in Motography

REVIEWED BY DAVID S. HULFISH

PATENT No. 1,071,800. Take-Up Device. A. L. Saltzman, assignor to Thomas A. Edison, Inc., West Orange, N. J. The take-up reel may be placed under the motion head or in front of it, without change of gears. The take-up drive is from framing carriage to take-up reel, and automatically adjusts itself as the framing carriage is shifted.

1,072,990. Stereoscopic Device. J. R. Purvis, Norwood Grove, Manitoba, Can. An eye shield with peepholes alternately closed by an electric shutter, the patron seeing the pictures with the eyes alternately; suitable for use with pictures from the camera next above.

1,074,362. Intermittent Mechanism. L. J. R. Hoist, Lansdowne, Pa. The pinwheel has a spur gear which drives a companion gear. The companion gear is sleeved upon the starwheel shaft and is connected to the starwheel by a spring. These gear wheels keep the spring wound to assist the starwheel to move when operated by the pinwheel or equivalent.

1,074,943. Clutch for Synchronism. Leon Gaumont, assignor to Societe des Etab. Gaumont, Paris, France. A clutch locks the projector, and is unlocked by the talking machine to make the start in unison.

1,075,215. Fire Shutter. J. A. LeRoy, New York, N. Y. (Application filed March 21, 1908.) A centrifugal clutch has a loose shell oscillating upon the shaft and controlling the fire shutter to lift from the film window when the main shaft speed causes the clutch to grip.

1,075,487. Film Magazine. L. W. Merkel, assignor of parts to J. J. Hanlon and H. G. Sheldon, Allentown, Pa. A flat tray is used for the upper magazine, feeding the film from center; a friction drive for the upper magazine is provided for starting and stopping the magazine without shock to the film.

1,075,692. Film Guard. F. B. Cannock, New York, N. Y. A tubular guard within the motion head, between the film window and lens, prevents the film from doubling into the cone of light inside the machine.

1,076,691. Detector. Roger Nicolet, Plainfield, N. J. A detector for finding breaks and worn places in films. Mechanical fingers feel the surface and the perforations of the film as it is wound through the detector, and bells ring when irregularities are discovered.

1,077,361. Electrograph. R. S. M. Mitchell, assignor to Talking Moving Picture Co., Inc., Syracuse, N. Y. A phonograph for receiving electric telephonic currents and for recording them upon the phonograph record, whereby the words and sounds of a photoplay may be caught by telephone transmitters not visible to the camera, and properly recorded for unison reproduction.

1,079,549. Safety Attachment. F. H. Frude, assignor of part to S. I. Levin, Chicago, Ill. The lower steady feed sprocket is driven by the film instead of driving the film. The sprocket shaft carries a centrifugal switch holding open an emergency electrical circuit. Should the film break, the sprocket will stop, the centrifugal switch will close the emergency circuit which will unlatch the main switch of the power circuit and kill both the lamp and the motor. The claims are upon mechanical details only.

1,080,265. Synchronizing Means. H. T. Crapo, assignor to Webb Talking Pictures Co., New York, N. Y. The fundamental means is an indicator of two elements, at the projector, one element driven by the projector and the other by the talking machine; the combination of the two elements operates to show upon an indicator dial the relative speeds of the two machines; the speed of the projector then may be varied accordingly.

1,080,528. Cooler. G. Appiano, Traviso, Italy. A heat-absorbing tank between condensers and film gate is filled with liquid and has a circulating system to a large tank.

1,081,039. Take-Up Reel. H. J. Hamann, Chicago, Ill. In a reel for winding with large center for reprojection without rewinding, the hub of the take-up is a compressible broken-ring spring, whereby the hub may be compressed to release the film for removal from the hub.

1,081,548. Shutter System. P. J. Mukautz, Chicago, Ill. The shutter is operated by an intermittent movement from the pinwheel which shifts the film; by working shift and shutter from the same cams, the shutter can not get out of unison with the film movement.

1,081,733. Framing Device. H. L. Fritz, Los Angeles, Calif. The intermittent feed is upon a lever directly, and a lock is provided for the lever.

1,081,926. Magazine. W. A. Dietze, assignor to J. J. Merki, Chicago, Ill. The film reel and the driving shaft are so arranged with reference to the door of the magazine that the reel can not be turned except when the door is properly closed.

1,082,123. Screen. S. H. Jones, Altus, Okla. The process of producing a screen for motion pictures which consists of subjecting an oil cloth base to a softening oil, then applying a coating of Jap-a-lac and turpentine to the softened surface and when partly dry applying a metallic powder and rubbing it in until a velvety sheen is produced.

1,083,016. Projector. C. F. Jenkins, assignor to Laemmle Manufacturing Co., New York, N. Y. The lens oscillates vertically. The film moves continuously, although at varying speeds, the movements of lens and film being such that their speeds are the same during exposure, the lens moving with the film.

1,083,498. Synchronizing System. Isidor Kitsee, assignor to Cort-Kitsee Co., New York, N. Y. In the projector, a motor keeps tension upon the intermittent sprocket shaft; the sprocket is restrained by an electromagnet which permits one picture step for every electric impulse received from the talking machine. In the talking machine, a commutator governs the impulses sent to the projector.

1,084,217. Reel Hub. P. U. Mascher, East Palestine, Ohio. The clamp for attaching the end of the film to the hub is set to hold itself normally open, but may be closed to clamp the film and then released that it may open to release the end when the film is unwound.

1,084,651. Safety Attachment. John McFeely, Indianapolis, Ind., assignor of parts to M. E. Petty and H. E. Petty, Chicago, Ill. The lower sprocket is driven by the film and carries a centrifugal switch holding open an emergency electrical circuit. Should the film break, the sprocket will stop, the emergency circuit will close and the switch will open the main power circuit and kill both the motor and the lamp at once. The claims are upon the fundamental principles.

1,085,392. Projector. L. C. Van Riper, assignor to Vanoscope Co., New York, N. Y. The film moves steadily, and moving mirrors between film and lens compensate for the movement of the film, to produce a stationary picture on the screen. The film is guided in a curved path to keep constant the distance between the film and the mirror.

1,086,376. Perforator. D. C. Law, assignor to American Artograph Co., Philadelphia, Pa. The motion picture camera perforates the film while the exposure is being made; the claims of the patent read upon the specific mechanical construction.

1,087,129. Shutter Adjustment. F. H. May, assignor to New Jersey Patent Co., West Orange, N. J. A comparatively large hub is firmly attached to the shutter shaft, and the shutter is more readily adjusted upon this hub than directly upon the smaller diameter of the shaft.

1,087,699. Safety Attachment. Anton Szeliga, New York, N. Y., assignor of parts to P. Muller, E. Mauthberger and F. Tichy, New York, N. Y. A knife is arranged with a spring to cut the film at the magazine opening. An inflammable member near the film window releases the knife if the film in the window should blaze.

1,087,996. Camera Magazine. J. Tessier, assignor to Lubin Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, Pa. An improved device for attaching magazines to a camera; the magazines are placed adjacent to each other on the top of the camera and are clamped to the camera box by undercut slides and clamps.

1,088,365. Feed Mechanism. Nicholas Power, Brooklyn, N. Y. The lower steady-feed sprocket is substituted by two sprockets geared together, but with slight adjustments, the film strip passing over both of them, and both of them operating to pull upon the film, whereby the pull upon any one sprocket hole is reduced.

1,088,364. Intermittent Mechanism. Nicholas Power, Brooklyn, N. Y. A modification of the Power intermittent device. The locking cam is outside the starwheel so that for the same diameter of cam the speed of passing the starwheel is greater. A notch in the locking cam unlocks the star and at the same time a diamond-shaped cam carried by the locking element rotates the star to shift the film.

1,088,806. Motion-Head House. J. A. Cameron, New York, N. Y. The motion-head mechanism is built upon the front and one side wall of the enclosing house, and the remaining side and back walls open as a door, giving full access to the mechanism for inspection and repair.

1,089,219. Projection System. J. U. Houseman, Chicago, Ill., assignor of part to J. S. Moe, Chicago, Ill. To reduce the flicker of the screen, a faint auxiliary light is thrown upon the screen during the dark interval of picture shift, a double shutter acting to cut off the auxiliary light during the interval of picture projection.

1,089,466. Safety Attachment. F. H. Frude, Chicago, Ill., assignor of part to S. I. Levin, Chicago, Ill. A sprocket is driven by the film and controls a switch to open the motor circuit should the film break and the sprocket stop.

1,089,646. Camera. C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C. The film moves steadily; the lens and film guide move together while the shutter is open.

Battleship "Florida" Uses Power's

The United States Battleship Florida, one of the largest of the North Atlantic squadron now anchored in the North river for a ten days' celebration, is equipped with a Power's moving picture projecting machine and during the electrical display at night, this machine is used as a searchlight to throw its powerful rays on the United States flag, thus dispensing with a regular searchlight which can be used for other purposes.

Roaming Around Los Angeles

BY ED. MOCK

THE film industry has interest for everybody but the totally blind and should you remember three or four years ago Wm. N. Selig discovered one blind man that was bugs about it, which proves exception to the rule. And like the film industry, which is the chief industrial of that city, Los Angeles holds interest for every human except the blind. Now that Universal City enjoys complete separation—without alimony—from Los Angeles proper, it must be treated as something within itself. I am scattering some strictly Universal City views about this week and it is truly pitiful that I can't print a hundred more that form my collection, but pictures in the film business, as you are doubtless aware, are always quite plentiful. Speaking of mine, however, Universal City offered many that were new and one in particular that was spectacularly thrilling without any press agent doctoring. I refer to the one showing Frank Stites falling to his death. It is unusual to get a picture of a live man, five seconds before he is a dead man.

Lee Bartholomew's shoot signal.

In going the limit to satisfy the thousands who came to see how motion pictures were made at Universal City, the company had planned to do rehearsals of big, sensational acts. There was an attempt to show an engagement between two warring aviators. One of the aeroplanes, supported by a wire suspended between two high hills, descended down and across a beautiful valley. Its aviator was a dummy. At a given point in its flight, a mechanical contact exploded a tremendous charge of giant powder, which wrecked the contrivance. Meantime a real aviator was manoeuvering above this dummy. About the time the explosion was to occur he was to drop an alleged bomb to wreak vengeance on his dummy enemy. It was a thrilling make-believe and it worked overtime on March 16 when Frank Stites lost control of his machine and was dashed to earth. The photograph shows the cameo-cut outline of the explosion, but Stites in his falling plane is ghostlike. The view you get is equivalent to looking straight down at the falling monoplane—a side view of the exploded monoplane.

Mr. and Mrs. Don Meany and Snookums.

It is needless to say that U. K. Whipple took this picture. He developed his plates and delivered prints four and a half miles away from the scene of the accident and all within the half hour. Mr. Whipple is the livest camera man I ever knew. As an animated weekly attache, he's rightly placed. Nothing more animated than Whipple.

* * *

When you roam around the lot, you meet with surprises. I ran smash into Bill Hilkemeier at the offices of General Film Company. Bill was trying to get his booking for the Jefferson Theater, Brooklyn, New York, from Harry D. Naugle, fourth floor Loewen building, Los Angeles. This is a trade secret not to be taken seriously.

* * *

And at San Diego I ran across Ed Bauer and his family. Mr. Bauer is manager of the Bijou Theater, Schenectady, N. Y. He had just risked his bones in an ascent with a captive balloon.

* * *

I also found Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, on the sidewalk in front of the U. S. Grant Hotel, at San Diego. Mr. Hutchinson, his wife and party, had motored from Santa Barbara for a week-end at the California exposition. He was bronzed in color, vigorous in action and enthusiastic about his big Mutual-Master Pictures and "The Diamond From the Sky." He was sorry to have missed me at Santa Barbara and hoped for better luck next time.

At Santa Barbara I found the American plant practically deserted. T. G. Lynch, coast manager, showed me all over the place—one of those well-kept, well equipped, flower and vine-bedecked beauty spots that might obtain in that country, but which are noted especially for their absence. I have seen nothing to be compared to the American buildings and plot. It is walled, grilled and designed in artistic fashion. Its fountains, flowers, creepers, walks, lawns and general environment should count for much of the excellence of Flying A and Beauty brands. Fred Cooley, director of Beauty pictures, breezed in with his machine and I reluctantly turned my back on the American plant. It was once when I deplored the California weather. Everybody was out on location. I couldn't renew acquaintance with many of the actor folk. But I found time to drop a line to Dick Nehls in far-away Chicago town, offering him a bit of comfort that the works was working overtime.

* * *

Back into my pictures again, we have with us the camera men of Universal City. Far be it from Whipple to miss a picture like that. I'm sorry I haven't the names of these boys—as clean a lot as ever turned a crank or added two eyes to those of their directors. Another view shows a unique method that has been adopted by their chief. When the day is unfit for picture making, the "Don't Shoot" flag is run up on its support. The building which forms the background for these two views is the camera men's work shop. It is very complete in its appointments.

* * *

Another view of Universal City is taken from the back lot looking toward Laemmle boulevard. Some of the dressing rooms appear in the foreground—the great property rooms just beyond—that tremendous out-door stage failing to score. No picture will ever show this big stage. It wasn't built for a picture, but rather for the taking of 'em. In that view showing the great throng of people coming head on one gets a glimpse of the big open air stage, but it falls far short of doing it justice.

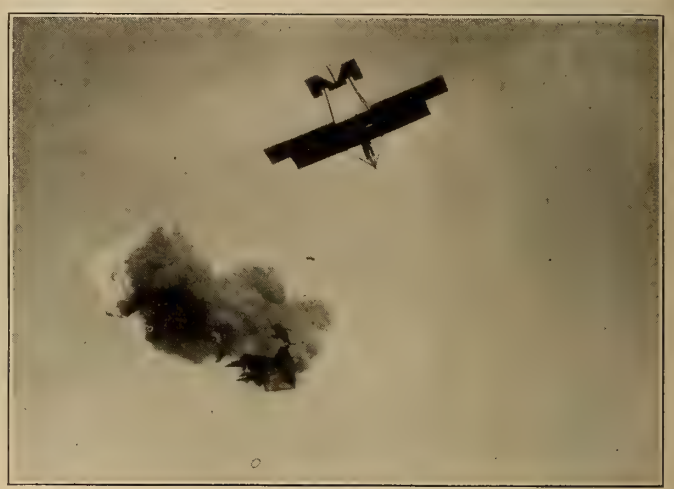
* * *

There is still one little picture of Don Meany and his entire family. (Will Fred Beecroft please note!)

Group of Universal City cameramen.

Since the picture was made the baby Esquimau pup has gone to dog heaven and lives on cream instead of grape fruit. Don Meany is "boss of the back-lot" at Universal City. He was so new at the job when I saw him that he used my compass to find the place. Don



The accident that the censor never saw.

Meany had been throwing the bull from the press sanctum-sanctorum and he was so busy at his job that a danger zone was placed around his desk. You could see with half an eye that he needed more room and the Universal Company decided to give him three hundred acres in the foot hills. To keep him going they gave him three producing companies, including the great Hobart Bosworth. Don's correspondence has dwindled to postcards and his family consists of just himself and the missus, who is also his chauffeur. They live in the only thing they have to live in at Los Angeles—a bungalow and there are lemon trees in the yard.

* * *

Stan Twist had nearly recovered when I saw him. He, too, is tangled up with Universal City—in charge of some producing units. Stan is a full-fledged native son and figures he is through with the eastern cities. Los Angeles has always looked good to him.

The Pathe baseball team, better known as "The Roosters," has been paid the compliment of being selected from sixteen semi-pro teams of Jersey City to represent that place in the new Manufacturer's League of New Jersey.

State Censorship In Illinois

HOUSE Bill No. 315 in the Illinois Legislature (Senate Bill No. 382) provides for a state board of censors of three persons. The bill is drastic in its provisions and menacing in what it fails to provide. It forbids the showing of any films not approved by it ninety days after the act takes effect—and motion picture authorities calculate it will take much longer to view and approve the films now in use which will be affected by the ruling. It allows the secretary of state to "appoint such assistants and clerical help as may be necessary to carry on the work of the board"—but makes no provision for paying such help; which suggests that uninspected films will be piled up beyond their release days, awaiting the disposition of the board. It specifies the projection on the screen of the words "Approved by the Illinois Board of Censors," without saying who shall pay for such a leader; which seems to make the exchange the goat. It establishes a fee of one dollar for each reel which does not exceed one thousand feet, and one dollar "additional for each reel exceeding one thousand feet," whatever that may mean.

This bill has not been entirely neglected. A few Chicago motion picture men are fighting it, and have at least won the suggestion from the secretary of state that they submit the draft of a bill to their own taste. The very few film men who have carried on the fight so far are working on it now, together with the National Board of Censorship's representative. Are they to work alone, or will the rest of Chicago's film people help them? So far an astonishing apathy seems to hold the local picture people. When they awake to the fact that they are in the iron grip of a most drastic law, it will be too late. Right now there is opportunity at least to modify the most severe portions of the bill, and no motion picture man who intends to stay in the business should allow his own negligence to put this halter on the industry.

IN Chicago a number of saloons have just been closed for lack of business. A few years ago there was a considerable premium on thousand dollar saloon licenses, and much protest because the number of such licenses was limited to one for each three hundred of population or thereabouts. Motion pictures may or may not deserve credit for this state of affairs; but that they had something to do with it we cannot doubt.

In the second district of Greater New York, which includes the boroughs of Queens, Brooklyn and Richmond, there were sixteen thousand arraignments for intoxication out of a population of one and three-quarters millions in 1907. Last year, with a population half a million larger, there were a few over eight thousand such arraignments. Magistrate John A. Leach of Queens says:

> Every magistrate in the city is commenting upon this remarkable decrease in intoxication.
> In courts where there were from fifteen to twenty cases of intoxication a day it is now rare to hear more than three or four.
> We magistrates agree in attributing this condition to education and to the publicity given by newspapers showing the general distrust of drinkers by employers, but principally to the moving picture theaters. The workingman who formerly went to the saloon as the "workingman's club" now goes to the picture show and takes his family. That is now the chief amusement of the workingman, and not only the magistrates have noticed the effect upon the liquor traffic, but saloon keepers themselves admit it.

So what was argued academically five years ago in these and other columns friendly to the picture is actually materializing and receiving proper appreciation.

Without entering into a tiresome discussion of the merits of either the wet or the dry side of the liquor argument, we can safely assume that the normal man who spends his evenings in a saloon away from his family must feel a certain sense of guilt. Many people—perhaps the majority—are so constituted that they cannot entertain themselves; they must have diversion of some sort. In a great many cases it is that, and not love of drink, which leads them to the saloon. In this country even the well conducted beer garden has never been extremely popular as a family resort, and the saloon itself is tacitly accepted as for men only.

It has been proven that men like picture shows well enough to go to them alone—so the incentive to attend needs no moral or ethical boost. But there is no occasion to go alone. The whole family can go for the cost of a round of drinks—and the show lasts longer. When it is over the evening is well on its way; the cry for mental stimulant has been answered and nothing beckons but home.

For every evening so spent the saloon loses some custom. If it loses enough it goes out of business, just like any other store that lacks trade. It is not a moral problem at all; it is a business condition. The saloon offers the normal man (who is not a chronic alcoholic) the society of other men, bright lights, bold talk and a purely incidental drink; a pleasant evening and maybe worth the cost—if it were not for the headache. But the picture show offers him more, much more, and so gets his money. When he goes to the saloon he leaves his family home, not because he wants to get away from them, but because it is not proper to take them. If he insists on the saloon the family can take in the show without him; but the chances are he will reconsider the matter and join them.

The picture show cannot cure the alcoholic, nor can it offer a substitute to the young "tough guy" who wants to get drunk, because it is the thing to do in his crowd. But neither can the liquor business subsist on the trade of those alone. The casual drinker, not the drunkard, is the mainstay of the saloon business; and him the picture show is weaning away.

We wish it were possible to secure a census of the wives and mothers who have been lifted from despair to happiness by the picture show's influence for sobriety and good citizenship. It would open the eyes of some of our best enemies.

The Too-Zealous Press Agent

IT IS always possible to increase the attendance at any show by spreading broadcast the report that the show is not fit to be seen. That a certain picture may be objectionable to some gives assurance that it has at least some kind of a punch, and therefore must be worth seeing. Modern press agents are acquainted with that side of human nature, and have learned to take advantage of it.

All of which may be legitimate from a business standpoint; but in an amusement so subjected to outside interference as is the motion picture, the press agent's activities in this direction sometimes boomerang upon him and his picture.

By a vote of 111 to 2 the Illinois house of representatives has passed the Jackson bill prohibiting the showing of lynchings and illegal hangings in pictures. The bill is obviously aimed at two or three feature films recently released which touch upon the hypothetical "negro problem."

Representative Jackson is a negro; but while his speech which carried the house was a masterpiece of the rhetoric in which his race are so proficient, it does not appear that he has any personal objection to the films affected. Neither has it been shown that negroes in general, hundreds of whom have seen the pictures, are at all aroused by them. Every one who has protested or forbidden their showing, including the mayor of Chicago, has been moved to that action by the fear that some one else will be affected or influenced. The attitude is as old as mankind: "It's all right for me, but it's bad for the other fellow."

The present official sentiment against these subjects which involve the "negro question" seems to have been stirred into life not by the officials, not by the negro race, but by over zealous press agenting, which has dwelt too much upon a morbid interpretation of the subject. The films themselves could never "incite to riot"; but the press agent has not hesitated to use the suggestion as a crowd puller. It has worked the wrong way.

Episode Five: "What Happened to Marie"

(Part Two.)

"At my entrance," resumed Marie, "everybody in the studio wanted to know why I looked so happy and when I flashed Phil M. Aker's letter, and the big offer began to percolate the minds of the bystanders I was simply mobbed. Folks wanted to know if I was going to accept, when I'd have to begin, how much I was going to get, and the sort of stuff I'd be featured in. Well, I jollied 'em along for a time, told 'em my salary was going to be about three times as big as Phil had really offered me and then boldly announced that I was quitting immediately. I thought that 'ud stun 'em, and they'd be around trying to raise Phil's ante before quitting time that night but somehow they didn't seem much interested and so I left 'em cold, packed my trunks and skidded over to the other studio the following week. Of course, you've noticed though how the Eddie Sun stuff has dropped off since I left. Why they tell me that sales have slumped more than fifty per cent, but then what can you expect when the head of the firm don't know enough to hang onto a movie queen when he has her." As Marie finished her story "Di" Rector winked at M. A. Gnate, for Gnate, only the week before, had enjoyed a similar kind of session with one of his stars. As Marie and Sue Brett departed, Sue called over her shoulder, "Just you wait till next week when I bring round Lucy Dove to tell her story. It's some yarn."

Read episode six next week, entitled "Lucy Dove."

OUR BURG.

Geo. Spoor spent several days of this wk. away from Our Village.

Geo. Kleine of Our Burg and Noo Yawk commuted back this wk.

Henry Otto, director of American films at Santa Barbara, California, vacationed in our midst several days this wk., and brightened our Sanctum with his presence. 'Tis a pleasure to know him and we hope Henry'll come again.

Incidentily we must extend thanks to Eddie Kauffman for the Jose Vila, which Otto passed along to us with Eddie's compliments, though honestly we're inclined to doubt that Eddie shipped it all the way here specially for us. However, the aroma still lingers with us and we feel correspondingly indebted to Eddie.

Felix Feist is back to Our Village after a trip to the E. E.

A little bird whispered in our ear that wedding bells will soon be jingling for Harry Steck. Keep it dark, tho, 'cause Gosh only knows what Harry'd do to us if he knew we told.

With much humiliation we beg to correct an error that appeared in this column last week. It becomes absolutely necessary for us to state that "Phil," one of the world's greatest kittens mentioned here so recently, is not "Phil" at all, but "Phyllis."

Some Current Releases Reviewed

"The Island of Regeneration"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

IF "The Island of Regeneration" does not meet with more severe criticism than that of the thousands of spectators who enthused over it during its run at the Vitagraph theater, it has a bright future indeed. The feature had a most successful week in the New York theater, and now, as a V. L. S. E. release, it should be received throughout the country with the same enthusiasm.

It is a six-reel picturization of the Reverend Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel of the same name, and was filmed by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Harry Davenport. The subject, treating on the justification and necessity of that indefinable barrier which exists between man and woman, offers no end of opportunities for cheap sensationalism, all of which were allowed to pass unimproved by the producers. In one or two instances the action is a little bit daring, but not repulsively so. Suggestion cleverly carries the film over the thin spots.

Beginning with a theme that has originality, strength, plenty of action, and wonderful dramatic possibilities, a summary of "The Island of Regeneration's" good points enumerates the various ingredients which go to make real good pictures. The acting could not be improved upon. The scenery is beautiful and artistic, and successful in supplying the desired atmosphere. Photographically the film is perfect. All of these things contribute toward praising that most important factor, direction.

Most of the action is laid on an island in the South Pacific where Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno, as its only inhabitants, wage a battle of will power versus brute passion. The former takes the part of Katherine Brenton, the charming society girl who learns through sad experience that her doctrines, which sound so ethical and elevating when expounded in the parlor, prove inadequate and misleading when put to a practical test.

Antonio Moreno is well-fitted to the role of John Charnock, Jr., a man with the physique and strength of a Samson and the mental development and trust of a child. It is difficult to reconcile one's mind to the fact that the long-haired, savage-looking islander with the vacant expression, and the intelligent, well-dressed Virginian seen in the last few scenes are the same person. S. Rankin Drew gives a splendid impersonation of the heavy, Valentine Langford. Bobby Connelly, Naomi Childers, Leo Delaney, Jack Brawn, Lillian Herbert, and Logan Paul complete the cast.

Teaching the hermit to say his prayers.

A shipwreck scene at the beginning of the picture explains John Charnock's presence on the South Sea island when, twenty years later, Katherine Brenton makes her way to it in an open boat in her escape from Valentine Langford's yacht. Katherine had always denied society's first law, but in the three years of lonely existence that follow, with no companion except the primitive being whom she finds the sole inhabitant of the island upon her arrival, she realizes the futility of her doctrines.

Langford, bothered by his conscience, returns to search the islands for the girl whom he had induced to cruise with him under the guise of proving that her teachings were right. He sights Katherine's signal fire. So, also, does the captain of a revenue cutter. Langford begs the girl to come away with him, but she asks for a day to think it over. Charnock spends the night on the revenue cutter. When he returns to the island he can find no trace of Katherine but her clothes lying on the bank of a little cove. Supposing her drowned, all leave the island, Charnock returning to Virginia to claim his inheritance.

Katherine, in the meantime, has been meditating in a secret cave on what course to take. Langford suspects that she is still alive, and again visits the island. He finds her, but Katherine refuses to accept his proposal. Before he leaves, she exacts from him a promise that he will not tell anyone that she is alive. She is confident that Charnock's love for her will some day bring him back to her—and it does.

Thanhouser's "God's Witness"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett

"GOD'S WITNESS," Thanhouser's four-reel Mutual Master-Picture for this week, is well presented by a strong cast. The leads are taken by Florence LaBadie, who makes a very lovable heroine, Arthur Bauer, as the stern old southern general, Harris Gordon, as the handsome young lawyer, and J. Williams, who makes a typical old southern mammy and does splendid work.

The photography in this production is excellent and the picture which was taken in Georgia shows many beautiful spots and old southern mansions.

The mystery with which we are confronted, concerning the death of General Darrington and the disappearance of his will, is finally cleared up in a wholly unexpected manner.

Ella, the daughter of General Darrington, a rich southerner, elopes with a poor musician. The shock kills her mother and her father forbids her coming to see him and disinherits her.

Years later, her husband dead, Ella is living in poor quarters with her daughter, Beryl, and her son, Bertie. The son leaves to take up a claim and the mother is taken ill. The doctor tells them that only an operation will save her life, so Ella writes to her father asking him for aid. She receives no reply and finally as a last resort the widow sends her daughter in person to plead with the old general.

Beryl arrives at the mansion and as she is ascending the steps meets Lennox Dunbar, a young lawyer, who has learned that he has been left the estate in the old man's will and that Ella, the daughter, is left only $1.00.

Beryl has a stormy scene with her grandfather. After some time he gives her money to take to her mother and presents her with a necklace which he had bought for his daughter before she left home.

The girl leaves her grandfather and goes to the cemetery to visit her grandmother's grave. As a result she misses her train and is forced to wait for the next one. The station master leaves her in the station and goes home for his supper. Remembering that she is alone and probably has had nothing to eat, he returns bringing her some tea, but finds her gone. In the meantime Beryl has gone for a walk. Dunbar rides past her and stops to speak, but the girl turns her back upon him. She is overtaken by a terrific lightning storm and runs back to the station for shelter. Here she falls asleep and is suddenly awakened

Just as the girl goes to step on the train Lennox Dunbar and the sheriff place her under arrest for her grandfather's murder. When they search her they find the gold pieces and the necklace in her posession and she is placed in jail. The young lawyer tells her that he believes her innocent and will do all he can to help her out.

she overheard and also declares she saw the old colored mammy pick up a handkerchief beside the general's body. The station master tells of the girl's absence from the station and of her return, breathless and excited. The colored mammy goes to the girl and tells her that she will never give up the handkerchief, but she is finally forced to and Beryl recognizes it as one she had given to her brother.

When the girl is placed on the stand she declares her innocence. Just then her brother, who has heard of her arrest, rushes in and tells the sheriff of how he had gone to his grandfather for money. After a stormy quarrel the old man raised a club to kill him when a bolt of lightning crashed through the window and struck the old general dead and the will which was lying on the table fluttered into the fireplace and was burned. In the meantime Dyce, who has been cleaning the windows, discovers on one of the panes a picture which the lightning has taken of the death of the general. Beryl is freed and she and young Dunbar discover their love for each other.

Essanay's "The Slim Princess"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

WHOLESOMELY enjoyable is Essanay's four-reel V. L. S. E. offering, scheduled for release on May 24, for probably in all the realms of fiction there is no more gently humorous and refreshingly satirical comedy than George Ade's "The Slim Princess."

At first thought one might presume that in order to film one of the Ade comedies a host of sub-titles would be necessary, in order to get over the humor of the original, but so clever have the Essanay players proven themselves that surprisingly few sub-titles are found necessary, and all of those are so crisp and subtle that gales of laughter are sure to follow their appearance on the screen.

Francis X. Bushman is cast as Alexander Pike, the American millionaire, who falls in love with a Turkish princess, while Ruth Stonehouse is the adorably slim and, consequently, from the Turkish standpoint, outrageously impossible Princess Kalora.

It is Wallace Beery, however, to whom the great majority of the laughs fall, for in the role of Popova, male chaperon to the princess, Beery has a part that was simply made for laugh purposes, and so capably does he play it and so sober and sedate are his features during the most uproariously funny situations that you find yourself simply compelled to laugh, whether you will or no. To be perfectly frank, Beery comes pretty near running away with the picture and taking the leading honors from both Mr. Bushman and Miss Stonehouse, splendid as both are in their respective roles.

Additional comedy is furnished by Harry Dunkinson in the role of Count Selim Malagaski, and Lester Cuneo, as Koldo, the chief of detectives of the Turkish city.

Photographically the production is fully up to the Essanay standard, while one reel which is devoted almost entirely to scenes in and about the city of Washington, D. C., is filled with scenic bits of surpassing beauty.

The American discovers the slim princess.

The story, as everyone knows, concerns the Princess Kalora, the pickle eater, and daughter of Count Selim Malagaski, governor general of Morovenia, Turkey, who, on account of her voracious appetite for pickles, lemons and other citrous fruit, is regarded as wholly impossible by the suitors whom her father favors for her hand.

Princess Jeneca, Kalora's sister, on the contrary, is simply besieged with lovers, for she is atrociously fat and consequently desirable above all others. Just as the poor princess is about to cry herself to death, there suddenly appears over the garden wall, one Alexander H. Pike, an American millionaire, who quickly falls a victim to her charms.

Departing, Pike leaves behind a magazine published in America in which the princess later discovers that in his country slim persons are considered bewitchingly beautiful, and accordingly she determines to straightway set out for America. The count, her father, having discovered in the same magazine an advertisement which promises to make slim persons fat, looks with favor upon her trip and orders Popova, her tutor and chaperon, to convey the princess to the far distant land in which she may secure an antidote for her thinness. Needless to say the story ends with the princess again meeting Pike, and the latter, after boasting that he holds a high rank as the Grand Exalted Ruler of a fraternal organization, and is a Knight Templar, an Elk and the King of the Hoo Hoo's, simply staggers the count with his importance and demands his daughter's hand. Kalora safely married and out of the way, Jeneca is free to marry, and the clouds of gloom which have hovered over the palace lift forever.

"The Diamond from the Sky"

THE plot develops amazingly in chapter five of "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American's film novel now running in theaters the country over.

New characters also make their appearance in the story, adding to the complications that already have dazzled theater goers by the genius with which they are arranged and interwoven, never becoming lost in the mass of events and tending to keep one's interest at all times at fever heat.

Quabba finds the diamond.

The new character is "Quabba" and is most capably played by W. J. Tedmarsh. Almost as interesting as Quabba himself, the hunchback Italian with his hand organ, is the little monkey that gathers in nickels while Quabba plays, for this little animal seems well nigh human in its actions.

As chapter four closed, it will be remembered, the diamond was snatched from the neck of Vivian Marston by a brawny hand that came through the velvet hangings near which she was standing.

Her outcry at the discovery of the diamond's disappearance causes intense confusion at the ball, and guests and servants unite in a hunt for the thief. Luke Lovell is disclosed as the man who took the diamond, and one watches his flight from the grounds surrounding the mansion, and his apparent escape to safety on a nearby street. However, he soon discovers that he is not yet out of danger, for the hubbub in the mansion has attracted the attention of the police and officers come flying from every direction, cutting off his escape.

Fearful of being caught with the diamond in his possession, Lovell boldly slips "The Diamond from the Sky" into the slot provided for letters in a mailbox and then cooly permits the officers to seize and search him.

While the officers are interrogating Lovell, and both Arthur and Blair Stanley, the cousins, are seeking to place the theft upon him, a new complication occurs in the arrival of a sheriff from Fairfax, Virginia, with a warrant for the arrest of Arthur Stanley, as the murderer of Doctor Lee. Blair tells his cousin of the sheriff's approach, and Arthur flees into the night to seek safety where best he can, though closely pursued by officers and guests from the ball.

Arthur enters the railroad yard and jumps aboard an outgoing freight train.

Once inside an empty box car he finds himself seized by several tramps, who, when they note his evening clothes, proceed to divest him of these garments after a severe struggle, and to substitute their own ragged regalia for his dress clothes.

Meanwhile Luke has been released by the police, since they are unable to prove that he has any connection with the theft. One next sees the mailman collecting the letters from the box in which Lovell had deposited the diamond, and he carefully rakes them all into a mail sack, and takes the sacks to the branch postoffice where the mail is sorted. In emptying the sack, one of the projections on the jewel happens to catch on the fabric of the bag and "The Diamond from the Sky" remains inside the bag, undiscovered by anyone.

Still later, the postoffice inspector, who is condemning many mail sacks, sorts out the particular bag in which the jewel is concealed and marks it for destruction. An express wagon is called to take the mail bags away, and while passing down a narrow alley, the wagon suddenly jolts, knocking off that particular mail sack in which "The Diamond from the Sky" is concealed.

It is here that "Quabba," the hunchback organ player, with his monkey first appears, and after examining the mail sack discovers "The Diamond from the Sky" and makes haste to conceal it inside his dirty shirt.

Again the picture shifts to show Arthur Stanley leaving the freight train in a tiny village miles distant from the scene of his exciting flight, and there he secures work which earns him a meal. As the chapter closes, Quabba, who has wandered down a country lane, sinks down to rest against a huge tree and ere falling asleep pulls out "The Diamond from the Sky" to once more examine it. In a playful mood he clasps it around the neck of the monkey, and that little beast, when Quabba dozes off, climbs the tree and is last seen grimacing at the camera high up in the branches of the tree as the chapter ends.

The next day he puts a personal ad in the paper and in answer to it receives a note without name or address. Again he places a personal in the paper and this time he gets permission to visit the mysterious singer, on one condition, that being that he be blindfolded and brought to her apartment. On the evening appointed after being carried to his destination in a luxurious car, he removes the handkerchief from his eyes and finds himself in the presence of a masked woman.

The fair singer resists all of his entreaties and refuses to remove her mask. The only name she gives him is "La Signorina." The next morning he finds out that she has sailed for Italy and after a few weeks in which he spends a dull and gray time he receives a packet from Naples and upon opening it a black mask falls to the floor. As the young man sits trying to figure out the tantalizing clue, his valet, an old Italian, enters the room.

The valet is bent with sorrow and tells his master that Enrichetta, his daughter, has died that morning of a broken heart, having been betrayed by a nobleman in Italy. Now that she is gone his only aim in life is to kill the nobleman and he is leaving for Italy that day. Hillard decides to go with him to seek the lady of the mask.

In Venice Jack Hillard again sees the mysterious woman and she raises her veil this time and shows him her face after telling him that he must not be interested in her any more as she is but a poor singer. Some time later a certain penniless opera singer goes to Monte Carlo and there Prince Monte Bionca recognizes in her the bride who had deserted him years before at the altar. Hillard, who is standing on the balcony, sees the girl suddenly leave followed hastily by the prince and follows them. He comes upon them just in time to release the young woman and enable her to escape.

Weeks later the young American finds himself in the villa which "La Signorina" now owns and there declares his love for her. She does not seem to be herself and Hillard wondering at it suddenly looks up and sees before them the prince. "La Signorina" tells Jack that she is the wife of the prince and he leaves them together and rides away. Suddenly a loud cry awakens him from his reveries and he turns his horse in the direction of the cry and finally comes upon Giavonni, who points down over the edge of the precipice and there Hillard sees the lifeless form of Prince Bionca.

Hillard receives a letter of explanation from the princess in which she tells him her whole story, of how she was forced to marry the prince in order to keep her estate and how on their wedding day she was accosted by Enrichetta, the daughter of Giavonni, and told that her life would be unhappy with the prince as the poor Italian girl's had been. Jack goes to the villa where the past is talked over and the future begins to look much brighter for them.

"How Callahan Cleaned Up Little Hell"

ONE of the best stories of corrupt municipal politics which has ever appeared on the screen will be offered the public on Thursday, June 3, when Selig releases the three-reel feature "How Callahan Cleaned Up Little Hell," which was written by I. K. Friedman.

Thomas Santschi directs and enacts the lead in the picture, ably supported by a splendid cast, among whom are Lafayette McKee, R. C. McComas and Richard Le Strange, who stand out above the others by reason of their excellent work. In fact these latter three create types which are so unusual as to make them far out of the ordinary run of picture subjects and are deserving of the greatest praise for the sincerity with which they put over these roles.

The interesting tale begins with the arrest of Jimmie Collins, a pickpocket, who promptly appeals to Bill McFarlin, a corrupt political boss, to get him out of jail. McFarlin finds himself unable to do busi-and accordingly they concoct a plot to shift Callahan to the Little Hell district of the city, with orders to clean it up. Callahan realizes that he is being punished, for no honest policeman has ever lived long in the Little Hell district.

When Jim O'Neil, boss of Little Hell, discovers that the new captain of the precinct really means business, an effort is made to bribe him, but Callahan returns the bribe money and announces that he really intends to clean up the district. This threat is followed by raids on the gambling joints and houses of ill fame which are scattered throughout the district, and as a result O'Neil and Boss McFarlin hire Gourley, a thug and gunman, to kill Callahan.

Meanwhile Callahan has been having financial troubles, due to the sickness of his daughter and an expensive operation, together with a mortgage on his home falling due, and feels almost tempted to accept bribe money in order to meet his obligations.

He overcomes the temptation, however, and when friends in the department raise a fund sufficient to care for his pressing needs, Callahan accepts the loan and foils the powers of evil who had hoped to bring about his undoing.

Gourley, the thug hired to kill Callahan, is unable to undertake his mission at the time promised, since his mother is ill, and when he is taken to task for this failure, and learns by accident that O'Neil is planning to put him out of the way, because he "knows too much," Gourley draws a gun and faces O'Neil and his henchman.

At that moment Callahan arrives and arrests the whole party, but on learning that Gourley must visit his mother immediately if he is to see her alive, he receives a promise from the thug to give himself up immediately after a visit to his home and permits him to go.

Gourley, after visiting his mother, returns and shakes hands with Callahan and declares, "Hereafter you and me's pals. Say the word and me and you cleans up Little Hell." It is evident, therefore, since the grafters and crooked politicians are under arrest, and Callahan has the thug on his side, that the days of Little Hell are over and that the district really is to be cleaned up. The situation is thus as the picture ends.

Episode Seven "Road O' Strife"

THE handling of the wreck scenes in "In the Night," the seventh episode of Lubin's "Road O' Strife," is done with convincing realism and both scenes, the first showing the train as it rushes headlong over the embankment and that of the twisted tracks and shattered debris after the wreck, are excellent.

Jerome shows his true character, when after regaining consciousness, he takes a flask of whiskey from his bag and drinks greedily from it, refusing to give any to a poor dying victim who is nearby him.

Alene is left alone in the world in this episode, as Dr. and Mrs. Burton, with whom she had been staying, are dead, she has not heard a word from Robert Dane, and the sheriff tells her that she must go to the poorhouse.

As episode six closed we left Alene and Robert Dane together and in the opening of episode seven we see Robert Dane go after an old lady with whom he can leave Alene in Dr. Burton's home until the Burtons return.

The train which Clara and Jerome had taken, in the last episode, is wrecked and the sheriff, who was on the same train, after recovering consciousness and seeing the bodies of Jerome and his wife, who he supposes are dead, returns to town and tells Robert Dane, who

American's "In the Purple Hills"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

JOSEPH GALBRAITH, new American leading man, makes his debut in the two-reel production, "In the Purple Hills," the American release of Monday, May 24, and if one can judge by his first appearance is likely to become a great favorite with the picture going public.

The sheriff faces the outlaw.

Mr. Galbraith, while undoubtedly a little older than American leads of the past year or so, has a splendid physique, rides well, gets over his love scenes in a convincing manner, appears capable of emotional acting that calls for extreme skill on the player's part, and in many respects resembles a former American leading man, who became world famous as a matinee idol.

The story in which Mr. Galbraith makes his debut is a real old time western melodrama with thrills galore in its two thousand feet; Jack Richardson fairly reveling in one of those "villyun" roles that made him famous so long ago, as "Red" Cantwell. Richardson captures the helpless heroine, ties her in her own little cabin and arranges a rifle in such a fashion that when the door is opened the rope attached to it will pull the trigger of the rifle, discharging the gun and killing the heroine.

With such a situation as its principal punch, the director proceeds to keep your heart in your mouth for another five hundred feet of film by sending one after another of his characters to the door with the intention of opening it, but causing each one to turn aside at the last moment on some small pretext, so that the suspense is terrific, since the audience knows that the opening of the door even an inch or two will result in the heroine's death.

Needless to say, however, the handsome hero learns of his wife's situation in time to begin a desperate ride that brings him to her rescue barely in time to see his own baby daughter push open the door, thereby discharging the carefully set rifle and discharging its bullet into his wife's body.

Thinking his wife dead, the hero goes out to wreak vengeance on the villain whom he had captured as he was escaping from the vicinity and tied to a tree.

The men struggle madly on the very edge of a precipice, and, at last, in seeking to gain an unfair advantage, the villain steps too close to the edge of the precipice, loses his footing and falls to his death on the rocks below.

The unhappy husband returns to his cabin, discovers that the bullet intended to kill his wife had been slightly deflected and only badly wounded her in the arm.

Her recovery from this injury is only a matter of days and as the film closes we see husband and wife united in fond embrace.

Vivian Rich, as the heroine, is pretty and convincing, while excellent character work is done by Harry Von Meter, as John Ogle, and by Louise Lester in the role of Mrs. Crosby.

Edison's "The Test"

THE manifold advantages of parole over conviction, when used with discretion, are illustrated by "The Test," a three-reel Edison drama to be released on June 4. The story pictures the good which comes from a little encouragement and confidence instilled into a man who has done wrong, when censuring and prosecuting him would have effected nothing more than a legal attonement for the crime.

The plot is rather commonplace as far as striking situations and novel developments are concerned, but it is nicely staged and succeeds in creating sufficient suspense to "put over" its climax. The story, by Lee Arthur, was produced by J. W. Castle. Herbert Prior has the leading masculine part as John Burly, and Miss Valentine plays the feminine lead as Susanna Poindexter. Charles Sutton as Robert Poindexter, Frank McGlynn as Tom O'Neil, and Carlton King as District Attorney Joseph Wallace, complete the cast.

The story begins with John Burly's "mistake." Pressed for money, he yields to the temptations of his position in Robert Poindexter's office, and steals a large sum of money. Caught with the goods, he confesses and begs for another chance. Although doubting his ability to make good, Poindexter consents, and accepts Burly's signed confession and agreement to pay back, within a year's time, all the money which he has misappropriated.

Suzanna Poindexter, Robert's niece from the west, and Burly have become greatly attached to each other during the girl's visit. Burly, thinking that Suzanna knows nothing of his theft, leaves for the West to bury his past and build a foundation for a clean future. She, however, being in her uncle's office when Burly entered, had hidden behind the door, and had overheard all.

Back at home, Suzanna renews her charity work. While she is distributing bread on the street one day, Burly, not recognizing her because of her veil, gives her a written appeal for aid in securing a position. She writes her uncle to give Burly a recommendation, but he refuses, saying that he does not believe the man is worthy of it. Suzanna puts Burly to the test by dropping her purse where he is sure to see it. The ragged, hungry man picks it up, and keeps it for a time, but finally conquers his evil desires, and returns it to Suzanna without touching any of its contents.

Weakened, spiritually and physically, he drops in a faint at her feet. Suzanna tells her father the story of Burly's struggle to keep straight, and asks him to help him find employment. Mr. Poindexter agrees, and a few days later finds Burly a clerk in the law office of Judge Gary. With this foothold he is enabled to make good his promise to Robert Poindexter. The situation in the final scene gives indication of an early wedding between Suzanna and Burly.

THE wonderful ingenuity of Wu Fang, the Chinese master criminal, is displayed in "The Ear in the Wall," the latest episode of the new "Exploits of Elaine," for that cunning Chinaman makes use of a detectaphone for the purpose of spying upon Kennedy and his callers without being actually present in the room itself.

As the episode opens, Wu Fang sends Elaine Dodge a box of roses, together with a note explaining that the sender has laid plans to kill Craig Kennedy or any other friends of Elaine's whom he chooses, and that the roses, half white and half red are to serve as a signal by which Elaine may make known whether she prefers the Chinaman to first kill Craig Kennedy, her lover, or her Aunt Josephine.

The girl is horrified at the note, and while she is dazedly glancing over the paper, Kennedy arrives and calms her fears by declaring that no matter what means the Chinaman uses, he feels confident he can protect himself and Aunt Josephine from death.

Then unknown to Elaine, Kennedy flashes the red roses in the window, as a signal that the Chinaman is to attack him rather than Aunt Josephine.

The signal thus given, Kennedy prepares for what he fears surely will be an ingenious attack by the Chinese criminal. He sprays the hall mat outside his door with a fluid that will photograph the footsteps imprinted on it, thus making sure that he will be able to detect the presence of anyone in the room during his absence.

Wu Fang on receiving the message conveyed by the red roses in the window goes to a building adjoining Kennedy's apartment and there installs a detectaphone, an electrical contrivance which permits him to hear everything going on within Kennedy's apartments after the receiver has been installed in a baseboard behind a desk in that apartment.

The ingenuousness by which the Chinaman stretches his wires from Kennedy's apartment to the adjoining building is well worthy of the master criminal, since he employs a tiny animal to crawl through a mouse hole dragging the wire which is attached to its body. Kennedy, however, suspicions that the Chinaman is overhearing what transpires in the room, since when the police raid the quarters of Long Sing and Innocent Inez, two of Wu Fang's accomplices, they find the apartment empty, though Kennedy knew positively both Long Sing and Inez had been present but a few moments before.

Accordingly Kennedy makes use of the galvaniscope, an instrument of his own invention, and by careful experiment is soon able to find the detectaphone.

With Jameson's assistance he carries on a fake conversation that completely deludes the Chinese listening in the adjoining building. Pretending to depart from his own rooms, Kennedy gives the Chinaman an opportunity to enter and arrange a trap for him, which they proceed to do, Long Sing smearing the mouthpiece of Kennedy's pipe with a deadly poison, in the expectation that Kennedy will put it in his mouth upon his return and instantly die as a result.

Suspicious, Kennedy discovers the poison on the mouthpiece of the pipe and then boldly screams out that he is poisoned and for Jameson to run for assistance, knowing the Chinaman will overhear his cries and believe him dead.

Long Sing with his Chinese helpers at once sets out for Kennedy's apartment where he is set upon by Kennedy, overpowered and handcuffed. The other Chinamen upon arriving find themselves greeted by a squad of policemen whom Kennedy has summoned, and all are arrested with the single exception of Wu Fang, who escapes, makes his way to the roof and there eludes all his pursuers.

EPISODE eleven of the serial "The Black Box" or "A Desert Vengeance," which will be released the week of May 17, is satisfyingly tense and for a time we are at a loss to understand the friendship Craig pretends for Quest and his party.

The desert life is well depicted, the scenes being very realistic. Also the riders, who are madly galloping toward Port Said to bring back the soldiers to the attacked caravan, deserve mention for their daring horsemanship. The scenes laid in the jungle wherein the lion attacks the camp and the lioness is shown with her cubs, and the jungle lit up by the torches of the Mongars in search of the lions are remarkably well executed.

We see Quest, Lenora, Laura and the professor lost in the desert and eagerly looking for some sign of water. Quest goes upon a small mound of sand and through his glasses sees a caravan halting a short distance away. He takes out his handkerchief and signals to them.

In the meantime the Mongars' scout has also seen this rich caravan and has returned to his chief and told him of it. Straightway the Mongar troops are called and told to attack them. Craig, who is in hiding in the Mongar camp, decides to go with them.

The men from the caravan see Quest and his party and send out three men on horseback to rescue them. All of a sudden the Mongars rush upon the caravan and in a few moments it is a scene of desola-

In the Mongars' camp Quest, the professor and the two girls have sufficiently recovered and are planning to outwit the Mongars and get water, arms and horses and escape. In the meantime word is brought to camp that the soldiers are coming to avenge the destruction of the caravan. The Mongars break up and compel the detective and his party to go with them into the jungle.

In the jungle the camp is attacked by a ferocious lion and in the excitement of killing the lion the detective's party manage to get together their necessary supplies and are ready to start for Port Said. Quest suddenly decides that he must not leave without capturing Craig, so he stealthily creeps upon him when he is talking with Feerda, the daughter of the Mongar chief, and at the point of a gun compels him to take them to Port Said and ties Feerda to a tree.

After the excitement of the lion hunt has subsided the Mongar chief misses his daughter and a party is sent out to find her. They discover her tied to a tree and she tells them of the escape of the Americans and of Craig's going with them. Immediately the Mongars set out after Quest and his party.

The lives of the detective's party saved by Craig.

The soldiers from Port Said come upon the scene just as the Mongar chief shoots at Craig, but Feerda rushes in and the shot enters her heart as she tries to save Craig's life. The soldiers march the Mongar tribe back to Port Said and Quest's party are left with their captive to journey after them.

Pathe's "Houses of Glass"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

AN UNUSUALLY active green-eyed monster runs amuck in the sixth three-reel release of the Pathe "Who Pays?" series, "Houses of Glass," and as a result, through perfectly logical channels, unfounded jealousy brings about the ruining of an innocent girl's reputation, the shooting of one man, and the imprisonment of another. Incriminating circumstances and doubtful coincidence is all the confirmation necessary for the suspicious mind to give credence to the wildest kind of statements.

With gossip to manufacture the missiles and jealousy to project them the "houses of glass" prove wholly inadequate when placed on the defensive. Not only idle women, but men, also, are numbered among the scandal-mongers, broadening the scope of the lesson which the picture contains. The incidents in the story are well-connected, and find graphic interpretation in the work of the cast among whose members are Ruth Roland and Henry King, featured as Mr. and Mrs. Ray Norris.

A strong scene from "Houses of Glass."

Mrs. Falls' jealousy seems to be actuated by an inclination to nag rather than adoration of her husband. Often she walks into his private office unannounced, hoping to surprise him in the act of entertaining some fair damsel. One day, after such a performance, Falls reproves his wife for her conduct, casually mentioning, to prove that he is not so bad, that he noticed Ray Norris holding his stenographer's hand in his office across the court that very morning.

The truth of the matter is that Norris, with purely charitable intentions, was commenting on the girl's fever and advising her to take a vacation. But the possibility of anything but scandal never occurs to Mrs. Fall, and she hastens to inform Norris' wife of how she is being deceived. At first Ruth merely scoffs at the woman's warnings, but in time the spark of suspicion is fanned into a flame of distrust, and she begins to believe that her husband is untrue to her.

Norris, in the meantime, has grown suspicious of his wife's relations with Fall, and, on learning that both have gone to a beach resort, though not together, he decides to follow. Just previous to this he has sent his stenographer and her father up to his summer home on the beach to occupy it until the girl fully recovers her health. It was Mrs. Norris' knowledge of this that prompted her to visit the beach. On the shore she meets Fall. Norris confronts them. While he is quarreling with Ruth, Fall turns and flees. The jealous husband draws a gun and shoots him. He is arrested for the killing and sent to prison. As the affair is never fully explained, circumstances brand Norris' stenographer as one of the factors in the scandal.

Life Photo's "The Unbroken Road"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon.

IN GOOD photography and beautiful tinting the latest Life Photo release, "The Unbroken Road," has one of its strongest supports. The story, while not as full of punch and originality as it might be, has a distinct advantage in being presented in an attractive and pleasing manner.

Constance is discharged for interfering in Radford's behalf.

The play, Thomas Dickinson's dramatic success picturized in five reels, is built about the struggle for political supremacy between two men, one of whom is a domineering "boss," and the other, a firm, conscientious man. The elements that are drawn into the whirlpool of intrigue furnish a romantic and heart-interest touch.

Mary Nash, featured as Constance Turner, is supported by William H. Tooker, who gives a splendid performance as the "boss," and Alexander Gaden, impersonating John Radford. The balance of the cast includes Arthur Morrison as Charles Garvan, Joseph Baker as Walter Dover, Charles Graham and Thomas O'Keefe as the delegates, Flanders and Carlton, and Sue Balfour as motherly Mrs. Murrish. The players seemed earnest in their efforts, but had they asserted themselves more, put a little more force in their gestures and expressions, the dramatic moments in the picture would have been much more convincing.

A prologue, showing a woman being buffetted about by the waves in the ocean of sin and finally being submerged in its depths, introduces the story, which follows: John Radford, guardian of Constance Turner, opposes her encouragement of Walter Dover's attentions. Walter is the son of William Dover, the powerful politician. Constance elopes with her suitor of a few weeks, but, at the roadhouse at which they stop, she becomes aware of his purpose, and leaves him. Caught in a storm, she stays over night at a farmhouse, and returns home in the morning.

Radford can see only the significance of her being away over night, and casts her out. Constance returns to Walter, and they are joined in a mock marriage. The girl, however, does not see through the fraud. She learns the truth when Walter denies the marriage to his father, who has threatened to disinherit him. To get Constance out of the way, the politician fakes up a charge against her, and has her committed to prison.

Radford, a reformer, is elected governor. His ward is brought before him to plead for parole. In the face of Dover's protests, he frees her. This act promises to put Radford out of the race at the next election. Garvan, Dover's political enemy, meets Constance, and becomes infatuated with her. To save Radford, the girl promises to surrender herself to Garvan if he will support him. He agrees, and Radford is re-elected. Walter, dying, vindicates Constance in his deathbed statement which, also, practically crushes his father. Garvan realizes that his love for Constance is pure, and they marry.

Great Northern's "Pro Patria"

Reviewed by Mabel Condon

IN spirit as well as in name, the Great Northern Film Company's four-reel picture, "Pro Patria," is convincing in its war-time significance. It is as truly a film depicting the use of military tactics and subterfuge as the exhibitor can hope to book; and entangled with the theme of foreign warfare is one of romance which concludes satisfactorily both the war and the love theme. The players portraying the characters of the story were chosen by one who understood the importance of types; in addition to looking well their roles, they live them well. Photographically, the picture automatically reverts to a first place among films exemplifying fine photography and strikes a high average in the question of scenes and settings.

The one-thousand-dollar-a-week Great Northern lead, Valdemar Psilander, plays the part of Gordon, son of General Wells and brother of Eileen whose fiance, Lieutenant Masters, is ordered from General Wells' home because he is an attache of the hostile country. Before leaving, Masters receives from Eileen a carrier-pigeon which he is to use in case of emergency.

General Wells and Gordon leave for the scene of battle and Eileen becomes a Red Cross nurse. A traitor in General Wells' command informs Lieutenant Masters' army that at two the following day, the prince will present the colors to General Wells' army. It is a splendid opportunity for attack by the enemy, but Masters, through his love for Eileen, dispatches the pigeon to her with the information and she reaches her father and brother in time to warn them. In the ensuing battle victory eludes them only by the enemy's possession of an important fortress. Gordon asks permission to take it single-handed; General Wells grants his request and Gordon makes the heroic and successful attempt.

Over the body-strewn battlefield Eileen and Gordon seek for the body of Lieutenant Masters. They find it and at the hospital, Eileen's care restores him to health. The end of the war finds the general, his son and daughter, and Lieutenant Masters happily reunited.

Release Date Fixed

"A Phyllis of the Sierras," the third Bret Harte photoplay to be produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation, will be released on June 28 through the World Film Corporation. The motion picture will be remarkable not only for the magnificence of its interior sets, but, also, for the grandeur of the redwood country in which the exteriors are now being filmed. The California Motion Picture Corporation has earned an enviable reputation for the selection of charming exteriors, and the standard, already set up, will be raised in the forthcoming production.

Deserts Stage for Screen

George Fawcett, star of "The Law of the Land," which has had such an unusual run on Broadway, left Wednesday on the Pennsylvania Limited for Los Angeles, where he will join the Morosco-Bosworth forces immediately to start work on the production of "The Majesty of the Law." This will be Mr. Fawcett's first appearance before the camera, although, as stated by him just before leaving for the coast, he has looked forward eagerly to the time when he, too, would be starred in a big motion picture production, as have other celebrities of the stage. Mr. Fawcett's wife, known to the public as Percy Haswell, is at present in Montreal visiting friends, but will shortly join her husband at the Morosco-Bosworth studios.

Frohman Secures Right Atmosphere

Director Irving who is putting on George Ade's "Just Out of College," for the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has made ample preparation that this picture will have the real dyed-in-the-wool atmosphere of a small college town. Through the courtesy of Chancellor Brown and Dean Bouton of New York University, the use of the beautiful campus on University Heights, the Hall of Fame and the athletic field will be at Irving's disposal. A large number of scenes require a large group of cheering collegians. The Frohman Amusement Corporation is paying the 'Varsity show management a handsome sum of money for the services of the entire student body, which will be used in the athletic scenes as the cheering section, and in many others to give local color to the right places.

New Selig Star

Makoto Inokuchi is one of the few sons of Nippon on the rolls of the motion picture stage. At the age of seven years he saw his first stereopticon pictures and after returning home Inokutchi's fondness for these things grew until he finally bought a whole stereopticon equipment and gave free public exhibitions. After years in American schools his love for literature caused him to give up his regular studies and study only dramatics. While in school, he wrote a few one-act plays and scenarios. He then went to New York and there became a member of such companies as "Paid In Full," "A Daughter of Heaven" and "Bought and Paid For."

Makoto Inokuchi.

Makoto Inokutchi appeared first in motion pictures with the Pathe Freres Company, as an assistant. He then returned to the footlights with Viola Allen, but last summer he again entered the motion picture field and played in George Kleine's American productions, and with the Kalem company, which finally resulted in his getting his present engagement with William N. Selig.

All Celtic's Clean Films

Charlie O'Hara, as his name implies, is Irish and what's more is glad of it. The All-Celtic Films, Inc., of which he is president, is Irish as is everyone connected with it, even to the man that does the printing and developing of the films. When O'Hara created the "Adventures of Peaceful Rafferty," the series now being manufactured by his company, he started out to give the exhibitor and the public something new in comedy films, pictures that would amuse the multitudes and not offend. For he is an advocate of clean comedy and clean pictures in general, and says that producers can just as easily make clean pictures as suggestive ones.

J. A. Fitzgerald, director-in-chief for the company, has more than made good as a director of first-class comedy pictures as his most recent releases show. The trade papers in their reviews predicted a great future for him along this line, for he is one of the most conscientious producers in the game today.

and his success as a producer of comedy films seems assured.

Among the prominent players appearing in All-Celtic comedies under his direction are to be found the names of: Tammy Young, the former Mutual star, Boots Wall, Del De Lewis, Peggy Shannon, Tommie Mullins, Tom O'Keefe, Laurie Mackin, Joseph Sullivan, Billy Bowers, Charlie Mason, Pat Foy, Billy K. Wells, Arthur Sprage and others as well known to picture theater goers. Jake Badderacci the photographer for the company, is conceded to be one of the foremost in the business, having previously been with the Photodrama, All-Star, Pathe and other large producing firms in the East and on the West Coast.

Jack Standing

Jack Standing, the tall, good looking young Englishman of the Lubin players, who is at present being featured in the "Road O' Strife" serial, is one of the most versatile and finished actors in the Lubin studio, and he switches from leads to heavies, and from juvenile parts to old man characters, all with equal ease.

Jack Standing.

Standing's father, Herbert Standing achieved a wide reputation abroad as an actor, and his six older brothers are also actors, and since Jack's childhood days he has been in a theatrical atmosphere.

Jack was born in London and received his first theatrical training in the famous Drury Lane melodrama, in London. Following some years spent in melodrama, Standing went into musical comedy and achieved much success in "The Belle of New York" and other productions popular at that time. Then for a number of seasons he headed his own stock company at Brighton, England.

Eleven years ago Charles Frohman cabled Standing to come to America and play one of the important roles in "Sherlock Holmes." After his work in this, Leslie Carter chose him as her leading man. He was leading man for Fannie Ward, Margaret Anglin, Olga Nethersole and other prominent stars for a number of years.

Three years ago Standing joined the Lubin players as a leading man. He left the Lubin company for a season to play one of the star roles in Belasco's "Drums of Oude," and then returned to the studio and has been with the Lubin company ever since.

Not All the Credit

Directors of production, we have remarked before, do not receive with the public all the renown they deserve. Many of them are unknown to fame outside their own trade. But this does not mean that the average director has been at all backward in impressing his value upon his employers; and in his own studio, at least, he generally gets as much recognition as the most exacting could demand. And now some people are claiming that when the director receives credit for all the niceties of the finished production, he is getting more than he deserves.

For in the complexities of our art it so happens that certain other factors interpose themselves between the original negative which reflects the personal influence of the director, and the finished print which is delivered to the exhibitor. Sometimes the work of the film editor is almost a negligible quantity so far as changing the first idea goes; but at other times the retakes ordered overrule and reverse the decision of the director, and so make marketable a film which otherwise might actually repel rather than invite interest.

The scenario writer, the producing director, the film editor—all are important to the success of the finished film, and each in order takes liberties with the work of the one preceding him. If it were not for the changes made by the director, it is to be feared that the average scenario would make a pretty poor picture. And sometimes if it were not for the retake man, the average director would also make a pretty poor film.

No one person can afford to claim credit for all the good there is in a picture, or for all the evil that is omitted from it. It is just as important that the director's work be edited as that the author's script be adapted. The finished picture represents the work not of the writer, nor of the director, nor of the film editor, but of a harmonious co-operation of them all, each strengthening and improving the one ahead of him. To give all the credit to any one of them is to rob the others of their just share.—P. H. W.

Another Thrill for Serial

An avalanche by which an entire village is destroyed furnishes a thrill in one of the coming releases of "The Diamond From the Sky," the North American's $20,000 prize photoplay. W. J. Tedmarsh, as "Quabba," the Italian hunchback, is the immediate cause of the destruction of the village in which George Periolat, the Luke Lovell of the big picture novel, has gathered his band of renegades to do battle with the Gypsy tribe of Hager. Quabba in an effort to aid Hagar, (Miss Forde) and Esther (Miss Pickford) loosens from its base a large rock, which is sent tumbling down the mountain side.

The turmoil in the village below prevents an early alarm, the rock carrying with it in its mad plunge stones and dirt, until the entire mountain side gives way, sweeping down in its wrath and covering up the village in a cloud of dirt and debris. The taking of the scene was most realistic, artisans mining and tunneling for several days so that the earth when it slid would have all the force and weight of a real avalanache.

Lady Mackenzie's Pictures

Lady Grace Mackenzie has just returned from a year's thrilling expedition after big game in East Africa. She is the first woman who ever penetrated so far into the depths of the African jungle and she has outdone Rainey, Roosevelt and all the other big game hunters in her achievements. She has not only potted every known specimen of big game in that next-to-nature section, but she has succeeded, at great expense, in photographing them all under the most interesting conditions with a moving picture camera. The result is declared to be the best set of big game pictures ever taken or that will probably ever be taken.

Lady Mackenzie, the modern Diana.

This Diana of today, this modern huntress par excellence, has four miles of film such as has never been seen. In it will be found a most wonderful lion hunt, showing a huge African lion charging straight at her; a furious rhino accompanied by his mate, and countless pictures of elephants, giraffes, zebras, baboons, buffaloes, apes and wild dogs. All are beautifully pictured and the charges of the hunted wild beasts are thrilling in the extreme. In one rare picture three hundred and sixty elephants are seen watering at a pool in the jungle. The best of this vast assortment of film has been worked into a two and a half hours' entertainment and will soon be seen at one of the leading theaters on Broadway, New York City.

Big Plans Discussed

The first gathering of the "big four" since the memorable meeting that created film history by the V. L. S. E. affiliation, was held in New York last Tuesday.

The occasion being an informal directors' meeting, no official business was transacted, but it is understood that plans of great moment to the industry were discussed, and action on them will be taken later. No definite statement has been made as to the nature of the big things hinted at, but rumor has it that when an announcement is made later, the film world will get a still further view of how well the old leaders anticipate the needs of the exhibitor.

It can be authoritatively stated, however, that the attractions released during the first quarter on the V. L. S. E. program, big as they are, will be surpassed by the features now either being produced or in preparation for production.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager, said after the meeting, that under the present system of direct booking, the responsibility of the V. L. S. E. companies does not cease when the picture has left the studio. The interest of the company follows each feature for life, and in consequence, nothing of value to its successful exhibition is left undone. This means that every detail from the selection of the subject to the bringing of patrons to the theaters has the careful consideration of master film men, and naturally, the matters considered at the board meeting covered every phase of the motion picture business.

New Hand Colored Slides

The sinking of the Lusitania has startled the world and set Americans thinking. The motion picture patron is particularly interested in the subject and will be treated to an exceptionally fine set of views which the Novelty Slide Company has just produced. The slides are hand colored and each contains descriptive data; in all, they make a very interesting attraction, telling the story of the Lusitania and depicting its wonderful construction as well as its destruction.

Edison's Paramount Release

What is taken to be a marked change and a departure in the policy of the Edison Company is the almost simultaneous announcement of the releasing on the Paramount program of a five-reel feature, "The House of the Lost Court," which Edison has had in preparation for two months, and a change of the weekly program, so that, in point of number, there will be less releases.

"The House of the Lost Court" is from the book by the noted English writer, Mrs. C. N. Williamson, who has thrilled her readers with stories of weird adventure and mystery plot, and features Viola Dana. The film is now being shown at the Broadway theater, New York. Miss Dana not so long ago, when playing leads in a Broadway production, was hailed as "Broadway's youngest star," she then being not much more than a child. It was Miss Dana's remarkable work in the three-reel feature, "The Stoning," that brought forth such encomiums from all sides and caused a prominent member of the National Board of Censorship to rather break precedent and give to the press an unusual letter of commendation, believing that the lesson conveyed so dramatically well worth the departure. But the fact that, in all reviews, practically no mention was made that the plot was neither startling nor unique—really not new at all—perhaps best reflected how interpretations can rise, by their excellence, over any repetition of plot sameness while they be true to life. In the cast of "The House of the Lost Court" are included practically all who were in "The Stoning," and it includes many of Edison's most talented players. Besides Miss Dana, Gertrude McCoy, Sally Crute, Helen Strickland, Robert Conness and Duncan McRae appear.

Viola Dana.

This departure appears to be an Edison entry into the long feature field, released on other programs than its own. Heretofore the few long features that company has produced have been released through the special feature department of the General Film Company.

The change in the weekly program also seems to reflect the sentiments recently expressed by Studio Manager Horace G. Plimpton, who stated that in his belief one of the greatest factors militating against marked improvement of the photoplay was the exigency of the frequent or daily release, compelling companies to work under pressure so that often the best could not be put forth. The new program will eliminate the Tuesday one-reelers and the alternate Monday three-reel features, all three-reel features hereafter being released Fridays. On Friday, June 11, however, there will be released on the regular program Lee Arthur's famous stage comedy-drama as a four-part feature, this being found necessary because of its containing so much good material. From time to time, when the story warrants it, the Friday three-reeler will likely give place to a four-reel feature. This will mean but three releases a week, one reel on Wednesday, a feature on Friday, and a one-reel on Saturday.

This will, Mr. Plimpton believes, give the production end more time to consider and perfect each picture, so that each film may have all the care and attention of a feature picture.

New Star for Kessel and Baumann

The latest recruit, from the footlight favorites, to sign with the New York Motion Picture Corporation is Lewis S. Stone, the noted leading man, who is at present starring in the great success "Inside the Lines." Mr. Stone was a triumph in "The Misleading Lady" and prior to that and other Broadway appearances, was for seven years leading man with the old Belasco Stock Company, of Los Angeles, where he played opposite Bessie Barriscale, who is now with the N. Y. M. P. producing plant. It has not been decided just when he will start work, but he will leave for the coast as soon as he is through playing in "The Inside Lines."

Remarkable Offer Made Chaplin

Charlie Chaplin, it is alleged by a Los Angeles paper, is the recipient of an offer of $25,000 to appear in the Madison Square Garden, New York for fifteen minutes every afternoon and evening for two weeks. A later edition of the paper alleges that owing to the fact that G. M. Anderson gave Chaplin a sight draft for the sum of $25,000, the Essanay comedian will not go to New York, but will remain in California. The paper also states that Chaplin is going to invest his $25,000 in government bonds, and is seriously considering getting married.

Lubin Feature Opens Garden

Madison Square Garden, New York City, the most famous show place in the world, has been converted into a motion picture theater, and will open its doors on May 22, with the six-part Lubin masterpiece, "The Sporting Duchess." This edifice, remarkable both for its architectural beauty and as the gathering place of American aristocracy at the great horse shows, dog shows, automobile and sportsman shows, will now take its place in amusement history as the largest motion picture theater in the world.

The selection of "The Sporting Duchess" as the opening attraction is a tremendous triumph for the Madison Square Garden, New York City, opens up as a picture theater, seating 12,000 persons.

Lubin Company and the V. L. S. E. program. Every film company producing features has sought the distinction of having one of its pictures selected for the initial showing, and the decision of the management to book the big six part Lubin reflects credit on the director and the stars, as well as to the Lubin Company, and the "Big Four."

The immense arena that has been the scene of the greatest triumphs for Barnum and Bailey's Circus has been transformed into seating accommodations for twelve thousand people, and the selection of Lubin's "The Sporting Duchess," as the opening attraction, is particularly appropriate, owing to the magnitude of the production and the subject of the play.

More Power Given Censor Board

The moving picture censor board of Ft. Worth, Texas, was recently endowed with police power, and its membership was increased from three to five members. The amendment gives the mayor authority to appoint the board which he will do in a few days. The board under the amended ordinance will be given the right to enter any picture show, at any time to inspect films. Service on the board is performed gratis.

New Morosco-Bosworth Star

Leonore Ulrich, star of Oliver Morosco's production, "The Bird of Paradise," has been secured by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in association with Bosworth, in a big feature production, on which work will be started soon.

Lenore Ulrich.

She is one of the youngest stars on the theatrical stage and although she is but nineteen years of age has had a remarkably successful career in her short life of theatricals. In two years Miss Ulrich played eighty-six roles and appeared in the principal parts of such productions as "Twelfth Night," "The Virginian," "The Deep Purple," "Cameo Kirby," "The Chorus Lady," "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," "Dawn of Tomorrow" and "The Fortune Hunter" with particular success. As in the case of Peggy O'Neill, Miss Ulrich is one of Morosco's "finds."

Besides being an actress of unusual ability, Miss Ulrich presents one of the most perfect specimens of womanhood. Her face and head have been the subject for scores of paintings by well known artists.

New Producing Concern

The Highland Film Corporation of which James T. Ford is president and active manager, will shortly begin the production of dramatic films near Cincinnati.

This concern which was recently incorporated in the State of Delaware with a capital stock of $3,500,000 has as its officers James T. Ford, president; H. F. McGee, vice-president; Joseph Kapfer, vice-president and technical director; B. H. Rechtin, secretary; George I. Breidel, assistant secretary, and H. M. Ricketts, treasurer.

The company is said to have a site of land at Fort Thomas comprising 97 acres, which will shortly be utilized for the erection of its buildings, and work on an outdoor stage it is anticipated will begin on or before June 1. It is probable that a Pacific coast studio will also be arranged for, or if this cannot be secured a company will journey to Savannah, Ga. to work during the winter season.

Finds No Suitable Scenario

Out of several thousand picture scenarios submitted to the Selig Polyscope Company, which asked for an idea to film on the Selig Movie Special Tour, not one was found to be practical. The Selig Company offered a free trip aboard the Special to the writer who would suggest, in synopsis form only, a practical idea for a scenario of the journey. Writers of the half a dozen scripts that came anywhere near fulfilling the requirements have been suitably remembered by the Selig Company.

Bronx Local Reorganized

A mass meeting of Bronx exhibitors was held Thursday, May 13, at the Art theater, 1077 South boulevard, New York City, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America—N. Y. Local No. 1. The purpose of the meeting was the reorganization of the Bronx exhibitors.

Lee A. Ochs, president of New York Local No. 1, presided. He made a short address in which he outlined the benefits of the organization and the necessity of the exhibitors getting together for their mutual protection. Brief addresses were also made by Mr. Harris, the former attorney for the Cinema Club, and Herman Hoffman, an attorney of Manhattan.

A general discussion followed—several exhibitors voicing their grievances. Mr. Harris offered to help the Bronx exhibitors and give them free legal service until such time as they were financially able to compensate him.

Next followed an election of officers for the Bronx Branch of New York Local No. 1. D. B. Picker, of the Burland theater, was unanimously elected president; Charles Goldreyer, of the University theater, vice-president; A. B. Samuelson, of the Art theater, secretary and Thomas Howard, of the Claremont theater, treasurer. The new officers promised to do their utmost to enroll new members and strengthen the organization.

Balsdon Heads Pittsburgh Office

A new branch office has been established by the V. L. S. E. in Pittsburgh, Pa. This is the ninth branch to be opened by the big concern and the second addition to the original list of distributing centers, since the inauguration of the direct booking plan on April 12. The Pittsburgh office is located at 115-117-119 Fourth avenue, and is in charge of George Balsdon, a veteran in the film industry, long and favorably known both through his connection with the General Film Company, and as an owner and representative of a chain of picture theaters.

The exact territory to be served by the Pittsburgh office has not yet been definitely decided, but much of the area covered will be so allotted that the pressure on the Philadelphia office will be relieved.

Berst Is Enthusiastic

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, recently returned from a business sojourn in New York City. Mr. Berst is enthusiastic over the outlook for business through the new V. L. S. E., Inc. "That the exhibitors are appreciating the high class productions being released through V. L. S. E., Inc., is putting it mildly," asserted Mr. Berst in an interview. "The first Selig Red Seal play released through the new incorporation, 'The Carpet From Bagdad,' may ultimately reach the popularity attained by 'The Spoilers,'" said Mr. Berst. "Opinions from public, press and exhibitors are highly complimentary. The second Selig Red Seal play 'The Millionaire Baby,' dramatized by Gilson Willets from Anna Katherine Green's wonderful novel, will, according to present indications, also attain the high tide of popularity. You may say that the Selig Company is hesitating at nothing to make its Red Seal Plays, its Diamond Specials in three reels released in the General Film Company's regular service, and the Selig productions in one and two reels the best it has ever released."

Versatile Lubin Actor

Francis Joyner, of the Lubin players, has been most successful on the screen because of his ability to interpret, with equal ease, juvenile roles and old men's parts. Acting to him is an art, and he gives to his art the best there is in him.

Francis Joyner.

Joyner was born in New Orleans in 1887 and began his stage career in Chicago, at the age of seventeen, under May Hosmer. He began by playing small parts, but his ability to put character into his work, his sincerity and his hard study, gained him speedy recognition, and at the end of the first season he was playing leading parts. During the next few seasons Joyner played in stock companies in Duluth, Indianapolis, St. Paul, Chicago and Brooklyn. He left the Keith Stock Company, in Brooklyn, to join the Lubin players and since then has played under various directors, his versatility making him much in demand.

Selig's "The Carpet from Bagdad"

If those who see the five-part Selig Red Seal play "The Carpet From Bagdad" expected to view a de luxe presentation of a thrilling story they will leave the theater in a happy frame of mind, for every reel contains many "punches" which are of the red blooded variety. On the other hand, if they expected to see a fairy story or one whose chief interest rested in the mystic atmosphere they will leave disappointed, for this is a strictly twentieth century play.

Its plot deals with the plans of a clever band of crooks with a female leader, who make Egypt their headquarters. One of their members steals a sacred rug and this draws the wrath of the Orientals upon the entire party. A rich young American rug buyer becomes involved in the rapid moving plan of things when he purchases the rug and he falls in love with the daughter of the leader of the crooks. The action of the story is dramatic and full of surprises.

Billy Van Heads Company

Billy B. Van, the inimitable comedian, has at last been prevailed upon to enter the ranks of motion picture players. After receiving offers from some of the most prominent moving picture manufacturers, to appear in one and two-reel comedies, Mr. Van decided to embark in the producing line himself, and has organized the Equity Motion Picture Company, of which he is president, and intends to appear in comedies such as he is capable of producing, and releasing the same weekly. It seems quite unnecessary to introduce Mr. Van to the amusement-going public, as he has been before them as a comedy star for the past twenty years, appearing in a great number of Broadway successes. Mr. Van's comedy is broadly humorous. He is one of those comedians who do not require lines to get a laugh. His facial expressions, his gestures, and his comic antics, are sufficient in themselves to keep an audience thoroughly amused. He is a natural born pantomimist, and has a nobility of countenance possessed by very few comedians, and a way of emphasizing all his points with facial characterizations.

The beautiful and talented Beaumont sisters, Rose and Nellie, will also appear in these comedies, in conjunction with Mr. Van. The Equity Motion Picture Company has taken offices in the Strand theater building, New York City, and its studio, which is in course of erection, will be located at Van Harbor, Sunapee Lake, New Hampshire, in the heart of the White mountains. The magnificent rural scenery in this vicinity offers great opportunities for exterior effects.

Associated with Mr. Van, in the Equity Motion Picture Company, as vice-president and secretary, is Bob Russell, the energetic and hustling distributor of feature films.

Fish Had Best Beware

The Mutual Fishing Club has been formed and each Sunday holds fishing parties that take place in the waters that surround the California Catalina Islands. Director F. A. Kelsey is at the head of the club and the list of other Reliance and Majestic players who are active club members includes R. A. Walsh, Paul Powell, Jack B. O'Brien, Jack Conway, Charles Gorman, Lloyd Ingraham, W. Christy Cabanne, Wallace Reid, William Hinckley and Thomas E. O'Brien. Up to date O'Brien holds the record, by catching a fifty pound yellow tail fish and landing him in eight minutes. A permanent launch has been chartered and the name "Mutual" is conspicuous on the front of it.

Beautiful reproductions in oil of Kathlyn Williams' portrait have been prepared by the Selig Polyscope to accompany lobby displays of "The Carpet From Bagdad."

"Way down south in the land of cotton" the V. L. S. E. is represented by W. C. Brandon, a man of wide experience, who counts as his friends all of the exhibitors in Dixie.

Mr. Brandon was formerly a representative of the General Film Company and later handled the bookings for feature films throughout the southern states. He is thoroughly familiar with local conditions in the south, and in his personal make-up embodies all of those characteristics that form so charming and inseparable a part of southern life and business. He is enthusiastic over the manner in which the exhibitors in his territory have welcomed the V. L. S. E. program and says that the system of direct booking is fully appreciated by southern theater owners; and with such men back of the program as the heads of the four companies in whom exhibitors have implicit confidence, the success of the program in the south seems assured, in view of its already demonstrated excellence and the way in which it attracts the public.

Henry Otto is the director who produces the consistently good pictures put out by the American Film Manufacturing Company and in which Winifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen are featured. "Daphnia," "The Silent Way," "Restitution" and "Justified" are four film testimonials to the fineness of Mr. Otto's work whose first direction of pictures was with the old Imp company. After a time with the Selig company he went to the Santa Barbara studio on July first, 1914. And there he has been producing satisfactory results since that time.

By arrangement with Pathe Freres and the Wharton brothers, Arnold Daly has been released from his "Exploits of Elaine" engagement in order that he may continue his season in New York with the Bernard Shaw plays, in which he is appearing personally. Mr. Daly has completed twenty-four episodes of the "Exploits." He will continue with the "You Never Can Tell" and "Arms and the Man" companies until about June 1, and then go to French Lick Springs for a much needed rest.

Charles Chaplin, Essanay comedian, led the parade at the opening of the base ball season in Los Angeles. He was followed by a band, the city officials, clowns and a calliope. Nevertheless Chaplin was quite the sensation of the parade. When he threw the first ball there was a yell from the base ball fans that could be heard a mile.

Milton H. Fahrney has started producing for the Mina company at the Hollywood studios recently occupied by the Universal. Fahrney was the first director David Horsley ever employed, and the union is thus again cemented. Fahrney has Goldie Coldwell, George Ovie, Jefferson Cabourne, Mrs. Sully and Louis Fitzroy with him, and will make comedies until the new studios at the Zoo are completed.

The Selig Polyscope Company has put over a novel publicity stunt. Pieces of carpet have been mailed to exhibitors and exchanges. Attached to the carpet was a tag reading: "This is a piece of 'The Carpet from Bagdad.'"

J. A. Fitzgerald, who directs the productions and destinies of All Celtic Film, Inc., is one Chicagoan who has not succumbed to the charms of New York. As summer approaches, thoughts of visiting the windy city go coursing through his mind, but they have not yet grown into hopes, for just now he is so busy guiding philanthropic Rafferty through his difficulties that he has not had time to even consider them seriously. Some day, however, a man with J. A. F. on his suitcase is going to board a Chicago-bound train, and, once on, the whole train crew will not be able to induce him to change his mind.

Exhibitors in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia, Delaware, North Carolina, and New Jersey will be interested in learning that the new quarters of the Philadelphia branch of the V. L. S. E., at 229 North Twelfth street, have been completed, and are now occupied by J. S. Hebrew and his staff.

Frank Powell, director of the Fox Film Corporation, whose picturization of Porter Emerson Browne's "A Fool There Was" added further laurels to his reputation as one of the foremost photo-play directors, is at the present time in St. Augustine, Fla. Mr. Powell is filming the world-famous play, "La Giaconda," by D'Annunzion, and as this is recognized at one of the greatest of this famous author's works, it will no doubt make a notable production and should prove to be one of the most popular photo-dramas ever made.

Harry Spingler, excellent portrayer of juvenile roles, and popular Screen Club member, will have the juvenile lead in support of William Farnum, who is slated to appear in a pictured version of "The Bondman," founded on Hall Caine's famous novel of the same name. The Fox Film Corporation, who stand sponsor for the new feature, have selected Edgar Lewis to direct the photoplay, rehearsals of which are now in progress at the Pathe Studio in Jersey City.

Ruth Stonehouse, the pretty Essanay actress, spent several days in Omaha, lecturing at motion picture houses where plays featuring her were shown. She talked two nights at the Columbia theater and one night at the Besse theater. She was given a big ovation at both places, where she told of the work in making pictures. "A Night in Kentucky," George Ade's "The Fable of the Men at the Woman's Club," "The Man in Motley" and "The Wood Nymph" were the plays featured.

World Film Corporation.—It is reported that this company increased its capital stock to $3,000,000, and that the entire control of both the Shubert and Peerless Film companies has been obtained. Prior to this the World Film Corporation only possessed a fractional interest in the above two concerns. It is also reported that the rights of the World Film Corporation for the entire world—outside of the United States and Canada—were sold to Messrs. Winik and Brock of London, England, and that they expect to secure a profit through this foreign output of something in excess of $100,000 per year. This indicates a satisfactory arrangement for a wider market for this company's product. The method of distributing will necessitate a thorough tryout of any and all films in America before they are exported for the European market. The curb market, however, fails to reflect an anticipated advance in the shares and they are still quoted at about last week's level.

North American Film Corporation.—In most of the large cities in the United States the "Diamond from the Sky" was exhibited in more theaters on the initial night than the best known success in the serial field—the "Million Dollar Mystery"—and, down to date, the daily ratio of increase in bookings has established a new record.

New York Motion Picture Corporation.—That a regular 1% per month basis has been established for this stock is now generally conceded as the company declared the same rate for the second month.

Reliance Motion Picture Corporation.—A number of offerings were made last week, but, as the buying power was scarce, transfers were conspicuous by their absence.

General Film Corporation.—This market seems to have struck the same rut in which it was found during the last four or five months of 1914 and the earlier part of this year, with practically no transactions reported.

The Fox Film Corporation announces the selecting of Stuart Holmes to depict the leading character role in "A Mother's Love," which is to be used as a starring medium by Betty Nansen. J. Gordon Edwards, assisted by Rex Ingram, will direct the photoplay, rehearsals of which are now under way at the Pathe studio in Jersey City.

The Strand theater management is making preparations to present a series of performances for children, commencing Saturday morning, June 5. An elaborate program is in preparation which is sure to amuse the little ones. What is said to be the most marvelous and realistic war pictures ever taken are the German government pictures taken by the Eiko Film Company in association with the Local Anzeiger. These pictures have been copyrighted in this country and will be shown at the Strand theater, commencing next Sunday. Later the Strand theater will also present government war pictures taken with the allies.

Miss Pauline Bush, who was married to Allan Dwan on April 24, will not return to the Universal Company for several weeks. In the meantime Miss Edna Maison will take the place of Director Joseph De Grasse's leading woman and opposite her will play Ray Gallagher in a two-reel western story entitled "One Man's Evil."

Vera Lewis is the latest character woman to join the Griffith-Mutual forces. She has already appeared in "Gridley's Wife," and now has been cast for the role of the Countess in Ouida's "Trocotrin."

After a ten-week sojourn at the barracks of the 14th U. S. Cavalry, Fort Clark, Texas, the Vitagraph acting company with Darwin Karr in the lead has returned to the home plant in Brooklyn, N. Y. This company was sent to Texas to do some pictures that called for scenes of frontier life.

Miss Maibelle Neikes Justice, author of many Selig picture plays, has been prostrated at her home in Los Angeles, Cal., having received word that her sister, Mrs. D. R. Shymer of New York City, was among the victims on the ill-fated Lusitania.

Agnes Egan Cobb has assumed the new title of "Advisor" to add to her list of many. This one is rather unique and the first of its kind in the film business. However, she is entitled to it, as there is not a day passes but some one 'phones or calls personally at her office in the Columbia theater building for her advice on matters of importance pertaining to the film trade.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., announces that the Pittsburgh branch office, in charge of George Balsdon, is now permanently located at 115 Fourth avenue, in that city.

According to New York artists and sculptors, the most fascinatingly wicked and seductively beautiful face in the world belongs to Madamoiselle Theda Bara, the Parisian beauty and late leading woman of Le Theater Antoine, Paris, the "house of thrills of the French capital." Famous the country over as the vampire woman of the William Fox productions, "A Fool There Was," "Kreutzer Sonata," and "The Clemenceau Case," Mlle. Bara has probably a bigger personal following today than any other actress on the screen. Her serpent-like beauty and compellingly alluring methods have made her name famous from coast to coast.

A. C. Langan, located in the Candler building, New York Ciyt, has the foreign rights on the productions of All-Celtic Film, Inc. Mr. Langan, through recent appointment by William P. Jeffrey, trustee of the All Star Film Corporation, is sole agent for All Star productions, and is now selling rights on "The Garden of Lies," featuring Jane Cowl. Mr. Langan is also selling rights for territory outside of the United States and Canada on "Salomy Jane," a splendid production by the California Motion Picture Corporation.

In reference to the brevity in last week's edition of Motography, concerning Tom Bedding, we wish to state that the last line of same was printed through some misunderstanding. Mr. Bedding is at present with the World Film Corporation.

Director Jacques Jaccard, who has been absent some six weeks or two months, has again returned to the Universal studios in Los Angeles, where he will become a director of Universal productions.

H. Z. Levine has just issued a little personal house organ called "Motion Picture Articles," this being reprinted articles from the columns of the Moving Picture World and the New York Morning Telegraph, which Mr. Levine wrote after a trip of nearly seventy-five thousand miles through Europe and the United States and the greater portion of the articles is devoted to an analytical review of trade conditions of the countries through which he traveled. There is a two-page introduction by Hugh Hoffman, formerly of the World's staff.

Richard Ridgely, the capable Edison director, has just finished "The Wrong Woman," a three-part feature that is sure to cause favorable comment the country over for the excellent manner in which it was produced. Ridgely is conceded by many to be one of the foremost feature directors of the day, and is living up to his reputation most admirably.

Tom Mix, Selig cowboy actor and director, who was seriously hurt in a runaway accident which recently occurred at Los Angeles, is reported recovering. He is yet in a Los Angeles hospital.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Carlyle Blackwell has been very sick and will recuperate at one of the hot springs which abound in California. He held up well until the completion of the "Puppet Crown," in which he played opposite Ina Claire, for the Lasky company. He will next be seen playing opposite Blanche Sweet in "The Secret Orchard" under the direction of James Neil. Blackwell needs the rest, for he has been working steadily for many months now. He is delighted with his surroundings at the Lasky studios.

Harry Mestayer, the noted actor, now appearing in a forthcoming Selig Red Seal play, "The House of a Thousand Candles," expects to go to California soon and will be at the Selig Jungle-Zoo to assist in the receiving of guests of the Selig Movie Special.

Miss Victoria Forde, the dainty fun-maker of Al Christie's Nestor Comedy Company, celebrated her nineteenth birthday last Wednesday. That is, her friends celebrated it for her by giving her a surprise party at her home in Hollywood. About seventy-five film favorites, Universal and otherwise, were present and a very enjoyable evening was passed.

The start of the tour being made by James Cruze and Sydney Bracy, from New York to San Francisco. Cruze and Bracy on front seat. Cruze at the wheel. Lord McCaskill and Al Meltzer on rear seat. McCaskill secretary; Meltzer, mechanician. The party will play the larger moving picture theaters en route.

So it is true that pretty Louise Glaum was married on the quiet a little time ago. Rumors stated that she was seen in a white dress getting into an auto, and that Harry Edwards, the head comedy director under "Pathe" Lehrman of the L-Ko Company, was spotted with a flower in his button hole and a gladsome expression on his countenance. Then Harry and Louise both had a short lay-off from their work. Openly accused, they admitted the fact, and stated that they were very happy and trusted that everyone else was the same. Well, good luck to 'em, even if they did manage the affair secretly.

Frank Powell, director of the Fox Film Corporation, whose production of Porter Emerson Browne's "A Fool There Was" has made him famous on two continents, is a firm believer in backgrounds for bringing out the strong points of his characters. Mr. Powell gave a notable demonstration of this in "A Fool There Was" and is particularly endowed for his pet hobby of picking "locations" by his experience with Pathe-Freres abroad, where he staged scenes in almost every part of Europe.

Hobart Henley, who was with the Imp Company in New York for several years, arrived from the East this week and will play leads with one of the companies at the Universal's Pacific Coast studios, after playing in one picture which is to be produced by Lois Weber.

Harry Spingler, excellent portrayer of juvenile roles, and popular Screen Club member, will have the juvenile lead in support of William Farnum, who is slated to appear in a picturized version of "The Bondman," founded on Hall Caine's famous novel of the same name. The Fox Film Corporation, who stand sponser for the new feature, have selected Edgar Lewis to direct the photoplay.

Hettie Grey Baker and John Emerson were both speakers at the recent dinner of the Woman's Press Club. The formr spoke on playwriting for the silent drama, and the latter of the legitimate stage. Both these Mutual celebrities were well received.

Lillian Gish is back at the Reliance-Majestic studios on the coast from her vacation, which she spent at Massillon, Ohio. With her mother, Miss Gish visited her aunt. She celebrated her return to Los Angeles by plunging vigorously into work.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

C.; the Ruth Stark, with flag painted on her side, sails for England; Admiral Benson made head of new navel operations bureau; dike completing harbor protection that will let battleships reach Texas City, Tex.; coach rolls away from Hotel Biltmore to Gedney Farm hotel in compliance with wishes of Alfred G. Vanderbilt before he sailed on Lusitania; White Star liner Cymric sails for Liverpool from New York; jackies aboard battleship Texas waiting for review of fleet; President Wilson reviews high school cadets at Washington.

The Revenue Agent—ESSANAY—MAY 21.—Featuring G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton. The girl, on guard at the mountain defile, sees a strange man with all the accoutrements of a painter. She hails him and he explains he is a landscape artist. Tom, coming along a moment later, also challenges him and is reassured of the stranger's calling when the stranger paints his picture. As the days go by, the painter and the girl meet frequently, and Tom's attentions to the girl begin to be unwelcome. Tom is consumed with jealousy, but he likes the painter and he is a good loser. Then comes the denouement. The moonshiners learn that the painter is a revenue agent. Tom is about to kill him, but the girl buys his life at the price of her happiness. She tells Tom she will marry him if the spy goes free. They go to the minister's, where Tom gives up the girl for the revenue agent.

The Avenging Sea—BIOGRAPH—MAY 24.—Isabel Rea and Frank Newburg featured. The artist comes to the fishing village and there falls in love with the granddaughter of the old fisherman. The grandfather finds the girl having her portrait painted and takes her away. The old man explains nothing to his granddaughter, but tells his old neighbor the tragic story of his daughter who had loved the other artist and had given her life for his child. He swears he will kill him when he comes for his granddaughter's hand that night. But the artist did not come. Instead, a boatman brought him a note telling him that Elsie had eloped with her lover. They were beyond the old man's reach, but at dawn two bodies are cast upon the shore.

Sally Castleton, Southerner—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—MAY 24.—Miriam Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott featured in this civil war picture. Philip, a Confederate soldier and the lover of Genie Castleton, comes to her with a message warning her and her sister to leave the house and go to Richmond, when a detachment of Union soldiers led by Radcliffe comes upon the house. Philip hides in the stove and there hears Radcliffe telling one of his men of plans to get through the Confederate lines. Sally Castleton, Genie's sister, is attracted to Radcliffe and he is struck by the girl's beauty. Outside of Richmond Radcliffe is posing as a cotton broker, and there again meet Sally, who is a Confederate spy, and is ordered to accompany him to Richmond, and there aid in his capture. During the journey he declares his love for the girl. He secretes one copy of the plans in Genie's bag of love letters and the other he is forced to give up, after a hand-to-hand fight with Philip. Later he returns to the house, takes out the plans and gives them to a Union officer, and his duty is done. He then assures Sally that he is no longer a spy and there is nothing to prevent their marriage.

The Secret's Price—ESSANAY—MAY 24.—Featuring Lillian Drew and E. H. Calcert. Mrs. Atherton refuses the aid of Col. Stanhope, in order that she may take her son to the mountains for his health, as her husband has warned her against him. Heinrich Meyer learns that Mrs. Atherton has the plans of a great invention of her husband's, which he wants. He buys them from her. Stanhope hears of this and goes to Meyer and tells him that he is the inventor. He pays Meyer back the money and keeps the plans. Later Mrs. Atherton comes to make a bargain for the papers and he tells her all, and when Stanhope comes with the papers, she asks his forgiveness.

Rivals—(TWO REELS)—KALEM—MAY 24.—Anna Nilsson and Guy Coombs featured. Lee Trevor and Sutton, a brutal foreman of Dixon's lumber camp, are rivals for the hand of Dixon's daughter, Sally. War is declared and Lee is given a commission in the Federal army and Sutton joins the Confederate. A number of field pieces are held in reserve for the Union forces in a shed near Dixon's home. Realizing that the Confederates under Sutton are going to attack them and that they are weakening, Lee goes after the Union field pieces and loads them on a flat car. Sally, seeing her lover, hides on the car and goes to the scene of battle. They arrive just in time to defeat the Confederates, but Sally is captured by Sutton and held in an old shed, but finally rescued by Trevor.

Light o' Love—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—MAY 24.—Beth Slade, belle of the little fishing village, is loved by the two brothers, Joe and Walt Thanlee. She finally becomes engaged to Joe, who shortly afterward sails away, as the mate on a freighter. Joe becomes ensnared in the city by two smugglers. Long months pass by and no news is heard from him, and his father keeps a lamp always burning in the window, so that he may find his way home. Finally Joe comes home and there asks his father for money, in order to cross the border. Beth has promised Walt she will marry him when the light goes out, and the night that Joe comes home she sees his father blow out the light and realizes that Joe is either dead or has forever gone out of her life.

Mr. Jarr Visits His Home Town—VITAGRAPH—MAY 24—The Jarrs decide to visit Bunksburg. After a week their son, Willie, runs around and wins all the country boys' jack knives by his superior city wisdom. Mr. Jarr hears of a masquerade ball to be held in the village fire company's building. He tells his wife he must return to the city, and goes to the ball disguised as a bear. It happens that an old Italian comes to town with a tame bear, which gets away from him, and the men and boys organize a hunting party, and, spying poor Jarr, make life hot for him. The next morning Willie and the other boys see Jarr and practice on him with their bean shooters. He desperately drops to the ground, where his disguise falls off and he angrily threatens Willie with a walloping if he tells his mother.

Captain Fracasse—(Two Reels)—Biograph—May 25.—An all-star cast, including Alan Hale, Kate Bruce, Vola Smith and Charles Mailes. The Baron de Sigognac is attracted to a troupe of strolling players and is particularly drawn to Madame Leonarde, the beloved duenna of the troupe, and Isabelle, a beautiful girl, and he is persuaded to join them. He assumes the name of Captain Fracasse. That night the Duke de Vallombreuse stops at the same inn at which the players are stopping and falls in love with Isabelle. He makes a wager that he will kiss her before the night is over. He is surprised by the sudden arrival of his father, and after the performance of the players that night, is about to kiss Isabelle when he is seized in the arms of Captain Fracasse and hurled away. The duke's father is recognized by Madame Leonarde, who tells him that Isabelle is his own daughter, left in her care by a poor, dying actress. Thus Isabelle is given her birthright and is raised from vagabondage to the level of the noblesse.

All Cooked Up—Edison—May 25.—William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman figure prominently in this comedy as two lazy cooks who, on being discharged, join a band of anarchists and are commissioned to blow up the restaurant of their former employer. Three of the conspirators follow to see that they carry out their work. The cooks do not like the looks of the bomb, and pass it on. After passing in and out of a score of hands, the bomb explodes beneath the conspirators and blows them into jail. C. R. C.

Above the Abyss—(Two Reels)—May 25.—An all-star cast, including Richard Travers, Mayme Gehrue and Ruth Stonehouse. Leah, the wife of Jermyn Garston, a struggling author, becomes dissatisfied with life and is swallowed in the social whirlpool. Matthew Hendricks steps in at the crucial moment and makes love to her. Leah elopes with Hendricks and later he casts her off. Jermyn meets Everild, a sweet, unspoiled child, but does not declare his love, on account of his marriage vows. Later Hendricks also meets the girl and plans for another elopement are made, but Leah hears of this and goes to the meeting place set and there kills Hendricks and shoots herself. Jermyn then tells Everild of his love.

"Ham," the Detective—Kalem—May 25.—Ham and Bud are put to work on a "Black Hand" case. The two Sherlocks happen to pass by the shack wherein the desperadoes prepare the bombs, and have decided to test the bombs' strength, so throw one out of the window, just as Ham and Bud pass. Bud is hurled into the next county and Ham into the desperadoes' den, where he is promptly bound. Bud returns and, disguised as a bandit, enters the hut and frees Ham. They both go to the scene where the bomb is to be thrown, and there, after exciting adventures, are themselves arrested.

Matilda's Legacy—Lubin—May 25.—Seth Perkins' niece discovers a letter in which there is information that Matilda Honeysuckle, the unpopular old maid of the village, is heiress to a large fortune. She tells all of the widowers and bachelors about this, and soon the old maid is besieged by many lovers. Seth is really in love with her, so he hustles over to the telegraph station and there gets the operator to write a false telegram saying that Matilda's legacy was all a mistake. When the men hear of this they all leave the old maid, and Seth is left alone with her and succeeds in persuading her that he is her only true lover.

Two Brothers and a Girl—Selig—May 25.—Constance is saved from death by Jack. He and his brother, Bob, both fall in love with the girl, and Jack wins her admiration. Constance really loves Bob, and when Jack makes this discovery, he writes Constance a letter, in which he tells her her heart is his brother's, yet she accepted him out of gratitude, so he is going away to leave them to their happiness.

The Esterbrook Case—Vitagraph—May 25.—With an all-star cast. Grace Van Austin, who is engaged to Paul Strugess, amuses herself by flirting with Howard Esterbrook, a guest of the Van Austins'. Paul's jealousy is aroused and the two men quarrel. That night Stephen, a servant, sees Paul trying to enter Esterbrook's room with a revolver in his hand. Fearing for Esterbrook's safety, Stephen enters his room and sees a hand extend through the window curtain, stab Esterbrook and mysteriously disappear. Paul is arrested on circumstantial evidence. Six months later, Ann, "the woman of mystery," is taken in a raid during which she is shot by Renway, a criminal, while trying to aid the police. Ann tells the district attorney that she killed Esterbrook, and why. In the course of her story she is revealed as Paul's mother, and at the completion of her narrative she dies in the arms of her son.

The Man Who Could Not Sleep—Edison—May 26.—There is a drama with lots of appeal and plenty of unique situations. Marc MacDermott featured. Judge Jeffer sentences a woman to ten days for sleeping on a bench in the park. Her abusive remarks cause him to raise the sentence to thirty days. Before being dragged off to her cell, she tells him that she hopes he can never sleep again. At first the judge merely sneers at her imprecation, but later the woman's wild eyes and evil words begin to worry him. Three days and nights pass without his sleeping. The next woman brought before him for sleeping in the park, the judge frees. Furthermore, he personally sees that she is placed in comfortable surroundings until she can obtain employment. He also orders that the case of the woman whom he first sentenced be investigated. Returning from this charitable work, Judge Jeffre readily falls asleep. C. R. C.

Dreamy Dud—Essanay—May 26.—Dug and Wag, his dog, while out on a lark, make "A Visit to the Zoo." But the monkey beats them both up, the elephant gets peeved when Wag bites his tail and throws Wag into the lagoon and squirts water all over Dud. And the kangaroo chases them both clear out of the picture, just as Dud's mother calls him for the forty-eleventh time. Another day in "An Alley Romance" Wag steals a hat and cane. He meets Miss Cat in an alley and flirts with her. Just as the two are spooning on a log, along comes Mr. Cat and chases Wag. Dud tries to save him and runs after them. He trees Mr. Cat and shakes the tree, whereupon Mr. Cat descends on his head and is administering a beating when Dud wakes up to find his mother pulling his hair.

The Figure in Black—(Two Reels)—Kalem—May 26.—All-star cast. A thief enters the room of Mrs. Cluett, in the Alhambra hotel, and takes her gems. The next morning Blake, the house detective, is summoned and finds a black robe, similar to that worn by the thief, in the maid's room. Mrs. Cluett refuses to have the girl arrested and announces that the gems that were stolen were paste. Although Blake wants to handle the case alone, Mrs. Cluett hires Bertha, a clever detective, and John Talcott, her assistant. Again the black-robed intruder appears and is caught in a trap set by Bertha. The thief turns out to be the house detective.

Her Other Self—(Two Parts)—Lubin—May 26.—Anna Anson has a dual personality. As Anna Anson she is a sweet, innocent girl, but as Ruby Queen she is the incarnation of wickedness. Her father uses his influence over her to make her come to his gambling joint, and there she helps him out. Dr. Reed, a young doctor in the town, is in love with her, but she will not marry him, as she realizes her condition. One night when he father has used his influence to bring her to him, she leaves the doctor and he follows her. He installs a dictograph and through that hears of the influence that her father has over her. Later the joint is raided and the girl is shot. He succeeds in rescuing her and tells her that she must use her strength to overcome her father's bad influence. Her father tries to wield his influence over her, but she proves too strong for him, and he falls over dead. Her evil self is gone.

Mother's Birthday—Selig—May 26.—Eugenie Ford, Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley featured. Mrs. Wilson writes her children in the city to come and take dinner with her on her birthday. John Wilson's wife has other arrangements, so she buys his mother a present and writes and tells her that they will be unable to be there for her birthday. Mildred Wilson, a young artist, is persuaded not to go, as the artists' ball is to come off that same night, so she also writes that she will be unable to be home. Afterward the two are conscience-stricken and both resolve to go home for their mother's birthday.

The Story of a Glove—Vitagraph—May 26.—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew featured. Huggins announces to his wife that he is going to the annual club dinner, and in order that he will think of her, she puts one of her own gloves in his pocket. At 11 o'clock his wife asks herself if Henry has found the glove yet. Evidently he has not, or he is at that moment trying to keep time to a rousing college song. In his befuddled condition he puts his hand in his pocket and can't imagine where the glove came from. Mrs. Huggins looks at him and he suddenly starts in telling her how he came in possession of the glove. After he has finished, Mrs. Huggins brings out the other glove. Huggins is flabbergasted and says that he is going to stick to his story.

Gratitude—Biograph—May 27—Laughing Jim, a square gambler, ridicules Mahoney's play and the bad man, in revenge, arouses public opinion against him. Shakespeare George, leader of public opinion, urges Jim to cut out gambling, and he promises he will play no more in that camp. During the night Shakespeare George's sacks of gold are stolen, and near the cabin are tracks of toothpick shoes, the kind which Laughing Jim wore. Going in search of him, Shakespeare George finds Laughing Jim dying, and beside him the dead body of Phil Mahoney. Before he expires, however, Laughing Jim tells of how he missed his shoes and saw Mahoney making away from the gold shack. He saved the gold after a hot fight with Mahoney. Shakespeare George was left pondering on the true meaning of gratitude.

A Bunch of Matches—Essanay—May 27.—Western comedy. Daddy brings his four beautiful daughters to town, where they are besieged with suitors. He leaves them, to go into the store, and there he meets the town "Merry Widow." In the meantime his daughters and their suitors make the best of their opportunities and elope. Daddy proposes to the widow and they go to the justice of the peace to be married, but arrived here, the widow refuses Daddy and says she will marry the justice, who straightway faints, and she remains a widow.

On Bitter Creek—(Three Parts)—Lubin—May 27.—There is feud existing between the Yancys and the Kirbys. Horace Kirby one day comes upon his sister and Clay Yancy on the bridge between the two houses, and the girl, fearing there will be a quarrel, refuses to give Clay a kiss as toll to cross the bridge. Clay is angered and vows that no Kirby woman will ever cross the bridge. Twenty years later, Clay's niece and Kirby's son fall in love with each other and are married. They receive word that Clay has been wounded, so decide to go back, but keep their marriage a secret. The supreme court decides that the toll gate is illegal and Clay Yancy decides to blow it up. From the wreck of the old bridge an old iron box is found, and upon being opened by Clay, is found to contain a letter written to him twenty years before, by Carolina. They are reconciled to each other and thereafter the feud is forgotten.

Once Is Enough—Mina—May 27.—At his wedding feast Harry gets himself into trouble. His bride flirts outrageously with the minister, and Harry shows his objections by ejecting the preacher via a nearby window. Harry's wife is angered and locks herself in her room. The situation embitters Harry, so he drowns his sorrow in the flowing bowl. Thieves visit Harry's home and at the point of a revolver compel him to carry away his own belongings. Harry is arrested and explains that he is the master of the house, and to substantiate his claim, a policeman is dispatched to bring his wife. She comes attired in a nightdress and seated on the handle bars of a bicycle, and there falls into the arms of her persecuted spouse.

The Quarry—(Three Reels)—Selig—May 27.—Jim Montgomery is imprisoned for a murder of which he is innocent, and after some time spent in jail, he manages to escape, through the aid of Bill Hawkins, his cellmate. Years afterward he is a successful manager of a large factory and is hounded by the detective who had caused his arrest and is on the point of being again imprisoned and taken from his mother and the girl he loves, when Bill Hawkins, who has been paroled, brings to the scene the real murderer. For further review, see page 837, issue of May 22. J. C. G.

Hilda of the Slums—Vitagraph—May 27.—Natalie De Lontan and George Stanley featured. Hilda lives in a home destitute of love, and the only men she meets are at Big Ben's cabaret, where she is employed as a singer and dancer. Hilda's father, a professional beggar, becomes an enemy of Big Ben's after he has been abused by the latter, and shortly afterward Big Ben's gang get wind of a wealthy young rancher's presence in town and they plan to rob him. The cripple finds a note written by Big Ben and starts for the police station. Joe Manning, the young rancher, strolls into Big Ben's place and Ben goes to Hilda and coerces her into agreeing to help them get the rancher's money. Hilda attracts Joe's attention and he tells her that this is no place for her. When the gang pounce on Joe, Hilda cleverly trips one of the crooks and she and the rancher make their escape. They are nearly cornered by the gang, but the police brought by the cripple arrive just in time, and Hilda knows she has found love at last.

The Candidate's Past—Biograph—May 28.—Featuring Charles Perley and Augusta Anderson. The candidate chosen for mayor is not only honest and capable, but well known for his spotless political record. The opposing party's ring boss demands that his sister, a beautiful and accomplished girl, take a position in the candidate's office. The girl finally consents to take advantage of the candidate's advertisement for a private secretary. She discovers a letter written by a woman which apparently indicates a liaison. She takes the letter to her brother and he immediately summons his men, but they reckon without the girl. She finds out that the woman who comes accompanied by a child had been saved by the candidate, and the girl, realizing the harm she has done, hurries home and abstracts the letter from her brother's hiding place and puts a blank one in its place. The candidate is elected mayor, and the interest he has taken in his secretary ripens into love and they are married on the evening of his election.

According to Their Lights—Edison—(Two Reels)—May 28.—A drama of the Cumberland mountains. Bob Mason, engaged in the purchase of some coal lands, is mistaken for a revenue officer by his rival in love, and is marked to die. Meg, a mountain girl who adores Bob, learns of the plot to kill him. She follows and overtakes him just as Eric, her lover, raises his rifle to fire. As Meg, mortally wounded, sinks to the ground, Colonel Snowden's gun cracks, and Eric pitches forward, dead. With her last words, Meg blesses the coming marriage between Bob and Grace Snowden. Pat O'Malley, Margaret Prussing, Bessie Learn and Yale Benner comprise the cast.

The Bachelor's Burglar—Essanay—May 28.—The girl gets a job on the local newspaper and is sent out to get the story of one of the escapades of a rich bachelor. While she is on her way she determines to break into the house, because she is sure the bachelor will refuse her an interview. She breaks into the house and is blithely gathering the details of her story when the bachelor surprises her and calls the police. Just as the police arrive, the bachelor puts on a house coat and an old cap. He looks very much like a burglar. The girl, seeing this, holds him at the point of the gun, hands him over to the police and goes back to the office with her story. G. M. Anderson featured.

Prejudice—(Three Reels)—Kalem—May 28—Tom Moore and Marguerite Courtot featured. The Rev. Gregory Lowell scandalizes the officials of the village church, and amongst others who register protests against him, is Deacon Pettybone, whose daughter, Malvine, is loved by Byron, the village doctor. The church officials are horrified by the presence in their church of the village riffraff, and the fact that the minister is holding dances in the church, rather than have the young people dancing in dance halls. Lowell induces the saloonkeepers to close their saloons on Sunday, and finally wins the people over to him when one day he finds a mob stoning a leper, who has been found in a freight car, and rescues the victim.

Nobody Would Believe—Lubin—May 28.—The editor of the Star, after ridiculing Roger Latham, a young reformer, sends Violet out to investigate the underworld and write it up. Violet there meets Latham, who is working under an assumed name, but owing to his polished manners in this rough crowd, the girl distrusts his motives in warning her and is strangely drawn to Hanlon, a notorious man of the underworld, who feels for her the first decent emotion he has ever had in his heart. Violet is captured by a gang of crooks, and after a battle on the wharf, in which Hanlon is killed in protecting Latham and Violet, she and Latham escape. She hands in her story, but the editor tells her that he wants a real story and will not accept hers. Latham comes to her and discloses his identity, and she finds happiness in the love awakening between them.

The Starring of Flora Finchurch—Vitagraph—May 28.—Featuring Flora Finch and Jay Dwiggins. Flora Finchurch is selected by the Mothers' Charitable Organization to give her famous recital, "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight." A reporter is sent to write up this entertainment and gives Flora's recitation an awful roasting, but the editor changes it to a highly commendatory writeup, in the name of sweet charity. Flora afterwards receives a handsome legacy and, remembering the splendid writeup in the local paper, at once advertises for a theatrical director to manage her planned theatrical venture. Senor Bird, a ham actor, applies and gets the position. At the first town they show, Flora's acting is so poor that the actors are hooted off the stage, and some time later the show goes broke. Hirum is the only one in town to feel sorry for her, and Flora wends her way back to the village and Hirum.

Truth Stranger Than Fiction—Biograph—May 29—Charles West, Helen Bray and Claire McDowell featured. The broker has appropriated funds of the firm and dreads his partner's discovery of the fact. He is in the act of placing a pistol to his head when a message comes that oil has been discovered in the vicinity of his land and that the loan which he requested will now be made. He has left a letter telling his partner of his disgrace and, going back to the office he is attacked by two robbers, who leave him wounded and snatch the letter. A novelist overhears the two crooks blackmailing his friend on the strength of the incriminating letter. He rushes to their den, gets the letter and delivers it to his future father-in-law.

The Dumb Wooing—Edison—May 29.—Maxine Brown is here seen as the girl wooed by two stuttering but ambitious Romeos. She loses patience with the slow pair, and is won by a third suitor who knows that a girl, to be won, must at some time be asked, not only courted.

Vengeance—(Three Reels)—Essanay—May 29.—Featuring Richard C. Travers, Edna Mayo and Lillian Drew. Allen Haddock is summoned home from college, on account of the suicide of his father, who leaves him a note in which he tells him that the cause of his taking his life was fear of exposure from Martin Scardon, a corrupt political boss, because of a serious blunder he had made years before. Allen determines to be revenged, and so gets a position as Scardon's private secretary. He is in love with Lois Ware, whose father is opposed to Scardon and is trying to pass an honest bill through the senate. In order to discredit Senator Ware, Scardon hires an adventuress, who gets Lois and Haddon to come to her apartment. His plot is almost a sure success, when the adventuress confesses her part and Haddock confronts him with the evidence he has against him. Scardon ends his life and the sweethearts are reunited.

Out for a Stroll—Lubin—May 29.—"Happy Bill" starts out for a stroll and flirts with all the girls he sees, but with no success. He flirts with a wrestler's sweetheart, but his happiness is not long lived, as the wrestler comes along and

Bill is cut out. He goes that night to the theater where the wrestler is appearing, and when an offer of $500 for the one who can stay with the wrestler is offered, Bill sees a way for revenge, and wins the $500 when he pins Terrible Mike, the wrestler, to the mat.

A Railroader's Bravery—(An Episode of the "Hazards of Helen," Railroad Series)—Kalem—May 29.—Henry, the relief operator, goes to the city and there falls in with a gang of wire tappers. Three of the tappers go to wire 35, accompanied by Henry, to tap the wires and there make a prisoner of the lineman. Helen learns of this and severs the wire being tapped. The tappers chase Helen, who gets aboard a freight train and then uncouples the engine and turns and pursues the tappers, who are in a gasoline speeder. Helen rescues Henry, and Noyes, who headed the gang, is captured and placed under arrest. Henry promises to mend his ways.

Jane Was Worth It—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—May 29.—Featuring Edith Storey and Hughie Mack. Jane, fresh from the country, but a most excellent cook, proves satisfactory to Hughie, an eccentric bachelor, and his pet cat. She becomes jealous of his cat, however, and says that it is a nuisance, and as he thinks the cat more valuable than the cook, discharges Jane. He tries in vain to get another cook, but cannot succeed. Jane, meanwhile, has taken a position with the Lanes, where she learns to take care of her pesonal charms, and her change causes great wonderment among the Lane family. She becomes too obstreperous, however, and is discharged. Hughie meets her and suggests that they visit the church and be made man and wife, and he afterwards thinks Jane well worth all the other cooks in Christendom.

In the Amazon Jungle—Selig—May 29.—Silva, a young Spaniard, is in love with Dolores, the daughter of Arevalo. Linares is also in love with the girl, and before the two young men leave on a rubber expedition, Linares tells Arevalo that he wants his daughter's hand in marriage, and Arevalo consents, as Linares is his boss. In the midst of the jungle Silva is stricken with fever and is deserted by Linares. Later Linares is attacked by a jaguar, and Silva, who has recovered, comes to his aid and ministers to him. The past is buried and the two men shake hands.

Mutual Program

The Refugee—Thanhouser—May 21.—Mrs. Hollingsworth, a wealthy widow, passenger on a ship coming from Holland, drops a candle on the floor of her stateroom. Before she can extinguish it a hand reaches out from under the berth and snuffs out the flame. Terrified, she drops a note out of the porthole asking for aid. A German and a Frenchman find it. They agree to join against the common enemy and enter the widow's stateroom. The "burglar" is hauled out from under the bed. It is an eight-year-old boy refugee from Belgium. Both the German and the Frenchman want to take him under their protection, but the American woman convinces them that it is her place to care for the boy, so the little refugee finds a home with Mrs. Hollingsworth. Leland Benham featured.

Daughter of Kings—Thanhouser—May 23.—J. Courtleigh Brice, wealthy young American lives abroad. On his return to settle some business connected with his estate, he announces to the reporters that he could not think of marrying anyone but a woman of title and noble blood. Reading this statement, a girl from his home town conceives the plan of changing names with the princess with whom she is visiting and passing herself off to the American as one of the nobility. When the young man calls upon her she receives his attentions and encourages him up to the point of proposing. Then she reveals her true identity to him. To his great discomfiture, the American finds that the princess and the community think it a great joke.

In the Purple Hills—(Two Reels)—American—May 24.—A real old-time Western melodrama in which Joseph Galbraith, a new leading man, makes his debut in the role of Sheriff Crosby. Crosby sends "Red" Cantwell, an outlaw, to the penitentiary and the latter swears vengeance. Years later, after the sheriff has married Katy Ogle, Cantwell

The Cliff Girl—RELIANCE—MAY 24.—Walter Grant, a young geologist, is beloved by Margot, a wild girl of the cliffs, and is engaged to Alice Hazen, a society girl. The betrothal is the work of matchmaking parents, as Grant, in his heart, never has loved any woman. Margot's father dies and she, with childlike devotion, attaches herself to Grant. They lead an idyllic life. She cooks his meals, and he teaches her to read and write. Alice Hazen and her father and brother, Tom, unexpectedly visit his camp and find Margot there. Margot overhears Grant's explanation that she is nothing to him, and she returns heartbroken to her father's cabin. Tom Hazen follows her. While showing Alice and her father about the cliffs, Grant suddenly decides to seek Margot. He arrives at her cabin just in time to save her from Tom Hazen's repulsive advances. Then Grant realizes that he loves the cliff girl.

The Stay at Homes—BEAUTY—MAY 25.—Arthur Baldwin is such a pipe fiend and bookworm that he keeps his parents and friends in much distress. Next door lives Helen Howard, also a bookworm and rather careless of her personal appearance.

By chance the two meet, Helen suspecting Arthur to be a burglar when she sees him climbing through the window of his own home, and after explanations have occurred and the two discover a common liking for books, both change their habits for the better, the picture ending with their engagement. Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber featured. N.G.C.

A Rightful Theft—MAJESTIC—MAY 25.—Widow Brown, about to be dispossessed by Obadiah Grabb, who holds a mortgage on her cottage, drops an old penny found by her son upon the collection plate in church. Deacon Strout recognizes it as being of great value, and at the risk of being suspended from the board of trustees, takes it off and sends it to a museum in the city. The premium pays off the widow's mortgage and helps to liquidate the church debt.

Fairy Fern Seed—(TWO REELS)—THANHOUSER—MAY 25.—Susanna Cross, envious of her wealthy chum, Rosalie Wood, encourages her to elope with James Porter. Unable to forgive her daughter, Mrs. Wood lavishes everything upon the unscrupulous Susanna. Rosalie's husband is poor and their struggle is a bitter one. Rosalie dies and when the twin daughters, Marion and Madeline, are twelve years of age, Porter, too, passes away. Dreading she placed fern seed in her shoes to being sent to an institution, the girls decide to do as the fairy princess did—enable her to send her spirit self with a message to her dear prince. They do the same to enable them to see their grandmother and win her love and protection. The ending is beautiful and touching.

The Reprisal—AMERICAN—MAY 26.—A strong political melodrama featuring Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood. Judge Green, a politician, endeavors to influence the policy of the city's leading newspaper edited by Paul Giles, who is engaged to Edna Green, the judge's daughter. Finding the editor deaf to all entreaties, the judge and his political ring seek to compromise the editor by sending a servant girl to his home and then surprising the two together. Edna learns of the plan, changes places with the servant, being heavily veiled, and foils the plot by disclosing her real identity at the critical moment, much to her father's chagrin and Paul's joy. N. G. C.

Shorty's Troubled Sleep—(TWO REELS)—BRONCHO—MAY 26.—Jack Hamilton featured as Shorty. Bill Wright, fearing that Sancho, the bandit chief, will hold up the treasure stage, reluctantly consents to Betty's taking the gold to town in a prairie schooner. Shorty is thrown out of a saloon for quarreling with a pool shark. He climbs into Betty's prairie schooner, which is tethered beside his own, and falls asleep, not learning of his mistake until he is awakened by the wagon's jolting some ways out of town. In the meantime, Sancho has held up the stage and, not finding the gold, has decided that Betty must have it. While firing at the pursuing bandits Shorty is thrown out of the wagon. He takes refuge behind some rocks and holds the entire band at bay. Betty reaches the village safely and the cowboys gallop to Shorty's rescue.

The Deadly Focus—RELIANCE—MAY 26.—Sid Burns, a blacksmith and gunsmith, uses his business as a cover for counterfeiting. His apprentice, Joe Blake, learns of Burns' true occupation and in doing so automatically marks himself for death. Joe narrowly escapes death from a gun in his vise, fired by the sun's rays focusing on its powder pan, Burns himself eventually being the victim of his nefarious scheme. Diana, a pretty Southern girl who has become interested in Joe because of a service which he has done her, is partly to thank for the young gunsmith's escape.

Hostage of the North—(TWO REELS)—DOMINO—MAY 27.—The Strolling Players' Company is stranded in Dawson City and Andrews, the leading man, and Edna, his wife, are almost penniless. In the gold country they come upon the shack of Dan Shaw, an old miner, who shows them a bag of nuggets which for many years he has been gathering to buy a home in California. Andrews and Edna are encouraged by this and start out anew on their quest. Andrews dies. Edna becomes a dance hall girl, but is soon discharged for resenting the patrons' advances. Again she meets Dan Shaw. That night she steals his bag of nuggets, but her conscience forces her to return it. Dan decides to give up his dreams of a home in California, and he places his bag of nuggets on Edna's doorstep with a note purporting to come from an old friend of her husband's. Edna takes her child and joyfully returns to her home in the East. Dan Shaw is left alone to die in the gold country. Walter Edwards, Leona Hutton and Howard Hickman featured.

The Trail of the Upper Yukon—(TWO REELS)—REX—MAY 27.—Harrison Forbes, a lawyer still fresh from college, runs down his health by overtasking himself, and is compelled to give up his practice and seek strength and vitality in the cold, frozen, merciless district about the Upper Yukon. The scene shifts to Dismal Bar in the far North. Here Marcia, the fiery-passioned keeper of the faro gallery, is seen repulsing Hercules Bennet, card sharp and gunman. Garrick, called "the terror of the North" because of his utter fearlessness, enters, learns of Bennet's proposal and threat, and is prevented from breaking him with his hands only by the other's quickness in drawing his gun. The manner in which these two threads are brought together and interwoven furnishes a thrilling, red-blooded story that cannot fail to appeal. Dorothy Phillips, Ben Wilson and J. W. Girard featured.

Her Easter Hat—(TWO REELS)—KAY-BEE—MAY 28.—Bill Kane, a rough fisherman, begrudges his daughter, Molly, the pretty clothes which she covets. When Marie, the village belle, blossoms out in an attractive new frock and stylish hat, Molly's sweetheart, Jim, deserts her for the other girl. The little fishermaid is heartbroken. In desperation she persuades the milliner to allow her to take a hat and pay for it on the installment plan. Her father finds it and returns it. That night a gang of toughs enter the house to rob a peddler whom Kane has given lodging for the night. Molly hears them and is instrumental in having them arrested. Her father then buys back the hat and the peddler gives her some ribbons and cloth for a dress. Her cup of happiness is complete when Jim calls to beg forgiveness for deserting her for the town belle.

Little Dick's First Case—MAJESTIC—MAY 28.—Little Dick is anxious to be a detective like his father. The latter gives him a badge and promises to make a real sleuth out of him. The next day

Dick overhears his father called on an Italian murder mystery case. While he is playing in the street with the boys he sees a dark-browed foreigner dash out of a house, race to a nearby drug store, and return with a suspicious-looking bottle. Dick notifies the police. They seize the Italian and his companions, and then learn that their excitement is due to the recent arrival of a baby in the Parisi family.

The Man of It—(TWO REELS)—RELIANCE—MAY 29.—An austere mountaineer drives from home his wife, whom he suspects of being unfaithful to him. Mary, their younger daughter, finds a miniature of her mother and demands to know her history, but her father refuses to tell her anything. When he opposes Mary's marriage to a cattle dealer the couple elope. Finding him brutal, she leaves him and stays with Mrs. Blood. There she meets a young surveyor, Tom Hood. They become married. Tom goes on a surveying job in the region in which his wife was raised, meets Nan, Mary's sister, and betrays her. When Nan learns his identity, she sacrifices herself for her sister's happiness. Mary, her husband, and their new-born child are reunited. Mrs. Blood turns out to be Mary's mother.

Oh, Baby! — Royal — May 29.— Papa takes baby out for a ride in his little wagon. Without his knowing it, baby falls out. When he rushes back to look for the child, a colored woman appropriates the wagon for her own black infant. Father sees the wagon out in front of a store and hurries home with it. On seeing the negro child in her baby's wagon, the wife faints. The colored mammy and a girl who has found and recognized Brown's child arrive in time to revive and pacify her.

Gasoline Gus—Komic—May 30.—Mr. Fizz runs a soda fountain. His daughter, Fay, is engaged to Gus, one of the clerks. Will Steele, the other clerk, is jealous of Gus and succeeds in laying upon him the blame for thefts from the cash register. Discharged, Gus takes a longing for the jitney bus business. A crook who has stolen Fizz's car sells it to Gus at a low figure. One afternoon Steele and Fay decide to take a bus ride. Not recognizing the goggled driver, they board Gus' car. Angered at the sight of Fay with Steele, Gus starts to ride them to eternity. The car lands in a canal. Fay's escort betrays his cowardice by leaving her to drown. Gus rescues Fay. Steele is arrested for stealing Mr. Fizz's automobile.

Out of Bondage—(Two Reels)—Majestic—May 30.—Dorothy Gish, Walter Long and Fred Turner featured. Jim McRae, a crook, forces his daughter, Mary, to marry his pal, Clancy. Later the crooks quarrel and McRae betrays his pal to the police. Mary and her father go West and squat in a shack on the edge of an orange grove, where McRae makes a living by stealing fruit. Hildreth, the owner of the grove, discovers McRae stealing and orders him and the girl off of the place. Henry Hildreth, the son, has met Mary and fallen in love with her, but, being married, she does not encourage him. Meanwhile Clancy has made his escape and followed McRae West. He and McRae come together in the house. Mary, attempting to put out the light, is shot. The Hildreths hear the shots and find both of the crooks dead. Henry lifts up Mary and a wallet falls from her waist. It has prevented the bullet from entering her body. She tells Henry the story of her past and he wins her promise to begin life over again with him.

The Angel in the Mask—Thanhouser—May 30.—A masked girl demonstrating fountain pens in a New York store window becomes known as "The Angel in the Mask." Bob Singleton, a country boy out of work, chances to pass the window. The girl holds up a card on which is written a few words of encouragement. At the boarding house where the boy is staying a robbery and murder are committed. Incriminating evidence is found in his room and he is sent to prison. A few days later the landlady and Dick Stokes stop before the window. They enter the store and are waited upon by the masked girl. She writes a card to each of them—to the woman, "Thou shalt not steal," and to the man, "Thou shalt not kill." Then she reveals herself as Mary Berthalon, one of the landlady's tenants. Already the police are at the door. On the landlady's finger Mary has recognized a ring which the murdered woman once had shown her. The guilty pair confess. Singleton is freed and marries Mary.

Uncle's New Blazer—Imp—May 10.—Billie, a lazy, wealthy fellow, is in love with Violet. His uncle decides to give him a chance to make good, and puts him studying law under him. Aunt buys uncle a tennis blazer, and insists on his wearing it to the office. Uncle complies, though under protest. Billy feels an inclination to loaf coming on him, and he sneaks out, putting on uncle's blazer by mistake. He meets Violet on the street. A scandal monger sees them embrace, and, thinking that it is uncle that is wearing the blazer, she hastens to inform aunt of her husband's conduct. Aunt decides to have Billie come between her husband and the girl, and offers him $500 if he will find a sweetheart, suggesting the girl who was seen with uncle. Billie sees the humorous side of the affair and grasps the chance to earn $500. It serves as a wedding gift for himself and Violet.

Destiny's Trump Card—Imp—May 17.—Bill Avery is estranged from Violet, his wife, on account of his thievery. Bill breaks his arm one day and is prevented from taking part in a proposed robbery. His pals perform the job and are caught by the butler and one receives an injured arm as a result. Bill is mistaken for the thief, the police search the house and Violet's possessions and find, instead of the looted silver, a set of baby clothes. Bill is released, and for the sake of Violet and his prospective child, determines to "go straight."

W. N. SELIG knows a great deal about advertising.

Mr. Selig says:—

"If there is one enterprise on earth that a 'quitter' should leave severely alone, it is advertising. To make a success of advertising one must be prepared to stick like a barnacle on a boat's bottom. He should know before he begins it that he must spend money—lots of it. Somebody must tell him also that he cannot hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditure early in the game. Advertising doesn't jerk, it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady. It increases day by day and year by year, until it exerts an irresistible power."

Are you prepared to stick?

Are you concentrating in one territory and letting the tremendous Central and Western States go without any publicity?

Fifty-Fifty—(Second Episode of "The Life of David Briggs" Series)—Imp—May 24.—David Briggs is put behind the soda counter and is guyed by his assistant, Jenny. One day Miss Astorocks, a wealthy society girl, is robbed while drinking a glass of soda. David recovers the lost articles and hires a taxi to take them to the girl. When he arrives he is mistaken for a suitor, which she has instructed the butler to throw out, and is ejected from the door. He starts to walk home and passes the store. He decides to sleep there all night, so tells the night watchman and goes in. He sees a window with a bed all made up, pulls down the window curtain and goes to sleep. The next morning Miss Astorocks is surprised to see a large crowd before the department store window, and upon investigating, sees David asleep. The window dresser has pulled up the curtain. David is awakened, and although the manager threatens to discharge him, he keeps his position, as Miss Astorocks pleads for him.

Hiram's Inheritance—Joker—May 24.—Hiram and Zeke love Arabella. The girl marries Hiram after hearing he is to receive an inheritance. Tillie, a maid of all work, is in love with Zeke, but he refuses to have anything to do with her, as he still loves Arabella. One day Hi sees his bride embracing Zeke and so decides to scare her into believing that he has sought death in the river. Arabella finds his coat and hat on the river bank and, thinking him dead, goes to the barn to weep. There Hi is in hiding and hears Zeke come in as Arabella is being handed the money from Hi's legacy, and tell her to forget Hi and elope with him. Hi leaps down from the loft and his wife is overjoyed to see him. Zeke takes Tillie to the parson's and they are married.

A Witch of Salem Town—(Two Reels)—Victor—May 24.—Mary Fuller and Matt Moore featured. Goody Martin's ward, Desire, is distrusted by the stern Puritans of old Salem. Goody Martin dies, leaving her herb-lore secrets to the girl, who practices them. The old governor meets her and attempts to kiss her. She slaps him, and he never forgets. Later the fear of witchery sweeps through the colonies. Desire's hut is burned and she is pursued and stoned until saved by Margaret Malden. Margaret takes her into her home, where she becomes a serving maid. Desire realizes that Margaret's fiance, John, is in love with her. To save her friend from sorrow, she returns to the woods. It is forbidden for any woman to practice what is known as black magic. Although knowing this, Desire does not hesitate to visit Margaret on learning of her illness. She knows the herb that will bring back her health, and, despite all protest, she administers to the girl. Margaret recovers, but Desire is arrested and burned at the stake as a witch.

Shattered Memories—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—May 25.—Jasper Wells and Jane Marsh say their farewell as Jasper leaves to join the Federal ranks. He has a fight with a Confederate spy, who bests him, and while Jasper is unconscious robs him of his uniform, leaving his own in its place. Jasper's memory is gone and his company, finding him, believes him to be a traitor. Before the hour for his death approaches a battle is fought and Jasper taken away by the Confederates. Years afterward he sees the Federal parade and the flag awakens his enthusiasm. He follows it into the town in which he had left Jane and finds her an old woman, still waiting for him. The sight of her restores his memory and after the long wait the lovers are reunited.

When Her Idol Fell—Nestor—May 25.—Slingarlic, the famous violinist, is invited to the Newlyweds to a reception. Mr. Newlywed and other husbands are jealous of their wives, and so bribe the butler to give them the Italian's violin the night he comes, and smear it with axle grease. The men ask the violinist to play and he brings out his violin, but, to the delight of the men and the chagrin of Mrs. Newlywed and the rest of the ladies, he cannot bring forth a note. Slingarlic is hurried out of the house and the next morning Mrs. Newlywed reads of the arrival in New York of his wife and seventeen children.

Trickery—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—May 26.—Edward and Doris are to be married and inherit the fortune of Edward's father, who is very old. The family doctor knows of this plan. He loves Doris himself, but on account of his relations with an adventuress keeps silent. Edward gets into a fast set, becomes infatuated with the adventuress, and the doctor, hoping thus to rid himself of her, helps the case along. Edward announces to his father the engagement of himself and the adventuress and his father tears up his will and denounces Edward. The doctor is remorseful and tells Doris. He gives the old man a sleeping powder and pretends to Edward that the state resulting is the approach to death. Edward is overjoyed at his father's seeming return to life and resumes his engagement with Doris, while the doctor and the father express their pleasure.

The Memory Tree—BIG U—MAY 27.—Colonel Fitzhugh, a Confederate veteran, is chosen to lead the parade in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the closing of the Civil war. McCormick, a Federal, had been Fitzhugh's rival during the war for the love of Mollie Crane. McCormick had won her honorably, but Fitzhugh had always hated him for it. On the eve of the celebration the Colonel reviews his life and remorse takes the place of his hatred for McCormick. He and his comrades go to offer the honor of leading the peace parade to McCormick. They find him dead. His burial with military honors follows.

Lady Raffles and Detective Duck.—POWERS—MAY 27.—A female Raffles mystifies the police and Detective Duck. Mrs. Millun receives eight beautiful pearls from her brother, together with a note saying that they once belonged to an Indian princess who bequeathed a heritage of trouble upon anyone possessing them. The female Raffles, learning this, disguises as an Indian princess and seeks to terrorize Mrs. Millun into giving up claim upon the pearls. Detective Duck recognizes the Indian princess as an impostor; she drugs his wine, but before he drinks it he locks Raffles in the vault, after hiding the pearls. He telephones the police, drinks the wine and sleeps. When the police arrive, the Raffles has gone, leaving a note stating that the safe opens from the inside and that she still intends to possess the pearls.

You Can't Always Tell—(TWO REELS)—IMP—MAY 28.—Harrington Spencer, a reporter, rescues a girl from a taxi and a man who implores her to return to him. Spencer immediately falls in love with the girl, Violet, and on their second meeting is asked to care for a bag of jewels for her. Meanwhile the papers have published the death of a banker who had been robbed by a mysterious woman. Spencer is assigned to the case and suspects Violet. He calls, but gets into the wrong apartment. A burglar breaks into Violet's room. Spencer, in the wrong house, is pursued to the roof, from which he gains entrance to Violet's home, where the burglar is caught and Violet satisfactorily explains that the jewels in Spencer's care belonged to her mother. The papers publish the last words of the dead banker, informing that he possesses a daughter Violet by a former wife. The mystery cleared, Spencer and Violet are married.

No Soup—JOKER—MAY 29.—This is a split-reel comedy with "Fun Among the Pharoahs." The American consul, stationed away off among the Igorottes, leads a most lonely existence. A minister, his wife, and daughter arrive to instruct the savages. The consul is greatly taken with the minister's daughter, and when she loses her pet dog he leaves no stone unturned in the search to find it. The Igorottes, as he knows, are especially fond of dogs. After a long search, the consul succeeds in locating the dog. He refuses it from a soup pot; and the girl, to show her appreciation, accepts him as her partner for life.

The Nightmare of a Movie Fan—Victor—May 28.—Beatrice and Joe, who are happily married, disagree over Beatrice's liking for LeMonde, a picture star whom she has seen only on the screen. Visiting the studio one day, she sees him and discovers that he is a far greater hero in reel life than in real life. He and the director disagree. LeMonde resigns and leaves, poorly dressed. He is met by his wife and several children, and Beatrice, at home, contrasts the photographs of Joe and LeMonde, with the result that LeMonde's picture is torn into little bits.

The Pursuit Eternal—(Two Reels)—Imp—May 29.—Mystery and romance

combine to make this picture unusual. Grace Burton wearies of being forever sought after by admirers. Stanton Leeds is also bored by convention and auction-block marriages. Grace happens to see Leeds, takes a liking to him and decides that she will marry him, regardless of what he thinks about it. Leeds falls into her trap and marries the veiled girl "to save her from being forced into marriage with some brute." His is both surprised and pleased to learn that it is Grace whom he has married, and freely forgives her for trapping him.

The Amber Vase—Nestor—May 29.—Robert Wagner, a distinguished artist, is commissioned to paint a valuable vase. He cannot find a suitable model to pose for him, and one evening is sitting in the studio when a girl enters clad in boy's clothes. He makes her a prisoner and then two crooks come in after her and he turns them over to the police. They had sent their sister in to steal the vase, but she decides to lead a new life, and also poses for the vase.

With Father's Help—Nestor—May 29.—Father wishes daughter to marry Percival, who is wealthy; mother wishes her to marry a young man she has chosen; and daughter loves Jack. Father promises daughter $500 if she will elope with Percival. She promises and sends word to Jack to meet her at three. Mother's choice is late in arriving, Percival is apprehended by Jack and tied to a tree, and daughter, after collecting the $500, meets Jack and they elope. Father and mother follow, are arrested as elopers, and father, hearing of the deception, proves himself a good loser and the parental blessing is given.

A Modern Enoch Arden—(Three Reels)—Big U—May 30.—Janet Fotheringay, to save her father from financial ruin, marries John Arnold, a power in the street. Arnold proves to be a brute, so Janet continues her acquaintance with Bannister, whom she has always loved. One night Fotheringay, in attempting to save his daughter from Arnold's cruelty, is struck by the man. He strikes his head in falling, and dies. Arnold simulates suicide, and then leaves for the West. Janet, thinking her husband dead, becomes Bannister's wife. Later Arnold returns to bother Janet. She defends herself with her husband's revolver, and is arrested for the killing. Weeks of anxiety follow, but in the end the jury acquits her.

The Golden Wedding—Laemmle—May 30.—Jane Darling, an invalid, believes her actor husband the same big star that he had been in his younger days, while in truth "Daddy" is but doorkeeper at the theater. The star, however, has taken the name Daddy used and so Jane remains deceived. On the night of the old couple's golden wedding anniversary the star breaks his ankle and Daddy is hustled into the part, which in his younger days he had made famous. Jane determining to surprise him, gets to the theater and sees the success her husband is. Back of the scenes they have a happy scene and as long as that particular play runs, Daddy is allowed to portray the role he had made famous.

Broken Hearts and Pledges—L-Ko—May 26.—Hungry Harry, turned away from the grocery store, sends his dog for plunder. A cop stops the dog, and the canine bites him. Harry and the canine succeed in escaping, but the cop has marked them for arrest. Hank has no end of trouble in courting his girl. Her father does not like Hank, and shows him so. Hank meets his girl in the park. A stranger tries to flirt with her, and Hank does away with him. Just as this is accomplished, Harry and his dog appear, followed by the cop. Another mix-up takes place. When the smoke clears away, all but the girl are in the lake.

Princess Romanoff—(Five Reels)—Fox.—Nance O'Neil featured in this adaptation of Victorien Sardou's famous play, "Fedora." The story is one of Russian intrigue, love and thrilling romance. Loris Ipinoff, finding his wife, who has committed suicide, was false to him, kills her betrayer, Vladimir Boroff, an army officer who is betrothed to Fedora. The princess follows Loris to New York, intent on turning him over to justice. They meet and Fedora again falls in love with him. She learns why he slew Boroff and, in the meanwhile, men hired by the Russian authorities lay in wait to kill Loris as he leaves Fedora's rooms. She sacrifices her honor to save him, prevents him from leaving, and in a spasm of remorse for the Judas-like part she has played, takes poison. She is saved from the consequences of her act by the physicians summoned by Loris and all ends well.

A Woman's Resurrection—(Five Reels)—Fox.—Betty Nansen is featured in this adaptation of Tolstoi's great novel, "Resurrection," in the role of Katusha, ably supported by William J. Kelly as Prince Dimitri. Katusha Maslova, a peasant girl, becomes companion to the Countess Ivanova. The latter's nephew, Prince Dimitri, betrays the girl and goes to war. Katusha leaves the house to hide her shame and later becomes a well known woman of the town after the death of her child. At a wine party given by Katusha, Jacoby, a wealthy merchant, is poisoned. Katusha is accused of the crime and sentenced to Siberia. On the jury is Dimitri, who resolves to make reparation for the wrong he has done the girl, and follows the exiles toward Siberia. The exiles are in charge of Shonbock, a brother officer of Dimitri, who offers unwelcome attentions to Katusha, who has resolved to reform as expiation of her sin. While Shonbock is persecuting her, Dimitri arrives and attacks Shonbock. The men fight a duel, Shonbock being killed, and his shot going wild and striking Katusha, who dies also.

Cora — (FIVE REELS) — ROLFE.—Emily Stevens is featured in this splendid production, being supported by Edward Carewe, Ethel Stewart and Frank Elliot. Madam Renee, an operatic idol of Paris, comes to America with her daughter Cora, and when the mother dies Cora goes to live with Marie, an artist's model, who poses for George Garnier. The latter is engaged to be married to Helen, daughter of wealthy Mrs. Van Brook, but Helen really loves Carl Wilson, a clubman. Cora is seen by the artist, who falls in love with her and who loves him in return, until she discovers his engagement, when she leaves him, returns to the stage and becomes a famous operatic star. Years later Jose, who had previously loved Cora, discovers her in the famous star and Garnier also visits her, after breaking his engagement with Helen. After a chat with Mrs. Van Brook, Cora agrees for Helen's sake to cast off Garnier, and to kill his love stages a scene of wild revelry in her apartments, allowing Jose to make love to her and pretending to drink. Garnier rushes out disgusted, but Marie endeavors to explain all to him. Meanwhile Jose, who has hidden himself in the apartment, attacks Cora, and Garnier and Marie rush into the room at the sounds of the struggle. Just as they enter Cora hurls a wine cooler at Jose, knocking him backwards through a window. Word coming that Helen has eloped with Wilson, the way is finally cleared for Cora to marry Garnier.

For the Sake of a False Friend—(CHAPTER FIVE OF "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY")—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN.—Luke Lovell, who has stolen the necklace in this chapter, drops the jewel in a corner mail box, and when arrested secures his release. Arthur Stanley flees from the ball after a sheriff arrives from Fairfax, Virginia, to arrest him for the murder of Doctor Lee, and by boarding an outgoing freight train escapes. He is set upon by tramps, who change garments with him, and eventually finds work in a distant village that enables him to earn a meal. The diamond, meanwhile, is collected with the mail by the postman, but remains inside the mail sack when the letters are dumped out at the postoffice. Later the sack is condemned, carted away, and "Quabba," a hunchback, finds the jewel inside the discarded mail bag and fastens it about the neck of his monkey, which climbs a tree. See review on page 877, this issue. N. G. C.

Paramount

Betty in Search of a Thrill—(FIVE REELS)—BOSWORTH.—Elsie Janis is featured in this, her second production made for the Bosworth company. She enacts the role of a dainty girl fresh from a convent school, who braves the whirlpools of New York's bright lights. The mercurial Betty goes from a convent atmosphere with its nuns and chapel bells into the very thick of New York's night life, and excitement follows thick and fast on her trail. After becoming salesgirl in a New York department store, a chorus girl at the Gaiety theater, being mixed up in an after-theater fight at a cabaret, and finally mistaken by the police as an escaped criminal and chased throughout the greater portion of the big metropolis, Betty learns a great lesson and settles down fully content at last with her position as one of the debutantes of New York's "400," while the long-sought glamor of life dawns for her in the person of the handsome young clubman, H. Jim Denning. During the production Miss Janis' inimitable impersonations find occasion to display themselves and she also stages a most wonderful dance creation originated by herself. Owen Moore has the lead opposite her.

The House of the Lost Court—(FIVE REELS)—EDISON.—This is the first Edison release ever made on another program than that of the General Film Company and features Gertrude McCoy and Viola Dana, it being an adaptation of a novel by Mrs. C. M. Williamson. Sir Anthony Elliott is condemned to death for the murder of his brother's wife on the testimony of Nina Desmond, an adventuress, though his brother knows Sir Anthony to be innocent and that the wife committed suicide. Several years later Lady Rosamond Elliott leases her mansion to some rich Americans, but arranges to remain as housekeeper. The Americans are told by the family servant of a haunted room, and one night Dolores sees a ghostly figure in a gondola on the lake. Seeing it a second time, she investigates, and going through a dark passageway, comes upon a well furnished room, where she finds the supposedly dead Sir Anthony. The latter explains that a sleeping powder given by his mother had fooled the jailers, and later he had escaped and remained in seclusion in the house, guarded by his mother. Dolores determines to prove him innocent and, by arousing Nina's jealousy, induces that adventuress to confess her perjury. The ghost then returns to life to comfort his faithful mother and to marry Dolores.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 38—PATHE.—This issue of the topical shows the explosion of more than two tons of dynamite in a stone quarry at Woburn, Massachusetts; a scene in the Cincinnati Zoo, Cincinnati, Ohio; the visit of a band of Chippewa Indians to historic old Fort Duquesne in the downtown section of Pittsburgh; the Cornell-Harvard meet at Cambridge, Massachusetts; the running of the Kentucky Derby at Louisville, Kentucky; the assembling of the Atlantic fleet in the Hudson river opposite New York City, and a cartoon.

Houses of Glass — (THREE REELS) — PATHE.—This is the sixth release in the "Who Pays?" series produced by Balboa. Jealous Mrs. Fall picks up some gossip about Ray Norris' relations with his stenographer, and communicates it to Norris' wife, Ruth. At first the young wife scorns at the other's warnings, but coincidence fans the spark of doubt into a flame of distrust. The affair results in Norris shooting Mrs. Fall's husband, killing him—a tragedy grown out of a mere nothing. Ruth Roland and Henry King featured. C. R. C.

The Ear in the Wall—(SEVENTH EPISODE OF THE NEW "EXPLOITS OF ELAINE")—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—Wu Fang, the Chinese criminal, sets out to take the life of Craig Kennedy, but after the Chinaman has installed a detectaphone in the wall of Craig's apartment the detective discovers it, carries on a fake conversation that eludes the Chinaman and results in several of the Chinese villains being trapped in Kennedy's apartment, one of them having poisoned Kennedy's pipestem in the hope of bringing about his death. Wu Fang, however, escapes and is still free to wreak vengeance on Kennedy. See review on page 882, this issue.

Father's Brilliant Idea—PATHE.—A single-reel comedy, picturing the predicament of a man who has an extravagant daughter whom he would like to have elope to save him the great expense of a formal ceremony. Thinking that she will surely elope if he refuses her permission to marry Fred Doolittle, he does so, and then arranges things so that they will have no trouble whatever in running away. Rena, however, will not marry Fred without her father's permission. In the end poor dad is obliged to pay the trousseau and dinner bill, items which he had hoped to dodge by having Fred and Rena elope. C. R. C.

In the Vosges—PATHE.—An excursion through the Vosges mountains in picturesque France. On the same reel with "The Otter" and "The Agouti." All of these subjects are in natural colors. C. R. C.

World

The Boss — (FIVE REELS) — BRADY. — Holbrook Blinn and Alice Brady are starred in this production, which concerns Michael Regan, of Irish descent and a born fighter, who becomes first a bartender and then a saloon proprietor. Regan's two friends, Sullivan and McCoy, are one a priest and the other Regan's right-hand man. Regan goes in for politics and his power increases as his field widens. By chance Regan meets Emily Griswold, daughter of old John Griswold, a grain shipper, and eventually marries her. Emily's brother, however, hates Regan and becomes an agitator and rouses Regan's men to strike. Scanlan, the workmen's delegate, visits Regan and after a quarrel Regan strikes him and he falls mortally injured. McCoy later succeeds in proving Regan innocent of the murder and effects his release. As the picture closes Regan and his wife are seen acting as godfather and godmother to the McCoy son and heir.

Two of the Finest — (ONE REEL) — WORLD COMEDY STARS.—Joe Weber and Lew Fields are featured in this one-reel offering in their well known characters of Meyer, the traffic cop, and Mike, proprietor of a delicatessen store. When Meyer discovers the ease with which the judge collects money from the speeders that he arrests, he plans with Mike to institute a police force and court of their own. Meyer appoints himself judge and Mike goes out to arrest an unsuspecting gentleman wheeling a baby carriage containing twins. After fining the gentleman all the jewelry they can discover upon his person, Mike arrests a pickpocket, whom the judge fines $40, but on discovering that he only possesses $36 they send him forth to collect the other $4 after his own manner. Still later Mike and Meyer start out in a small touring car to pursue two men on motorcycles, but find themselves arrested for speeding by several real policemen in the city, and wind up in jail under a sentence of ninety days.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

The Slim Princess—(FOUR REELS)—ESSANAY—MAY 24.—Francis X. Bushman, Ruth Stonehouse and Wallace Beery featured in this adaptation of George Ade's inimitable musical comedy concerning the Princess Karola, the pickle eater, who, after falling in love with Alexander H. Pike, an American millionaire, visits this country, bewitches him more than ever, and finally decides to remain as his wife in the country which affords varieties of pickles enough to suit even her capricious moods. See review on page 876, this issue. N. G. C.

The Island of Regeneration — (SIX REELS)—VITAGRAPH.—This splendid adaptation of Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel is one of the finest dramas on the market. It has a substantial plot, is acted by Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, S. Rankin Drew, and a capable supporting cast, and is staged artistically and in accordance with the theme. Briefly, the story is of a girl's denial of the laws of convention. Shipwrecked on an island, she lives there for three years with no companion other than a primitive man who was shipwrecked on the island when a child and has grown up in ignorance of the ways of the world and its people. A highly dramatic scene takes place when the man who induced Katherine to cruise on his yacht to prove the truth of her doctrines returns to the island and accuses the girl, in the presence of her companion, of having belonged to him while cruising on his yacht. The reunion of Katherine and John Charnock brings the story to a happy and satisfying close. C. R. C.

Miscellaneous

John Linworth's Atonement — HEPWORTH-AMERICAN.—John Linworth's sister was ill and he succumbed to the temptation that chance laid before him. With his employer's forgotten keys he opened the safe and took the money. As he was leaving, the employer returned to get the keys left bhind and a vengeful beggar attacked him. Linworth, who had been hidden in the room, rushed to the rescue and then, when everything made the retention of the stolen money perfectly safe, Linworth confessed all. Stewart Rome is featured, supported by Chrissie White and Warwick Buckland.

The Shepherd of Souls—(TWO REELS)—HEPWORTH-AMERICAN.—Stewart Rome, Violet Hopson, Ruby Belasco and Henry Vibart are the featured players in this story, which concerns a motherless girl newly arrived in America from England, who visits a church and there hears a sermon on the "Shepherd of Souls." The sermon over, the kindly minister talks with her and eventually succeeds in getting her a place as a servant in the home of the man she has come to America to see, though unknown, of course, to both. A theft by this man's wife to cover gambling debts results in the girl's accusation by her master, and when the girl breaks down in court the minister is summoned to care for her and receives from her a note that reveals the fact that her employer is her own father. When the minister makes known the contents of the note, the man, to save his wife from disgrace, claims to have committed the theft himself and then under the strain his heart gives way, and he passes over to the eternal care of "The Shepherd of Souls."

Lubin Announces Radical Changes

OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE WEEK

SIEGMUND LUBIN, pioneer motion picture producer, head of the great corporation bearing his name and owner of one of the largest film plants in the world, has just announced a radical change in the policy of the business. In making the announcement, Mr. Lubin emphasized the fact that hereafter Lubin pictures will mean the very best in motion photography and that, whereas his present payroll for actors is $30,000 a week, it would be increased to nearly double that amount when the news plans were consummated.

"Philadelphia is to be the home of the best in motion pictures," said Mr. Lubin. "I realized some time ago that my plant, complete as it is, was not turning out as artistic, as distinctive pictures as others were. We have the machinery; we have money and we have the whole world upon which to draw for talent. And this will be our new policy in the future. I have been dissatisfied with our pictures. I want something much better and I am going to get it. I have watched films made by my competitors and I have marvelled at their beauty and the wonderful photography. Now, we are going to do better than they do.

"To do this, I shall reverse my policy of years. Instead of making up a cast out of the stock members of the various companies employed by me, I shall cast well known actors and actresses for the various roles, to obtain that type so necessary to convey the illusion to the auditor. The day has gone by when the photoplay can be staged in any old way, with a scratch cast. Today, the motion picture must be artistic, must tell a stirring tale, be well photographed and have the necessary 'punch.'

"I cannot make known all my plans at this time, for they are not yet completed in their entirety, but you may announce that next week Marie Dressler will begin another 'Tillie' film, with John C. Rice, the well known comedian, as one of her supporting cast. There will also be a comedian of the Chaplin type, to add to the fun. Howell Hansell will be the director. Most of the play will be filmed at the Betzwood plant, which cost me $1,000,000 and four years' work to complete. I am importing scene painters, property men and stage carpenters from New York. I want the best money can obtain, and I am determined to spend enough money to place Philadelphia in the very center of the motion picture map."

The Gotham Film Company

Among many New York concerns in the moving picture business who have made phenomenal strides in a short space of time is the Gotham Film Company, Inc., of 1600 Broadway, New York City. The actual incorporation of this company, which is capitalized at $500,000, took place on April 24, a month ago, and since that time the concern has not only released its first picture but has made arrangements for the marketing of its productions throughout the United States and Canada.

Lately the concern took a five-year lease on the eighth floor of the Mecca building and purchased outright the entire equipment formerly owned by the Sawyer company. The studio of the Gotham company is located at 237 Lafayette street, New York City, and is wonderfully well equipped with four stages and a combination of lights which are giving exceptional results.

The first release of the company was a four-reel picture entitled, "The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan," taken from the Saturday Evening Post story of that name from the pen of Helen Van Campen. Willie Ritchie, the lightweight champion, played the leading male role and proved conclusively that his ability was not confined to pugilistic circles. Miss Betty Marshall, billed as the "Gotham Fashion Plate," played opposite Ritchie.

The second release of the company will be a picturization of "The Trade Secret," by Alfred Poate, a story that recently ran in Munsey's All Story Weekly. It will be a five-reel feature in which Frederick De Belleville, now starring in "A Celebrated Case" at the Empire theater, will support Miss Marshall. In addition to these there will be splendid supporting cast of over two hundred people.

The Gotham Feature Film Company is releasing through the Gotham program one feature of four or five reels each month and the Gotham program is now making arrangements to release a four or five reel feature every week.

Marshall W. Taggart, the president of the Gotham Film Company, Inc., and the Gotham program, Inc., is new to the film business, his activities heretofore having been confined to the theatrical and advertising businesses.

Clarence Schottenfels, vice-president and sales manager, has been six years in the film business; first with the Reliance company, later with Carl Laemmle before Mr. Laemmle formed the Universal company, then with the World's Special Features; following that, New England representative of the Kinemacolor Company of America, and more recently in the brokerage business, until the outbreak of the present European war, when he came to the Gotham Film Company as vice-president and sales manager.

William A. Sweet, secretary and treasurer, like Mr. Taggart, is new to the film business, but he has had long experience in financial and business circles. He is an officer and director of various corporations and in addition to his active services with the Gotham Film Company, he is also treasurer of the Hardman Rubber Tire Company of New York and New Jersey.

Billie Burke and Other Noted Performers Secured

Thomas H. Ince, director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, announces that he has made contracts with six renowned artists to come to Inceville and work before the camera. The stars just signed up are: Billie Burke, Frank Keenan, Willard Mack, Forrest Winant, Truly Shattuck and Julia Deane.

Miss Burke emphatically declares that her appearance under the N. Y. M. P. banner will positively be the only instance in which she will work before the camera. She will perhaps be best remembered in her remarkable work in the Broadway success, "Love Watches." The play that she will appear in under Ince has not been decided upon as yet, but it is known that she will be offered in a comedy of five or six reels.

Frank Keenan's best work was done in "The Warrens of Virginia." Willard Mack is nationally popular as actor, playwright and producer. His latest success, "Kick In," is now playing in New York. Forrest Winant recently completed a long and successful starring engagement with "The Family Cupboard." Truly Shattuck made a national hit by her performance in "Alma, Where Do You Live?" Julia Deane is familiar to American audiences principally for her wonderful work in "Bought and Paid For."

Three More V. L. S. E. Offices

General Manager Walter W. Irwin of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., announces the establishment of three new V. L. S. E. booking offices, and the appointment of E. O. Childs as permanent representative in Pittsburgh, Pa.

The new offices are located in Cleveland, Minneapolis and Portland, Ore. A. W. Goff is in charge of the Cleveland office; C. W. Sawin assumes charge of the Minneapolis office, and Tom North will represent the "Big Four" in Portland, Ore. Arrangements for permanent offices in these cities have not, as yet, been completed. The territory to be covered by each office is as follows: The Cleveland office will cover Ohio and Kentucky towns adjacent to Cincinnati, the eastern section of the southern part of Michigan. The Portland office will cover Washington, Idaho, Oregon and Montana, west of Billings. The Minneapolis office will cover Wisconsin north of La Crosse and Oshkosh, the northern part of Michigan, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana, east of Billings.

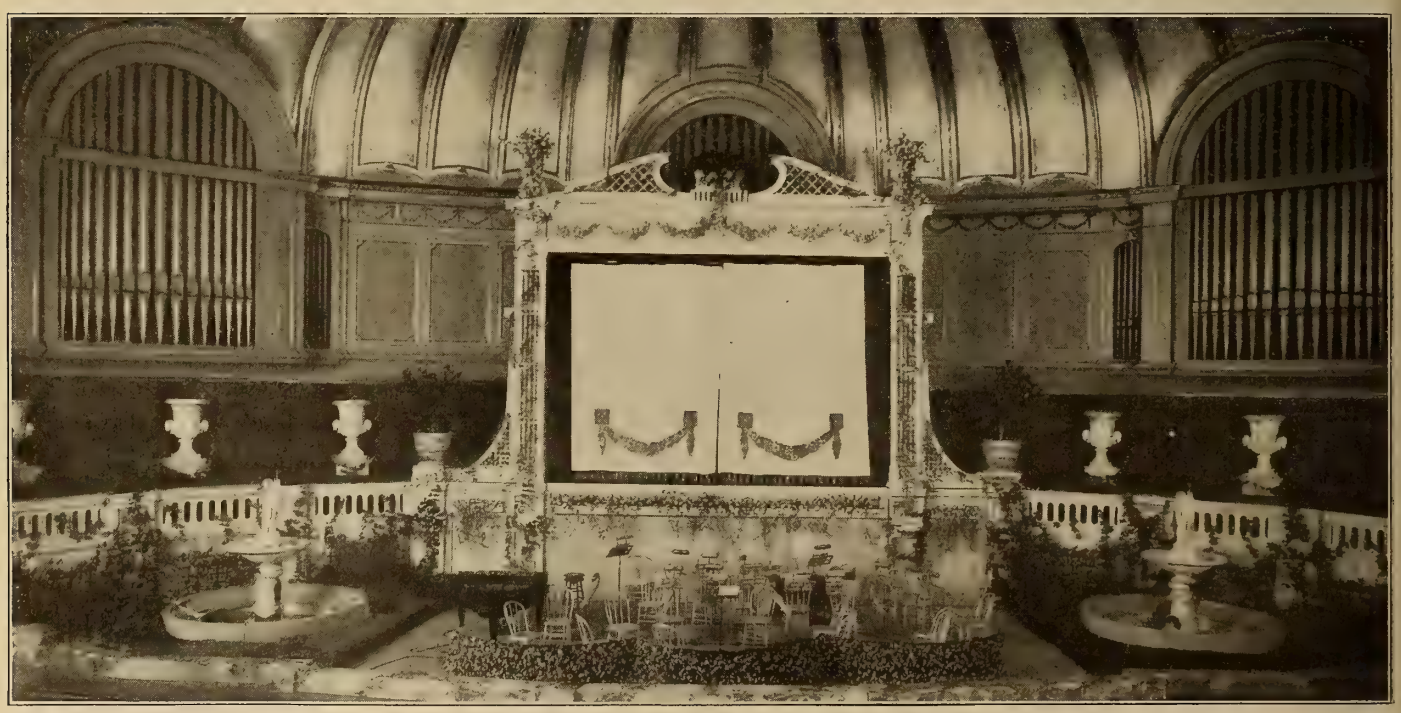
Chicago's Strand Theater

With the opening of Orchestra Hall, as a moving picture theater on Saturday evening, May 1, Chicago took its rightful place in the forefront of cities which may boast of a truly splendid and appropriate theater for the presentation of photoplay productions.

Orchestra Hall, a structure of international prominence on Michigan avenue, and known to music lovers the world over as a temple dedicated to the famous Symphony Orchestra, formerly the Thomas Orchestra, has been refitted throughout by the Strand Theater Company, which has leased the building and adopted for its motto "built up to a standard, not down to a price."

As one enters the theater he finds the stage an Italian garden of great area, a vision of marble balustrades and huge vases, dripping fountains emerging from tangled masses of shrubbery, green trellises and freshly clipped hedges. Above all towers the flower-decked picture frame, and at its base, partly concealed in a bower of roses, is grouped the Strand Symphony Orchestra of twenty-five musicians.

But of the many thousands who have packed



The elaborate stage setting at Chicago's new de luxe motion picture theater, operated by the Strand Theater Company.

E. C. Divine, president.

J. S. Inderrieden, vice-president.

E. Q. Cordner, managing director and secretary.

A. J. Pardridge, treasurer.

Orchestra Hall since its opening, only a few realize that the extravagantly beauteous stage setting is not primarily a decoration. The fact that they are able to banish thoughts of everything save the dramatic story on the screen itself is a triumph for the new school of scenic art. E. Q. Cordner, managing director of the Strand Company, and Earl H. Reid, its chief architect, experimented for many long months and finally chose green as the predominant color for the stage setting, because, to use the words of architect Reid, "It is the natural resting shade on which the eye reposes as instinctively as it blinks in a fierce red glare. The suggestion of coolness has been furthered by the use of charming garden accessories, such as moss grown marble balustrades and vases, tangled shrubbery, green trellises and lattice work overgrown with vines and flowers. The whole touched off to a nicety by the moonlight tint with which the stage is lighted."

The men behind the Strand Theater Company, strange to say, are almost without experience in the film world. E. C. Divine, the president, having for years been engaged in the automobile business on Michigan avenue, Chicago; J. S. Inderrieden, the vice-president, being a wealthy commission man with offices in the commission district on River street, and A. J. Pardridge, the treasurer, being one of Chicago's best known real estate dealers and heavily interested in one of the city's largest department stores.

Messrs. Divine and Pardridge are now, however, devoting the greater portion of their time to looking after the interests of the Strand, and in engaging E. Q. Cordner, as managing director and secretary, have chosen a man who has had a long experience in New York theatrical and amusement interests, and seems capably fitted to act as both managing director and secretary of the Strand Theater Company.

A view of the elaborate stage setting, together with the four principal officers of the company, are shown herewith.

Uphold K. & E. Rights

Judge Hunt of the United States District Court last week upheld the contention of Klaw & Erlanger that the theatrical firm has obtained the moving picture rights to "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" in acquiring the dramatic rights to the novel from Charles Scribner's Sons and John Fox, Jr., the author. The decision means that the Broadway Picture Producing Company, which secured what purported to be the film rights to the dramatized novel from Frank Henry Rice, a broker, who represented that he was acting as the authorized agent of a publishing house, was mistaken in thinking that the dramatic rights held by Klaw & Erlanger were limited to the presentation of a play on the stage with living and speaking performers.

Judge Hunt said in part "My view is that the Broadway Picture Producing Company was dealing with Rice claiming to be an agent. It was bound, therefore, to ascertain what authority the assumed agent had and how far it extended. As Scribner's Sons did nothing to mislead the Broadway Company it should not be held that there was a duty to inform the Broadway Company of facts which the Broadway Company should have ascertained for itself."

Klaw & Erlanger, it is now expected, will enter a decree enjoining the film company from manufacturing and releasing films of the story.

Lady Mackenzie Takes Lyceum

Lady Grace Mackenzie, hailed at a recent dinner of leading American followers of big game at Delmonico's as "The foremost woman hunter of the world," has taken the Lyceum theater, New York City, for the purpose of giving her first public showing of her thrilling lion, rhinoceros and elephant hunts in the form of moving pictures, with which she has just returned after a long and successful expedition in East Africa. The modern Diana is the first person to invade the jungle and return with at least one specimen of every known species of big game in the district. In addition to those she brought down with her own rifle, she captured numerous cubs and transported them to this country and brought back with her four miles of moving picture film.

It is Lady Mackenzie's boast that her pictures, unlike all other so-called big game motography, are not only educational pictures of the wild beasts of the jungle in their native state, but that they show in most exciting manner the real action of some of the most desperate hunts after ferocious animals. Her lion hunt is the piece de resistance and shows a huge African lion charging straight at the intrepid huntress and her male companion. Lady Mackenzie fires and wounds the king of beasts; the man hunter fires and misses. Both are facing the oncoming fury with empty guns. As he gets within ten feet of them, the man turns and runs, and the lion, choosing the fleeing human in preference to the steadfast one, pursues the huntsman, and Lady Mackenzie is saved, her quarry passing within a foot of her and springing upon the man.

Loretta Blake

One of the most talented of the younger women in the motion picture world is a blue eyed, golden haired girl named Loretta Blake, who joined the famous D. W. Griffith organization without previous experience about fourteen months ago and by sheer ability has won her way to the top. Frequently now she is featured in Mutual plays and those unacquainted with her remarkable professional history take her for an "old stager," as far as ability is concerned, when they see her rehearse. She is five feet two inches in height and weighs one hundred and fifteen pounds. The word "dainty" best describes her. She has made a specialty of the innocent, sympathetic, slavey type of part and she herself, Mr. Griffith and the Mutual studio force are in receipt of numerous letters testifying to the appeal she makes in this type of role. An American by birth, Miss Blake attended Saint Mary's Convent in Akron, Ohio, for five years before she moved to Los Angeles to live with her grandparents. In the "City of Films" she went for a year to the Sacred Heart Convent before finishing her formal education at the Los Angeles High School. Several of her girl friends were in picture work and she dropped round to the studios with one of them one day to see how it was done. Asked if she would like to make some pin money, she accepted a small role with alacrity. When he saw the appearance Loretta Blake made on the screen the director engaged her at once and since that day she has never failed to make good.

Itala to Produce Here

Advices from Torino confirm recent rumors that the Itala Company is to produce in America. This move was decided on some time ago, anticipating the participation of Italy in the European war, but for various reasons Harry R. Raver, head of the American company, has withheld the information until operations were actually begun and definite statements could be made.

"Maciste," the now famous giant of "Cabiria," will be featured in an important hero adventure, written by Agnes L. Bain, the well-known author. A popular contest for the selection of an appropriate title for the first "Maciste" production will be held, following a private showing of the first sample at which time only representatives of the trade press will be permitted to compete. Fifty dollars in gold will be given for the best title submitted.

A portion of the "Maciste" production has already been completed abroad. The remainder will be staged in America. The company of Itala players selected for the American engagement includes popular stars of "Cabiria." Many American artists will be used to round out the cast. Six reels will compose the average length of the new American-Itala productions. Much stress will be laid on the creation of novel scenes and situations, new effects and colorings, and the incorporation in all production of the Itala patented system for securing stereoscopic relief.

Mr. Raver would make no statement as to his probable market for the American-Itala productions other than an expression of confidence in the high quality of his company's films and the belief that they will sell readily when shown to responsible distributors.

Boston's Film Censors

Governor Walsh of Massachusetts, on May 21, signed the new censorship bill which grants unlimited powers of censorship to Boston's mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the Municipal Court, one clause in the bill providing that an objectionable production can be stopped by a majority vote of the three censors.

Previously the powers of censorship were vested jointly in the mayor and police commissioner, who had power only to stop plays of an immoral and obscene nature and claimed that the authority was not enough to prevent the production recently in Boston of "The Birth of a Nation."

Just before the governor signed the bill, Senator Hays of Brighton made a bitter speech attacking the measure and in his address particularly assailed the colored men employed at the state house and dared the negro voters of his district to oppose him for re-election.

Pays to Re-Show Pictures

"We are endeavoring to impress upon exhibitors the benefits to be derived by re-showing films of real merit," said Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., Inc., "and in doing so, are bringing to the attention of theater owners a phase of the business that by reason of its very obvious financial importance commands the careful consideration of every thinking exhibitor.

"Progressive exhibitors all realize the value of advertising, and in every community there is hardly a theater of consequence that does not advertise in the daily newspapers. They know that advertising of this kind brings patrons to the theater, and yet strange to say, few realize the full value of 'word of mouth' advertising.

"This form of publicity is the most potent of all, and when a feature is show that has real dramatic value and gives complete satisfaction, the 'word of mouth' advertising it gets cannot be estimated; advantage can only be taken of it when the film is reshown. This condition repeats itself and increases in proportion to the number of times the subject is exhibited until practically all prospective patrons have seen the film.

"This is merely applying the elementary principal of advertising, i.e., obtaining favorable comment, to the exhibition of films and the success of the plan depends only upon quality.

"The Queen theaters of Dallas, Houston and Galveston, Texas, and the Old Mill theater, of Dallas, as well as the Hippodrome theater at Waco, Texas, are the highest class houses in each city. None of them seats less than one thousand people, and E. H. Hulsey, general manager of the chain, is so well satisfied with the success of the V. L. S. E. features so far shown, that, 'at the risk of having his rental raised,' as he says, he advises that the volume of business attending the exhibition of the V. L. S. E. features has far exceeded his fondest expectations.

"One feature was shown at the Old Mill theater in Dallas for five consecutive days, and the gratuitous advertising of satisfied patrons, accruing from day to day, was such that on the last two days people were turned away. The total receipts for the five days showing of this one feature exceeded the receipts for any full weeks' showing of miscellaneous subjects during the past two months."

World Acquires Peerless

The World Film Corporation is now in absolute control of every branch of the making of the films that are released through its offices. It has come about through the World Film Corporation taking over the Shubert Film Corporation, which owns the entire stock of the Peerless Features Producing Company, the official name for the studio at Fort Lee, where the World Film features have and are being made. Prior to this arrangement, the World Film Corporation owned $500,000 of the capital stock of the Shubert Film Corporation, the remainder being owned by the Shuberts and allied interests. Through the exchange of stock of the World Film for Shubert Film stock, the World Film Corporation came into control of the outstanding 50 per cent of the Shubert Film Corporation stock, and thereby became owners of the entire capital stock of the Peerless Features Producing Company.

Mike Donlin, the famous baseball player, also identified with the stage, will be starred in a five-reel feature film, "Love and the Pennant," a story by Bozeman Bulger, the famous baseball writer. This feature will be the first of a series of releases to be issued by the Reel Photo Play Company, which has recently capitalized at $100,000, with offices in the Strand theater building, New York City. The officers are: President, Bernard Levey, recently of the Gotham Film Company; vice-president, Chris. O. Brown, the American representative of Hugh D. McIntosh, the Australian amusement king, and long connected with the Sullivan and Considine theatrical circuit; treasurer, Arthur Levey. Work will be begun on the new feature on June 1. The picture is expected to be ready for release about July 15.

Arrangements have been consummated with Marshall W. Taggart, president of the Gotham Film Company, Inc., by which all the releases of the Reel Photo Play Company will be issued through that organization. The Reel Photo Play Company has bought the negative and all rights to "The Burglar and the Lady," a feature exploiting James J. Corbett and Claire Whitney. This feature will be released at once.

Another feature to follow later will be "The Man with Nerve," a story by Forrest Halsey, which appeared in a recent issue of Munsey's Magazine. Efforts are being made to have Richard Bennett star in this subject.

Morosco Secures Cyril Maude

Cyril Maude is the latest acquisition of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and was secured only after much persuasion on the part of the producers. Mr. Maude is a star of international repute, it being commonly conceded that he is one of the most beloved actors in England, while in this country his work in such triumphs as "Grumpy" and "Second in Command" have made him particularly popular.

Cyril Maude.

Born in London, Cyril Maude obtained his dramatic instructions under Sir Charles Cartwright and the late Rons La Thiere. When he appeared for the first time at the Criterion theater, London, he registered a big hit. A noted manager starred him next in "The School for Scandal," which was presented at the Lyceum Theater, London.

He next toured the United States in "David Garrick," later entering into partnership with Frederick Harrison at the Haymarket Theater, London. While in Europe, George Tyler, the noted theatrical manager, signed Mr. Maude to appear in this country again, where his success was instantaneous, the various characterizations which he presented clearly portraying his unusual versatility.

Keystone Forces Augmented

The working forces of the Keystone Film Company have been materially enlarged during the past few weeks, new actors, directors and companies having been added to the producing department. Raymond Hitchcock, Broadway star, has been at the Edendale studios for about ten days and has settled into the picture routine with admirable adaptability. Hale Hamilton, of Wallingford fame, is another star who is now Keystoning and having the time of his life doing it. Don Barclay, the young burlesque star who made himself famous before he was old enough to vote (and he is only a year or two to the good on that question now), is another recent addition to the Mack Sennett staff of actors. Barclay came to Los Angeles direct from a season with Joe Howard's "Prize Winners" Company in Chicago. These and others who have recently become members of the Keystone Company, with the masterly direction of Mack Sennett, will soon be seen in clever comedies.

Daix Bill a Law

Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania on Monday, May 17, approved the amended Daix bill which makes numerous changes in the present Pennsylvania censor laws, and grants a few important concessions to the exhibitors of the state, though the bill as a whole seems to be a politician's method of milking film companies, since by the provisions of the new bill innumerable assistants to the three censors are to be appointed, each at a goodly salary.

The Daix bill provides for a board of three censors, two males and one female, with offices in Harrisburg, and such other places as may be considered necessary. The exhibitor gains under the new law by being given the right of appeal to the court of common pleas from rulings of the censor board, while under the old conditions the censors had the final say in the matter of all films. The new law also grants a reduction of the examination fee of films from $2.50 to $1.00 per reel, and two important last minute concessions were the elimination of the power to reject films that "tended to prejudice the public mind" or to "incite to riot."

Briefly the bill calls for:

A board of three residents and citizens of Pennsylvania, two men and one woman. The chairman shall receive an annual salary of $3,000, the vice chairman $2,500 and the secretary $2,400. Each member and employe of the board shall be "allowed all expenses of whatever nature actually and necessarily incurred by him or her in carrying out the purposes of this act."

The chairman shall appoint, with the approval of the Governor, the following employes: Chief clerk, at $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500; assistant clerk, $1,200; two stenographers and typewriters, $100 each; two stenographers and typewriters, $720 each; one chief inspector, $1,500; three inspectors, $1,400 each; three inspectors, $1,200 each; one operator (an electrician), at $1,400; two operators, $1,200 each; one operator, $1,000; two messengers, $720 each; one assistant operator or patcher, $600; one assistant operator or patcher, $480. The chairman, with approval of the Governor, may also appoint additional employes, whose salaries shall not exceed $5,000 annually.

For the examination of each film, reel or set of views of 1,200 lineal feet the board shall receive, in advance, a fee of $1, and $1 for each duplicate or print thereof, which must be applied for at the same time and by the same person. Any person violating the act and convicted before any magistrate, alderman or justice shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $50 for the first offense. For subsequent offenses, the fine shall be not less than $50 nor more than $100. In default of payment the defendant shall be committed to prison for not less than ten days nor more than thirty days.

The Life Photo Film Corporation and the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, Inc., an allied corporation, have effected radical changes in the personnel of the officers of both companies. The resignations of Edward M. Roskam, who has been the president, and Leonard Abrahams, who has been the vice-president, and directors since the organization of these companies, were delivered and accepted.

Bernard Loewenthal was elected president and remains as treasurer of both companies, and Jesse J. Goldburg remains as secretary and general manager of the Life Photo Film Corporation, and was elected to the office of vice-president and general manager of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company.

The Life Photo Film Corporation will commence producing two five-part features a month from the first of June, and will, commencing with September, release one five-part feature a week, all adaptations from stage plays. The company will lease an additional studio in New York to take care of the added producing staff.

The plan of reorganization, particularly with respect to the change of officers of the companies, was decided upon by a majority of the stockholders several weeks ago.

Messrs. Roskam and Abrahams have entered the employ of another individual engaged in the laboratory business, and to whom the Commercial Motion Pictures Company has rented its laboratory situated at Grantwood, N. J., for a period of three months. The Life Photo Film Corporation, for that period, will conduct the business of developing and printing.

Wilmuth Merkyl with United Photoplays

Wilmuth Merkyl, a star who stands very high in the esteem of New York theatergoers, and who will be remembered for his splendid work in "The Debutante," with Hazel Dawn, "Adele," "Her Little Highness" and "Sari," has recently signed up with the United Photoplays Company, of Chicago.

Wilmuth Merkyl.

Mr. Merkyl has proven his adeptness and versatility in motion picture acting with the Fox, Cosmo, Famous Players and Kalem Companies. He played opposite Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green," and also opposite Helen Ware in "The Price." He has won favor with the motion picture fans and will have to play opposite him with the United Photoplay Company, Gerda Holmes, the pretty little actress, who was formerly with the Essanay Company. One of the latest pictures in which Mr. Merkyl starred and did most commendable work was Kalem's "Wife for Wife."

Harry McRae Webster, who was director for Francis X. Bushman in some of his biggest hits, is going to direct Mr. Merkyl, and with this combination some very good pictures are promised for the near future.

Hollaman Heads New Company

Richard G. Hollaman is again in the harness as the president of the Mirograph Corporation, a closed corporation for a nominal amount, though the stockholders include people of wealth and prominence. M. Randolph Guggenheimer, of the well-known Guggenheimer family of New York, is treasurer, and William S. Ginnel, Jr., is the secretary. The technical director is H. J. Streyckmans, who is too well known in the trade to need an introduction here. The dramatic director is Roy Applegate.

The company is now engaged in producing "All for a Girl," by Rupert Hughes, as played by Douglas Fairbanks. Miss Renee Kelly, the beautiful and accomplished star, makes her film debut in this vehicle, having recently closed with "Daddy Long Legs," in which she was playing the leading feminine role opposite Henry B. Miller. Miss Georgia Harvey also makes her first appearance before the camera in this film. Miss Harvey is a Broadway favorite, her most recent success having been in "The Pink Lady."

Mr. Hollaman produced the first long feature in America sixteen years ago, when he made the Passion Play in three reels. He is the owner of the famous Eden Musee and president of the Grand Central Palace. He has been identified with better class amusements for thirty years, and numbers among his warm personal friends some of the most prominent people in America and abroad.

Busy Week for Metro

The recent engagements of the Metro Pictures Corporation, through its central officers and the various producers, consist of five stellar actors and actresses whose appearance under the Metro banner will result in important screen productions.

Emmet Corrigan, last seen in "The Money Makers" at the Booth theater, will be seen in the Popular Plays and Players production of "Greater Love Hath No Man" to be pictured from the novel by Frank L. Packard and released through Metro early in June. Martha Hedman, now working in the production of another well-known feature producer, becomes a permanent Metro star following the completion of the work now going forward. Just what production Metro will offer Miss Hedman in first, is not yet known, but General Manager Rowland stated that she would, in all probability, be seen in several of the Charles Frohman plays, of which Metro controls many.

Edward Connelly, formerly seen in "Marsa Covington" on the spoken stage, will be seen in a screen version of that play under the B. A. Rolfe trade mark. Work is now proceeding at the new Rolfe studio, West Thirty-fifth street, and when the interiors are completed, the company will journey to St. Louis, where the river scenes will be made.

Ethel Barrymore is to be seen in the production she last appeared in at the Empire theater, "The Shadow," in which she is now appearing at the Illinois theater, Chicago. Miss Barrymore will appear, also, under the Rolfe banner.

Work on "The Right of Way," Sir Gilbert Parker's famous dramatic success, is rapidly going on at the Rolfe studios, Sixty-first street and Broadway, with William Faversham in the principal role, supported by Jane Grey, the prominent stage star. Olga Petrova in one of her former stage successes will be one of the forthcoming Metro releases during the next six weeks.

Reine Davies as "Sunday"

Miss Reine Davies, popularly known as "The American Beauty," and one of the most popular actresses on the legitimate stage, is to be starred in the George W. Lederer Filmotion Company's production of "Sunday," the play in which Miss Ethel Barrymore made such a success a few years ago. To obtain Miss Davies, it was necessary to get the consent of Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president of the World Film Corporation, who had signed her for several pictures later in the season. Miss Davies, who has been in vaudeville since being leading woman with Willie Collier in "Love Among the Lions," was compelled to cancel many weeks' bookings. This was done against the protest of the U. B. O., as she has been one of the favorite headliners on the "big time," and no actress has a larger personal following than she.

That Miss Davies will be a success is conceded by all, and the part of "Sunday" seems to have been especially created for her. In it she can display all of her charming sweetness and her girlish simplicity that has endeared her to all audiences as well as calling into play her strong dramatic talents.

U. S. Navy in Pictures

A remarkable series of motion pictures of various branches of the United States navy in action forms the background of the three-reel Lubin drama "The Insurrection," written and directed by George W. Terwilliger and released on the regular program June 16. The story centers about a navy lieutenant who is in love with a beautiful South American girl.

The drama will have a strong appeal at this time because of its strong naval flavoring, and in these three reels one gets a most intimate idea of what the United States navy is accomplishing today. Perhaps the most striking effect is a night scene in which the town where the revolutionists have fortified themselves is bombarded by thirteen-inch guns on the battleships, and one sees vividly and clearly what terrific damage these big guns can do.

One sees submarine mines being loaded, planted in the sea and fired; destroyers in action in a heavy sea; the way torpedoes are loaded and fired; firing a torpedo at a fast moving target; wrecking a boat with a submarine mine; landing parties and battle scenes; various types of submarines, battleships, and cruisers in action, and many other activities, all of which demonstrate clearly the efficiency of the navy today.

Pathe Buys Picture Rights

Pathé has added to its list of popular novels which have been acquired for picturization, the latest being "The Picture of Dorian Gray" by Oscar Wilde, "Nedra" by George Barr McCutcheon, and "Comrade John" by Samuel Merwin and Henry Kitchell Webster. All of these books have enjoyed such a wide vogue that the features made from them should attract much attention. Each picture will be presented by a stellar cast, the personnel of which will be announced later.

Coming Pathe Offerings

Pathe has acquired two very strong plays in William J. Locke's "The Beloved Vagabond" and Richard Harding Davis' "The Galloper." The first is one of Locke's most successful novels and was presented on the London stage by Beerbohm Tree, England's most famous actor. The novel enjoyed a wide popularity in this country and had a large sale. It is a story that is delightfully fresh in plot, and has many tense and powerful situations relieved by unusually good comedy. Edwin Arden, who plays in it the part of "Parogot," considers it one of the best he has ever enacted. "Parogot" is a young architect who gives his all to the lady of his ideals, and then finding her faithless, sets forth on a series of vagabond adventures. Mr. Arden and Miss Bliss Milford are the nucleus of a very strong cast which has been assembled by Edward Jose, who will produce the picture for Pathe. It will be in five parts.

"The Galloper" was played by Raymond Hitchcock for a number of seasons, and was then made into a musical comedy. It is a highly amusing farce detailing the adventures of a young millionaire who finds himself compelled to take upon his shoulders the identity of a muchly married war correspondent, Kirke Warren. The story has a Graeco-Turkish atmosphere, and the millionaire while dodging bomb shells and divorced wives goes through many uproarious situations. Donald MacKenzie, who is to produce the picture for Pathe, is assembling an excellent cast, the members of which will be announced in a few days.

Advocates De Luxe Presentations

Some months ago George E. Carpenter, editor of Real Reels, the semi-monthly house organ of the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City, Utah, began a campaign tending to make exhibitors booking Notable service feature the productions, both in the way of stage settings and lobby displays, in a manner really befitting the class of the production.

That Mr. Carpenter's fight is approaching a victory is clearly shown by the fact that now, not one or two, but a dozen or more, yes, even two dozen or more, exhibitors in that territory are staging the de luxe offerings booked through the Notable Company in a really de luxe manner.

As an example of what is being done, Motography had hoped to publish in this issue a photo showing the stage of the Judith theater at Lewistown, Montana, as it was arranged for the presentation of the Paramount feature, "Rule G," but up to the hour of going to press the photo had not yet arrived, so a comment on that stage setting will be reserved until a later issue.

Mr. Heinecke, the manager of the Judith, does not depend alone on stage settings and lobby displays to attract his patrons, but resorts to outside advertising that is both expensive and effective. The accompanying cut shows the circus van, which Mr. Heinecke sent all over the streets of Lewistown when Lasky's "The Circus Man" was the attraction at the Judith. It will be seen that the wagon has been converted into a realistic circus animal wagon, and the van was followed throughout the streets by a number of clowns and no little attention attracted to the show at the Judith that night. In other issues we hope to present to our readers still more examples of the kind of advertising that Mr. Carpenter is urging his exhibitors to adopt.

Pauline Frederick Reengaged

Following her tremendous personal triumph as Donna Roma in "The Eternal City," now completing its long and triumphant engagement at the Astor theater, New York, the Famous Players Film Company has secured the exclusive film services of Pauline Frederick for a number of years.

Under the supervision of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, who directed "The Eternal City" when it was produced in Rome last summer, Miss Frederick will shortly go to Egypt for a mammoth photo-production, in its original environment, of Robert Hichen's famous novel and play, "Bella Donna," in which Nazimova won her first great American triumph. She will also shortly be presented in a detailed film version of Henri Bernstein's emotional drama, "Sold," to be followed by a comprehensive picturization of the international stage triumph, "Zaza."

"Melting Pot" at Hippodrome

Walker Whiteside, one of the last of the big legitimate stage stars to succumb to the lure of pictures, will see himself on the screen for the first time next Sunday evening when the Cort Film Corporation's picture, "The Melting Pot," will be shown at the Hippodrome, New York, as the attraction for the week. Several stage celebrities will be present in honor of Mr. Whiteside and the evening will be made a rather gala event in picture and theatrical circles. Special music has been arranged for the week at the Hippodrome, largely because of the part which music plays in the development of the screen story adapted from Israel Zangwill's famous play. The Cort forces have joined with Manager Tauber of the Hippodrome in making the week one to be remembered at the big Sixth avenue playhouse.

Branch Managers Hold Meeting

The branch managers of the central division of the World Film Corporation were all guests of W. R. Scates and Harry Weiss of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation. The day was spent in discussing conditions and in the evening R. H. Fox took the visitors out for a tour of the city and from reports they saw everything that was to be seen. Among those present were Clay E. Brehm, manager Cincinnati office; R. L. White, manager St. Louis office; W. W. Kulp, manager Cleveland office; Jos. Klein, manager Detroit office; Ph. Goldstone, manager Omaha office; E. M. Lane, manager Indianapolis office; E. D. Selden, manager Minneapolis office, and M. J. Burnside, traveling representative for the Cleveland office.

Players in Real Fire Scene

The Essanay players, who are in Tennessee filming a big feature at the present time, had a narrow escape from death by fire Thursday night.

The Signal Mountain Inn, the hotel at which they were stopping, fifteen miles from Chattanooga on Signal Mountain, caught fire and quite a spectacular blaze resulted. No member of the company was injured, although Dave Corrigan had a narrow escape.

Ruth Stonehouse, E. H. Calvert and the other members of the company got out with the loss of a few personal belongings. Good scenes of the fire were taken and will undoubtedly lend a thrill to a scenario which will be written around the accident.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

SCREEN PERSPECTIVE.

THERE is one great difficulty in the way of perfecting the motion picture to such a degree that everyone in the audience will be made to believe that what he sees is the real scene rather than a picture of it. This difficulty is the fact that the screen is flat. In fact the very name of the art of "projection" means that an image is projected on a surface, and it has been found that a flat surface gives the best all around results.

Theoretically there are two ways of getting around this difficulty, and both have been tried out in a limited way. One way is to have a number of semi-transparent screens one behind the other, and so arranged that near objects will come to a focus on the screen nearest the audience, and the distant objects on the screen farthest away. This requires a different kind of film, which would be thicker by far than that the ordinary kind, so that it could have within its substance several "planes" of images corresponding to the several screens.

Fig. 39. Fig. 40. Fig. 41.

Even in theory such a scheme is defective for the reason that in order to be perfect the screens would need to be as far apart as the objects in the original scene. Let us therefore consider the other possible method of making the pictures stand out in bold relief. This is by imitating in some manner the so-called "binocular" or "stereoscopic" vision of the human eye (or eyes, rather). The principles involved will be discussed in a future article, but for the present we will simply consider the reasons why it will be impossible for everyone in the average audience to see naturally even a stereoscopic picture.

The trouble is that the picture is all on one flat screen in one certain place, while the audience is scattered all over the house. Those sitting in front of the screen will see a fairly true picture, provided the projector is properly placed in the middle of the theater and not too high, but those sitting over to one side will see a distorted picture something as indicated in Fig. 41. All the characters in the picture will be too long and slim, and those nearest the observer will be too large in proportion.

Very well, we will always be sure to sit in the middle of the house, so the next theater we visit we select a good seat in the center, and when we look at the picture we think we must have been wrongly advised, for there is the self-same distorted picture. But look again and see if it is the same kind of distortion. More likely the picture is spread out in one direction as indicated in Figs. 39 and 40, so that no matter where you sit it will appear crooked.

This is due to the fact that the projecting machine is not centrally located, and the cause of the so-called "keystone" or "fan-shaped" distortion is to be found in the laws of "perspective," which, by the way, have much to do with the making as well as the showing of motion pictures, so it may be well to get acquainted with some of them.

The word perspective comes from the Latin words "per" meaning through, and "spicio" meaning to see, and a perspective view is literally what you would see if, while looking through a window, for example, you should draw on the glass the outlines of the view.

If you were looking straight through the glass at a building directly opposite and perpendicular to your "line of sight" all of the parallel lines of the building would be represented by parallel lines in the outline which you made on the glass. But if, on the other hand, the window was a bay window, and you were looking out at an angle toward the row of houses across the street, you would find that your chalk outline showed the nearer houses much larger than the others, and that the sidewalk and curb lines were not parallel but got closer together as the real walk and curb were farther away.

So it is with the camera, which is nothing more than an automatic perspective machine. Hence if you should point your camera out of the window and make a photograph of the row of houses, you would find, upon development, that the picture which you drew upon the window, and the picture which the camera made with so much greater ease and completeness, are just alike, so far as proportions are concerned.

Now go to the bay window again and stand by the slanting glass, but look straight across the street. You will now be able to trace on the glass something which an ordinary camera never sees. The building directly across the way appears to your eye to be square, with one side just as high as the other, and so it is. But when you trace the chalk image on the slanting glass you will find that the side of the building traced on the part of the glass nearest you is much smaller when you look at it straight. You have made a "perspective" but it is not natural, since all perspectives are supposed to be made through a glass which is perpendicular to the line of sight.

The picture on the slanting glass is distorted just as the screen picture is distorted when the projecting machine is too far to one side (Fig. 40.) In projection, the rays of light travel in straight lines from the film through the objective lense to the screen, and since they spread apart toward the screen, the farther they go the bigger will be the picture. Similarly, if the rays making part of the picture have to go farther than those making another part, one part of the picture will be so much larger than the other.

That is just what has occurred in Figs. 39 and 40. In Fig. 39 the projecting machine is so high that the top of the screen is much nearer to it. Hence the rays traveling to the bottom of the screen will have spread out more than those going to the top. We therefore find that the bottom of the picture is disproportionately large.

Similarly in Fig. 40, the rays reaching the right of the screen had farther to go, hence that part of the picture is the largest. Of course, both of these faults could be overcome to a certain extent by tilting the screen so that it would be perpendicular to the projector's "line of sight," but how about the audience? Each one in the audience has a line of sight which must be given at least a little consideration, if for no other reason than that it may lead to or from the price of another admission ticket.

So it will not do to further abuse the audience by tilting the screen, for even the exhibitor who persists in showing distorted pictures finds that there is a limit to what an audience will endure. There was a time, a few years back, when the motion picture was struggling for recognition, that some of the so-called legitimate, as well as the higher priced vaudeville houses, scorned to consider the pictures as other than a necessary evil.

The vaudeville managers found them useful in that for the sum of (say) $20 per week they could rent some old, worn-out films that would, by slowing up the projecting machine, consume from 20 minutes to a half hour of each bill, thus taking the place of some real flesh and blood stunt that would cost from three to five times as much.

More important, however, was the quality of the pictures. It would never do to make them attractive, for then would not the audience learn to favor them and go to the houses which featured them? Moreover, it would not do to let this rising young competitor of vaudeville get a foothold by having the endorsement of "legitimate" recognition.

Therefore, as in one of Chicago's high priced vaudeville theaters, they would put the projector in the very top gallery, so that the pictures would look like a pyramid, and then, at the end of the program when it was time to drive the audience out, flash would come the "movies" at half speed, and flickering, so that everybody was glad to leave.

Whether this condition still exists in that particular house we cannot say, for after being driven away about six times we gave up hope, and even their most popular $5,000 per week flesh and blood stars couldn't induce us to pay 50 cents to see another such criminal insult to the motion picture as it ought to be, and as it is.

Such short sighted managers are getting scarce, and it is to be hoped that all exhibitors will be more particular in selecting the proper location for their projector, so that the really excellent films now available may have the best possible setting.

Reel Fellows May Meeting

The May meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago was held in the Gray Room of the Hotel Sherman on Wednesday evening, May 19, much business being transacted.

Following the business session and the dinner, motion pictures taken at the recent Reel Fellows' ball, as well as several other films, were projected by a recently invented machine known as the Safety Projector, which is remarkably compact, weighs but twenty-two pounds when loaded with film, and is so simple that it can be operated by a child. The machine uses an ordinary Mazda lamp for light and though the throw was more than fifty feet long a clear picture was seen on the screen. A remarkable feature of the invention permits the film to be stopped and held stationary on the screen at any point, while the crank may be at any time reversed, running the film backwards. A Keystone comedy projected alternately ahead and then backwards caused much amusement. L. E. Stinson, representing the Safety Projector and Film Company, which manufactures the machine, had charge of the demonstration and was warmly complimented by all the Reel Fellows on the machine's operation.

The June meeting of the Reel Fellows, which will be held on the third Wednesday in June at the Hotel Sherman, was voted "ladies' night," and each member is expected to be present with his wife or lady friend.

Need a Stickpin?

The Photoplay Statuette Company, located in the First National Bank building, Chicago, which handles lifelike statuettes of Charley Chaplin, the Essanay comedian, and offers these attractive little ivory finished figures, nine-and-one-half inches in height, at a remarkably low wholesale price, is now prepared to furnish beautifully gold-plated stickpins of the same inimitable comedian. One of the stickpins is illustrated herewith and one can easily see what an attractive souvenir offering such pins would prove to exhibitors on a night when a Chaplin comedy is the feature of the bill. The Photoplay Statuette Company has made the remarkably low price of three dollars per hundred for the stickpins and offers to send a free sample of the pin to anyone who is sufficiently interested to write for one and enclose five cents to cover the cost of packing and postage.

Marie Still Seeking Cash

On Tuesday, May 25, briefs were submitted by both sides in the action brought in the Supreme Court of New York County by Marie Dressler against the Keystone Film Company and the Alco Film Corporation, to prevent the distributing companies from exploiting the film entitled "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

The case was first called for trial before Justice Page at a special term on Tuesday, May 11, and continued every day until May 19. Among the witnesses were Job E. Hedges, Adam Kessel, Chas. O. Baumann, Walter Hoff Seeley, Howard C. Griffiths, Marie Dressler and her husband, James H. Dalton.

Chief conflict of testimony seemed to be as to whether the defendant Keystone Company had declared that Mr. Dalton was the man to handle the picture and whether the original agreement contemplated exploiting the picture by engaging the larger theaters throughout the country or whether the intention was to exploit the picture on the state's rights basis.

A decision in the matter will be handed down at some subsequent date.

Permitted Locations of Theaters

CHICAGO has an ordinance which is intended to prohibit "theatrical performances," among other things, within two hundred feet of a church. This ordinance has naturally operated to restrain the construction of picture theaters in a good many desirable locations, even when the churches themselves might have voiced no objection.

Judge Honoré in the Circuit court has just held that ordinance invalid, and following his decision Mayor Thompson has granted a license to the Fifty-third Street Theater, which is quite close to the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church, in one of Chicago's exclusive residence districts. This means that picture theaters in the Windy City are now free to locate next door to a church, if they will—which opens up practically the only new territory Chicago can offer the exhibitor.

The churches fought the case for over a year; but Attorneys John W. Creekmur and John L. Hopkins, counsel for the lessee of the theater, were able to show that the term "theatrical performances," as used in the ordinance, was never intended to regulate the location of a theater, and that the legislature never delegated that power to the city. The fact that the theater building involved an investment of nearly a quarter of a million dollars demonstrated the responsibility and dignity of the undertaking to the satisfaction of the court.

While any suggestion of antagonism between the picture theater and the church is deplorable, we are confident that the result of the decision will work for a better mutual understanding between these two congregations of people with apparently widely differing motives. The theater, properly conducted, will profit by the dignity of the church; while the members of the latter will soon learn that there is nothing irreligious in the motion picture, nothing to disturb the consecrated and concentrated peace of the most sanctified neighborhood.

The pro-church enthusiast is very apt to be all kinds of an anti-amusement zealot. He cannot see that the motion picture is but a silent lecture—a succession of photographs—the simplest possible pastime. The elimination of Chicago's limiting ordinance is an opportunity to convince him that there is much good in pictures, and no evil. And possibly he will find in time that the church itself is better off for the general livening up of the community, the improved mental and spiritual circulation which results from the stimulant of honest entertainment.

The Birth of a Nation's Rebellion Against Censorship

THAT much-discussed picture, "The Birth of a Nation," has mounted to the dignity and distinction of a long editorial in the Chicago Tribune. It is quite evident that the great newspaper approves of this particular great film. The editorial points out that the film has been suppressed in Chicago, while the book it was made from, and the stage play made from the same book, were not. In commenting on this situation the writer manages to martial some interesting facts.

Here (he says) is a question of freedom in expression which will give any thoughtful person cause for reflection. We assert our right to such freedom within the obvious bounds of common decency and morality. "The Birth of a Nation" does not offend against either. This film draws upon veritable pages from the history of the country, embodies men and women of whom the pages treat, and they re-enact their struggles. We then say that citizens may not be permitted to see it.

The Tribune has been and is opposed to interference with freedom of expression, but it confesses that the subject here involved has complexities which do not yield to the application of ordinary rules. The terrible concrete reality of the moving picture is the disturbing factor and the consequent emotional response of the spectator is the disturbing result. The sin of the film is its effectiveness.

A lecturer with ability to touch men's susceptibilities might take this subject and do his emotional best with it and we doubt that a voice would be raised to stop him. Such people as might go to hear him would have their feelings made more acute, might have their prejudices heightened, but in the end the chief result would be that they knew more about the days of reconstruction.

The moving picture not so much makes its spectators know more about the period; it makes them live through it, vicariously but intensely, and the city government has said, in effect, that the citizens of Chicago ought not to live through it, and they ought not, as a matter of public policy, to enter a theater from which they must come with prejudices and race hatreds inflamed.

It is not displeasing to hear the pictures credited with effectiveness that amounts to "a terrible concrete reality." We remember the stories we used to print about the dog in the audience that chased a cat on the screen, and the happy westerner who took a shot at the projected image of a bear. But we have not observed, and do not believe, the sane and normal picture show visitor, however "fannish" he may be, ever loses his identity or his sense of time and place in an excess of emotional concentration. He is always perfectly aware that the thing at which he gazes is a "show," and no producer has yet been able to hypnotize him beyond that consciousness. Therefore the allegation of danger is foolish. No picture show can "incite to riot."

But if the newspaper editorial seemed there almost on the point of supporting the theory of malignant influence, the belief that the picture has power to carry men bodily and spiritually back into history, it redeems itself later:

All censorship is an infringement of that perfect freedom of thought and expression which is dear to the liberal as an ideal if not always acceptable as a fact. Where we concede any restriction it is extremely difficult if not impossible to justify it on other grounds than those of expediency. Censorship of information and of debate is allowed only in extreme cases, as under martial law. Censorship of literary expression also is permitted only within relatively narrow limits. The field broadens, however, with restrictions upon other forms of art, especially where their appeal is to emotion rather than reason and effects of public consequence are feared.

But here it is necessary for us to resist a tendency easily extended in the general name of expediency or morality. Not all cases are as clear as those we have cited, and restriction is often the result of the organized zeal of minute minorities rather than an expression of the consensus of a community's opinion. Also there is always a disposition to use power when it is created.

Censorship often accomplishes concrete benefits and may be conceded to be necessary. But we ought never to lose sight of the fact, that, if necessary, it is a necessary evil which we are right in regarding jealously.

Here is the first signal of the awakening; the first evidence that men of thought are beginning to react to the mental irritation of censorship—as indeed they must and will in time. The American people will not be censored; and make no error in your analysis, censorship of press or play is censorship of the people themselves. No living being on this earth is ordained to say what you and I shall or shall not see. There may be things which others are at liberty to advise us not to see; but we dispute anyone's right to prevent us by force from seeing anything which has not been proved illegal.

We cannot say that the Tribune's editorial aligns that paper definitely against censorship; but evidently it already has the logic of that function under suspicion, and that is a good beginning.

To Greet Winners

Final arrangements and many details of the "Runaway June" contest are contained in a booklet issued by the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation and distributed to exhibitors who are using the "Runaway June" contest as a big business builder. Several of the live wire exhibitors who are running the "Runaway June" contest write the film corporation that when the Reliance train of winners passes through their cities on its way to the coast they will turn out their patrons en masse with brass bands and banners, as a tribute to the winners. Exhibitors who do this, it is pointed out, are certain to reap great publicity rewards in their home towns and the vicinities.

Episode Six: "Lucy Dove"

(PART ONE)

"Father, you know, was a colonel in command of the American troops stationed at the Panama Canal, when it all began," stated Lucy Dove by way of introducing the story she had agreed to tell the executives of the Jumbo Film Corporation at the request of Sue Brett, its leading lady. "Lou Beck, who had been kicked out of West Point when father and he were cadets there, years before, had sworn to revenge himself upon father, whom he held responsible for his discharge. He thought the time ripe for his revenge when he discovered that father had just received from Washington a set of plans for the new lock to be constructed at one end of the canal. Stealing the papers he prepared to leave Panama with them, when I accidentally discovered what he was up to and set out in a submarine to capture him. Lou quickly learned I was following him and caused the lock to be drained, thus leaving the submarine high and dry in the basin of the canal. Foiled in this method of pursuit I set out on a bicycle to overtake him, but he scattered tacks along the roadway, puncturing my tires and delaying me. Beck then started to make his way across Central America, but I was close behind him. Perceiving that I still followed, he arranged for my capture by a tribe of cannibals and soon I was bound and helpless in the camp of the savages. The chief of the tribe played Beck false, however, captured him, took the plans away and turned them over to me. I was then released and started to make my way back to Panama. Beck bribed his jailer to release him and soon was again in pursuit of me.

Some Current Releases Reviewed

"The Millionaire Baby"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett

DECIDEDLY dynamic is Selig's multiple reel production of "The Millionaire Baby" to be released May 31 on the V. L. S. E. program. This exceptional story of mystery and adventure was dramatized from Anna Katherine Green's book of the same name.

Miss Grace Darmond, one of the youngest leading ladies in motion pictures, makes her first appearance in a Selig's Red Seal play and her portrayal of Valerie Carew, the burlesque queen, is splendid. Little Charlotte Stevens makes a lovable millionaire baby and her unspoiled and natural manner will make a strong appeal to all who see this film.

Valerie Carew, a burlesque queen, is enamored of the glamor of the stage and although she and her husband Justin Carew, a struggling author, are happy he cannot find a market for his writings. He pleads with her to give up her stage career, but she refuses and he finally leaves her.

About this time Mrs. Ocumpaugh comes to the realization that she and her millionaire husband, in spite of the fact that they have every luxury money can buy, are unhappy and believes that only a child would fill their cup of happiness. She therefore calls in Dr. Pool and gives him a large sum of money, instructing him to get a baby for her and keep the matter a secret.

After Valerie is deserted by her husband, she gives birth to a little girl and Dr. Pool, who knows of her being an actress and being deserted by Justin Carew, goes to her and through his hypnotic influence buys the child from her. Philo Ocumpaugh has hired Justin Carew as his private secretary and they are up in the mining district when he receives a telegram from his wife telling of the birth of a baby girl.

Valerie Carew is left a fortune and although she is a great dramatic star, she deserts the stage and goes to live in a beautiful home left to her, which is next door to the Ocumpaugh home. She calls on Dr. Pool and tells him she must have her child, and he after extracting a promise of a large sum of money from her, tells her that he will bring the child to her on its birthday, March 10. Valerie and Gwendolyn are very good friends and one day Gwendolyn takes Varelie into their conservatory and there they see March 10 written on a fountain. The little girl tells Valerie that that is her birthday and Valerie feels sure that this little girl is her long lost child.

On March 10 a detective is stationed to watch over the child and Mrs. Ocumpaugh gives a large birthday party for her. Valerie decides she will steal the child herself and outwit the doctor. While the detective is absent from the child's sleeping room a moment a form steals into the dark room, lifts up Gwendolyn and carries her away.

Word is immediately brought to Mrs. Ocumpaugh in the ballroom and she tells all the guests that her child is kidnaped. She sends a telegram to her husband, who is on a hunting trip.

The detective walking in the conservatory finds a strand of beads from Valerie's gown and follows her to Dr. Pool's home. Upon his arrival there he discovers Valerie accusing the doctor of kidnaping the child and the doctor in turn accusing Valerie of kidnaping her own child. The former actress tells the detective that Dr. Pool is the man who has been terrorizing Mrs. Ocumpaugh and the doctor rushes out upon the balcony of his apartment and in a struggle with the detective, falls from it and is killed.

Mr. Ocumpaugh arrives home and there finds a letter which the doctor had written telling of the true parentage of Gwendolyn. He accuses his wife and she finally owns up to her deception, also telling him that he had stolen little Gwendolyn and hidden her in a secret room. Valerie comes to the house and here she and Justin are reconciled and decide to take little Gwendolyn to Europe and keep the matter an entire secret from the rest of the world.

Reliance's "Ghosts"

GRUESOME though it is, D. W. Griffith as the producer, and Henry Walthall as the star, have made a splendid film from Ibsen's immortal drama, "Ghosts." Russell E. Smith is credited with the preparation of the scenario from which the film was made, and though the story is handled in a slightly different fashion than the Ibsen play from which it was adapted, it follows the main thread of Ibsen's plot, is convincing throughout, and despite the difficulties which were encountered in arranging it for production is undoubtedly clear in its development.

Henry Walthall appears to splendid advantage, first as Alving, a roue, and later as Oswald, Alving's son, distasteful though the role must have been to him. He is convincing in every scene, but particularly clever in the banquet scene as Alving, and highly emotional in the scene in the church when Oswald is prevented by the old family physician from marrying Regina.

Mary Alden as Helen, afterwards Mrs. Alving, is cast for one of the most difficult roles of her entire career, but plays it in her unusual splendid fashion with minute attention to tiny detail, which has made her the great actress that she is.

The gruesome story of Ibsen's "Ghosts" begins with the love of Helen for Manders, the young pastor, and her final consent to give him up at her parents' request and to marry instead Alving, a notorious roue, who is wealthy and powerful.

The family physician voices his objections to the marriage, not alone to Helen herself and her mother, but also to the prospective bridegroom, who laughs him to scorn, and disregarding all warning the young people marry.

Several weeks later Helen discovers a liaison between her husband and a young married woman and contemplates leaving him immediately, but when Manders tells her her first duty as a wife is to her husband she reluctantly consents to return to her unhappy home.

Soon afterwards the young woman gives birth to a child by Alving, and the physician, after due protest, consents to keep the child's parentage a secret. About the same time Helen also bears a child named Oswald.

Later, Alving dies and young Oswald, nineteen and studying art in Paris, finds his mind strangely affected. His mother remembers the doctor's warnings, but rejects them as silly, since the boy has undoubtedly lived a clean life. As she notes his weakened mind, however, the mother gradually comes to accept the physician's predictions as fact and schemes to save her son by marrying him to a sweet young girl, though unknowingly she picks out the daughter of her husband's paramour and totally unaware of the girl's parentage, throws the two young people together.

When their engagement is announced the physician, realizing he must protect the girl, hastens back to the city from his vacation trip and arrives at the church just as the ceremony is about to take place.

Summoning Oswald and Regina, his bride-to-be, into the chancel, the physician makes known to the horrified young people the terrible secret, and Oswald, maddened by the act of his father which prevents him marrying the girl he loves, rushes out from the church and plunges into mad excesses that even exceed in wickedness those of his father.

Horror stricken, the mother watches her son's brain giving way, and her agony reaches its climax as she one day finds him sitting on the floor, paralyzed, and playing with the sunbeams. She rushes to the doctor for aid, but during her absence Oswald succeeds in dragging himself across the floor, and reaching a vial of poison that he has hidden in the room.

The mother and physician arrive to find Oswald dead, the ghost of the past having finally overtaken him.

sanay's three-reel release of Tuesday, June 1, entitled "The Coward."

Mr. Lewis, undoubtedly, deserves his special engagement for this picture, since as John Brent he rises to supreme dramatic heights, and puts over the production in a fashion that makes it one of the best acted dramas of recent release. He is splendidly supported by Nell Craig, as Ruth Davis, afterwards Mrs. Brent, and both deserve special praise for their artistic makeup as the same two people in later years.

The story of "The Coward" is from the pen of H. Tipton Steck and is so powerful as to have made a great picture with even less capable players than Sheldon Lewis and Nell Craig in the featured roles.

John Brent loses his savings and some of his employer's money in a pool room, due to the urgings of a friend that he "take a chance on the ponies." Afraid to face the consequences he returns to his room and prepares to commit suicide, but is saved by Ruth Davis, a little seamstress, who lives across the hall, and by whose beauty John has already been attracted.

turns to her room and comes back with all her scanty savings which she offers him that he may pay his debts, restore what he took from the company and begin life anew.

As a result of Ruth's sacrifice, John takes a new grip on life, and shortly after the two are married a girl is born to the couple, but they are so poor as to be unable to give the child the care it needs. The physician, whom Brent summons tells them that the child will die unless a noted specialist, whom this physician recommends, can be induced to take the case. The specialist, with scant hope of payment for his services, takes charge of the baby, and within a few weeks is able to restore it to health. Unconsciously Ruth falls in love with the man who is curing her baby and when the latter confesses one day that he cares for her and desires an opportunity of taking both her and her baby away with him to better surroundings, Ruth shows her love for him.

The husband, returning, overhears the doctor in his declaration of love and when a proposition is made that he shall divorce Ruth, voluntarily permitting her to marry the doctor, the coward, his heart crushed, gives up his wife.

Years later, the specialist, with his hands burned from exposure to an X-ray, his fortune gone on account of unfortunate speculation, finds himself a ruined man, on his deathbed. Brent, meanwhile, has become exceedingly wealthy and head of a large concern. After her stepfather's death, Ruth's daughter Hope, now a young woman, is compelled to seek employment as a stenographer, and by chance becomes an employe of Brent, her own father.

One night Ruth is kept after hours to do some work, and alone with Brent in his office is amazed to have her employer seize her in his arms and attempt to caress her. She denounces him as a coward, and struggling from his embrace grabs her hat and departs for home.

The man, alone in his office, fights a grim battle with his conscience and finally triumphs over the cowardly instincts that have always dominated his life. For the purpose of apologizing to Hope, he looks up her address and visits her there.

Convinced Brent is sincere, Hope forgives him for his act and suggests that he meet her mother. Face to face with Ruth, he recognizes her as his wife and a joyful reunion occurs.

THE action in episode eight of the Lubin serial "The Road O' Strife," which is entitled "In the Wolf's Den," shifts from the quiet country village to scenes in the city and the magnificent home of Jerome.

Jack Standing, who interprets the role of Jerome, does better work than in any previous episode in this installment of the story, though it undoubtedly closes his connection in the serial, as the end of the picture sees him in an apparently lifeless condition in a chair in his own home.

Alene, whom episode seven left wandering down the quiet country road, determines to go to the city in the hope of finding Robert Dane, the man who in the past befriended her, but on arriving in the city is seen by Jerome and becomes a victim of a plot, since Jerome induces Daisy, a chorus girl friend of his, to take Alene home with her, and later to secure the latter a position in the musical comedy company of which Daisy is a member.

Jerome, in order to get Alene into his power, realizes that he must get Daisy out of the way and accordingly buys the musical comedy show and orders the stage manager to discharge Daisy.

Later, realizing Jerome's purpose, Daisy determines to foil him by finding Robert Dane for Alene and with all her meager funds sets out for Elmhurst in the hope of discovering Dane.

Meanwhile Jerome has a friend meet Alene and inform her that he comes from Robert Dane, and that she is to accompany him, since Dane has been badly hurt.

Unsuspectingly, Alene goes with the man, only to find herself at the end of the journey in Jerome's magnificent home. The servants are dismissed from the room and Alene finds herself at a lonely banquet as the guest of the man she detests.

Jerome, already intoxicated, pours into the cup he brought from the mineral spring near Elmhurst, a whole bottle of champagne and proceeds to quaff it, as a toast to his fair guest.

Alene, remembering the prophecy that whoever drank anything but water from the cup would die, seeks to warn Jerome against touching the liquor, but ere she can interfere he has lifted it to his lips and a moment later, writhing in agony, falls across the table.

"Sally Castleton, Southerner"

Reviewed by C. R. Condon

CIVIL WAR dramas have long ceased to be regarded in the light of possessing originality, regardless of their plot. Therefore, "Sally Castleton, Southerner," must forego this distinction, but it makes up for it in possessing a number of other commendable qualities without whose help originality, supreme as it may be, cannot make a picture successful.

The action is quick and stirring; the air of hospitality and delicate self-restraint and silent suffering prevailing in the South even during its saddest moments, are impressive; the photography and settings are good; and the acting, for the most part, is convincing. Langdon West directed the play which is in three reels and was released by the Edison company on June 24.

The title role finds interpretation through Miriam Nesbitt, a good type for the role of the queenly Southern girl who loses her heart to Captain Radcliffe (Marc MacDermott) though she knows him to be a Union spy. Bessie Learn is seen as Genie, Sally's sister, and Pat O'Malley plays the part of the quick-tempered Confederate lieutenant, Philip Byrd. Others in the cast are Yale Boss, Harry Linson, John Sturgeon, Charles McGee, and William Fables.

An exciting moment in Edison's "Sally Castleton, Southerner."

General Castleton, located in Richmond, advises his daughters, Sally and Genie, to abandon the Castleton home and move to the front where they will be safe from the roving bands which, unallied, prey upon the unprotected. While the girls are discussing the letter, Philip, Genie's sweetheart, rides up with a despatch for General Lee. As he is worn out from hard riding, George Castleton delivers the letter. Hardly has Philip entered the house when a detachment of Union cavalry rides up.

Phil hides in the stove, and the girls admit the soldiers. Their search convinces them that the girls and Clabon, the man-servant, are the only occupants of the house. Sally has been commissioned to watch his movements, but Radcliffe outwits the girl, with whom he has fallen in love, and secures the plans from his confederate within the city, in spite of her scrutiny. In the end Radcliffe, having delivered the Confederate plans to his superior, considers his duty done and his work as a spy over, and offers his love to Sally, who, with all respect to her Southern sentiments, accepts the Northerner.

AS full of life and hoidenish charm as her first picture and far superior to it in story, Elsie Janis' second photoplay, "Betty in Search of a Thrill," made its Bosworth, Inc., debut on the Paramount Program on May 17. The picture can be spoken of as Elsie Janis' photoplay because, not only did she write it, but, with the exception of Owen Moore, any other characters who appear in it do so only incidentally. Mr. Moore is seen periodically. And the irresistible little stage favorite, Elsie Janis, is seen all of the time—which is not too often.

The action starts off with a bang, and holds that pace right through to the end of the fifth reel. With any other star in Betty's place the story, a wisp of a plot pivoting on a convent-bred girl's dream of her entrance into New York night life, would probably fall through, but Elsie Janis frolics through it without difficulty and is just as impishly cute, refreshing, and clever in the final scene as she was in the first.

Bosworth productions are known for fine photography, elaborate settings, and exteriors chosen for their close relation to the story, and even Betty's strenuous efforts to unearth a thrill cannot dodge or shake them. The action, whether it be as ludicrous as Miss Janis' slide down a balustrade, or as sympathetic as the disappointment at finding that she has unintentionally discouraged Jim's attentions, has behind it always this air of quality and stability.

The cast, besides Elsie Janis, contains Owen Moore

The situation at the opening of the story is farcical.

Betty, fresh from the convent, visits her relatives, the Hastings family. Fearing to corrupt the unsophisticated girl, Mrs. Hastings and her daughter, June, hide their low-cut gowns and modern novels, while Mr. Hastings goes through all kinds of contortions on Betty's approach, rather than have her see him smoking a cigarette. The sweet little school girl, on the other hand, loves nothing so much as reading a novel, and has no desire so great as that of seeing the world.

It is because of this latter reason that she refuses Jim's proposal. Down-hearted and discouraged, he leaves. Betty falls asleep, and in her dreams, has an astonishing career in New York. pathy of the spectators. Edgar L. Davenport as General Faversham; Fuller Mellish in the role of Lieutenant Sutch, George Moss as Mr. Eustace, Ogden Child, Jr., as Harry Faversham at the age of fourteen, and David Wall, all contribute a commendable share to the character cast, as also do others of the soldiery whose names are not listed.

Mr. Estabrook has no difficulty in making the character of Captain Harry Faversham one of realism. He plays it as though from long and intimate acquaintance with the man who disguises as an Oriental, that he may be near his fellow officers, yet remain unknown to them, and thus seek an opportunity to prove to them a courage which previously they had found lacking in him.

The story, which is from the book by A. E. W. Mason, affords Director J. Searle Dawley the use of a wealth of orientalism, which give the picture the biggest percentage of its charm.

The four feathers, white ones, are expressions on the part of three fellow-officers and of Ethne, the fiance of Captain Faversham, of the cowardice which they attribute to him. Only Faversham and Lieutenant Sutch know that this cowardice is an inborn repulsion for war and its carnage; a repulsion that Faversham has been unable to overcome. Thus, when he receives a telegram ordering himself and company into active service, he destroys the telegram and resigns his commission. A tell-tale portion of the order is found by one of Faversham's men and three of them send him each a white feather. Ethne, learning the cause of their sending, adds the fourth white feather and breaks the engagement.

In the Orient Captain Jack Durrance, a former suitor of Ethne, is in charge of the command. Faversham, disguised as an oriental musician, determines to stay near the command and by some bravery retrieve his name. The opportunity comes when Captain Durrance takes his men into the desert to recover some dispatches from an old and guarded ruin. The fierce white light deprives Durrance of his sight and Faversham effects his rescue and comes to the help of others of the command. Later he is thrown into prison, helps another man to escape, and, himself free, obtains the dispatches.

Durrance, blinded for life, has returned to Ireland, where Ethne, through pity, consents to marry him.

News of Faversham's bravery comes to them and later Faversham arrives. The givers of the four feathers humbly take them back and Durrance, realizing Ethne's love for Faversham, releases her and she and Faversham resume their engagement.

John Emerson is featured as Tom Warder, the reporter playwright, and though at times inclined to play to the camera, he completely forgets himself, the director and the cameraman when the highly emotional scenes are reached and is so intensely seeped in the part that he is playing ere the story ends that one can easily forget all his earlier shortcomings.

Tom Warder, a reporter on The Daily Mail, surprises Shuman alone in his office with the girl and later drives the unscrupulous manager out of town. Three years later Shuman returns, the story having blown over, and discovers that Tom has married Ruth Shipman, the girl whom Shuman had led astray, and whom her father had cast out of his home years before.

Tom has written a play which Ruth succeeds in convincing Shuman's principal star is just the thing for her debut the coming season. The star insists on Shuman buying the play and Tom is persuaded to allow Shuman to read the manuscript.

Unscrupulous Shuman, however, merely copies out the principal scenes and returns the play, declaring he cannot use it. Not only is this picture full of excitement, depicting a fight between the Indians and the soldiers of the U. S. army which makes you sit up and take notice, and showing Tom Mix being dragged along the ground a long distance by his horse, but through it all is a dramatic story which is gripping.

Tom and Jerry, two cowpunchers, after joining a Wild West show, are forced to sell their saddles to get money enough to go home. They are on their way to the station when two girls meet them, and after a merry time, one of the girls unsuspectingly gets the money from Jerry's pocket. The boys are put in jail for fifteen days, being unable to pay their bill. Upon their release they decide to join the U. S. army. They go as recruits and are sent to Fort Apache, Arizona. On the same coach they travel is Jessie, the wife of Lieutenant Manning. Captain Shiers, the commanding officer, falls in love with Lieutenant Manning's wife and is overheard one day by the lieutenant in his attempt to make love to her.

Captain Shiers is informed that the paymaster will arrive at a station several miles away with money for the troops and he plans to get rid of Lieutenant Manning by sending him with a small escort of troops and then inform the hostile Indians, whom Lieutenant Manning has kept subdued in the past, that they can avenge themselves by making an attack upon the stage. The stage with its money and its escort of some ten or twelve recruits is on its way to the camp when it is attacked by a large band of Indians.

The stage coach in turning around the mountain side is tipped over and after a while the recruits manage to escape to the stage station in the hills. A terrific battle is fought from this house and the Indians surround it on all sides.

Finally Tom and Jerry volunteer to go to the fort for help and they are chased by a small band of the Indians. Tom's horse is shot from under him, but he jumps on the horse with Jerry and they are near the camp when Jerry is killed. Tom gets off his horse, shakes the hand of his dead pal and rides furiously toward the camp. A shot from one of the Indians enters his side and he is knocked from the horse and dragged a long distance. Finally the horse manages to free himself from his rider and runs into camp, where he is met by one of the soldiers, who recognizes it as Jerry's. A detachment of troopers is dispatched and a short distance away they find Tom, who tells them of the battle at the stage house. The whole party make a wild ride for the scene of the fight and disperse the Indians.

Mrs. Manning nurses Tom back to life and he hears Captain Shiers enter and threaten Mrs. Manning. He manages to crawl into the room and shoots the captain.

Jerry is laid to rest with all the honors due a brave soldier, and Tom is heartbroken at the loss of his life-long friend.

Despite the change of scene from ashore to afloat the interest and action continues with the same vigor that has marked the earlier episodes of this thrilling serial.

The wireless telephone is the scientific instrument that is demonstrated in this particular episode and Elaine makes use of the little instrument which Kennedy has presented to her to bring her detective lover to her assistance when she is captured by the smugglers.

The opening scene shows how Wu Fang, the Chinese master criminal, kidnaps Elaine's chauffeur and substitutes one of his own henchmen, that Elaine may be the more easily open to an attack. Craig Kennedy, disguised, and searching Chinatown for a trace of Wu Fang, chances to meet Captain Brainard of the U. Kennedy points out a passing Chinaman as one who keeps an opium joint, and shadowing him they discover a dingy apartment in which three Chinamen are receiving messages by carrier pigeons from the captain of the smuggling vessel. Trapping one of the pigeons, they learn that the vessel is to land at a certain pier at a certain hour that night, and accordingly lay their plans to be present and seize the opium.

Meanwhile, Elaine, who is being driven out into the country by her chauffeur, is kidnapped by the Chinese and held a prisoner in a room to which later the criminals bring the opium which has been brought ashore.

Elaine, bound and helpless, is turned over to the captain of the opium smuggling crew with instructions to take her to Shanghai as a slave. After she is locked up in a cabin aboard the ship, she remembers that the pocket wireless telephone given her by Kennedy is in her suitcase, and using this she summons Kennedy to her assistance.

The message reaches Kennedy just after he has surprised the Chinamen with their opium and captured the whole gang. He at once sets out aboard a revenue cutter to aid Elaine, who indicates the vessel on which she is a prisoner by waving a lantern through one of the portholes.

Wu Fang orders Elaine conveyed to China as a slave.

Unfortunately for her she is seen, and one of the crew attempts to break into the room and do away with her. Piling furniture against the door she prevents his entrance until she has time to crawl through the porthole and make her way up the shrouds of the ship, closely pursued by another member of the crew with a knife in his teeth.

Realizing she is sure to be captured, Elaine dives off into the sea, and just as the smuggler is about to overtake her, a shot from the revenue cutter kills him. Elaine is picked up by Kennedy and the two pay tribute to the wonderful scientific device that had enabled the girl to communicate with her lover through the electric waves of the air.

WE here see Ed Coxen in a new role, that of a wealthy young unscrupulous genius who deserts his wife and under the promise of an immediate marriage wins the heart of Nell, a simple and trusting girl, played by Winnifred Greenwood. The idea used in this ideal two-reel production is a very clever one and Director Henry Otto deserves credit for the splendid result he obtained from his work.

The death of Stevens Brooks.

Brooks writes a letter you are shown the last parts of it and then the scenes flash back to the episodes which it alludes to. The story is dramatic and interesting and one of which audiences never tire.

The first scenes show Mrs. Stevens Brooks leaving her beautiful home to go for a ride. As she is driving along one of the beautiful California drives, a rider passing her is thrown from his horse and rendered unconscious. Mrs. Stevens Brooks has him placed in the car and taken to the hospital. As she is leaving the injured man's bedside, Mrs. Stevens Brooks hands the nurse her card. The girl glances at it and declares that she is the only woman who is entitled to the name of Mrs. Stevens Brooks. Mrs. Stevens Brooks, surprised and overcome, listens to the story of how the girl married young Brooks and how he deserted her and then leaves for her home.

Upon arriving there the woman, who has learned of Stevens Brooks' cowardice and duplicity, tells her maid to pack up her suitcase as she is leaving. She then seats herself at a desk and writes him a letter. As she writes to him of how she gave up everything for him, how he brought her to his home after a promise to marry her and how he had then refused to marry her, the scenes change and we see her as a young girl being introduced to Stevens Brooks, a young genius. Harry Travers, an aspiring young man, proposes to her, but she refuses him and elopes with

Brooks. The young man takes her to the next town and from there they drive to his home. He tells her that they can't be married that night, but will be married the next morning. He never can find time though, to have the marriage take place.

While Mrs. Stevens Brooks is upstairs, Stevens Brooks comes in and is in the front room when his wife comes to the door. The butler recognizes her and refuses to let her in, but she brushes past him and confronts her husband. After upbraiding him for his cowardice she fires three shots at him and he falls at her feet.

The woman upstairs upon hearing the shots rushes to the lower floor and sees the nurse come out of the room. She goes in and there finds the man she has been living with dead. Realizing that her letter is now useless she tears it up and we leave her in the room alone with her dead.

Universal's "The Black Box"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett.

"NEATH IRON WHEELS," the twelfth episode of "The Black Box" serves to increase your suspicion of the professor, whose actions are becoming more and more mysterious, and when he secretly gloats over the fact that Craig cannot be arrested, without a warrant, we wonder whether he is a friend of Quest's or an enemy.

Craig strongly declares his innocence of the crimes perpetrated and laid at his door and when he breaks through the window of a burning train from which he miraculously escaped, to save the lives of a little girl and the inspector, one not only admires his courage, but feels sorry for him because he is being hounded by the detective.

The scenes of the San Francisco exposition which are shown in this episode are very good and one gets a clear idea of how San Francisco looks at the present time. Quest and his party with the criminal Craig arrive in San Francisco and are there met by an inspector from New York, whom they give Craig over to, and they decide to remain in San Francisco a few days and visit the fair.

The inspector and his prisoner are on the limited train which is going at a great speed through New Mexico when there is a sudden collision and the train is wrecked and afire. Craig manages to crawl out of the debris and is on the point of making his escape when he hears the cries of a little girl. He goes back and pulls her out of the burning car. He then makes his way through the burning train and after extricating the body of the inspector makes his escape.

He finds his way into a western cattle camp and there applies for the position of cook and endears himself to the hearts of all the men by his playing on an old violin.

The inspector recovers consciousness in a hotel in a small New Mexico town and immediately sends for Quest, who arrives with his party the next day. They can find no trace of their prisoner until one day a note is brought to them telling of the presence in the cattle camp of a man who answers Craig's description. Before they start out a black box is given to the inspector and therein is a message which reads "You have all lost again. Why not give it up? You can never win," signed by the hands.

They arrive at the cattle camp and on the point of taking Craig back with them when the westerners interfere and refuse to let their cook go with them, saying that first they must have a warrant for his arrest.

Quest and the inspector hurry back to town for a warrant and leave Laura, Lenora and the professor in the camp. That night one of the westerner's helps Craig to escape and tells him that once he gets across a certain bridge he will be over the border and the warrant will be valueless. Craig makes his escape, but just before he leaves we see an arm thrust itself into a box, draw forth from it a rope and a saw and mysteriously vanish.

Craig saves the life of a little girl.

Lenora learns of Craig's escape and when Quest arrives with the warrant she and he start on a mad chase after the escaped prisoner. Before they arrive at the bridge we again see the arm take the saw and cut through the supports of the bridge. Quest and Lenora see their prisoner on the other side of the bridge and start to gallop across, Lenora in the lead. All of a sudden the bridge parts and Lenora is plunged

Vitagraph's "The Goddess"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE interest and applause which the third chapter of the Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," awakened in the spectators at the Vitagraph theater on its presentation last week augurs well for the success of this beautiful serial, on the story of which Gouverneur Morris and Charles W. Goddard are collaborating.

More light comedy and less real progress of the plot is to be found in this release, probably, than any to come. Towards its close the situation loses its humorous tinge, however, and promises some serious and startling developments in the chapter to follow. Anita Stewart as Celestia, "The Goddess," Earle Williams as Tommy Barclay, Paul Scardon as Professor Tommy Barclay tries to regain his clothes.

Miles Stilleter, and Dan "Red Eagle" as the Indian guide, Old Man Smells-Good, are the main characters in this installment.

Briefly, this release accomplishes nothing more than a chase through the woods and the recapture of Celestia by the financial triumvirate's psychologist, Professor Stilleter. But it is not the points gained or crises worked up in this serial that attract. It is the little bits of business put over that are nothing more than the details of the action. In distributing credit for the film's clever touches and flashes of love-making and humor, Director Ralph W. Ince should not be forgotten.

Professor Stilleter finally finds his spectacles after what seemed hours of feverish search. He summons his men, and they take up the trail of Tommy Barclay, who has run away with Celestia. Up and down hills, through forests, and across a stream, the chase continues, the pair finally being located in an old cabin near the river.

Stilleter waits until Tommy takes his morning plunge before approaching Celestia. She runs down to the river bank, and implores Tommy to come to her aid, but, of course, he refuses. To prevent immediate pursuit, Stilleter collects Tommy's clothes from the branches of a nearby tree. Enraged beyond speech,

"The Builder of Bridges"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

FOR its second release through the World Film Corporation the Frohman Amusement Corporation has chosen "The Builder of Bridges," a drama by Alfred Sutro, strong and original in plot construction and containing enough light comedy and pretty romance to make the story appealing as well as compelling. With a sound script and a good cast, the company was reasonably sure of a successful play before beginning work upon it.

The production features C. Aubrey Smith, who makes his first screen appearance as Edward Thursfield, chief engineer of a bridge construction firm. Mr. Smith completely fills this difficult role, making his character a well-bred man who rules through the respect and confidence which he inspires in others. The feminine lead is in the capable hands of Marie Edith Wells, who impersonates Dorothy Faringay.

Jack B. Sherrill as Arnold and Fred Eric as Walter Gresham are the pair whose selfishly-constructed barriers make the courtship of Thursfield and Dorothy interesting. The other principals in the cast are G. W. Anson, Ed. R. Mawson, Sidney Mason, Helen Weer, and Kate Meek; all of them well-chosen types for their parts, and successful in portraying them as the story intends them to appear.

As the "builder of bridges" is seen in a social atmosphere and in his office in New York more than he is in the field of construction, only a few big outdoor scenes are necessary, but these are sufficiently awe-inspiring to suggest the power and financial strength which are felt behind the story. Beautiful interiors and splendid photography are also among the merits of the picture, which was staged under the direction of George Irving.

The play opens with the reading of Mr. Faringay's will, in which he charges his eldest daughter, Dorothy, to protect the family honor and name. Arnold Faringay, employed in the offices of a construction concern, speculates on the market with $20,000 of his firm's money, charging the expenditure to the account of the chief engineer, Edward Thursfield.

The latter is called back to the office to quote a price on an Atlantic City contract. Arnold, fearing exposure, tries to borrow the money from Walter Gresham, his sister's fiance. Failing, he confesses all to Dorothy. To avert disgrace, she follows Thursfield to Atlantic City, becomes acquainted with him, and leads him to propose to her. On returning to his office Thursfield discovers Arnold's shortage, and makes it up with his own personal check for Dorothy's sake.

When Gresham learns of Dorothy's engagement to Thursfield he denounces her as having jilted him for one who could make good her brother's theft. Thursfield, stunned at his fiancee's confession, turns his back on her pleas, and returns home. Here Dorothy calls upon the engineer, and convinces him that she accepted his proposal for himself alone. The final scene shows them riding along a prairie trail, their figures silhouetted against the setting sun.

New Feature Company Formed

A new manufacturing concern to be known as the Fulton Feature Film Company has been formed for the purpose of producing four and five reel features. H. E. Aitken, A. Kessel, and C. O. Baumann are the incorporators. The pictures will be released through the Mutual Film Corporation, probably as Mutual Master-Pictures, but with this exception the company's plans for the future are not yet ready for announcement. Adaptations of famous stage successes and well-known books will furnish the theme material for most of the features, but what subjects are to be used or when work will commence upon them is not yet decided. Messrs. Aitken, Kessel, and Baumann need no introduction to the film trade. They have established their concerns as rock-bottom units of a big industry, and, not pausing to rest on their laurels, have kept right on doing big things. With their judgment, experience, and power behind it the Fulton Feature Film Company should at once find its level with the premier feature producing concerns of today.

Essanay Buys Rights for New Photoplays

Essanay Manufacturing Company have purchased the photoplay rights for several of the strongest novels and plays of the century. Among those which have been bought and are being dramatized for multiple-reel features, to be released direct to the exhibitor through the V. L. S. E. is "The Blindness of Virtue," which is being made into a five-act play. Henry Oyen's "The Man Trail" and "The Misleading Lady" also soon will be filmed.

Changes in Universal West Coast Forces

Doris Pawn in future will play leads opposite William Dowlan with the Universal Big U Company. Val Paul has been transferred to Joseph De Grasse's company, where until the return of Pauline Bush he will play heavies with Ray Gallagher and Edna Maison. Reina Valdez, whose work in the picture game has elicited the praise of the critics, has joined the Universal's western forces, where she will play heavy characters with Henry McRae's 101 Bison company.

Director Capellani's Family Arrive from France

The news of the Lusitania tragedy brought a wave of personal horror to the many folks engaged at the World Film studios, as the wife and family of Albert Capellani, the new French director now with the World Film, were en route to America. They were on the Rochambeau, which left France only a day or so before the Lusitania sank. The family arrived safely on Tuesday, and on Thursday Mr. Capellani resumed work on the William A. Brady photoplay, "The Face in the Moonlight," in which Robert Warwick is starred.

Ruth Stonehouse Lectures in Omaha

Ruth Stonehouse, the pretty Essanay actress, spent several days in Omaha lecturing at motion picture houses, where plays featuring her were shown. She talked two evenings at the Columbia theater and one night at the Besse theater. She was given a big ovation at both places, where she told of her work in motion pictures.

Erect New Studio

In order to be able to cope with an unusual stretch of cloudy weather such as they experienced in the past few weeks, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has had plans drawn up for the construction of another and much larger interior, artificial light studio at the plant in Universal City. The new studio will cost from $100,000 to $150,000 and will be erected under the supervision of William Horsley, who built Universal City.

Otis Harlan

It is stated that Mr. Otis Harlan, the world-famous light comedian, has signed a contract with the Selig Polyscope Company to appear in Selig comedies under the new Red Seal brand. Otis Harlan is known as one of the wealthiest of stage stars. His home is in New York. He achieved an enviable reputation throughout this country as a star in the late Charles Hoyt's comedies. He also supported Elsie Janis in "The Vanderbilt Cup," and has appeared in many other productions of high class. It is said that Harlan will soon arrive in Chicago to begin work in the Selig Chicago studios.

U. S. S. Wyoming Captured Without a Shot

It was a terrifically busy day at New Rochelle. Dave Kelleher, expert location man, was being guyed to a frazzle. He had flivvered on a big assignment, which was to get the privilege of taking some scenes for a Thanhouser drama on board any one of the big battleships assembled for review by President Wilson.

Peggy Burke and Florence La Badie had been looking forward to visiting the big ships and their disappointment was saddening. So they conceived a little plan and worked it out all by themselves. Peggy and Florence then proved themselves adepts at the smile that wins, for they soon phoned to Director Sullivan, who dashed for the water front with Harry Benham.

Boys See Mackenzie Films

An interesting entertainment was given this week by Lady Mackenzie, the woman hunter, to the Boy Scouts of Aemirca. Lady Mackenzie, who has just returned from a big game hunt in East Africa, where she secured several miles of film depicting thrilling hunting scenes, was requested by A. C. Hottenroth of 313 South Bayview avenue, Freeport, L. I., to show the members of the troop in that vicinity those parts of her African pictures which might be of educational value along scout lines. Lady Mackenzie gladly complied and offered to appear at the entertainment, which was to be staged in Mr. Hottenroth's large garage, and explain the pictures herself. At the last moment, however, she found that her social duties would prevent her going and she was confronted with the problem of securing a lecturer at short notice. Philip Mindil, Jr., a lad of fifteen, whose father is her business manager, volunteered to take her place. Philip, Jr., had never seen the pictures, but it was arranged to run them off for him late in the afternoon preceding the entertainment.

The Boy Scouts showed great appreciation of the pictures, noting particularly those scenes having to do with every day life of the natives, such as cooking and grinding corn. The boys are trained in these things and followed the pictures and the lecturer with marked attention.

Fay Cops Fifty

Fay Tincher, the Mutual comedienne who so long has played "Ethel the Stenographer," in Komic productions of Paul West's "Bill the Office Boy" series, won first prize (fifty dollars) in the bathing suit parade at Venice, Cal., recently. Her bathing suit was modelled on a black and white striped dress which has helped make "Ethel" famous. Miss Tincher won over a host of other contestants who passed down the broad beach walk in electric chairs. Among them were most of the motion picture actresses in southern California. The judges were Mayor Edward Gerety, Dr. T. Mitchell, Professor W. K. Thornbury, Judge Leo Long and John Wilson. Miss Tincher's suit was in the 1915 style, a little too large to go into a vanity case, and just large enough to escape the wrath of the Woman's Reform League. When Miss Tincher appeared driving her runabout she was greeted with cheers. Her success proved popular with the crowd.

"The Spendthrift"

George Kleine's "The Spendthrift," founded on Porter Emerson Browne's celebrated Broadway success, was finished by Director Edwin at the Kleine studios last week, following a protracted period of diligent and conscientious work. Irene Fenwick will be seen in a role exactly suited to her talents in "The Spendthrift," supported by two other well-known Broadway thespians in Cyril Keightley and Malcolm Duncan. The subject is scheduled for early release through the Kleine offices.

New Producer Joins Universal

Oscar A. C. Lund, who for the past year has been with the World Film Corporation and who for three years before that was with the Eclair Company producing northwestern pictures, has allied himself with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Lund for a time operated his own company in New York under the firm name "The Washington Film Company," produced "The Dollar Mark," "The Marked Woman," and "M'liss," in addition to other Broadway legitimate success. He also has written several plays in the Swedish, his native language.

New Universal Star

Jane Novak, whose work before the eye of the camera with other motion picture companies has earned for her an enviable reputation as an actress, has joined the forces of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Universal City.

Miss Novak's first work with the new concern was in the role of cabaret dancer, one of the two feminine leads in William C. Dowlan's first picture, "Out of the Darkness." So well did she portray the part that before the completion of the picture several of the directors had asked for her as a part of their respective companies. After much discussion as to the rights of priority and so forth, Miss Novak was given over to the care of Otis Turner for the next four-reel Bosworth feature which he is to produce.

Morosco-Bosworth Secure Victory Bateman

Victory Bateman, leading woman for Edwin Booth, the two Salvinis, Louis James and other celebrated Shakespeareans, and one of the most finished actresses of the American stage, has been secured to appear before the motion picture camera at the Morosco-Bosworth studios.

Miss Bateman has played hundreds of different types of women in her illustrious career and will portray the part of a gypsy seeress in "Kilmeny," the photoplay selected as the initial starring screen vehicle for Lenore Ulrich, of "Bird of Paradise" fame." Among others in the "Kilmeny" cast are "Bill" Desmond, who has supported Lenore Ulrich for two seasons in "The Bird of Paradise," and Herbert Standing, the well known Morosco-Bosworth player.

Will Archie to Star

Will Archie, the famous little comedian of "Wildfire" fame, has just completed arrangements with the Headline Amusement Company whereby he is to be starred in a series of one-reel comedy pictures. The Headline Amusement Company has signed up several big names to support the little funster, and the scene artists and builders are being kept busy preparing the first production of the new concern. Releasing connections have not yet been entirely completed, but it is expected that one of the new big combines will handle these products.

Frank Elliott Now With Universal

Universal continues to make prominent acquisition from the legitimate field. The latest addition to the Big U roster is Frank Elliott, who was Blanche Bates' leading man, who played with John Drew in England, and who for three years was cast in prominent roles at the Drury Lane theater in the English metropolis. Mr. Elliott has played opposite Elsie Janis and Emily Stevens, and upon joining the Universal will play heavies in the Otis Turner company.

Essanay's Cartoon Films

Essanay has included in its regular release program a new feature that bids fair to be a tremendous success. This is a series of cartoons. The characters are brought to life and move across the screen just as real people. "Dreamy Dud" and "Joe Boko," originated by Wallace A. Carlson, are among the funniest caricatures that have appeared for years. There is an intense human element in these cartoons, and they hark back to the adventures of boyhood days that every man has been through and every woman recognizes in her son or brother. The first "Dreamy Dud" adventure is "A Visit to the Zoo." On the same reel, released May 26, he appears with "Wag" in "An Alley Romance" On June 9, you will see "Dreamy Lost in the Jungle," while old "Joe Boko" shows Ping Bodie a thing or two in "A Close Shave."

George DeCarlton

That George DeCarlton, the well known character actor and co-director, would become an actor became evident when he ran away from home at the age of thirteen with a traveling minstrel show and became known throughout the country as "The Wonderful Boy Soprano." DeCarlton began his real stage career in Boston, Mass., where he joined a stock company and met with such success that he organized his own stock company under the name of the DeCarlton Players. The popularity of this company was evidenced by its continued appearance at one theater in Boston for over eight years. Mr. DeCarlton next turned his attention to vaudeville and was one of the pioneers in presenting the legitimate drama on the vaudeville stage. About four years ago he joined the Reliance Company, under Director Edgar Lewis, to play characters, and in a short time was made the director's assistant. Since that time he has assisted Mr. Lewis in all his feature productions with the Fox Company, and has also supported such well known stars as William Farnum in "The Gilded Fool," "The Nigger," and "Samson"; Dorothy Donnelly in "The Thief," and David Wall in "Captain Swift."

Care of Children a Problem

Every hour was children's hour out at the American Film Manufacturing Company's Santa Barbara studios while "The Lonesome Heart" was being filmed. The specially written story, artfully built around humorous and pathetic incidents of life in an orphanage, required thirty lively little children, between the ages of two and six years. It wasn't hard to find the babies, for the stork works overtime in California, but it was hard to keep the youngsters quiet during the intervals when they were not before the camera.

Marguerita Fischer, who plays the leading role of Samanthy, the orphan of the lonesome heart, so thoroughly won the affections of the children during the time-to-wash-those-dirty-ears scenes, that the little folks could not let her leave their sight. Many and loud were the wailings that went up when Samanthy, incurring the wrath of the cold-hearted Miss Prue, was roundly whipped by the orphanage superintendent. Things came to such a pass before the film was half completed, that two special nurses were required to care for the little tots while they were not being photographed. And you may believe even those two professional nurses had their hands full.

Advertises "Hypocrites" Uniquely

Motography is in receipt of a handsome four page libretto of "The Hypocrites," prepared by the Kinema theater of Fresno, California, on the occasion of its showing at that house on May 13, 14 and 15.

The beautiful cover, in two colors, depicts an elaborate hand mirror, the glass portion of which is indicated by a sheet of tissue paper behind the opening, through which can be seen the first page of the program itself, depicting Miss Margaret Edwards as "Truth" in the Bosworth production.

Pages two and three of the text are illustrated with soft halftones and carries a brief description of the story told by the film, while the fourth page reproduces A. Faugeron's famous painting, "La Verite" (The Truth), which hangs in the Paris salon, and which gave Mrs. Phillips Smalley the inspiration for the picture. The inside back cover is devoted to coming attractions at the Kinema, the management of which is to be complimented upon its tasty and effective advertising matter.

Daily Picture Edition

On Thursday, May 20, the Los Angeles Record, a daily newspaper, published what is alleged to be the first daily moving picture edition ever printed by a newspaper.

The edition has on its first page news and gossip from the local studios, together with feature articles relating to famous players and a department for the amateur photoplaywright, containing hints as to the proper form in which to prepare scenarios.

The Record announces that picture news and features of the kind indicated above will be found each day in the future in the moving picture edition of that paper. Its success will be watched with interest by both film men and newspaper publishers throughout the country.

All Celtic Take Larger Offices

The All-Celtic Films, Inc., of 1400 Broadway, New York, producers of the "Peaceful Rafferty" series of one part Irish comedies on the World Film program, has taken larger offices in the Knickerbocker building, which was made necessary by the big increase in activities of the company, of which Gene Techenor is general manager; Henry Schlatter, vice-president; Charles C. O'Hara, president, and J. A. Fitzgerald, director-general.

Using Motography's Review

The distributors of the Salisbury "Wild Animal Life in America" films have just issued as a supplement to their other press matter an additional press sheet reproducing Motography's review of the Salisbury film and the slips on which this tribute is printed are now being enclosed in all letters being mailed to exchanges and exhibitors from the New York office.

Cox to Go to South America

George L. Cox, producer, is planning a trip into the South American forests and is equipping himself with a camera, film and all necessary impedimenta to take a few pictures of his trip.

George Cox.

Mr. Cox has received two splendid offers from large manufacturers, but not having had a vacation in seven years, and feeling the need of rest, he was obliged to turn them down. Actual experience in the field with the intricacies and vagaries of the camera should add to his remarkable talents as, during his youth, he studied art for four years before taking to the stage in support of such well known players as David Warfield and Valerie Bergere. After some years of stock work he joined the Selig forces as an actor, being promoted to the position of director after a short time, in which capacity he acquitted himself very creditably. Mr. Cox has traveled throughout Europe extensively and his sojourn in South America and the knowledge he will gain from actually operating a camera himself should fit him for a splendid position on his return. He is at present engaged in directing the photographing of three big industrial films for the Advance Motion Picture Company, of which company he is general manager and producer. His many friends join us in wishing him a pleasant trip during his well earned rest.

New Amex Company

The Amex Motion Picture Company is a new producing concern in process of formation at Tucson, Arizona. The proposition is reported to be the plan of William Connell, formerly a resident of San Diego, who arrived in Tucson several days ago and interested local capitalists in his proposed company. It is reported that Mr. Connell has succeeded in acquiring abundant backing, and articles of incorporation are now being drawn up and the organization will be completed within the next few days.

The former Eclair studio near Tucson may be utilized as a location for the new company, the plans of which include the production of dramas, comedies and feature films.

Trio of Stars

The Fox Film Corporation has placed in rehearsal at its studio in Jersey City a new five part photoplay entitled, "A Mother's Love;" the work of Rex Ingram, who will also assist J. Gordon Edwards in directing the feature. A trio of stars, consisting of Betty Nansen, Claire Whitney and Stuart Holmes, will interpret the principal roles.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brevities of the Business

E. R. Pearson, manager of the Kansas City Branch of the V. L. S. E., is a veteran film man who, through four years' experience with the General Film Company, is thoroughly acquainted with the past performances of "The Big Four." Mr. Pearson joined the General Film Company at Omaha, as assistant manager, in February, 1911. In 1912 he was appointed manager, remaining there until June, 1914, at which time he resigned and accepted the management of the Omaha Branch of the Eclectic, later called Pathe. Just previous to accepting his present position, Mr. Pearson devoted his time to the booking of special features. "In this business there is certain to be a 'tomorrow,'" says Mr. Pearson, "and he who looks into that tomorrow, will find practically certain proof of the success of the V-L-S-E. No industry can stand still. It must either advance or retreat. V-L-S-E represents the greatest advance that has been taken since the inception of the business." It can be said that Mr. Pearson is justifying his faith by his works, and his is a busy office.

M. H. Hoffman, who has been general manager of the Universal Film Exchange of New York for the past year, was last week appointed general manager of exchanges for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. This is one of the most important positions in the Universal organization and the officers of the company feel that they have selected the logical man for this exacting office. The choice lay among some ten or twelve men of long experience, any one of whom would have been fully qualified for the work, but the fact that Mr. Hoffman happened to be located in New York, where he would be in closer touch with the executive officers of the Universal, turned the scales in his favor. Mr. Hoffman's rise in the exchange field has been very rapid and entirely due to his own efforts and personality, having been successively manager of the Twenty-third Street and the Messa Exchanges. He is at once business like and genial and has always been a personal friend to every exhibitor in his territory, which accounts for his success.

William Worthington, who played "Craig" in "The Black Box" serial, is now directing his own company. His first picture will be "Jackals All," a two-reel drama of novel theme. Otis Turner in future will handle the Hobart Bosworth Company. Mr. Worthington finished several of the reels of "The Black Box" serial in the absence of Mr. Turner and, despite his protests, was forthwith harnessed up to a director's job as a reward for his good work.

Howard Scott, one of the most remarkable interpreters of character roles in the legitimate, has been added to the rapidly growing number of new artists at the Selig coast studios. Mr. Scott first will be seen in "The Isle of Content," a sea story now in the hands of Director George Nicholls.

Frank Griffin, one of Mack Sennett's Keystone directors, is back at work after a few days on the sick list. He has temporarily joined Managing Editor Del Ruth's scenario department.

Miss Olga Printzlau Clark has joined the scenario department of the Universal Pacific Coast studios. Miss Clark until recently had been doing scenario work for the American company at Santa Barbara.

Little Peggy Shannon who is playing opposite Joe Sullivan, the original Peaceful Rafferty created by Charles O'Hara, has signed up permanently with the All-Celtic Film Company to play the leading feminine roles in the Rafferty comedies.

Lawrence B. McGill of the Metro forces is assembling the cast for the forthcoming production of "Sealed Valley." William J. Bauman the other newly secured director is now at Los Angeles with Francis X. Bushman starting work on the first Quality-Metro release, in which Bushman will appear, "The Second in Command."

Henry McRae and his Bison players followed the Sells-Floto show all over California for more than two weeks in order to obtain all the circus scenes required in "Patsy of the Circus," a two-reel drama featuring Marie Walcamp and Wellington Playter which is to be released under the Bison brand on June 12.

Marshall Neilan and Al Filson are the latest directors to join the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Neilan is now World Film Corporation—It is freely predicted, from what might be called semi-official sources, that the stock of this company will go on a dividend basis on or before July 1. On the other hand, information which cannot be ignored has been offered to the effect that the operating expenses of this organization make such a tremendous cut into its gross revenue that profits are not what might reasonably be expected. Stock can be had in fairly liberal amounts around 4¼.

Mutual Film Corporation has been unquestionably weak during the past five days, and there have been quite a number of offerings from New York. As the annual meeting takes place on June 16 and proxy requests are now in the mail, both politics and some possible change in the policy may explain the decline in the market.

Metro Film—This company has made a very decided impression in the film field and its offerings are having due effect upon the business of the older and larger concerns. Its securities have not as yet become sufficiently active to warrant their general quotation, but this company must be reckoned with in the general distribution of business.

New York Motion Picture Corporation continues to be the strongest stock in the last week and sales have taken place at figures above 80. Offerings are, however, very scarce.

North American Film Corporation—That "The Diamond from the Sky" represents a very distinct find as an interest-holding story, is made known from the tribunal of last resorts, namely—"box office receipts." Beyond any question of conjecture this production is a very decided success, with bookings in force jumping each week to new high levels.

An interesting evidence that many of the foreign countries, despite their enforced attention on war conditions, still secure their amusement through the films, is found in a statement of the American Film Releases' foreign representative as to the size and continuity of orders for releases during the past two months, particularly for English moving picture theaters. This goes to show that the film industry enjoys a certain immunity even from war problems.

playing opposite Mary Pickford and is one of the most versatile actors in filmland. Al Filson was formerly of the team Filson and Errel. He is one of the most striking figures on the screen when appearing in motion pictures.

"The Scarlet Sin" is the title of an unusual four-reel feature which Otis Turner and Hobart Bosworth have started this week.

It has been definitely decided by the Directors of the Metro Pictures Corporation to present the brilliant young star, Ann Murdock, in the former Frohman success, "A Royal Family." Miss Murdock, at present appearing in "A Celebrated Case" will begin work on the first Metro-Murdock release immediately after a short rest in California, whither she will go following the Empire Theater engagement.

Beatriz Michelena, star of the California Motion Picture Corporation, received an appeal from a man, who is serving time in the state prison in Montana, asking her aid, after he is freed. Miss Michelena took up the case and is raffling off two silk pillow tops, the man embroidered in jail.

A very promising little actress has gone to the American, in Helen Rosson. She has a good record on the legitimate stage and gained her first screen experience at the Universal where she made a big hit in the first picture she appeared in.

Emmet Corrigan, the virile American actor, has been engaged by the Metro Pictures Corporation for early appearance before the camera in a picturization of Frank L. Packard's recent and successful novel, "Greater Love Hath No Man," and upon which work will begin at once at the Fort Lee Metro studio. "Greater Love Hath No Man," published by George H. Doran, is the biggest story and most powerful plot yet concocted by Packard and will prove admirable material for Mr. Corrigan.

The Typhoon Fan Company has installed in Madison Square Garden motion picture house, an apparatus which will keep the house cool in the hottest weather. During the coolest parts of the night, the great blowers will be run, driving a tremendous amount of cool air from the floor to the highest rafters. The Typhoons will produce air currents equal to any sea breeze, and are free from noise.

Harry Edwards, the man who directs the pictures in which funny Billy Ritchie appears, is the latest addition to the sick list. Harry has gone through a siege of "la grippe" —he did not lay off soon enough.

Word has been received from Arthur Johnson, the Lubin leading man, that his illness of the past weeks has not been serious. He had a nervous breakdown and decided to rest up a little bit before resuming work at the studios.

Either the Elks have captured the Thanhouser studio or vice versa. Almost every man at the New Rochelle institution was out one Sunday night not long ago, at the Elks' Home, when Jack Harvey was initiated.

Wm. F. Haddock, popularly known as "Silent Bill," began work on May 20 upon a melodramatic and sensational five-reel photoplay which will be entitled, "The Trade Secret." Betty Marshall will be the leading woman and Frederick de Bellville will take the leading male part.

Surpassing in interest many of the feature films that have been produced in St. Augustine, Florida, during the past few months, by some of the most prominent moving picture concerns, is "La Giaconda," by the famous author Gabriel D'Annununzio, that is being staged by the Fox Film Corporation under the direction of Frank Powell, acknowledged to be one of the best directors in the country.

Diving from a height of twenty-five feet T. C. Jack, of 3813 Baldwin avenue, a moving picture actor, struck the bottom of the tank at the Hot Sulphur Springs bath in Eastlake park last night, receiving injuries from which he will probably die.

Bessie Barriscale with Truly Shattuck and Charles Ray have finished "The Painted Lady" and this Master Picture will create much attention by reason of the acting in it.

Los Angeles has a brand new industry, the Jas. Neill School of Motion Picture Acting, which creates actors and actresses for the moving picture studios of the country. Neill is one of the best known stage directors and actors, in the United States.

The re-booking of "The Juggernaut," for the fourth time covering a period of nine days showing, by the Mary Anderson Theater in Louisville, Ky., establishes a world record for picture play re-engagements; this record combined with the wonderful enthusiasm the film has aroused, stamps the production as one of the greatest successes in the history of motion pictures.

Director William Christy Cabanne says that his efforts at the Reliance-Majectic studios have been greatly added by his four-weeks old daughter, Julia Goode Cabanne.

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, the well known photo-playwright has been dangerously prostrated in Los Angeles, where she went to be present at the filming of her forthcoming serial, Selig's "Chronicles of Bloom Center," over the loss of her only sister, Mrs. R. Delno Shymer, a well-known young society woman of New York, on the Lusitania.

George Fawcett, the well known actor from the speaking stage is appearing with Bosworth, Inc., this week, in "The Majesty of the Law," and playing opposite him is Miss Myrtle Stedman, in one of the best parts she has undertaken during her long picture career.

Lewis J. Selznick, vice president and general manager of the World Film Corporation is on a tour of the principal World Film offices in the East and Middle West.

This will prevent his starting on the big features for a while, but the serial is all important and with this famous director at the head of affairs, it should command even greater interest than it has already achieved.

C. B. Salisbury, one of the members of Salisburys' Inc., a new concern releasing a program of Wild Life in America pictures, was recently taken ill with appendicitis and removed to a hospital where an operation was found necessary. It proved successful, and the latest reports have it that Mr. Salisbury is gradually improving.

A company of the Famous Players, headed by John Barrymore, under the direction of Oscar Eagle, last Tuesday returned to New York from Cuba, where they went about a month ago, to produce a feature film version of Richard Harding Davis' famous adventurous romance, "The Dictator."

In view of his excellent services, Max Levy, crack roadman of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation, has been given the managership of the Kansas City office of the same company.

Because of the unusually heavy and prolonged season of rain along the Pacific coast, particularly in the southern part, the various motion picture manufacturing concerns have been forced to remain idle day after day because of the lack of light so necessary to the making of pictures.

The following office changes have recently been announced by the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., 71 West 23rd street: Walter J. Pratt has been appointed manager of the Toronto office of the company; A. G. Buck has been engaged to look after the company's interests in St. Louis and vicinity, operating from the company's headquarters in the Mound City.

"The House of a Thousand Candles" is being put into production at the Selig Chicago studios. Mr. Harry Mestayer, the famous stage star, will take the leading role. The story is a film adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's wonderful novel. Mr. Mestayer will be supported by an all-star cast of players including Miss Grace Darmond and Mr. John Charles.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Miriam Cooper, the Mutual player, is in New York for a vacation. She has a month's leave of absence and intends having a good rest. Besides her appearance in "The Birth of a Nation," Miss Cooper has worked hard the past season on her stellar appearances in a series of Mutual plays.

Mae Marsh, the Griffith-Mutual star, is "the happiest girl," to quote Miss Marsh herself, in Los Angeles these days for her sister, who is known in film circles as Margaret Loveridge, is paying her a visit. Miss Marsh is very fond of her sister and is doing her utmost to make her stay a permanent one.

Lillian and Dorothy Gish are having their dressing room in the Mutual studios at Hollywood remodelled. Designers, decorators and painters have been in charge for several days. It already begins to look as if it were to be the prettiest dressing room in Southern California.

On Sunday, May 15, George "Slim" Summerfield, well known as "Keystone Slim" among movie lovers, was married to "Jerry" Breen, a young motion picture actress. Justice Summerfield, a Los Angeles jurist, officiated, and the happy young couple were congratulated by several hundred friends including about two hundred Keystone employees. Mr. and Mrs. Summerfield will be compelled to postpone their honeymoon trip until later in the season as both are too busy in pictures at present to leave Los Angeles.

Syd Chaplin, Keystone funmaker, has been ill at his home for the past week but is expected to be about in a few days. Mr. Chaplin has been working unusually hard for several weeks and suffered a nervous breakdown.

The Smalleys have finished the first of their new Universal feature releases. Their three-reel allegorical morality picture is to be known as "Scandal" and is slated for release in the near future.

Hettie Grey Baker, of the Mutual scenario staff, addressed an assemblage of newspaper women and writers at the monthly dinner last week of the Los Angeles Women's Press Club. Miss Baker's subject was "Scenarios from the Editor's Viewpoint."

Walter Reed, former musical comedy comedian, has been added to the staff of writers in the Keystone scenario department under the direction of Hampton Del Ruth.

Anna Little has a new bungalow at Hollywood. She has had her eye on it for a long time and now she and her mother are safely and comfortably housed there.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

In the Wolf's Den—(EIGHTH EPISODE ROAD O' STRIFE)—LUBIN—MAY 24.—Alene, leaving Elmhurst for the city, becomes a victim of a plot of Jerome's, and with the assistance of Daisy, a chorus girl friend, becomes a member of a musical comedy company, which Jerome purchases entire, that he may bring about Daisy's discharge. He then lures Alene to his home and drinks a toast to her from the cup he brought from the mineral spring. The prophecy that whoever drank aught but water from the cup would die, seems fulfilled, since Jerome, immediately after drinking, falls dead across his dining-room table. Daisy meanwhile has gone to Elmhurst in search of Robert Dane. See review, page 925, this issue. N. G. C.

The Buckskin Shirt—BIOGRAPH—MAY 31.—Ivan Christy and Violet Reid starred. Whistling Sandy, who once saved a woman from Indians, receives a note from her little son requesting that he send him a buckskin shirt. He makes the shirt himself and sets out with it to deliver it in person. The coach is held up and Sandy is injured. The lead horses are cut loose by Sandy and manage to bring the sheriff and his posse, and the surviving outlaws are captured. The passengers press gifts upon Sandy, but he refused everything but a "watch for the kid." The watch and shirt arrive in time for Christmas.

The Longer Voyage—ESSANAY—MAY 31.—Wanda Howard and Sydney Ainsworth featured. Mrs. Chesham learns that a serious operation is necessary to save her life. About this time her husband is invited to go on a yachting trip, and as she does not want to worry him she tells him nothing of what the doctor had told her, and he leaves her unknowing. While on the trip the millionaire, Ponsonby, tells Chesham that he has only loved one girl, and that girl, Chesham learns, was his wife. Realizing what she really means to him, Chesham returns to her, but too late, as she dies in his arms.

Wife for Wife—(THREE REELS)—KALEM—MAY 31.—Featuring Wilmuth Merkyl and Regina Richards. Edward Walton entrusts the management of his estate to Richard Singleton, who meets and falls in love with Edith. She, however, learns of his intimacy with Susie, a mulatto, and spurns his advances. Richard sells the mulatto slave and George, her husband, is driven almost insane. Fearing his anger, Richard tells George that Susie is sold in accordance with instructions from Walton. Edith and Edward meet aboard and are married. George receives word of Susie's death and decides to make Edward pay wife for wife. Richard still loves Edith and one night while Walton is away the scoundrel seizes her in his arms, when Edward returns home unexpectedly. A fight ensues, which ends in Richard's death. George appears, binds Edward to a chair and tells him upon whose head all guilt for the trouble lies. He delves into a gunnysack and brings out a rattlesnake and is about to allow the reptile to bury its fangs into Edward, when the latter tells him it was Richard who sold Susie without his permission and that he wanted only to get her out of the way.

The Blood Yoke—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—MAY 31.—Charles Drennen, Jet's guardian, gives a party in her honor on her birthday. Robert Fletcher proposes to her, but she refuses him, saying that she must consult her guardian first. Drennen, the guardian, pondering in the library, thinks back to the time when he made Virginia, a mulatto girl, a promise to care for her child. He awakens from his dream and calls Jet and tells her the story. Jet sees Robert and tells him that she is a mulatto and he turns from her, but afterwards writes to her saying that his love is strong for her, but she replies that marriage is impossible.

Mrs. Jarr's Auction Bridge—VITAGRAPH—MAY 31.—Rose Tapley and Harry Davenport featured. Mrs. Jarr's Uncle Henry is ordered to get a new bridge for his farm at Hay Corners. He hears that Mrs. Jarr is having an Auction Bridge and not being used to city ways decides that he can get a new bridge at auction, by going to his niece's. He arrives and when the Jarrs are in the midst of their exclusive affair, Uncle Henry comes in in his Sunday best and causes some excitement. He gets into the punch-bowl and indulges too freely. His expedition ends up in his getting the "water cure" from the firemen's hose, who are called by mistake when Uncle Henry mails a letter in the fire alarm box.

The Maid o' the Mountains—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 1.—Arthur Van Buren, a novelist on a vacation, meets in the mountains Mary, the daughter of a moonshiner. Yielding to his entreaties, she goes to the little church and they are married. Van Buren is called home by the illness of his father. No one knows of the girl's marriage and she is forced to attend a dance with Jim, a mountaineer, where he plans to announce his engagement to her. She escapes from the house and by a clever ruse leads the mountaineers to believe she is dead. Van Buren returns to the mountains for Mary, but is told that she is dead. He goes back to town and is grieving over her loss, when one day he runs down a woman with her baby while in his machine, and turns out to be his wife. Louise Vale and Franklin Ritchie featured.

The Fable of the Intermittent Fusser—Essanay—June 2.—With John Lorenze and Warda Howard. When Walter was a high school rabbit he snooped after one old enough to be his mother. Next he fell for an Amazon. The she acrobat couldn't see him. As a sophomore he was strong for the actorines. When he was a senior the footlight favorites were no longer worthy of him. He was all snarled up over the sister of a prof. His father put him to work and two weeks later he had forgotten the lady highbrow. He was full of business and had very little time for the fluffy gender. At 40 he was known as a good business man with an adamant heart. All the fair sex passed him up. Then he met Violet. She was a half-portion aged 18. A week later he began sending flowers and sitting up and barking when she snapped her fingers. She got him with a pruning hook and now he's a proud father. (Length approx. 1,000 feet.)

The Secret Well—(Two Reels)—Kalem—June 2.—Featuring Marin Sais and an all-star cast. Wharton, a moonshiner, escapes from Denton and, unable to find him, Denton secures the assistance of Netty and Lesan. While the men are poking about in the rubbish, Netty overturns a box and discovers an empty well. An instant later Netty is made a prisoner and compelled to follow the criminal through a passage at the bottom of the well which connects the latter with the chimney of a deserted house. Lesan and Denton discover the well and Lesan goes to investigate it while Denton goes for help. He is beset by the moonshiners and knocked unconscious. He recovers and finds the secret door, and escapes and meets Denton and a squad of policemen. The girl is saved by a daring ruse.

The Darkness Before Dawn—(Special Three Reels)—Lubin—June 2.—Young Dr. Elliott comes to Carson's apartment just as Carson has attacked Elsie Moore, and as she has fainted has locked her in his bedroom. The young physician finds the girl's handkerchief and bracelet and Carson winks knowingly at him, which disgusts Elliott. Later, the doctor, who has been in love with a young widow, does not propose to her as she is not his ideal of a wife. He meets Elsie by chance and hires her as a stenographer. He falls in love with the girl and the day they are married he receives a letter from the widow, telling him that she has given up her bad habits. Later, Elsie and her husband go to the widow's to a dance and there the girl meets Carson, who makes advances to her and they are seen by Elliott, who leaves his wife and is living alone. One night he goes to the widow and tells her that he is going to divorce Elsie, when a telephone call is sent in for him telling him of the arrival of a child at Elsie's home. He returns and husband and wife are reconciled.

Red Wins—Selig—June 2.—Matty is jeered at in the slum streets and called "red head." In the interior of a saloon Matty's father wins a fight, but loses his liberty and is sentenced to five years in the penitentiary. Three years later Matty Connoly, is a chorus girl, self-reliant and self-respected. Her beauty attracts the attention of Bryan Douglas and he tries to persuade her to enjoy the bright lights, but she refuses. One night her derelict father returns and Bryan Douglas is stunned when he learns that the sodden creature is Matty's father. Matty cares for her father, however, and Bryan later returns and asks Matty to be his wife.

Bunny in Bunnyland—Vitagraph—June 2.—Cartoon of Mr. Bunny on a trip through Bunnyland. The drawings were made by Mr. Carl Lederer and show Bunny stepping off from the boat at the pier and starting out in his car. He has many thrilling experiences on his homeward trip, running down a couple of pedestrians, amongst other things. He arrives in his home town and there is caught by a cook, in the act of stealing some pies. The cook gives chase and Bunny grabs the tail of a cow and she starts in a mad run with him over hill and dale, finally swallowing him.

The Heart of an Actress—Biograph—June 3.—Isabel Rea, in the leading role of an actress who goes to the country for her vacation and there falls in love with her landlady's son. The actress does not know that the boy had been engaged to another girl before her coming and when she is saved by the other girl from drowning and the girl sobs out the story of her sadness, the actress leaves for the city. The country boy follows her and comes to her apartment, where she laughs at him for taking her seriously and sends him back to the girl. The actress then surprises those present by bursting into tears.

Sophie and the Faker—Essanay—June 3.—The faker comes to town with an electric magic belt that makes weak men strong. He goes to Sophie's for board. There he makes love to Sophie, to the resentment of her husband. The faker catches the husband, and he and one of his assistants hang him up on a barn. Sophie releases him, ties one of the belts on her husband and he proceeds to beat the faker up and hang him on the barn to stay. Featuring Margaret Joslin and Victor Potel.

Mrs. Baldwin invites him to meet Marvelli, a noted inventor, and also her daughter Lola. Marvelli and Alden decide to see if they can test the invention and so the young inventor leaves for his loft in the old house. Meantime, Micheals, a crazy man, thinking that Marvelli has done him harm, attacks him, and thinking him dead turns to leave when he sees Lola, who has witnessed the scene. He captures her and placing her in an automobile is driving at full speed down the road, when they pass over a rotten bridge and are plunged into the river. The mad man crawls out and carries his unconscious captive into the house, where Alden is. There Alden comes upon them and after a terrific battle he and the girl are saved by Marvelli, who has regained consciousness and gets the message from Alden through the young man's invention.

Life's Mysteries—Mina—June 3.—Flossie decides that she must marry a man like Jess Willard. Billy, who is short in stature, has been her favorite suitor, but the arrival of Count Padinsky, the exemplification of Flossie's type, puts him a little out of the running. At Flossie's home a reception is given, but Billy cannot gain entrance. Nothing daunted he enters the house through a window and steps into the count's room and finds that that man is not big and powerful, as he appears, but is padded. He decoys the count from the house, forcibly throws him in an automobile and compels him to change his dress suit and pads for a ballet dancer's costume. He carries him back and places him in the parlor of Flossie's home. Flossie turns repentent to Billy and he takes her in his arms.

Accordingly he breaks open his bank and as his mother and father are out he and Lily start for the parade. They go to the big Amusement park and there see the big Mardi Grass parade and numerous other interesting sights. At Steeplechase Park they are admitted as Sonny tells the gatekeeper that he is Sonny Jim of the Vitagraph Company. In the meantime his father and mother have started out for him and come upon he and Lily just going to ride on one of the thrilling coasters. The children are taken home and promise not to start out again alone.

Her Dormant Love—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 4.—Charles H. West, Claire McDowell and Harry Carey featured. The discontented wife does not realize that the unhappiness in her life is her fault; she has not ceased to love her ever-attentive husband, as she never learned to care for him. One day in his absence a stranger comes to the house and she aids him in his escape. Later her husband returns with the deputies that are on the trail of Dandy Dick, a murderer, and her husband tells her that he is going to capture him and get the $100 for his reward. The wife, realizing that the bandit has a revolver, swiftly mounts a horse and comes upon him in the seclusion of the woods. She allows him to embrace her and at the same time extracts the revolver from his pocket. The desperado is captured and the wife, with a sigh of thankfulness, falls into her husband's arms.

The Test—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—JUNE 4.—Robert Poindexter accepts from John Burly, his employe, who has stolen a large sum of money from him, an agreement to pay all back within a year. During her visit in the East with her uncle, Suzanna Poindexter and Burly have been mutually attracted to each other. Unknown to him, she has overheard his confession of the theft. On returning home, Suzanna learns of Burly's struggle to keep straight, and writes her uncle asking him to help the young man by sending him a recommendation. But he writes back that Burly is not worthy of one. To prove it, she tests him by dropping her purse where he is sure to find it. Although weak from hunger and almost in rags, Burly returns Suzanna's purse. She tells her father the story of the young man's theft and his intention of making it good, and asks him to secure employment for Burly. He consents, and a few days later finds Burly employed in Judge Gary's law office. He makes good his promise to his former employer and wins Suzanna for his wife. C. R. C.

The Bell of Pennance—KALEM—JUNE 4.—A Carlyle Blackwell-Alice Joyce reissue. Henry Fitch, a young American, rescues the Donna Josefa from a band of ruffians. He later presents a letter of introduction to Senor Carrillo and learns that the girl is his host's daughter. Junipero Serra, a Spaniard, is in love with the girl, but Fitch elopes with her and they are married in Mexico. A decoy letter causes Fitch and his bride to return a year later and there he is arrested and tried for violating the laws of the church and territory. The penalty for this offense is imprisonment and banishment. Father Vincente suggests to Josefa that Fitch secure a bell to replace the one that had been stolen years before. A month later Fitch stands before his three judges, the bell is heard ringing and the American is freed.

The Decoy—LUBIN—JUNE 4.—Flo, the daughter of an Eastern "sharper," is compelled by her father to attract Bert Sheldon, who has come to the western town that Smith is working in, and in that way get him to invest his money in a fine tract of land, which in reality belongs to the Sunset Water Company. Flo learns to love the young man and one day warns him of the conspiracy. He thanks her and at the same time shows the girl the photo of his sweetheart. Although the girl realizes that her love is hopeless she once again saves the young man from her father and after he has left Smith, realizing the daughter's position, resolves to take a new turn.

For Her Friend—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 5.—Cast including Charles Perley, Augusta Anderson, Violet Reid and Robert Nolan. Mrs. Ashton is delighted that her husband has brought home his friend Stanton, as she knows that her chum Helen is in love with him. She tells her husband nothing of her ideas and he misconstrues their tete-a-tetes. He finds a letter from Stanton which seems to hint at a clandestine meeting at a mask ball. He attends the ball and thinks he sees the couple, but they are lost in the maze of dancers. He returns home and awaits their return, but is surprised when his wife suddenly enters the room clad in her peignoir and Stanton is surprised when the woman at his side unmasks and is Helen.

The Clutch of Circumstance—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—JUNE 5.—This is one of the first of the Essanay productions made in Tennessee to be released and by its unusual mountain scenery gives promise of big things to come. E. H. Calvert and Lillian Drew are featured, Miss Drew being particularly winsome as Nance, a mountain girl beloved by Ely Turner, an unscrupulous lawyer, who, when defeated in court by Frank Morrison, son of the governor, plots to get Morrison out of the way by employing Nance's father to shoot him after he has been lured to the mountains. Nance, learning of the plot, warns Frank, but is suspected by Turner and when the two are struggling Turner's gun is accidentally discharged and the man falls dead. Frank is accused of the murder and after being sent to the penitentiary is saved by Nance's going to the governor with the whole story, whereupon Frank is pardoned.

A Chip of the Old Block—EDISON—JUNE 5.—Featuring an all-star cast. John Westerbrook, president of the Wheat Exchange Bank, receives word from a minister in Deer Lake, N. Y., telling him of the presence of his grandson there. Harry, the boy, is sent to his grandfather, and is made messenger in his grandfather's bank, much to the chagrin of John Westerbrook's son, Herbert, his wife and their son Paul. Paul and Harry are rivals for the hand of Mary Wentworth, daughter of the vice-president of the bank. Money is missing and Mrs. Herbert Westerbrook tries to have Harry accused of the theft. After a time, Paul is found to be the real thief. Harry is made teller in the bank and wins Mary's hand.

The Human Chain—KALEM—JUNE 5.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Deering and his gang, to gain possession of gems valued at $30,000, decoy Helen out of the station and rifle the safe. Helen, however, later seizes the package and throws it into the river. Deering and his men jump into a launch in an effort to recover the gems. A human chain is formed by the railroad men who come to Helen's assistance, and she climbs down and tries to catch the package with her feet, but Deering and his men tear her away from the arms of the man supporting her and also get the package. Morton halts a freight train and causes the engineer to speed down the track in pursuit of the crooks. When they attempt to land they are captured by the train crew after a hard battle.

The New Butler—LUBIN—JUNE 5.—Bill gets the position of butler and catches the man of the house flirting with the housemaid. He is sent by the Irish cook to get a chicken for dinner and starts out for one. He spies a beautiful young lady standing on the corner and picks her up, brings her into the kitchen and after setting her down tells Nora that there is her "chicken." He gets an introduction to the mistress and in bowing to her slips on a rug and both of them are precipitated to the floor. That night there is a dinner party and Bill upsets a tray. After much trouble Bill lands from the floor above onto the dining room table and now he is looking for a job.

Beautiful Belinda—Selig—June 5.—Professor Boggs, a bachelor, is in the jungle. Professor Diggs writes him that his wife and daughter are with him and invites the professor to visit them. The photograph of Diggs' daughter is so beautiful that Boggs tries with a telescope to get a glimpse of the lovely girl. Instead of this he sees the Diggs' camp raided by a band of Fuzzy-Wuzzies. Mrs. Diggs tells the professor that beautiful Belinda is gone. Boggs plunges into the jungle, falls over a cliff on the heads of the blacks and is dissappointed to learn that the beautiful Belinda is only a dog. When he returns to camp he finds that the daughter, a vision of loveliness, is with him in reality.

The Way of the Transgressor—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—June 5.—Haggerty hides his money and papers in a sliding panel in his home and a few moments later dies. Turner, the bank cashier, finds him and just then Haggerty's son Arthur and his bride Fanchette, a former cabaret singer, come into the room. They all look for the money but it cannot be found and Arthur and his bride are penniless. The girl goes back to singing again and Arthur starts in to living riotously and cannot make a living. Later Turner finds the money and one night goes to the cafe and there becomes enamored of Fanchette, not recognizing her as Arthur's wife. She knows that he must have found the money and so accompanies him home. Here he attacks her and is tripped and killed. At the trial Arthur hears the truth of the matter and he and Fanchetts are reconciled.

It's an Ill Wind—Falstaff—May 28.—Angry at the servant, little Maurice and Lou Cook seek revenge by cutting the clothesline. The strong wind takes possession of Norah's whole week's washing. But others are benefited by the occurrence. It cures one man of drink; raises an old maid's hopes of marriage for a time; brings temporary happiness to a clothes dealer; and finally, furnishes a poor widow and her three children with much-needed clothing.

The Resolve—(Two Reels)—American—May 31.—A convincing dramatic story featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen. Nell, a simple girl, refuses the love of an aspiring young man and elopes with an unscrupulous genius, upon the promise of an immediate marriage. She goes to his home with him, but he is too busy to pay heed to Nell's pleadings. Finally fate intrudes. She meets his wife, a nurse. The nurse, upon discovering there is another Mrs. Stevens Brooks, goes to her husband's home and kills him. For further review, see page 931 of this issue. J. C. G.

Little Chrysanthemum—Beauty—June 1.—A drama of unusual merit, featuring Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell. Little Chrysanthemum, an orphan, is brought over to America from Japan by Mrs. Leighton and her daughter.

Mrs. Leighton's son Bob is especially thoughtful of the little Japanese girl, and she mistakes his kindness for love. One day at a big party Little Chrysanthemum overhears Bob proposing to a society girl. She goes up to her room and kills herself. J. C. G.

Her Filmland Hero—Majestic—June 1.—Gordon is kept in a miserable frame of mind by his girl's adoration of a certain hero of the screen. One day the girl falls asleep and dreams that her screen hero saves her from Gordon and his gang, showers her with gold and promises to marry her the next day and take her away for a honeymoon tour. She awakens to find herself hugging a sofa cushion, and Gordon standing smiling down at her.

A Golden Rainbow—American—June 2.—Featuring an all-star cast, with Vivian Rich and Harry Von Meter. Eric Highes and Harry Rice are suitors for the hand of their employer's daughter, Mollie Milton. Mollie shows a preference for Eric, which arouses Harry and he seeks a method of revenge. One day he hears that the company is expecting a shipment of gold dust and, after seeing Eric put it in the safe, he steals the dust and hides it amongst a lot of rocks, where it is found the next day by Mollie's little brother. Meanwhile Mr. Milton, discovering his loss and finding Eric's key on the floor, gets the sheriff to go after and arrest him. At the last moment Mollie's little brother tells of what he has found and Eric's innocence is established. J. C. G.

The Conversion of Frosty Blake—Broncho—(Two Reels)—June 2.—Starring William S. Hart. Frosty Blake, proprietor of the Legal Tender saloon, bitterly opposes the Rev. Horace Brightray, who, while recuperating in the West, holds services in the hotel dining room. Blake is successful in having him put out of the hotel. The young parson, in desperation, attacks the saloonkeeper and then faints because of his weakened condition. Bubbles, a dance hall girl, revives him and nurses him back to health. Frosty concedes Brightray the use of his dance hall for one hour on Sunday for religious meetings. Horned Toad, a desperado, attempts to break up the meeting, but is driven out at the point of Blake's gun. The Horned Toad shoots, and Frosty gives chase. The outlaw hides behind a tree in front of the minister's house. As Frosty comes within range, Brightray suddenly thrusts himself between him and his enemy. The parson is shot. Before dying, he marries Blake and Bubbles.

One Who Serves—Reliance—June 2.—Jim Burns, out of work, sits watching his sick child while his wife goes for a doctor. Chuck White enters and induces Jim to join him in a job to be pulled off that night. Mrs. Burns returns, exultant in having obtained a famous doctor's promise to visit her child. That night Jim and Chuck enter the house they have picked to rob. Jim knocks down the man who confronts them. As he is about to follow White out of the window, Jim notices a slip of paper in the stricken man's hand. It proves to be a memorandum of the great doctor's visit to Jim's own child. Burns stays and revives the great doctor, explaining his presence by saying that he has come to speak with him about his child. The doctor saves the child's life. Jim, thoroughly repentant, recovers the stolen goods from White and returns them to the doctor. The latter comprehends the situation instantly, but forgives Jim.

The Scales of Justice—Domino—(Two Reels)—June 3.—Clara Williams and Walter Edwards featured. Judge Landsey sees in Walter Parker, arrested for burglary, the makings of a man, and grants him his freedom to begin life over again. A few weeks later, coming home late, the judge overhears his wife pleading with Armstrong, a young clubman, in the drawing room. He recalls how of late he has been forced by absorption in his work to neglect his wife, and concludes that this is the result

Meanwhile, Parker, who has not kept his promise to reform, has climbed up the fire escape to enter the house. On discovering that it is Judge Landsey's residence, he beats a hasty retreat. A policeman encounters him in front of the house and Parker shoots him. By this time Viola has persuaded Armstrong to leave by the fire escape. He is arrested for the policeman's murder. The jury convicts him, and all that remains is for Judge Landsey to pronounce sentence. Viola begs the judge to substantiate the truth, asserting that she is innocent and has nothing to fear from the printing of the whole story. At the last moment, Parker comes forward and confesses.

The Guiding Light—AMERICAN—JUNE 4.—A drama of the sea, featuring Ed Coxen and Winifred Greenwood. Robert, a lighthouse keeper, and his wife are living happily on their secluded island, until the advent of Harry Nelson, a sportsman. He pays a visit to the lighthouse and falls in love with Anna, the keeper's wife. One day Robert leaves for the mainland to get supplies, and Nelson pays Anna a visit and finally persuades her to leave the lighthouse and go with him. They get quite a distance from the island, when Anna notices that the light on top of the lighthouse is unlighted. Her conscience overcomes her and she breaks away from Nelson, dives into the stormy sea and at last reaches the house. Robert, not being able to see the guiding light, is lost in the storm, cast upon the rocks and nearly dead from exposure when Anna finds him. They return to the house and Anna decides that her happiness is there. J. C. G.

A Piece of Amber—KAY BEE—(TWO REELS)—JUNE 4.—Hamar, procurer for the harem of the sultan, notices Zulka's beauty, and abducts her. Later Hamar calls on Selim, a pipe maker and Zulka's sweetheart, for an amber mouthpiece for the sultan. Selim recognizes Hamar and trails him to the palace. Returning, he consults his friend, Achid, a chemist, and they plot to poison the sultan and place upon the throne Sukim Pasha, leader of the revolutionists. Achid places poison in the mouthpiece which Selim has made according to the sultan's orders. The sultan dies. Sukim becomes ruler. Selim takes Zulka from the harem, and their wedding is solemnized before the new sultan.

The Race Love—RELIANCE—(TWO REELS)—JUNE 5.—White Dove, an Indian girl, and Gray Crag, a chief's son, are bethrothed. Walton, a city man of high ideals, visits the West to recuperate. He meets Gray Crag and White Dove and becomes friends with them. In time Walton and the girl fall in love. Gray Crag notices it, and grows sullen and suspicious of the white man. While at the settlement one day, the Indian is attacked by several loafers. He is getting the worst of it, when Walton emerges from the postoffice and hurries to his rescue. The white man receives a letter calling him back to the city. Before going he decides to ask White Dove to return with him and become his wife. Gray Crag, though filled with gratitude for Walton, still loves White Dove, and resents the white man's intrusion. He finally proposes to Walton that they both make their plea to the girl and abide by her decision. White Dove listens as each pictures the advantages of his offer. Her love for each is about equal, but race love is added to Gray Crag's plea, and White Dove chooses to remain with her own kind. Often in the years that follow Walton thinks of Gray Crag and his betrothed as he saw them last—sitting about the campfire.

The Celestial Code—RELIANCE—JUNE 5.—Featuring Irene Hunt. Vasco Carillo, leader of the revolutionists of Salvador, places valuable military plans in his home safe, feeling that they are secure. They would be, probably, if Sato, his Japanese cook, were not a spy working in the interests of the Salvadorian government. Sato steals the plans and notifies his confederates, by means of colored pieces of paper attached to a kite which he is presumably flying for the amusement of the Carillo children. Adele Morton, a newspaper reporter, living with the Carillos until the mystery is solved, makes a note of the colors. An expert in Oriental matters interprets them as being a signal meaning that Sato will place the stolen papers in the laundry package to be collected that day. Adele allows the laundry to be collected, and then follows the laundry wagon. She is captured by the revolutionists, but escapes and boards the steamer carrying the revolutionist leader and the plans. Morton, the detective on the case, charters a tug and sets out in pursuit of the steamer. The Salvadorian, cornered by Adele, jumps into the sea. The girl follows. Morton, following in the tug, picks them both up.

His Twin—ROYAL—JUNE 5.—Twin brothers marry and settle in different towns. Jim wires his acceptance of Joe's invitation to visit him, signing, "Your better half." Joe's wife surprises him kissing the cook. Shortly afterwards, Jim's telegram arrives. This suggests bigamy. Joe, to prevent his wife's leaving him, pretends to take poison. Wifie and the cook run for the doctor. During their absence Jim arrives. He takes Joe's place and receives the other's medicine, The unexpected arrival of Jim's wife further complicates matters. After much frantic explanation, the tangle is finally straightened out.

The Living Death—MAJESTIC—(TWO REELS)—JUNE 6.—Dr. Farrell, embittered by the loss of his wife and son, guards jealously his remaining treasure, Naida, his daugther. When he discovers a love affair between her and Roy Lester, he takes Naida away to a lonely estate on the California coast. Handsome Tom O'Day runs down from Frisco to open up the O'Day bungalow on the land adjoining theirs. He and Naida meet and become lovers. Dr. Farrell becomes furious on learning of it. One day Tom digs up a skull in the garden. Dr. Farrell exhibits great interest in it. When, a few days later, a rash breaks out on his wrist, Tom uses it as an excuse for consulting Dr. Farrell. The latter has been led to believe that all is off between Naida and Tom. His anger and jealousy are so aroused on seeing a letter which Naida is writing the youth, arranging for an elopement, that he determines to do away with Tom. Knowing of an old belief that his and the adjoining estate were once the site of a leper colony, Dr. Farrell tells Tom that the skull which he dug up was a leper's and that he is afflicted with leprosy. In reality, Tom's trouble is merely the result of ivy poisoning. The young fellow is horrified by the news, and, fearing to pollute others, he starts for the shore, intending to row over to the lepers' island near by. Naida hears the same untruthful diagnosis from her father, but, undaunted, she overtakes Tom and insists on accompanying him. He tries to escape from her, but fails.

Exhibitors—— are you buying hot air?

Is the article the salesman is trying to sell or rent you advertised in MOTOGRAPHY, the Motion Picture Trade Journal?

Would you rather book "Shot in the Foot" by the Fako Film Co., an irresponsible concern that does not advertise or would you in preference book some V. L. S. E., Mutual Masterpiece or other splendid features advertised in MOTOGRAPHY?

The advertised product is the reliable product. The manufacturers who consistently advertise their program or feature releases have a belief in their product. This belief must be well founded or they wouldn't spend their money to stand behind these films.

It is worth your while as a good showman to investigate the product of MOTOGRAPHY'S advertisers.

They stand behind their goods.

Dr. Farrell pursues and catches up with the two before they reach the leper colony on the island, and confesses. F. A. Turner, Edward J. Peil and Billie West featured.

Brave and Bold—Komic—June 6.—A burglar scare hits the town, and Max loses no time in informing his friends, Ed and Fred, that he is absolutely fearless. They decide to test him. Disguised as thieves, they enter Max's mansion, scare him into helplessness, and then put him through innumerable stunts. In the meantime a real burglar who has entered the house is having no end of trouble in keeping out of sight. The ubiquitous slavey is partly to be thanked for this. Fred and Ed, returning, tell Max how they have kidded him. Their victim puts up the cigars. After his friends leave, Max discovers the real burglar, and now determines to redeem himself. Consequently, the poor crook is compelled to go through all of the stunts which Fred and Ed thought of for himself.

Universal Program

Hearts and Clubs—Joker—May 31.—Mrs. Screen, imbued with certain ideas gathered at her club about how to run a household, makes her husband feel as though he is in a military academy. One evening when Mr. Screen returns home intoxicated, she locks him out. He returns to his club to spend the night. The next day Mrs. Screen's club meets at her house. They take exception to the maid's beauty, and suggest that she be discharged. On the street the maid meets Mr. Screen and tells him about her dismissal and his wife's anger at him. One of Screen's friends disguises himself as a maid and applies for the position. He is accepted; he has his trunk brought up stairs. Opening the lid, he liberates Screen. That night Mrs. Screen hears a man cough, and, suspecting burglars, she peeks through the keyhole into the maid's room before entering. She is shocked to see her husband in bed with the new "maid." She calls the police. They enter the room and find that it is a huge joke on Mrs. Screen. A reconciliation follows.

The House of a Thousand Relations—(Two Reels)—Victor—May 31.—Featuring Harry Myers, Rosemary Theby, and Brinsley Shaw. Harry and Rose are tired of boarding, so they go housekeeping. In celebration, they invite a "few relations" to a housewarming. All of the guests come, and not only that, but they bring their friends. Grandpa's gouty foot is always getting into trouble. Finally, when eaten out of house and home and with relatives sleeping everywhere from the top of the stove to the bath tub, Harry and his wife sneak off in the night, leaving a note of explanation for their friends and relatives.

Too Many Crooks—Nestor—June 1.—In spite of father's objections, the girl and her lover become married. They stop at the same hotel at which two famous crooks, a man and woman, are guests. Knowing that father engaged a detective to watch them, they mistake him for the detective who is on the crooks' trail. The bewildered sleuth finds that two couples are fleeing from him. The chase leads to a boat about to sail. Here the detective again chases one couple until the other appears. Then he takes after them. He finally rounds up both couples, and searches them, but cannot find the stolen diamonds. His sense of smell furnishes him with a clue, and he locates the diamonds in the female crook's shoe. Father is so glad to see the newlyweds again that he forgives their elopement and blesses their marriage.

The Purple Iris—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—June 1.—This is the first of the "Under the Crescent" series, written by Nell Shipman, directed by Burton King, and featuring Princess Hassan, William C. Dowlan, and Edna Maison. Ola Humphrey, an American actress, appears at the Khedival Opera House in Cairo. Prince Hassan becomes infatuated with her, and determines to marry her in spite of his mother's wish that he marry Princess Uarda. The Princess' cousin, the Khedive, sends him an important message, but he is so taken with Ola's charm that he tears up the note without reading it. Stanley Clyde, who is one of the guests at the supper given in the actress' honor, pieces it together, and hurries to the consul-general for the protectorate. Before the consul can take action on the threatened Moslem uprising, however, he is drugged by one of his servants who is in reality a spy. Prince Hassan makes it know that he is going to marry Princess Uarda, and then instructs Ola to be at the palace at the time set for the ceremony, attired in harem costume and heavily veiled. Zchra, a girl whom Hassan has deceived, mistakes Princess Uarda for Ola, and attacks her. In trying to escape, the poor princess falls from a balcony and is killed. Ola, masquerading as Uarda, is united to Hassan, and not until she is in the harem with her husband is her veil lifted.

The Force of Example—REX—JUNE 1.—In the cast are Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, and Joseph W. Girard. Bob Burton, a young lawyer, enters his father's office, and is unusually successful, winning case after case. Overwork brings on a terrible dream one evening. He imagines himself as the slayer of his sweetheart, Daisy Adams. On awakening, he rushes over to Daisy's house to make sure that she is all right. He tells her of his horrible dream, and the last scene shows them planning an early marriage.

The Silent Command—(FOUR REELS)—LAEMMLE—JUNE 2.—Robert Leonard and Ella Hall starred. Ella, when a child, was mentally unbalanced. Unable to pay for an operation her father agreed to Dr. Sevani's proposal that he give the girl relief from her malady and, at the end of a certain time, have her as a hypnotic subject. The time at hand, Ella's father refuses to carry out the agreement. That night Ella is seen to enter her father's room with a paperknife in her hand. The next morning the father is found dead. Detectives find the knife covered with blood, in Ella's room. She, the butler and maid are arrested for the crime. Ella's sweetheart, a lawyer and student of hypnotism, believes in her innocence, and makes some observations of his own accord. He finds a clue which leads to Dr. Sevani's butler. He then places the man under his hypnotic influence and learns how the murder was committed: the doctor, having both his butler and Ella under his influence, sent his man to kill the father and had Ella let him in and furnish him with a weapon. As the story closes, Ella is seen to take a book on hypnotism from her lover's hand and cast the volume into the open fireplace.

The Heart of Cerise—(THREE REELS)—REX—JUNE 3.—Cerise Vignol, leading woman in the little Hyacinth Theater, is possessed of a quick and hot temper. Pierre, the leading man, seems to be the only one who has any influence over the little spitfire. They become engaged. On the eve of their marriage Delorme, Pierre's "friend," induces Cerise to accompany him to a nearby cafe where, he claims, he wishes her to help him win a wager. Once at the cafe, Cerise finds that Delorme has deceived her. Enraged, she flies at him, and claws his face, promising to repeat the performance on their next meeting. When she returns three days later Pierre will have nothing to do with her, saying that she is faithless. Cerise leaves Paris and goes to Neuilly. Eight years elapse. Cerise, now known as Cerise Lestooq, teaches the children of the village. An overzealous policeman arrests her for changing her name and teaching without a license. The judge is about to discharge her when Cerise recognizes him as Delorme. She keeps good her promise to claw his face, and he sentences her to jail for thirty days. Pierre obtains a pardon for Cerise, and begs forgiveness, confessing his mistake. The lovers become reconciled. Pauline Bush, William Clifford, and Joseph De Grasse starred.

A Life in the Balance—(TWO REELS)—IMP—JUNE 4.—King Baggot featured. Because of Dr. Smiley's failing eyesight, Farmer Brown refuses to allow him to perform an operation for appendicitis upon his little daughter, calling in young Dr. Savage from the next village. The operation is successful, and Dr. Savage decides to move over from his town, where he can make very little money. The old doctor's daughter, a young widow, resents the new doctor's presence and will have nothing to do with him until her own child's life is saved by the wonderful skill of Dr. Savage. Then, recognizing his true worth, she falls in love with him and eventually becomes his wife.

They Were College Boys—NESTOR—JUNE 4.—Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde and Lee Moran are the principals in the cast. Eddie and Vic, students in a co-educational school, slip off to the rustic bridge for a quiet chat, but, alas, the other boys and girls in the school are hidden in every conceivable place within hearing distance. The boys joke Eddie about it, and he, feeling that he must make good by some daring stroke, offers to bet that he can visit the girls' side that night. A messenger notifies the girls and borrows from them some clothes for Eddie's disguise. The janitor overhears the bet, and hides underneath one of the beds in the girls' dormitory. When Eddie makes his entrance through the window, the janitor confronts him. A wild fight ensues. The professor and teachers aroused, find both the boys and girls "sleeping." The janitor's charge is discredited, and he is reprimanded for drinking too much.

The Judgment of Men—VICTOR—JUNE 4.—Mary Fuller and Matt Moore take the leading parts. Mary is deceived by a man in whom she has placed the greatest trust. Not until long after the birth of her child will she believe that he will not return. But in time the sad realization dawns upon her. Turned away from home, she leaps into the river. She is taken out alive, but the child clasped in her arms is dead. The poor girl is arraigned for murder, convicted, and sentenced to life imprisonment. Ten years pass. Time has made a great change in Mary. She now seems content with her lot. One day she is seized with a desire to visit the outside world, and there being no one about to prevent her, she walks out of the prison gates and along the road. She meets a little girl. and in a few minutes they are fast friends. Mary finds some money in the coat which she took from the rack on her way out, and she and her trusting companion spend it for dolls and toys. The keepers come upon the pair playing with the toys in the woods. As Mary is led back into prison, the Man passes in his automobile and stops a moment to congratulate the guards on the recapture of a dangerous criminal.

The Smuggler's Lass—(Two Reels)—Bison—June 5.—Sheilla and Bryan, a rum smuggler, are Irish sweethearts. Donald Dhu, anxious to collect the reward offered for the apprehension of smugglers, informs the soldiery of Bryan's activities. A fight between the militia and the smugglers ensues, and the latter make their escape. Donald then leads the soldiers to Sheilla's home, knowing that Bryan will visit her. His guess is correct, and after vainly attempting to hide in the chimney, Bryan is captured and led off to prison. Sheilla succeeds in having some fresh loaves and butter taken up to Bryan in his cell. In one of the loaves the prisoner finds a rope and a note of instructions. He lets himself down the wall that night, meets Sheilla and her mother, and they set out for France.

The Lover's Lucky Predicament—Joker—June 5.—Sheriff Higgins is greatly disturbed on receiving positive orders to capture Alfalfa Bill. He is also peeved about the grocery clerk's courting his daughter, Dolly. The grocery clerk and his sweetheart plan to elope. Lillian, Dolly's little sister, learns of it and tells her father. Alfalfa Bill happens to be prowling in the vicinity of the sheriff's house at the time set for the elopment, and he and the grocery clerk meet. The latter overpowers the criminal. Sheriff Higgins willingly gives his consent to his marrying Dolly, and presents him with the reward offered for Bill's capture.

The Better Way—Powers—June 5.—Sydney Ayres and Doris Pawn are seen in the principal parts. Joshua Winters, who ekes out a precarious living by repairing watches and clocks, is satisfied with Martha, a girl adopted by his mother, until Gladys Harrington, a society girl who happens into his store, invites him to her coming out ball. Gladys does it in a spirit of fun, but Joshua accepts because he believes himself in love with the girl. He is soon brought to a realization of the emptiness of her invitation, and he returns home to his first love, Martha.

The Swinging Doors—(Two Reels)—Big U—June 6.—Jean brings his family to America. After his wife's death he sends his little daughter to a convent to be educated. Misfortune follows poor Jean, and in time he becomes so shabby-looking that he is ashamed to visit the girl. While visiting at the home of one of her girl chums, Margot meets Billy Grew. They become greatly attached to each other. One night they enter a restaurant together. It happens that Jean is employed as a waiter in the place. One of the other waiters tells him that there is a "peach" out in the dining room with a rich young swell, and points out Margot and Billy. In an instant Jean is through the swinging doors that divide him from the other half of the world. He derides Billy for offering his daughter wine, and orders him out of the place. Overcome with anger, the old man suffers an attack of the heart and dies. Billy, seeing an ambulance back up before the restaurant, hastens in. As the picture fades out, he is seen taking Margot, his betrothed, into his arms.

Park Johnnies—L-Ko—June 6.—Mr. Rawsberry is a victim of chronic flirtation. He flirts in the park with poor returns. He follows a lady into an apartment house and gets in wrong with her husband. In trying to get out of this scrape he enters the home of the sharpshooter next door. Finding anything but a welcome here, he hurries into the room across the hall and finds himself in the presence of a woman who is taking a bath. More unpleasantness arises when Rawsberry's park rival enters the house and further antagonizes the sharpshooter. All are taken to a police station, which they practically wreck.

Feature Programs

Fox

The Plunderer—(Five Reels)—Fox.—William Farnum and Claire Whitney are featured in this romantic photoplay made from the novel of Roy Norton, and are capably supported by a splendid cast, among whom are William Riley Hatch,

Harry Spingler, W. J. Gross and Tom O'Keefe. The plot centers around the journey of big Bill Matthews and his chum, Dick Townsend, to the Cross of Gold mine, which has been left to him by his father. Bully Presby endeavors to cheat the partners out of the property and a series of plots against the partners begins. Dick falls in love with Presby's daughter and after many wild adventures the girl brings about peace. Lilly Meredith, the dance hall keeper, goes away after writing Matthews a letter in which she admits her love for him. Big Bill resolves to follow and search for her, and leaves his partner happy in the possession of Joan Presby.

Metro

Four Feathers—(FIVE REELS)—DYREDA.—Howard Estabrook and Irene Warfield are featured in this tale of the Orient adapted from the book of A. E. W. Mason, the settings and story both being superb. The plot concerns the efforts of Captain Faversham, adjudged a coward by his fellow officers, to prove to them that he is really brave, and in accomplishing his purpose he has to remain near the command disguised as an Oriental. J. Searle Dawley directed the production, which is reviewed on page 928, this issue.

Mutual Masterpictures

Ghosts — (FIVE REELS) — RELIANCE. — Ibsen's immortal story filmed by G. W. Griffith, with Henry Walthall and Mary Alden in the featured roles of Oswald and Helen. The fearful story of Alving, the roue, who married Helen, the village beauty, against her physician's advice, and gave birth to a son whose mind was affected on account of his father's past, is told in all its gruesomeness. See review, page 923, this issue.

The Failure—(FOUR REELS)—RELIANCE.—John Emerson is featured in this production of W. Christy Cabanne's as Tom Warder, a reporter who writes a play that later is stolen by Shuman, a theatrical manager. Tom is sent to prison on a trumped-up charge and to revenge himself on Shuman, after escaping from prison, he swallows poison and the manager is accused of having killed him. See review, page 929, this issue.

North American

Shadows at Sunset—(SIXTH CHAPTER OF "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY")—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN.—Arthur Stanley, Esther and Hagar, with Miss Marston, Mrs. Stanley and Blair, are all in Fairfax county. A race takes place at the fair grounds and Arthur succeeds in winning. Blair recognizes him, although he is masked, and goes to the sheriff and asks to have his cousin arrested. Quabba succeeds in handcuffing Blair and the sheriff together and Arthur makes his escape. The diamond is now in the top of a tree in an old owl's nest. For further review, see page 927, this issue.

The Pretty Sister of Jose—(FIVE REELS) — FAMOUS PLAYERS.—Marguerite Clark is the featured player in this adaptation of Frances Hodgson's Burnett's picturesque romance of old Spain. She appears as a Spanish girl full of life and buoyance, throbbing with the power of love, who comes for the first time to live amid the splendors and delights of Madrid. She has seen her mother's wifely devotion scorned by a cruel husband and resolves that her heart shall never be won by man, but there is Sebastiano, the matador, with an ardor unknown to Pepita. She witnesses the sad fate of Sarita, who dies in hopeless adoration of him and the thrill of love is intensified in her heart. Sebastiano sees Pepita, falls in love with her and the struggle begins. As her love grows, the terror of it also grows. Day after day she holds the matador at bay and at last his pride revolts and he leaves for a distant city. Pepita follows him and in the bull fight arena, where she finally again beholds him, he becomes unnerved at suddenly seeing her, makes a false move in his fight with the bull and is wounded unto death. It is as he lies between life and eternity that Pepita, conquered, declares her love for him, thus calling him back to life.

Pathe

The Opium Smugglers—(EIGHTH EPISODE, NEW "EXPLOITS OF ELAINE")—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—Craig Kennedy sets out to assist his friend, Captain Brainard, of the United States Secret Service, in capturing some opium smugglers, and learns to his surprise that Elaine, his sweetheart, is to be shipped to China a prisoner aboard the vessel. Elaine warns him of what has happened by means of the wireless telephone and Kennedy succeeds in rescuing her after many exciting adventures. See review on page 930, this issue.

Stock Raising—PATHE.—This is one educational release that cannot be accused of lacking life. It is literally full of it in the shape of breaking in bronchos, rough riding and cattle herding. The picture was filmed on an extensive ranch in South America.

Madurah and Its Pagodas—PATHE.—A beautifully colored scenic, picturing the temples of worship, occupations and customs of the this portion of far-off India. On the same reel with "The Falls and Rapids of Swa's Sea," also finished in natural colors.

Whiffles Has the Gout—PATHE.—The popular French comedian, A. Prince, is featured in this foolishly funny story of a gout-stricken man. In trying to keep his affliction a secret, he more than once has to swallow his agony and walk through the boulevards and parks. Two of Whiffles' sweethearts meet and consent to co-operate on a plan to get even with the deceiver. As a result, Whiffles suffers much unnecessary pain while taking electrical treatments. He is cured, however, and in celebration he dances out of the sanitarium.

The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan—(Four Reels)—Gotham.—Willie Ritchie, lightweight champion of the world, and Betty Marshall are featured in this pugilistic romance. Betty, who is poor but pretty, falls in love with Willie at first sight, and she tells him that she must raise $500 to pay a mortgage on her home and that if she can convince her uncle that she has saved money he will will her his enormous fortune. Willie learns that Dan Dolan, the American champion, will give $500 to anyone who can stay three rounds with him, accepts the challenge and knocks out Dolan, thereby becoming the lightweight champion of America himself. Uncle, learning of Willie's fame and his love for Betty, prepares to go abroad with the girl in search of her missing brother, who was kidnaped in his infancy. Uncle consents to the marriage of the lovers when Willie shall have become the world's lightweight champion. A contest is arranged and after he has won the championship from the English champion it is discovered that his opponent is none other than Betty's long lost brother.

Pro Patria—(Four Reels)—Great Northern.—This war story concerns Eileen Wells, who is receiving a call from her fiance, Lieutenant Masters, when war is declared, and Lieutenant Masters returns to his own country, taking with him a carrier pigeon by which he may at any time communicate with Eileen. Lieutenant Powell, an officer under the command of General Wells, Eileen's father, informs the enemy that the prince will visit the general's headquarters that day to present a flag to a favored regiment and advising an attack at that time. Lieutenant Masters, on learning of the treachery, sends a note to Eileen by the pigeon, informing her of what is to happen. The girl drives her motor car to the camp and saves the life of the arriving prince. An attack is begun, during which Lieutenant Masters falls seriously wounded, and after the battle is over and the enemy has surrendered, Eileen, as a Red Cross nurse, restores her lover to health, and as the film ends a wedding is imminent. This picture was reviewed on page 885, issue of May 29.

Dorsey's Japan Pictures—(Six Reels)—United Photoplays Company.—One of a series of pictures taken by Professor Dorsey of the Chicago Field Museum. These pictures are beautifully photographed, depicting the lives and customs of the Japanese people. Beautiful scenery is shown throughout the production and interesting spots in the Orient are pictured. Amongst the most interesting things which are shown is a whaling expedition off the coast of Japan. This part of the picture is exciting and very thrilling. The picture on the whole is one of beauty, interest and education. J. C. G.

The Press Agent Says—

Sherman Bainbridge, the handsome heavy man in Henry McRae's 101 Bison company, tells this funny story: "Director McRae often shouts 'Hold it' in the midst of some exciting action. The purpose of this is to have the actor remain quiet for a few seconds while a still picture is made of the scene. On one such occasion not long ago, a great battle scene was in progress. Along the lines just outside the picture were stationed a number of men whose business it was to throw hand grenades into the air. Near the foreground was a green hand; the battle waxed furious; shells were bursting on all sides. Suddenly came the cry, 'Hold it!' The new man had just lighted a grenade and thought the command was for him. He held it. He is doing as well as could be expected, thank you."

Lillian Walker of the Vitagraph Players while hurrying to catch an elevated train at the Brooklyn Bridge terminal, was startled out of her unusual serenity by the sudden appearance of a dashing brunette, who began showering Miss Walker with encomiums of admiration while busily engaged in embracing the Vitagraph star.

"Whom have I the honor——" began Miss Walker, thinking of female bandits and hold-up women.

"One of your most ardent admirers, who couldn't risk the temptation to hug you," exclaimed the stranger as Miss Walker watched the tail lights of a fast vanishing express, the only train that would get her to an important engagement on time.

Edward Earle has just discovered that he and Jessie Stevens, his Edison fellow player, were in the same cast of "The Dairy Farm," a stage play, about fifteen years ago. These two players have been in daily association for nearly two years and never recognized each other as a one-time associate.

That Harry Benham, who is playing John Storm in "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," the Thanhouser-Mutual serial, is six foot tall and a broad shouldered athlete, but on the subject of jumping into the sound "for nothing at all" the young actor has sharply defined ideas. Mr. Benham was walking on the cliffs near New Rochelle, N. Y., recently. Ahead of him he noticed a woman, and had no more done so than he saw her throw up her hands and shout, "My child, my child!" By the time Mr. Benham reached her, all she could do was sob and point towards the water. Did Mr. Benham hesitate? He did not. No child should drown for lack of aid from him, and throwing off coat and overcoat he rushed down the bank and plunged in. As he came to the surface and shook the water from his eyes, he followed the direction of the woman's outstretched arm, and with a gasp of astonishment fastened his freezing fingers into the hair of a small Pomeranian dog. When the actor handed the woman her pet, she clasped it to her breast. A minute later she looked up. "Oh, thank you so much," she said. "So good of you." "You're welcome," said Benham (yes, he said it coldly) as he started home with an icy chatter.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

A Picturized Romantic Novel
By Roy L. McCardell

You who have seen the remarkable dramatic talent displayed by Irving Cummings as the hero in "The Diamond From the Sky" know that this great film star has set a new high mark in motion picture interpretation. The magnetic personality of Mr. Cummings is one of the factors that has brought such pronounced success to this wonderful "Flying A" continued photoplay. The entire cast is probably the greatest ever assembled for a film production. It includes eight exceptional stars—Lottie Pickford, Irving Cummings, William Russell, Charlotte Burton, George Periolat, Eugenie Forde, W. J. Tedmarsh and Orral Humphrey. Six chapters of "The Diamond From the Sky" are now appearing. A new two-reel chapter is released each week. Goodwin Company to Sue Film Makers

AND OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS

THE Goodwin Film & Camera Company, owners of the patents secured by the Rev. Hannibal Goodwin of Newark, N. J., last week brought two separate actions in the United States District Court in New York against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and Patrick A. Powers. On September 13, 1898, Rev. Mr. Goodwin was granted a patent for a pellicle (a thin film), which patent right was transferred to the Goodwin Film & Camera Company in 1901. The patent was upheld by the courts in a suit brought by the Goodwin company against the Eastman Kodak Company, which has agreed to give an accounting of all the sales of films in which the patent rights were violated. It is stated in the papers filed last week that the Celluloid Company, Pathe Freres and the Raw Film Supply Company have agreed to take out licenses under the patents, but that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and Patrick A. Powers have declined to do so, and the court is asked to issue an injunction and order an accounting.

Decision Opposes Censorship

One of the most important decisions affecting censorship that has ever been handed down by any court in the United States was rendered by Supreme Court Justice Whitaker in New York City on May 26, when a decision upholding the right of the Life Photo Film Corporation to exhibit "The Ordeal," a feature film based on fictitious incidents in the Franco-Prussian war, and granting a permanent injunction restraining Commissioner of Licenses George H. Bell from interfering with its presentation in New York City, was handed down. Commissioner Bell had forbidden its production on the ground that it might arouse dangerous feelings among foreign-born residents, but Justice Whitaker's decision knocks the hyphen out of the German-American question and holds that the term American includes all classes of citizens, native and naturalized, irrespective of where they originally came from—Germany or any other country.

"The Ordeal," called "a dream play," because it was written from an anonymous poem popular in France after the close of the war with Prussia, was ordered out of the Lexington Avenue Opera House in New York City some months ago by Commissioner Bell after it had been condemned by the National Board of Censorship and Deputy License Commissioner Kaufman. When the theater was threatened with loss of its license unless the picture was discontinued, the Life Photo Film Corporation brought suit against the commissioner and Justice Whitaker. The decision is the outcome of that suit.

Justice Whitaker takes a slap at the National Board of Censorship for rejecting the picture, as well as at Major Funkhouser, head of the Chicago board of censorship, when he says in his decision, "The play itself is one which could in no way create racial strife in the mind of a sensible and ordinary person," and in another paragraph, "The plaintiff (the producing company) should not be interfered with in the transaction of its legitimate business, because of the supersensitiveness of alien residents."

Mutual Loses Case

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals last week upheld the Chicago board of censorship in its right to censor films. The decision was unanimous and was signed by presiding Justice Francis E. Baker, Judge Kohlsaat and Judge Landis, the latter sitting as a circuit judge during consideration of the case, which was that of the Mutual Film Corparation and the H & H Film Company, who over a year ago filed suit in the United States District Court for an injunction to restrain the city and the board of censors operating under Second Deputy Major Funkhouser from interfering with moving picture exhibitions.

The complainants set up that the city's censorship was an abridgement of the rights guaranteed by the federal constitution and that it abridged freedom of the press and freedom of speech. The late Judge William H. Seaman, sitting as a district judge heard the arguments and decided the case in favor of the city.

The decision of the Court of Appeals is an affirmation of the late Judge Seaman's ruling. The arguments in the court of appeals were made some six months ago by Assistant Corporation Counsel George L. Reker in behalf of the city, who insisted that the city of Chicago had a right to censor films under its general police power and the decision upholds this view. Mr. Reker, following the decision, said, "The court's ruling was sweeping in its nature and left no further room for doubt as to the right of the city to censor and prohibit objectionable or immoral moving pictures."

The city won another censorship victory in a case argued before Judge John P. McGoorty in the circuit court. The hearing was on a petition of the Motherhood Educational Society of New York for a writ of mandamus to compel the city to permit the exhibition of a series of moving pictures entitled "Twilight Sleep."

Mr. Reker appeared in behalf of the city and in his argument contended the writ should not issue because the society had no standing in an Illinois court, it being a "foreign" corporation and not licensed to do business in Illinois.

The attorney demurred to this contention, saying it was technical and that the question at issue was whether or not the pictures are immoral. Judge McGoorty overruled the demurrer and declined to issue the writ.

Walthall Joins Essanay

Henry B. Walthall, famous Boigraph and Griffith star, leading man in "The Birth of a Nation," and "The Avenging Conscience," in which picture it is alleged he does the greatest bit of character work ever seen on the screen, is now an Essanay player, according to an announcement made by the press department of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company this week. Mr. Walthall is expected in Chicago the latter part of next week, when he will appear as leading man in a number of multiple reel V. L. S. E. releases, in addition to being featured in a number of two or three-reel films, to be released on the General Film program.

Henry B. Walthall

Walthall, as every exhibitor knows, was born in Shelby county, Alabama, and was educated under private tutors. When the Spanish-American war broke out he was among the first to enlist. While with his regiment at Jacksonville, Florida, he was stricken with fever from which he did not fully recover for several years. Always anxious for a stage career, Walthall, as soon as his health would permit, became a member of the Merry Hill stock company, playing numerous small parts and then becoming a member of Henry Miller's all star organization. He was later with Margaret Anglin and has supported other celebrities of the legitimate stage.

His first moving picture work was done under the direction of David W. Griffith at the Biograph studios and when Griffith left the Biograph to produce for the Mutual Company at Hollywood, Cal., Walthall went with him. He is famous for his work in such films as "Home, Sweet Home," "Judith of Bethulia," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Birth of a Nation," "Ghosts," and under the Essanay banner is expected to rise to even greater heights.

The Selig Polyscope Company has received word that the leading newspapers of the western cities to be visited by the Selig Motion Picture Special are planning receptions for the writers and other tourists who will make the trip.

Plans for National Convention

M. E. Cory, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, who has just returned from an eastern trip, reports that exhibitors at all points visited are making preparations to attend the national convention which opens in San Francisco on Monday, July 12, and continues for a full week.

In San Francisco the exhibitors are said to be enthusiastic beyond all expectations and are making active preparations for entertaining their visitors. An efficient office force has been organized at the convention headquarters in the Mechanic building, 948 Market street, San Francisco, and a local committee of San Francisco exhibitors, headed by H. L. Beach, president of the California State League; Ralph L. Marks, state secretary, together with other prominent San Francisco exhibitors, has been appointed to assist Chairman Cory.

Mr. Cory is authority for the statement that every booth in the exposition salon, with the exception of one large and three small ones, has been sold; that practically every film concern, with a single exception, has signed up for a booth, and is arranging an elaborate display. Owing to the unexpectedly heavy demand for the privilege of exhibiting feature pictures during the convention, as well as the desire of the different machine manufacturers for an opportunity to give actual demonstrations of projection machines, it has been found necessary to arrange for the operation of three miniature theaters during the convention instead of two.

The grand ball, with which the convention closes, will be held Friday night, July 16, and the committee is planning to make this ball one that will set a mark that will stand for years to come and be hard for any succeeding convention to surpass. The new civic auditorium, in which the ball is to be held, has a dance floor 197 feet square, which is entirely unobstructed by pillars or posts. The presence of Mary Pickford, Francis X. Bushman, Charlie Chaplin and other famous stars is already assured and Los Angeles studios are expected to contribute hundreds more.

Saturday, July 17, the day following the close of the convention, has been officially designated by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition as Moving Picture Day and an elaborate program of appropriate events is being arranged. These events will be participated in by the screen favorites who attend the ball, permission having been granted by the various managements to allow the stars to remain in San Francisco until Sunday morning.

The special from New York, Chicago and eastern points will reach San Francisco on Monday, July 12. The executive board of the National League will meet during Monday afternoon, and the exposition salon and miniature theaters will be thrown open Monday night for informal receptions and the exhibition of pictures. The convention will formally open Tuesday morning, July 13. Special trains from Seattle and Portland, as well as from Los Angeles and Southern California points, are due to arrive in San Francisco Tuesday morning.

The committee in charge of the convention wishes particular emphasis laid on the fact that hotel rates in San Francisco during the convention will not be exorbitant. The convention committee offers to make hotel reservations and guarantees the rates. To be certain of satisfactory accommodations, those planning to attend the convention should advise the convention committee and have reservations made at once.

Rolfe Buys Dyreda

An important deal in film circles was completed Thursday when the Dyreda Art Film Company was purchased by the B. A. Rolfe organization. The Metro Film Corporation, through which Rolfe distributes its productions, owns a part of the Rolfe company and consequently the Metro is now directly interested in both the Rolfe and the former Dyreda organization. The Dyreda company was organized by Frank L. Dyer, former head of the General Film Company; J. Searle Dawley, former producer for the Famous Players and with Edison before that, and J. Parker Reed. The name was made up from the names of the three founders.

Later new interests bought into the company and they leased the property at Sixty-first street and Broadway, where they had one of the finest studios in the city, it being especially desirable because of its central location. This studio now passes into the hands of the Rolfe organization. C. M. Maddux of the Rolfe company becomes general manager of the new organization.

It has not been decided as to whether the Dyreda name will be retained, but it will probably be changed. Two new companies will be put to work and the Rolfe interests will probably make in the next year forty big features. When it is remembered that the Rolfe organization is one of the newcomers in the feature film field, this growth is quite remarkable. The Rolfe company now has four producers at work and will have two more working in another ten days.

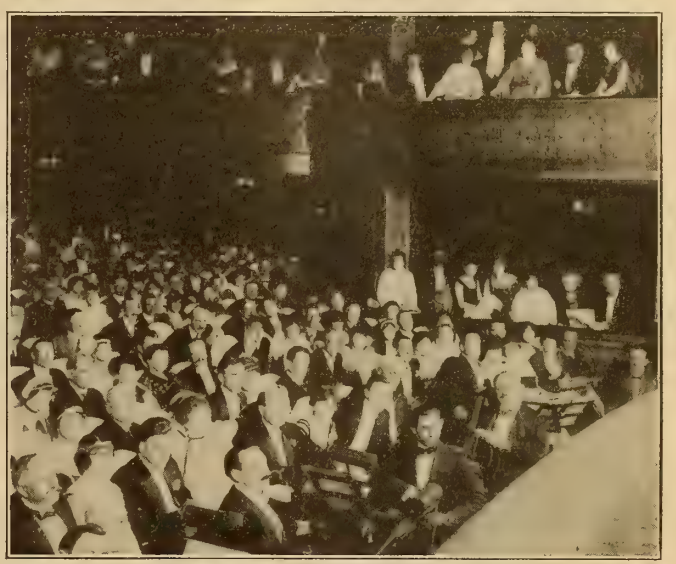
"The Alien" Opens

"The Alien," the second release of the Select Film Booking Agency, Inc., had a big first night attendance at the Astor theater in New York on Monday evening, May 31, when the picture was shown for the first time to representatives of the motion picture industry in the east, who jammed the theater to its last seat.

"The Alien" is a nine-reel film production staged by Thomas H. Ince and features the distinguished character actor, George Beban, in his own unique combination of the silent and the spoken drama, for at one place in the film a stop is made and Beban in person appears on the stage to enact a portion of the story. Supporting Beban in his personal appearance are Edith MacBride, Andrea Lynne, Edward Gillespie, Hayward Ginn and others. The film and the following spoken act forms a splendid entertainment, and Beban was called upon for a curtain speech at the conclusion of the showing.

Edison Utilizes Big Theater

The tireless patience and disregard of expense now being exemplified in feature reels was again evidenced Sunday when the Edison Company and an army of assistants and extras swarmed into the Casino theater, New York, in order to get unmistakable atmosphere for its forthcoming feature, "Through Turbulent Waters," which will be released Friday, June 25. The play is largely built around theatrical life and the big scene occurs in a theater, there being a play within a play. The entire lower floor and balcony were filled with players as the audience. From early morning, all day long and until three o'clock next morning, the army labored under the direction of Duncan McRae, newly appointed director, whose first play it is for Edison, though he is a veteran producer of well-known successes. In all forty scenes were taken in the theater. As the company could have it only for Sunday, haste was necessary. All of the regular force of the theater was requisitioned besides a large number of arc lights and electricians. Gertrude McCoy, who has written a number of Edison successful features, is the author of this play and also takes the leading role. Frank Farrington, who has figured in a number of feature films, has been especially engaged for the man lead. Duncan McRae also plays in it, with Edward Earle and Robert Brower.



Edison actors formed the audience in this theater which is only part of a picture.

Metro's Denver Office

The sole remaining territory of the United States as yet uncovered by the Metro Pictures Corporation is now being opened by that concern with offices located in Denver. Arrangements for the opening of the office is now going forward under the direction of Harry J. Cohen.

Mr. Cohen arrived in Denver this week, taking with him prints of all the Metro releases to date, and invitations have been sent to exhibitors throughout Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho and Nevada to attend one of the first-class houses in Denver, which has been leased by Metro for the week, and continuous performances will be given from 10 a. m. until 9 p. m., during which time the Metro productions will be shown.

Each and every production so far released on the Metro program will be shown the exhibitors. It will be the biggest continuous performance of features ever held in the history of the trade and the most unique method of introducing a program ever adopted.

The Denver office will be opened within the forthcoming week and some local man of experience and acquaintance in the territory will be put in charge of the office when arrangements have all been completed.

Makes "The Country Girl"

Edwin Thanhouser is beginning to make it evident that he will resume his policy of issuing at intervals a play taken from a book or stage production. The first announcement comes with "The Country Girl," a farce comedy which Director Sullivan is now engaged on at the Thanhouser studio. The old-time theatrical folk will remember this charming little play, which was first given in America at Daly's theater, now a landmark of New York City. Miss Ada Rehan appeared in the part of Peggy when it was first presented here. The Thanhouser version is taken from the story by David Garrick, who rewrote it some time after it was first produced in 1675 in London. It is a pithy, fast moving story of an old English squire, who is in love with a too vivacious country girl. She has a great many admirers, for which reason the old fellow announces that he will take her to London to marry her. But some of her beaux are not to be thus outwitted and when the squire arrives in London, the simple little country girl becomes a vixen of the most distressing type. The situations which follow are very clever, and one of the oddities in the picture is Florence La Badie (who plays the title part), dressed in the clothes of a young English youth of that period. Carey Hastings, Harry Benham, Morgan Jones, Justus Barnes and Claude Cooper make up the fun-loving company, and the heartless little country girl finally marries a young man to her liking. A novelty in the production is the introduction of an epilogue; this is in the form of a speech by the character Peggy, and while she speaks, the words appear on the sheet. "The Country Girl" will be in two reels and will be released on June 15.

Florence La Badie.

Zukor to Enlarge Studio

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, left last Saturday for the coast studios of his company, accompanied by Mrs. Zukor and his son and daughter, Eugene J. and Mildred Zukor.

Mr. Zukor's purpose in making the trip, as indicated in a statement from the Famous Players Film Company, is no less than the purchase of a large tract of ground in or about Los Angeles for the erection of three separate studios. The Famous Players Film Company has maintained a studio on the Pacific coast for the past year, where most of the recent Mary Pickford subjects were produced. The satisfactory photographic and scenic results obtained by the western company, it is inferred, have now encouraged the Famous Players to expand their producing activities in Los Angeles.

Under the management of Albert A. Kaufman, who has been acting as western manager since the Famous Players invaded Los Angeles, the studio resources of this company have steadily accumulated to such an extent that but for the physical space required, the Famous Players' western organization is now fully equipped with lights and incidental paraphernalia to occupy two or more studios. It is to obtain the ground whereby to fill this need that caused Mr. Zukor to undertake this trip.

It is possible that in the future several other companies will be sent to the Coast, and the original plans for the western productions are now being magnified to take in the added possibilities that will thus be supplied.

Still More V. L. S. E. Offices

The volume of business being done by the V. L. S. E. continues to increase so rapidly, that during the past week four new sub-offices and a new branch have been added to the chain of distributing points.

The new branch office is located in Cleveland at 2077 Fourth street, in the center of Cleveland's film market, and is in charge of A. W. Goff. The territory to be served by this branch will include the southeastern portion of Michigan, as well as all of the state of Ohio.

Two new sub-offices have been attached to the San Francisco branch: one located in Los Angeles, California, and the other in Seattle, Washington. The Los Angeles office is in charge of H. D. Naugle, and the Seattle office will be in charge of Tom North.

A sub-office has been established in St. Louis in charge of S. W. Hatch, and another in Denver to relieve the pressure on the Kansas City branch.

Construction Nearly Finished

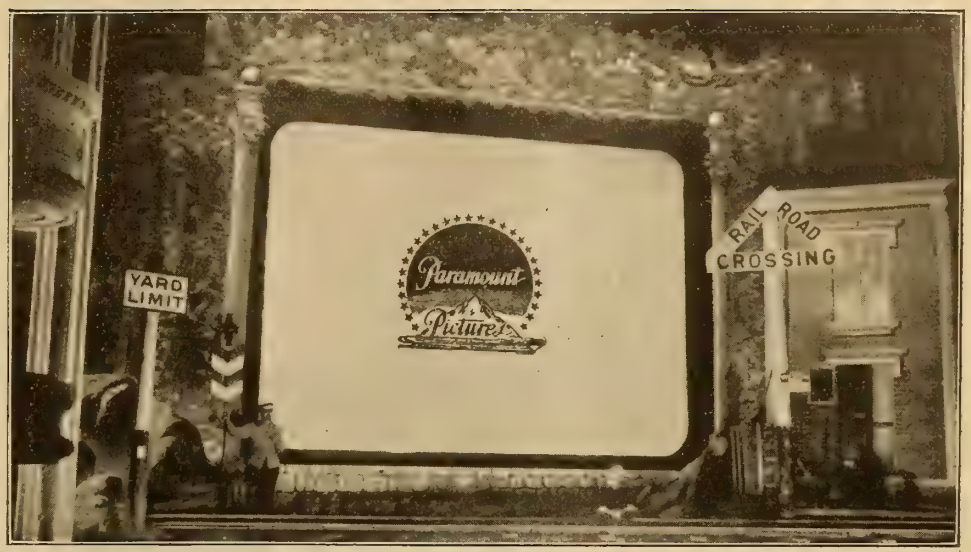
The new auxiliary plant of the Keystone Film Company is nearing completion and Mack Sennett, managing director of the organization is working on one of the new stages with Raymond Hitchcock and Hale Hamilton, progressing rapidly in film acting under his direction. Dick Jones has moved his company into the new quarters which occupy an entire city block directly across from the old studios which cover the same amount of space. The new concrete garages are completed and occupied. The new covered stage, in which night work will be possible, is well under way. In the old studio the depth of the artificial lake has been doubled. The completeness of the studios attracts many visitors and a new system has been put into effect whereby promiscuous visitors will not be admitted and only people with passes will be allowed to inspect the huge plant.

Players to Appear in Person

Manager Fred Dollinger, of the Clearmont theater, at Broadway and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, New York, has arranged with the World Film Corporation for the booking of the entire series of Rafferty comedies, and as an added attraction for the theater, President Charles C. O'Hara, of the All Celtic Films, Inc., producers of the pictures, has consented to allow some of his players to appear in person, among them being Joseph Sullivan, in the title role of "Peaceful Rafferty." Manager Dollinger is making plans to handle an enormous crowd on the evening of June 7, the day of the first All Celtic-World Film release.

Unique Stage Setting

A. Heinecke, manager of the Judith and Bijou theaters at Lewistown, Montana, is apparently one of the livest wires in the northwest and takes elaborate care to present the de luxe features he is offering his patrons in a really de luxe manner, going to no little expense in decorating his stage and lobby to conform with the nature of the subject to be shown on the screen. The accompanying cut is furnished through the courtesy of George E. Carpenter, editor of Real Reels, the house organ of the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City, Utah, showing the stage of the Judith theater as it appeared on the night when the Paramount feature, "Rule G," was the offering, and it will be noted a real railroad atmosphere is furnished the audience even before a foot of the film has been shown, for the switch and yard limit sign at one side of the stage, the station, with its baggage truck, and warning signal at the other side of the stage, form a most fitting setting for the screen on which "Rule G," the railroad drama, was later to be seen. The ushers in the house, it is understood, were also garbed in uniforms appropriate to the railroad drama and thus the atmosphere was carried out in a novel and attractive way even into the lobby of the theater itself.



The Judith theater dolled up by its manager in preparation for a railroad feature.

Another of Mr. Heinecke's stunts mentioned in the last issue of MOTOGRAPHY was a circus van which he prepared for street display when Lasky's "The Circus Man" was the attraction at the Judith. A wagon, it will be noted, was converted into a realistic circus animal cage, and when followed by a number of clowns and driven through the streets of Lewistown attracted no little attention to the show at the Judith that night.

How the Judith theater advertised "The Circus Man."

Tom Mix, the Selig cowboy star, who already holds several gold medals for daring horsemanship, will be seen in the flesh at the 1915 Rodeo and La Fiesta de las Flores to be held in Los Angeles May 1 and May 9, inclusive. It is freely predicted that Mix will win additional honors in the forthcoming contests.

Pathe's New Chicago Manager

V. H. Hodupp, who has been Pathe's manager at Syracuse, on Tuesday, June 1, was made manager of the Chicago office of Pathe, Inc., to succeed former Manager Sampson. Mr. Hodupp was installed in his new position by Mr. Burger, traveling representative of Pathe, Inc., who stopped off in Chicago to get the local office in good running order before journeying west, where he expects to stay until next September.

Mr. Hodupp is a young man of undoubted ability and on his very first day in his new position gave promise of becoming exceedingly popular with the exhibitors of the middle west. He comes to Chicago with a splendid record, having made the Syracuse office one of the most efficient and, from a financial standpoint, one of the best of the entire Pathe chain of exchanges. His record on several of the serial pictures, as well as the "Who Pays?" series, cannot be equaled by any of the Pathe exchanges in the United States, and he hopes soon to have the Chicago office running on a similar basis. One of Mr. Hodupp's first appointments was that of W. A. Anderson to the position of booker in the Chicago office. Mr. Anderson, who has been in charge of the shipping room, is well liked by the exhibitors and his promotion is well merited.

Big Month for V. L. S. E.

An analysis of the features scheduled for release during the month of June on the V. L. S. E. program, shows the same even balance and variety of subjects that characterized the April and May releases, and in addition to seven of the screen's most popular stars, Viola Allen and Rose Coghlan, distinguished stars of the speaking stage, will be seen in leading roles.

The first release of the month is Lubin's "The Sporting Duchess," Cecil Raleigh's successful comedy drama, with Rose Coghlan, Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer in the principal roles. In this production a phase of ultra-fashionable life and amusement has been handled by Director Barry O'Neil, in a masterly manner.

For the week of June 14 Vitagraph's "The Sins of the Mothers," introduces Earle Williams, Anita Stewart, Paul Scardon and Julia Swayne Gordon. This production is from the winning script in the Vitagraph-Evening Sun $1,000 prize contest. It was produced under the direction of Ralph Ince, and deals with the question of hereditary influence.

Essanay's "The White Sister," with Viola Allen, the world-famous star, in the leading role, a portrayal she made famous on the stage, is scheduled for the week of June 23. The intense human appeal in this drama was evidenced during its run on the speaking stage. In the film version its appeal is reported to be even stronger, through the elaborations made by the Essanay Company.

"The Rosary," a Selig production, released the last week in the month, is from Edward E. Rose's soul-stirring drama of the same name, and features Miss Kathlyn Williams with her supporting company.

Old Doc Yak Coming Back

Beginning on Monday, June 7, the Chicago Tribune will issue weekly, through the Central Film Company of 110 South State street, Chicago, an animated weekly, five hundred feet of which will be devoted to moving pictures of the world's greatest events as filmed by the Tribune's camera men in all parts of the globe, and five hundred feet devoted to a cartoon comedy picturing the adventures of Old Doc Yak, the creation of Cartoonist Sidney Smith.

Old Doc Yak goes fishing.

Exhibitors will recall Mr. Smith's ability as a cartoonist and the drawing power of Old Doc Yak as a screen star, from the several releases made by Mr. Smith for the Selig Polyscope Company and released on the General Film program.

A representative of MOTOGRAPHY, however, who was privileged to view the first three or four releases of the Doc Yak comedies at the studios of the Industrial Motion Picture Company, where they are being made, is ready to go on record as declaring them the finest cartoon pictures yet revealed on the screen. The first one depicts Doc Yak on a fishing trip, and if there is a man, woman or child who can see that picture and not laugh, there must be something seriously wrong with him or her, for the picture is a scream from start to finish.

The cartoon comedies will be rather in the form of a serial, since the second issue of the Tribune's animated weekly will show Doc Yak's adventures following the fishing trip and his exploits beneath the waves, while the third picture, following his adventures under the water, will depict him in the battle zone catching cannon balls fired by warships and tossing them back toward the enemy.

Bookings on this animated weekly can be obtained through the Central Film Company, and an additional incentive toward making the picture popular is an offer of $50.00 in gold to be given away each week by the Tribune to the person making the best suggestion for a future comedy to be drawn by Cartoonist Smith.

To Release Through United

The Globe Feature Picture Booking Office, Inc., announces it has selected the United Booking Office Feature Picture Company of 1584 Broadway to act as its exclusive booking representative for the following supreme photoplays. American Lifeograph production of "Where Cowboy Is King" in four acts, which has had the distinction of playing a two weeks' engagement at the New York Hippodrome; Carl Ray production of "Vengeance of the Wild" in five acts, featuring Lorraine Otto; Balboa production of "Reaping the Whirlwind," in five acts with Jackie Saunders as the featured member of the cast; Pathe production of "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's masterpiece, in nine acts; Mutual productions of D. W. Griffith's masterpieces "The Escape" and "Avenging Conscience"; Life Photo production of "Springtime" with Florence Nash as the star; Universal production of "Neptune's Daughter" in nine acts, with Annette Kellerman the diving Venus, and the Gloria productions of "Souls Enchained" and "Love Everlasting" with Lydia Borelli as the star of both features.

Strand Gets B. A. Rolfe

Following the announcement that S. L. Rothapfel would become the manager of Hammerstein's Rialto when it is converted into a motion picture house, there comes the news that B. A. Rolfe has been chosen to fill the position of managing director of the Strand theater of New York.

Mr. Rolfe, who is a contributor to the Metro Film Corporation program under his own brand name, and is famous as a musician, will have complete charge of the staging of the productions at the Strand. Mr. Rolfe declares that his new position will have no effect on his relation with Metro.

He has not as yet planned any radical changes in the near future. He will take up his duties at the Strand on June 5.

Caulfield Succeeds Magie

Harry P. Caulfield succeeds George A. Magie as general manager of the west coast plant of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The change came in the nature of a sensation, as Mr. Magie had been in charge at Universal City less than two months.

A statement issued in Los Angeles from the publicity department of the Universal company was to the effect that Mr. Magie had received a telegram from Carl Laemmle, president of the company, asking him to hurry to New York "on urgent matters of the home office and other important matters in connection with the Universal's exchanges," with which Mr. Magie has been in intimate touch for the past four years.

Many rumors were in circulation in Los Angeles concerning a wholesale shake-up at Universal City, and a few were found to stoutly declare that the change in the general manager was due to friction between Mr. Magie and certain directors engaged in producing film plays in the big plant, the alleged friction having been due to Mr. Magie's "hiring and firing" of actors with disregard to the wishes of the directors for whom the actors worked. This policy, it was said, caused an uprising on the part of the directors, resulting in them wiring a "Round Robin" to President Laemmle.

Mr. Caulfield, the new manager, when asked regarding this rumor, emphatically denied that there had been any friction of any sort or any dissatisfaction among the directors. He declared that there was no occasion whatever for the circulation of such a rumor, that Mr. Magie had not been deposed, and that his own appointment as general manager will only continue until a permanent general manager has been named, and that possibly Mr. Magie may himself return, if he is not needed in the exchange department of the eastern office.

Others connected with the company stated that Mr. Magie's return was not expected and something of a commission form of government would prevail at Universal City, with Mr. Caulfield as general manager, aided by an advisory board of three of the present directors of the company—Otis Turner, Henry McRae and Al Christy.

Lubin Filming Marie Dressler

With the arrival at the Lubin studio this week of Marie Dressler, rated as the funniest woman on the stage today, the Lubin Company launched the first of a number of big comedy plans on which it has been working for some weeks past. Miss Dressler will begin work at once on a feature comedy picture, written especially for her, in which the famous comedienne will have plenty of scope to display her unique ability as a funster.

An unusually strong supporting company has been engaged for Miss Dressler, headed by John C. Rice, the widely known comedian. Howell Hansel, who has achieved an enviable reputation as a producer, will direct the picture. The Lubin Company is sparing no efforts to make the Dressler comedies the best ever filmed. The majority of the scenes will be made at the big Lubin ranch at Betzwood, Pa., where there is every facility for making exterior and interior pictures. For the past few weeks a large staff of artists and designers have been preparing special scenic effects in the studios on the ranch, to be used in the Dressler production.

To Handle Advertising Slides

The Illinois Motion Picture Advertising Corporation has opened an office in the City Hall Square building, Chicago. The corporation is modeled after the Western Motion Picture Association of Minneapolis and is said to be the beginning of a chain of similar corporations that are to be organized in various states in the middle west to contract the advertising of the better class of motion picture houses, using a unique device that puts advertising slides, photographed in color, in motion.

No motion slides will operate in theaters where still slides will be shown and there will be three hundred of these machines installed in Illinois. Only the better class of theaters will obtain them.

W. B. Russell of Chicago, widely known among national advertising agencies and at one time affiliated with the Essanay company, Chicago, has been installed as business manager of the corporation. Harry J. Ridings, one of the directors of the concern, is general representative of the Cohen & Harris chain of houses in the middle west and manager of George M. Cohan's Grand Opera House. Charles H. Darrell of Minneapolis, who is widely known among picture men of Minnesota, has been elected secretary and treasurer of the corporation, and James Wingfield, owner of the Wingfield Central States Circuit and president of the Central States Theatrical Company of Wisconsin, is vice-president, while Lou S. Houseman, who began as a cub reporter on the Chicago Inter Ocean in 1886, later became sporting editor and a fight promoter, and, still later, general representative for the A. H. Woods attractions, is president.

With this combined energy put into action it appears that nothing but the best of results can be accomplished by the Illinois corporation, whose activities will be watched with interest by the entire industry.

Ince Works Though Ill

Thomas H. Ince, producer for the New York Motion Picture Corporation of Inceville, California, is well along the road to recovery, but MOTOGRAPHY's readers will undoubtedly be interested in the accompanying cut, which shows Mr. Ince inspecting one of his pictures at his home in Hollywood, while recuperating from his injuries, for this hustling director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation was not satisfied to lie abed even though suffering intensely from the injuries he received, but insisted on doing everything possible that his physicians would permit.

Thomas H. Ince Viewing "The Reward" in His Own Home.

Accordingly a projection machine was lugged to Mr. Ince's Hollywood home and set up alongside his invalid's chair, while a screen erected at the other side of the parlor, on which the picture was projected, enabled Mr. Ince to O. K. his productions ere sending them east to be released.

Myrtle Stedman is the recipient of a costly ring sent to her by one of her admirers from far New Zealand.

Selig Companies to Las Vegas

Because the city of Las Vegas, New Mexico, has taken the trouble to tell the motion picture world about the advantages of the scenery surrounding it, it is to have two companies of players working under the banner of the Selig Polyscope Company, one headed by Tom Mix, the dashing cowboy actor, whose feats have thrilled the world, locate there.

Manager Thomas Persons, of the west coast Selig studios, visited Las Vegas last week, and, after carefully considering the adaptability of the country surrounding the city to motion pictures, decided to move two companies from the Los Angeles plant. June 1 is the date selected for the change and the stay of the two companies will probably be of indefinite duration.

Maud Allan With Bosworth-Morosco

Another capture of unusual importance for the screen has been announced by Bosworth, Inc., in association with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in the person of Maud Allan, the internationally famous dancer.

Maud Allan.

Miss Allan, who shares with her bosom friend, Pavlowa, the leadership in modern classical dancing, is an immense favorite in London because of her popularity with both the late king and the present queen mother. The dancer's presentations so captivated the English monarch that he took a personal interest in her forthcoming London debut, and when, through his influence, she received a second "command" to dance before the late king and Queen Alexandra after a dinner in their honor by the Earl and Countess of Dudley, the fortune of Maud Allan was made in the British Dominions. Prior to her London appearance Miss Allan scored wonderful success in other European cities.

Miss Allan has already reached the Morosco-Bosworth studios and is now at work on her initial motion picture subject, "The Rug Maker's Daughter," a stirring romance of the American-Turkish rug trade, which will include three of her most beautiful dances. It was solely through a lucky circumstance that the Morosco-Bosworth interests were able to secure this star. On returning from an eighteen months' tour of Australasia, India and the Far East, Miss Allan stopped off in Los Angeles for a short visit with her mother, where negotiations for her appearance on the screen followed her inspection of the Morosco-Bosworth studios.

Work has been begun on the next Bosworth, Inc., production, "The Turkish Rug," from the pen of Mrs. Julia Ivers, the novelist and magazine writer.

Publishes House Organ

Beginning this week, the V. L. S. E. will publish a weekly paper devoted to the best interest of its employes. This publication will be known as the Big Four Family, and it is distinctly different from the house organs of other film companies, in that it is not intended for distribution to exhibitors or the public. Its reading columns will be made up entirely of news on the progress of the V. L. S. E. productions in all parts of the nation. It will also contain selling talks for the guidance of branch managers and representatives in the field, that will be of invaluable help in carrying out the plans of the company.

The declared policy of the Big Four is to make money by helping exhibitors make more money, and the new publication is intended to instruct the selling forces how best to carry out this intention.

The new publication starts off with a force large enough to do credit to any general magazine. Walter W. Irwin is general manager, C. R. Seelye assistant general manager, C. J. Giegerich editor, and the ten branch managers are associate editors. In addition to this every employe of the V. L. S. E. is an honorary member of the reportorial staff.

Hitchcock Pleased with Keystone

Raymond Hitchcock, now starring in Keystone comedy under the direction of Mack Sennett, has taken to screen acting like the proverbial duck takes to puddles. He admits, however, that there are more things in the film-comedy technique of Mr. Sennett than he ever dreamed of in his speaking-stage philosophy. But he is a willing and patient student and the mastery of detail possessed by Mr. Sennett is not only amazing the Broadway favorite but is rapidly removing the rough edges that to some extent mar the work of any actor who has never worked before the lens—that unerring tyrant that overlooks nothing and never lies. Mr. Hitchcock expresses himself as being greatly pleased with pictures in general and Mack Sennett's Keystone brand in particular.

Touring New England

This week, General Manager Walter W. Irwin of the V. L. S. E. and Assistant General Manager C. R. Seelye will leave New York to look over the New England territory. It is the intention of Mr. Irwin to confer with C. H. Webster, Boston branch manager, in regard to the situation in Boston proper, while Mr. Seelye will assist in the perfection of the service and sales organization and then continue over much of the northeast territory on a visit to many of the most prominent exhibitors.

Lewis to Take Vacation

Edgar Lewis, the best known director on the staff of the Fox Film Corporation, will sever his connection with this establishment and take a long vacation. Mr. Lewis, who is a great worker, has endeavored to do too much in the last six months and his health has suffered as the result. His physician has warned him many times recently, but not until now has Mr. Lewis awakened to the danger. Mr. Lewis' relations with the Fox company have always been of the best and it will be with mutual regret that they now must part.

Roaming Around Los Angeles

BY ED MOCK

IT WAS difficult for me to get away from Los Angeles. There are nearly a hundred stock companies engaged in the making of films in California from a point three feet north of Santa Barbara and thence southward. It was impossible to see more than a small portion of the people comprising these companies. They represent the best salaried talent on the coast. They live in splendid homes of their own, in many instances.

* * *

Mary Pickford and her mother and brother are luxuriantly domiciled. Mary has her automobiles and fits into the life quite as acceptably on the Pacific Coast as she does on Broadway. Her welcome is ever the same. * * * Kathlyn Williams was doing fancy work when I saw her. She was attired in a plain gingham morning dress and was radiant. She had but recently returned from Panama via New York and Chicago and was resting up in the only country that looks good to her. * * * There, too, I found Bessie Eyton, another of the Selig stars. Bessie was at the zoo studio grounds, strolling through a path among the tall eucalyptus trees. Her hair—always black in pictures—is a red all its own. No other girl can match Bessie Eyton's crowning glory. She is a brick-top de luxe. * * * Tom Santschi, now producing and playing, was also unearthed at Selig's jungle zoo studios. We talked shop—Tom Persons, Tom Santschi and I. We all agreed that the making of program reels on a stop-watch basis wasn't the best thing for the business. * * * I met Mack Sennett and renewed an acquaintance formed in the highlands of New Jersey. Mack Sennett the citizen and Mack Sennett the producer and actor are vastly different people—at least, that was my quick impression. I learned something of Keystone comedy success, but it would be violating trade secrets if I told. I hung around the New York M. P. studio for hours, seeing the wheels go around. Ad Kessel was there—it seemed like old times. It was fun to crawl up on a stool and have lunch at Mother's Eat Shop. R. Kershaw of the Wonderland, Winnipeg—a regular paid-in-advance-subscriber—nearly missed a train watching the Keystone comedy stars at work. Ford Sterling, Mabel Normand, Owen Moore and many others were laughing at their own pranks under Sennett's direction. * * * At the Reliance-Majestic-Mutual studios, it was the same thing over again. I had Bennie Zeidman as pilot—erstwhile Bennie of Lubinville. It was my misfortune to miss David Wark Griffith, who was in New York, but I met others of his directors and scores of his player-folk. Dorothy Gish was doing a nun's part the day I was there. Black is an adorable color for Dorothy. Fay Tincher was dolled up in her famous stripes and old-fashioned beau-catchers—too funny for anything. The great Mutual Hollywood plant was a mad-house for work. Russell Smith greeted me on the fly. If he knows me when I see him again, he'll be a wonder. * * * I saw J. A. Berst on a hot, dusty afternoon in Person's red bubble-cart, midway between the N. Y. M. P. Co. and Carlyle Blackwell's studio. We had quite a visit. I haven't been successful in seeing Mr. Berst in Chicago. * * * Carlyle Blackwell was "feeling around." He knew he would reach some definite plan of action, sooner or later, but he wasn't in a hurry. Some of these handsome chaps never get excited about anything. Mr. Blackwell when he left New York said good-bye to Mable Condon; en route to the coast, he said hello to A. L. Haase and in Los Angeles I was there to greet him. He complimented MOTOGRAPHY on its far-reaching organization. * * * Down at Santa Monica I saw Inceville through my field glasses, but it wasn't possible for me to get down into the ravine by the ocean. That was one of the regrets I brought home with me. I wanted to say Good Morning to Tom Ince on his own stamping ground.

* * *

At B. A. Rolfe's studio I found great activity. Mr. Rolfe was there, himself, claiming to know little or nothing about the business. That is real encouragement. When a man isn't the oldest in the business, I am hopeful that he'll score a knock-out.

* * *

I would like to tell you something about the Selig Polyscope Company's tremendous investment at Los Angeles, but my hands are tired. You have heard that there would be a special train or two leaving Chicago, July 8, at 10 in the forenoon. That train will carry MOTOGRAPHY's representatives, who will tell you all about the trip to the Selig Jungle Zoo in far-away California. I have seen what they are going to see. To tell all about it now would crab their game, so I pass the buck. That is where Messrs. Hoagland and Wright put the kibosh on me! But I'm feeling glad that somebody else is to see what I saw. They will understand what takes W. N. Selig to California like a commuter. They will behold the largest privately owned zoological garden in the world—every detail a picture. You are bound to hear some raving about the place later on and I'll put my o. k. on the wildest splash that can be doped out.

* * *

You will please remember that Wm. N. Selig was the first of the film men to discover lower California afforded the particular quality of atmosphere best suited to motion pictures. And true to the Selig policy, improvements were of a permanent nature. When Mr. Selig builds a thing, he digs down into the earth to bed rock. His buildings stay put. You will find masonry and steel, granite and marble where you find the name of the Selig Polyscope Company. It is that way here in Chicago and I wasn't surprised to find it that way in Los Angeles. His property isn't confined to one place out there. The Edendale plant is one thing and the Selig Zoological Gardens quite another thing. Both are typically Selig institutions. Tom Mix was making pictures at Glendale. He had to have perishable settings. Mix takes no chance of being slammed against concrete. Mr. Selig also believes in flowers and creeping vines and cozy corners. You'll find his properties have suffered no over indulgence of praise. As a matter of truth the story hasn't been told. That is why Motography is sending more than one representative on the Selig California excursion.

When it was current news, this great household companion of the M. P. exhibitor printed a picture of Patrick Anthony Powers' honor dinner to Mr. and Mrs. Carl Laemmle. The event occurred in Hotel Alexandria, Wednesday night, March 17. It is recalled for the moment because it proved to be the momentous social event for the Universal Joy Party. They had been closely associated for ten days—a week on the train and four days around Universal City. No incident in the annals of the industry ever carried so much of good cheer. Everybody joined in the festivities like a bunch of school children at play. There were no cliques. If your dress suit was in New England, it didn't matter. Patrick Anthony Powers had provided the provender and all that went with it. The orchestra and the entertainers clung fast to Irish music. During the evening Pat possessed himself of the whole island, a county at a time! There were four thousand feet of exclusive travel pictures—those showing the Universal Party en route. There was dancing, singing and story telling. It was a Joy Party—one of the most successful from every point of view. And Mary Pickford was present.

Aside No. 1. In last week's issue of Motography appeared an advertisement which starts off with "The Truth Will Out." That part of it is old stuff—nothing is claimed for it. But the gist of the announcement follows with the declaration that an official of the Vitagraph Company is writing the copy. The business is improving when an official of a big producing company will write the ad copy. "The Truth Will Out" when this same official tells you he has had his eyes on the making of "The Goddess"—all the way from the script to the screen. I pay my little old double-jitney every Monday night to see Anita Stewart and Earle Williams in Gouverneur Morris' pretty story. I can see the crowd behind the director and the cameraman. I can see the rehearsals over and over and over. The new ad man on Goddess copy is in that crowd and I'm sure that at least one of his partners is close by. His enthusiasm crops out all the way. His eighteen years at film making declares itself all the while. "The Goddess" is something different in films. It is the first film I ever saw that was applauded on the flash of the title. That is going some. It is a film that many exhibitors frown upon, yet book it because the crowd out there in front demands it. There aren't many people in the cast of "The Goddess" thus far. The Georgia mountains have been furnishing most of the background. The exhibitor wants thrills. There haven't been any head-on collisions in the Vitagraph adman's conception of a beautiful film production. He has worked out a superb idea. He is handling a very difficult theme in an inspiring way. Situations tense in possibilities to border the vulgar are as clean as a shark's tooth. Pity the disaster that might have befallen the Morris' story in other hands. "The Truth Will Out." I won't name the Vitagraph official—yet. He may come out in the open of his own accord. He combines the dreamer who lays out the way and the doer who paves the way with success.

Prominent Vitagraph Star

Evart Emerson Overton, a prominent Vitagraph player, is a direct lineal descendant of the late Lord Overton and next in line for the title on account of the recent death of the peer. Although Mr. Overton's ancestors were English, he is thoroughly American, having been born in Osborne, Ohio, August 5, 1889; his father, John French Overton, was born in Christianburg, Ohio, and his mother, who before her marriage was Charlotte Light, near Dayton, Ohio.

Evart Overton.

Mr. Overton received his early education in the public schools of Osborne, graduating from the high school to enter the Ohio State University at Columbus. During his college career he was a prominent member of the Glee Club. The stage beckoned, and on his nineteenth birthday he decided to adopt a professional career. During the time Mr. Overton was appearing in the two-a-day houses he became interested in the writing of motion picture scenarios, and it was the acceptance of one of his manuscripts and the suggestion he play the lead in his own story that gave him his first introduction to the mysteries of posing before the camera for the silent drama. Completing his existing contracts in vaudeville, he became a full-fledged motion picture actor for one of the big producing firms. In February, 1915, Mr. Overton joined the Vitagraph company and has not been idle a day since, playing opposite Lillian Walker in nearly all of her most recent successes.

Terriss Aims High

Tom Terriss, who has been engaged in making feature photoplays on the island of Jamaica, West Indies, for the past two months, has thrown his hat into the ring and is out with the declaration that he is soon to return to the States with the explicit purpose of producing a feature which, in size and splendor, will equal, if not surpass, D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," which has been enjoying such phenomenal success in New York City.

The scenario for the big picture has already been prepared and is in such shape that the production can be begun immediately upon Mr. Terriss' return to the United States.

Program or Features, But Not Both

PROGRAM is one thing. Features are another thing, entirely different. The program in pictures is equivalent to the vaudeville bill on the stage. Features are equivalent to legitimate drama.

It is common practice for the exhibitor who runs program to grab every feature that looks good to him and sandwich it in between regular feature program dates. There is about as much sense in that course of action as there would be if a vaudeville manager, running a successful show, should persist in making bids for all the legitimate productions that took his fancy, and try to run them on odd occasions in his vaudeville house. We know he would not get away with it; but some of us do not realize that the motion picture exhibitor is allowed to get away with its equivalent only because the extraordinary vitality of the picture business will stand a great deal of abuse.

The feature film has developed into a show of itself. And now it is more than a show; it is a complete business system. The exhibitor who cares to operate in a business way, in the hope that he may continue to prosper and increase, must make his choice. If he elects to run program, the variety of the picture business, he should make up his mind that it will be program, and nothing else. And if he chooses to tie up to features, he should be able to make it features exclusively.

The thing for the exhibitor to get fixed in his mind is that the picture business has developed distinctions in the last few years. Just the fact that he has a theater with a projection machine that will take any film does not make it good business to run a heterogeneous mixture of features and program. No one exhibitor can hope to run everything that is good. The logical division is between features and program.

The distinction between these two parts of the business is getting wider every week. In most cases, features and program are no longer handled by the same methods or distributed by the same agencies. Everything tends to emphasize the fact that they are entirely different types of entertainment, whose only common ground is that they both use the same standard film stock, 1⅜ inches wide, with sixteen pictures to the foot and four sprocket holes to the picture. And that is the only reason why they both appear in the same theaters.

The wise exhibitor will choose now as a matter of policy. Make it either features or program; but not both in the same house.

Censorship Succumbs to the Ordeal

LICENSE COMMISSIONER BELL of New York, out of the kindness of his heart, took to himself the authority of a censor to save the sensitive feelings of German-Americans and other hyphenated patriots. He prohibited the showing of "The Ordeal" in any theater in New York because it presented reproductions of scenes in the Franco-Prussian war.

We cannot claim that Mr. Bell (if we admit he had any right to the censorship function) was any more drastic in his ruling than is the average censor in everyday practice, or had any less logical an excuse than is frequently used elsewhere in killing films. The case against the commissioner was no stronger than might be brought against almost any censor; the only difference was that "The Ordeal" had an aggressive and active supporter who took the matter to the courts.

And the result of this action is that censorship has received a blow in a vital spot. Supreme Court Justice Whitaker perpetually enjoins the commissioner from interfering with the production of "The Ordeal." Thus at one fell swoop is Mr. Bell deprived of his censoring power and the status of war pictures firmly established. For Judge Whitaker has made it clear that hyphenated Americans, whatever their racial prefix, can expect no consideration for their foreign sentiments. The "dangerous feelings among foreign-born residents" promised by Mr. Bell can have no recognition among Americans.

The amputation of the hyphen from these foreign-born Americans is the feature of the decision most interesting to the newspapers; and, of course, it has a considerable bearing upon the production of pictures, since it eliminates some former imaginary limitations. But probably of greater interest to picture men is the court's arraignment of this specific example of censorship:

First: That the act of the defendant in interfering with the exhibition of the photoplay of the plaintiff entitled "The Ordeal" was unauthorized and unjustified.

Second: That the defendant has exceeded his powers in directing the Hammerstein Opera Company to refrain from exhibiting the photoplay aforesaid.

Third: That the defendant's attitude that he will cancel the license of any theater refusing to obey his direction to eliminate the exhibition of the said film is capricious and arbitrary.

Fourth: That the defendant should be restrained from canceling the license of any theater in the city of New York merely upon the ground of the exhibition of the said film, and because of no other reason or condition.

The decision is of extreme importance because its effects must be far-reaching. Through it we begin to see a little light ahead. The crushing of even one censor is a victory; and Judge Whitaker has done more than that, in that he has started a wave of public interest and newspaper comment that will only end, we hope, at the death of all censorship. For the newspapers, startled out of their complaisant indifference by an actual court ruling, are editorializing the subject far and wide. Just as an example, the Chicago Tribune says:

The rights of the public are not to be abridged by bureaucracy, but are under the protection of the judiciary. The growth of censorship, undoubtedly stimulated by the moving picture, is a development which no American devoted to ideals of freedom can observe without alarm. The complexities in the situation are recognized and there is no disposition to push hard and fast rules to the extreme, but the censorship is an anti-American institution.

The use of censorship easily may tend to the misuse of it, and the position of the courts as a corrective to check the abuse of power by what is virtually an extra legal authority and might easily become an autocratic and stupid authority, must constantly be kept in mind.

It sounds familiar to us, but it is not familiar to the average newspaper reader—that is the point. That newspapers do most of the molding of public opinion has never been successfully denied; and now they are all taking up this question that we have struggled with for so long. We can certainly see no reason now to modify our old platform, "Down with all censorship!"

If all film manufacturers would put aside their "We should worry" attitude and carry their cases to court as did the makers of "The Ordeal," we would soon have enough decisions to put all the censors out of business.

Massachusetts Bills Postponed

All bills relating to state wide moving picture censorship in Massachusetts have been put over until the next session of the general court as a result of the report filed in the Senate on May 26, by the ways and means committee. Film distributors and exhibitors regard this action as a big victory and are highly pleased.

United opposition by the picture men and the stupendous political power of moving pictures revealed by the censorship agitation, due to the opposition to "The Birth of a Nation," is held responsible for the postponement of action on the Lowell bill, which is regarded as most obnoxious by the picture people.

Doubt is casting its shadow on the censors.

Ordinarily you'd expect we'd be as happy as the next chap when a chance offered itself for us to escape from work, but, by golly, the way work piled up on our desk Tuesday morning made us wish such a thing as holidays never existed.

It made Tuesday literally "The morning after the night before"—only worse.

Incidentally, we're seriously thinking of turning this column over to Paul Woodruff, who is pulling wheeze after wheeze in his editorial headings. Last week you noticed he referred to "The Birth of a Nation's Rebellion Against Censorship," and this week we lamp by the advance proofs he is going to announce "Censorship Succumbs to the Ordeal."

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

Episode Six: "Lucy Dove"

(PART ONE)

"Crossing the desert to escape Lu Beck, who was close behind me, I stumbled into a hole that led me down into a subterranean city," continued Lucy Dove, who was relating her hair raising adventures. "Many amazing perils befell me there, not the least of which was my dropping of the valuable plans into a boiling hot underground river that flowed through the place. After escaping from the horrors of that cavern I found a canoe and to elude Beck pushed off and was swept out to sea. Imagine my surprise some ten days later to discover that a strong current had swept me out into the Gulf Stream, whose warm waters originated at that underground river, for there, floating in the middle of the Gulf Stream, I found my precious plans, barely damp from their exposure to the elements. Off the coast of Florida I tumbled out of the canoe and swam ashore, only to be confronted with Beck when I landed. He had again outwitted me and was there to welcome me as I came ashore. Needless to say I was imprisoned in a trick house he had constructed on one of the Florida estates that he owned and in which he kept me prisoner for several weeks. Whenever anyone called to rescue me sliding panels in the wall closed behind them, staircases collapsed, traps in the floor opened and swallowed them and numerous other contrivances baffled all pursuers. One day I flew a kite from the roof and by climbing the kitestring and then cutting it loose beneath me I floated away and landed near the White House in Washington. Just as I was about to go in to call on the president Lu Beck again appeared. Realizing that his pursuit and determination had made me love and adore him, I confessed my heart's secret and became his wife. He then burned the plans, thus removing the danger to my father, and we lived happily ever afterward."

Some Current Releases Reviewed

Metro's "Her Own Way"

Reviewed by Mabel Condon.

"HER Own Way," a Popular Plays and Players release on the Metro program, features Florence Reed in a play of intrigue and amid a luxury of scenes and settings that would prove difficult of emulation. Clear photography, action that is kept at even tenor, a character cast sincere in its interpretation, are important qualifications that add value to the picture's worth. A readjustment of sub-titles would be a happy inspiration on somebody's part as the picture tells its own story so thoroughly as to make the use of only a few sub-titles necessary.

Clyde Fitch was the author of "Her Own Way" and Florence Reed takes excellent care of the role of Georgiana Carley. She plays it in a variety of stunning gowns and rich negligees and with understanding of the part that is satisfying. Fraunie Fraunholz returns to screen patrons who knew him well in the Solax days, in the important, unpleasant and well-acted character of Steven Carley, Georgiana's brother. William A. Morse, as Sam Coast, is the "heavy man" in the cast; he is convincingly good-looking and his work is smooth and destructive. His rival for the affection of Georgiana is Lieutenant Richard Coleman, which character is given evenly good interpretation by Robert H. Barrat. Miss Clarissa Selwynne as Mrs. Stephen Carley, Miss Blanche Davenport as Mrs. Carley, Georgiana's mother, John Karney as the butler, Moles, and James O'Neill as the Grand Duke Vladimir, complete the cast.

Five children romp and play through the picture in a natural manner. Three of them are supposed to be the children of Mr. and Mrs. Steven Carley. Mr. Carley is an unfortunate speculator and at the suggestion of Sam Coast, gambles away both the fortunes of his wife and his sister Georgiana, in the hope of retrenching previous losses. Coast wishes to marry Georgiana, but the latter prefers Richard Coleman.

Louisa learns that her brother is ruined.

Seeking to win her through force of adverse circumstances, Coast uses his influence to make Carley the loser of his family's money. Instead of turning to him, Georgiana turns from him more determinedly than ever. Coast scores when he tells Lieutenant Coleman, on the eve of his departure for the Philippines, that he, Coast, and Georgiana are engaged. Months later, Coleman, hearing from no other source mention of the engagement, writes Georgiana what Coast had prevented his having told her before his leaving.

Georgiana faints at beholding Dick.

Georgiana's happiness is over-shadowed by Mrs. Carley's indiscretion in receiving the attentions of the Grand Duke and in visiting his home. Georgiana makes her brother believe that the woman at the duke's home was she, instead of his wife. Coast, knowing the truth, threatens exposure unless Georgiana consents to marry him. She does, but at the beginning of the ceremony, Lieutenant Coleman, who had been reported dead, arrives. He takes Coast's place and the ceremony proceeds.

"The Darkening Trail"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THAT one does not have to be handsome to be a leading man in pictures is conclusively proven by William S. Hart of the Mutual Master-Picture produced by Thomas Ince, under the title "The Darkening Trail," for Hart undoubtedly rises to stellar honors in this production, and the American public who have seen him in other releases will proclaim him a star of the first magnitude after seeing his wonderful interpretation of the role of Yukon Ed.

George Fischer convincingly plays the unwelcome role of Jack Sturgess in the production, and Enid Markey is seen as Ruby McGraw, proprietress of the local store and heroine of the tale.

The picture is laid in the far northwest, and one scene in particular which depicts a mountain trail covered with snow and glistening in the moonlight is extremely beautiful. The story itself is a grim little tale with a tragic ending, though one or two subtitles serve in a measure to relieve the gruesomeness of the story itself by their grim humor.

The opening reel unfolds the sad little story of a girl whom Jack Sturgess, a rich young spendthrift has betrayed, and upon his refusing to honorably marry her is ordered out of the house and disinherited by his father.

Determined to start life anew, he leaves for Alaska and on his arrival at the bar in Hope City is invited to drink by Yukon Ed, who loves Ruby McGraw, proprietress of the local store. Jack scornfully refuses the invitation, and Ed and his friends by way of revenge bounce him in a blanket and later make the tenderfoot dance by firing at his feet.

He is rescued from this unhappy predicament by Ruby, who taken by his good looks and swagger dress falls in love with him, not realizing his shallow nature.

Surprising him in a flirtation with Ruby, and suspecting that he is not as sincere as he seems, Yukon Ed and his pals force Jack to marry Ruby at the point of their guns, but unfortunately the married life of the couple is far from happy.

and wine, and one night when he sets out in a rainstorm to visit one of the local dance halls, Ruby follows and rescues him when he falls in a drunken stupor at the side of the trail.

The exposure causes Ruby to take to her bed with pneumonia and Jack is sent for the doctor while a neighbor has been summoned to care for Ruby. Jack is struck with the idea that if he fails to arrive with the doctor in time, Ruby will die, and he will then be free to go back home.

Instead, therefore, of going for the doctor, he starts out in another direction to meet one of his feminine acquaintances at the local dance hall.

Yukon Ed, dropping in to see how Ruby is, learns of her serious illness and of Jack's departure for the doctor. Knowing of Jack's real whereabouts, Yukon Ed himself goes for the doctor, but the delay has been too long and Ruby passes down the darkening trail.

Yukon Ed, grim determination written on his face, goes to the dance hall and drags Jack to the side of his dead wife. Arrived there, Ed declares that Ruby's dying words had been, "Jack, don't let me go alone." The grim little tale ends with the sub-title, "I know you want her to be happy," with the saying of which Yukon Ed draws his pistol, points it at Jack's breast, pulls the trigger, and sends the husband on to join his wife.

CHAPTER SEVEN of the North American serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," which is entitled "The Fox and the Pig," keeps up one's interest in the history of the Stanley heirloom, which in a previous chapter was left in an owl's nest and in the present installment is found by a little negro boy and last seen being dangling over the edge of a pig sty by way of amusement for a fat little pig within.

A spectacular fox hunt gives ample opportunity in this chapter of the pictured novel for some spectacular riding and unusually pretty costuming against superb backgrounds, while thrill and punch is given to the chapter by the discovery that finger prints left in the home of Doctor Lee the night he was murdered, correspond with those later taken of Blair Stanley, thus implicating him as the murderer.

As chapter seven begins, Arthur, who has fled from the tournament, has an opportunity to change his garb by donning that of a man killed in the fox hunt held that day by the Fairfax Country Club. In his changed garb Arthur is able to elude his pursuers and returns to the farm house where he had previously sought refuge.

Hagar discloses the finger print evidence.

The dead man, dressed in Arthur clothing, is later found by the sheriffs, and taken into the home of Esther and Hagar, who conceal from the deputies the fact that the man is not really Arthur, hoping in this way to give Arthur a better chance of eluding his pursuers.

Vivian Marston and her friend, Mrs. Randolph, leave the Stanley home to return to Richmond, though their going leads Blair Stanley to again long for Vivian's society, and to raise the funds by any means with which to visit her in Richmond. Blair suddenly remembers the funds his mother has concealed behind the fireplace in his home, and when his mother is absent presses the secret spring that swings the fireplace out from the wall and passes in behind, there to steal the money he needs.

Meanwhile, Detective Tom Blake calls on Hagar with photographs of thumbprints taken in the home of Doctor Lee, also a photograph of Blair Stanley's thumbprints, the two being identical and seeming to indicate that Blair is guilty of the murder of Doctor Lee.

Detective Blake turns this evidence over to Hagar, who straightway sets out to call on Blair's mother.

Going to the Stanley home Hagar explains the evidence she holds in her possession and demands as a price of silence that Mrs. Stanley will see that Esther is received in Fairfax society. Mrs. Stanley begs to be excused, that she may consult with Blair before acceding to Hagar's request.

In her absence from the room, Blair, who has overheard everything, steals out from behind the fireplace, strikes down Hagar with a heavy iron poker, and then drags the still body into the room behind the fireplace. Returning, he sees the thumbprint photographs, crushes them into his pocket and flees from his home.

Meanwhile, Quabba, the Italian hunchback, and his monkey have met with Luke Lovell visiting at the home of Hagar and Esther. Luke gives Quabba a bite to eat at the back door and Quabba, moved by his friendly generosity tells him the strange story of the wonderful jewel that had come into his possession and then so mysteriously disappeared. The eyes of Luke light up with interest as he hears Quabba's tale, for Luke recognizes the strange jewel as "The Diamond from the Sky."

Meanwhile, far away, a little colored boy driving his pig along the country road, chances to see some owl feathers at the base of a tree and with the happy cry of "owls up dar" he climbs the tree and draws from its hiding place in the owl's nest the Stanley heirloom.

Pathe's "Blue Blood and Yellow"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE phrase "blue blooded" is interpreted in several different ways. To some it applies to descendants of the nobility. Others use it in referring to members of the aristocracy. Generally it denotes culture and refinement. But Anita, the ambitious little heiress in "Blue Blood and Yellow," did not look for this latter qualification in her blue-blooded suitor, Alfred Scott. She supposed that it rested in him by virtue of his being the last descendant of one of the oldest and best families in the blue book. Her awakening, when too late to mend matters, is a tragedy.

"Blue Blood and Yellow," in three reels, is the seventh release of the "Who Pays" series, being produced by Balboa for the Pathe program. Ruth Roland takes the principal part as Anita Logan, and Henry King that of Paul Reed. Convincing, realistic work is done by the portrayer of Alfred Scott, the heavy. The story of this release, while an extreme and unusual case, is nevertheless one of the most forceful and most dramatic plays of the series.

It begins with a scene explaining the relation between Anita Logan and Paul Reed. Anita, wealthy and proud, is loved by Paul, an astronomist of moderate financial means, but well supplied with ability and ambition. The latter is appointed to fill a vacancy at Mountain Observatory. Before leaving he proposes to Anita. She likes Paul well enough to marry him, but she is influenced in her decision by the knowledge that his father is a retired bricklayer. siders worthy of becoming her husband, and she accepts his proposal. The newly-married couple, accompanied by Anita's sister Bess, decide to spend the summer in the mountains. It happens that the bungalow occupied by them is but a short distance from Mountain Observatory. Anita first becomes aware of her husband's true character by his refusal to risk his life to save her when she loses her footing and slides part way down a steep hill. Paul Reed happens along in time to rescue her.

He is somewhat surprised when Anita links her arm in Scott's, and turns away with only a few words of thanks. But later this, as well as several other queer acts of hers, are explained by his learning of their marriage. The same man who informs Paul of Anita's marriage also reveals to the young wife that Scott wedded her as a means of paying off his creditors. This is substantiated by Scott's neglect of Anita and his absorbing interest in her sister Bess.

By the terms of her father's will, Anita is to be disinherited should she marry before she reaches the age of twenty-one. As her twenty-first birthday is but two weeks away she and Scott have kept their marriage secret. Now, however, Anita resolves to let her half of the Logan fortune go to charity rather than serve as Scott's bank account. This is easily accomplished, but when the girl requests a divorce Scott threatens to bring

American's "The Lonesome Heart"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THOSE who enjoy the acting of Margarita Fischer will find this popular American star at her best in the role of Samanthy, an inmate of an orphan asylum, in the four-reel Mutual Master-Picture released on June 3 under the American brand, which is entitled "The Lonesome Heart."

Playing opposite Miss Fischer is Robyn Adair in the role of George Stewart, son of James Stewart, a wealthy cattle owner, who years before was given Samanthy to care for by his partner, who was dying in a lonely cattle camp. Stewart, seeing an opportunity to acquire entire interest in the property should Samanthy be out of the way, places the girl in an orphan asylum, thinking his own identity is unknown, but Sara Prue, superintendent of the orphanage, has witnessed Stewart's act in leaving the child on the doorstep of the orphanage and kept her knowledge carefully to herself in the hope of some day blackmailing him.

When the story opens Samanthy, a girl of sixten, is the angel of the orphanage, beloved by its every inmate with the single exception of Sara Prue, the superintendent, who heartily hates Samanthy for the very reason that others love her.

Among Samanthy's most loyal friends is Tom, the gardener at the orphanage, and it is he who finally enables Samanthly to run away, thus escaping from the tyranny of the heartless superintendent.

Samanthy encounters George Stewart when the latter is hunting, and after he learns her story, George takes Samanthy to the home of his own governess and there installs her with a kindly, motherly old lady who agrees to shield her from the orphanage authorities when these officials call to take her back.

Finding that legal action may be brought for the purpose of returning Samanthy to the orphanage, George decides to have himself appointed the girl's guardian, and thus be in a position to defy any and all authority, but his father, learning of his intentions, visits George's former nurse and tells her that George is sentimental and inclined to make a great mistake on account of his supposed sympathy for the girl. The past is atoned for and Samanthy comes into her own.

forbids her permitting George to see Samanthy again, but on returning home finds that Sara Prue has at last decided that the time is ripe for her blackmailing plan, and on his desk lies a letter from the superintendent of the orphanage declaring that unless he provides for her in a large way she will reveal to the world his abandonment of the child years before.

Samanthy, meanwhile, broken-hearted, goes back to the asylum where she is followed by George who really is sincere in his admiration of her.

George's father later arrives to see Miss Prue, and when he finds his son and Samanthy there, and Miss Prue still insists that unless some money is forthcoming, she will reveal all, Stewart gamely tells his son and Samanthy the story of the past, announces that Samanthy is half owner of the estate which he controls, and as the picture fades out, the way is free for George to marry Samanthy.

Photographically the production is above all criticism, and though one gets the impression that it might have been told in less footage, the little touches of human interest added by the various players really seem to warrant the use of four thousand feet of film for the telling of the story.

"The Greater Courage"

ESSANAY'S three-reel production, "The Greater Courage," to be released June 12, and featuring Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn, is woven around a story which is well adaptable for screen use. Edna Mayo as Peggy Lorraine does remarkably good work, while Bryant Washburn, the young man who is timid and retiring and at a time when he could show his admiration for Peggy falls down because of his timidity, is worthy of praise.

Peggy Lorraine is sitting on the front steps of her home when she sees Gilbert and Lawrence Carthage, sons of Judge Carthage, sitting on their front porch. She waves to them and immediately Lawrence, a dashing, self-confident chap, rushes over to see the girl, but Gilbert hesitates a few moments and then walks slowly over to her. Lawrence goes to get the girl some water and in his absence she tells Gilbert that he is too bashful.

The next evening George Duncan, an unscrupulous bachelor, calls on Peggy and insults her. Just as the girl has managed to free herself from the embrace of Duncan, Gilbert Carthage comes in and Peggy tells him of Duncan's insulting her and asks that Gilbert put him out. The young man says nothing and does nothing, and Peggy, after seeing that George has gone out of the house, scornfully tells Gilbert to go. Before he leaves, however, young Carthage tells the girl he will force Duncan to write her an apology in the morning.

Peggy after Gilbert leaves writes Lawrence Carthage a letter telling him of the insult and that she loves him.

Gilbert goes to Duncan's home and there he sees Lawrence, who is on the same mission, that of making Duncan apologize to Peggy. He goes to the window and looks into the room where a quarrel is taking place between his brother and Duncan. A shot is fired and George Duncan is killed.

Gilbert Carthage has been seen near the window and a revolver is found there and as Lawrence declares his innocence, Gilbert is arrested for the crime and absolutely refuses to make a statement. He is sentenced by his father to fifteen years of imprisonment.

Some time later Lawrence Carthage, who has gone to the city, is seriously injured and sends for his father and Peggy. Upon their arrival he tells them of how he had gone to Duncan's home to demand an apology and expecting that Duncan would attack him had placed a revolver in his pocket. While they were quarreling an outcry was heard from the window and involuntarily he had shot through his pocket and then thrown the revolver from the window not knowing Gilbert was the one who had made the outcry.

Lawrence dies and Peggy and the judge procure a pardon for Gilbert, who had kept silent because he thought the girl loved Lawrence. Peggy then tells him that she has always loved him and had written to Lawrence only out of pique, also that he is the man of the greater courage.

The old lady tells him that Alene is not in the village and Dane is disconsolately entering the station when Daisy, who has come for him, stops him and asks him if he knows of Robert Dane's whereabouts.

Upon learning that she is speaking to Dane, Daisy tells him that she has come with a message from Alene.

Dane and the girl go back to the city and being unable to find Alene at the theatrical boarding house, go to the stage door and there are told that she had been driven away in a taxi which had been called and address of Jerome's house given to chauffeur. Robert Dane and Daisy hasten to Jerome's house and fearing for the girl's safety get a policeman to accompany them.

Upon their arrival there they find Alene innocently standing by the dead body of Jerome. The police station is called and the two servants in Jerome's house, Alene, Daisy and Robert Dane are taken to the police station.

Alene accused of Jerome's murder.

A chemist discovers that Jerome has died from some unusual poison. As Alene had been there and the butler declares that he saw her give Jerome the cup and tell him to drink from it, she is held for the murder of the man and Robert Dane and Daisy are held as witnesses.

Dane, realizing how strong the circumstantial evidence against Alene is, is heartbroken and the girl herself is only bewildered that she should be shut in behind prison bars.

"The Right to Happiness"

JOSEPH GALBRAITH, the new American leading man in the company in which Vivian Rich is featured in the feminine roles, proves his right to leading honors in "The Right to Happiness," the two-reel production of June 7.

In this picture he interprets the role of Joe Blaney, who is accused of theft when a large sum of money is found missing from the office in which he is employed. Both Joe's employer and his wife, who is his employer's daughter, turn against the unfortunate man when the robbery is discovered, and though he is not prosecuted, he feels so despondent and heartbroken over their lack of trust in him, that he goes West, changes his name, and in a new locality tries to win the regard and respect of the citizens.

Joe realizes the dawn of a real love.

Meanwhile, Frances, his wife, sues for a divorce, but when the judge grants the decree, changes her mind and decides that she will not accept the separation.

Joe, in a western mining town, is much attracted toward Elsa, the daughter of the hotelkeeper, whom he has rescued from the attentions of Carlos, a Mexican, who was annoying her.

On reading in a stray newspaper that Mrs. Blaney had secured a divorce, Joe thinks the way clear for him to marry Elsa, and accordingly proposes and is accepted.

A year passes and a child comes to gladden their home. Joe, one day decides to investigate an abandoned mine shaft, and on discovering that a little lamb has fallen into the deep hole, he descends to the bottom for the purpose of rescuing it.

Carlos, the Mexican, who has nursed his hatred against Joe all this time, thinks this a fine opportunity to avenge himself on the man and accordingly cuts the rope, preventing Joe from coming to the surface.

About this time Mrs. Blaney learns by chance of Joe's change of name and his present whereabouts, and sets out to visit him in the hope of effecting a reconciliation.

She arrives at his home merely in time to learn that Joe has been missing for several days, and that all efforts to find him have met with failure. His wife is distracted with grief, and when news is brought that Carlos, the Mexican, sick unto death, has confessed to the village priest his abandonment of Joe at the bottom of the mine shaft, the mother of Joe's child rushes frantically off to aid in her husband's rescue.

Mrs. Blaney, realizing that Joe sincerely believed himself free to marry again, decides that he is entitled to his right to happiness, and accordingly steals silently from the house and returns to the city without disclosing her identity or mission. Joe is soon restored to health and happiness with his wife and baby.

Cort's "The Melting Pot

THE fineness of the Cort Film Corporation's first contribution to the film world makes the entry of this concern into film circles a notable one. all concerned in its making. Realism is the note struck early in the first reel and its vibration does not cease until after the flying of Old Glory in the concluding scene.

No finer screen portrayal has been given than that of "David" by Walker Whiteside. It is to be hoped that this, his initial camera performance, will be followed by many more screen appearances. He is fortunate in the possession of all the graces, yet none of the faults, that lend themselves to the actor's first portrayal on the picture screen. His work, his features, his garb—all are expressive of the young Jew of high mental quality attributed to David. There is a great amount of dramatic worth to the scenes in which David figures, and he does them full justice.

Valentine Grant as Vera Ravendal gives ideal support to Mr. Whiteside. Hers is a performance dramatically fine. She causes the character of Vera to stand for individualism and it is one that merits the "Well done" of critic and public. Fletcher Harvey as Baron Ravendal, father of Vera, is well cast in this role, the dignity of which he sustains by his very fine portrayal of the man who saw to the carrying out of the command of the Russian ruler, which made the Easter a black one with the horror of the Kishinef massacre.

uncle, and Julia Hurley as Frau Quixano, are equally fine in their realistic work. Harold Crane as Quincy Davenport and Henry Leone as Herr Papelmeister, music instructor, complete a cast of individual and collective merit.

James Vincent and Oliver D. Bailey are responsible for the picture's commendable direction, and Catherine Carr for its photo-dramatization. The types which go toward making the scenes of massacre, tabernacle and steerage exceptional ones, were gathered from New York's great East Side and are themselves ingredients of the great melting pot, by which name this America of ours is now known.

Part Four "The Goddess"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

CHAPTER FOUR of the beautiful Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," promises to be the real beginning of the story. In the first chapter three mighty financiers are seen planning a way of quieting the turbulent working class. They decide upon the means, but it is not until now that their plans begin to be felt. The installment opens with a light comedy, and continues in this strain until near its close, when things assume a more serious air.

Much interest in what the succeeding chapter might bring forth is aroused by the final scene which shows Celestia, angelic-looking in her white filmy gown, leading a large crowd through the Pennsylvania station and out onto the street where she is whisked away in an automobile by Stilleter, the psychologist. Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, and Paul Scardon are the principals in the cast. Ralph Ince is directing the serial.

The end of the third chapter left Tommy Barclay, nude and angry, muttering threats against Stilleter and his Indian henchman who, while he was taking his morning plunge in the river, stole Celestia and took his clothes to prevent pursuit. In the meantime things of importance have transpired in the nearby village. One of the Main street orators, a tall, freckled, ungainly youth, has just received the appointment of correspondent for a New York newspaper for his and the neighboring towns. This came as a reward for faithful and unsolicited news service covering local events in his neighborhood.

The editor of the metropolitan paper is surprised to receive a long distance call from his correspondent before the latter's commission can have been in effect more than an hour. He thinks that the youth is trying to realize on his space-contract on being told that a girl, garbed in a long white gown, has just boarded the train for New York, bound on a mission of reformation. With a sarcastic "What is she, a female Billy Sunday?" he hangs up. A short time later the telephone rings again, and the editor hears another wild story from his new lieutenant about a fur-clad man who has emerged from the woods in search of the goddess.

The editor decides to be on the safe side, so he sends a reporter and photographer over to the station to confirm the correspondent's report. Sure enough the noon train brings in a girl who answers the youth's description, and who seems to be under the hypnotic influence of the rather elderly man who accompanies her. Celestia's companion is Stilleter, the psychologist. Tommy, meanwhile, has recovered his clothes from Smellsgood, the Indian, and has set out for New York. Stilleter and Celestia are taken to a police station and later the girl from heaven is escorted to Belleview hospital, where she undergoes an examination as to her sanity. It is there that Tommy finds her, and since she is pronounced reasonably sane by the physicians, Tommy is permitted to take her away with him. When last seen they are going to a quiet New York hotel where Tommy is to engage rooms for Celestia.

Stilleter after reporting Celestia's arrival to the financiers hurries off to the hospital to watch her, but learns with surprise that she has been taken away by Tommy.

Selig's "His Father's Rifle"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett.

THE three-reel production of Selig's "His Father's Rifle," with Stella Razeto and Guy Oliver playing the leads, is full of superb photography.

He recognizes his father's rifle.

It is one of the jungle zoo pictures and excitement and adventure are present throughout. The lion, king of the jungle, is a magnificent specimen of the beast and when he attacks Kirke Warren, knocking him to the ground, you wonder that such an animal is allowed to go even within a few feet of the actors.

The opening scenes of the story shows Kirke Warren, a painter of jungle beasts, ordering his servant, Higgens, to go back to camp and prepare to leave that night. The servant decides he will hunt for a little while and starts out with Warren's rifle, which belonged to his father before him. Higgens spies a beast and fires at it. The bullet hits and kills James Birch, a wealthy farmer, living near. Dropping the gun, the scared hunter hurries back to camp. Birch's man servant finds his dead body and carries it back to his home. He also picks up the rifle and gives it to Elsa Birch, the wife of the dead man, who vows vengeance on the unknown owner of the rifle.

A year passes and Kirke Warren meets Elsa at a ball and she invites him to spend a week end at her home and join a big house party. The men all leave for a lion hunt and as Warren cannot find his rifle, Mrs. Birch takes him into the gun room and there she tells him to choose one. He chances on his own rifle and recognizes it and Elsa feels sure that he is the murderer of her husband.

Although she has learned to care for Kirke, Birch's wife is bent on revenge. She calls her man servant and tells him to place cartridges which are too large for the rifle in Kirke's belt.

After arriving in the jungle Kirke separates from the rest of the party and starts out to hunt. He sees a lion and levels his rifle and starts to fire, but it will not work. He stoops down to see if he can fix it and the lion attacks him and bears him to the ground.

The men find Kirke and carry him back to the home of Mrs. Birch. Upon their arrival they are told that Elsa had left quite a time before and had not returned. Kirke, regardless of the fact that he is very weak from the loss of blood, heads a searching party and they go out to look for Elsa. She has been captured by a band of Zulus and Kirke and his party after a hard fight rescue her.

Sometime later Higgens confesses to Elsa that it was he who had killed her husband and she goes in to Kirke and the dawn of a romance is near at hand.

Edison's "Cohen's Luck"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE impression which one would gather of the great East Side of New York from most of the photoplay plots laid in it is that it is a thickly populated haven for black-hand gangs, gunmen, sweatshops, and disease; a workaday purgatory for all who live in it. But there is another and happier side to the life in this congested district where the streets, even on the most ordinary of days, are literally thronged with children, pedestrians, heavy traffic and migratory fruit and vegetable carts.

It is seen in its true environment in "Cohen's Luck," a four-reel Edison feature depicting the business and home life of one Abe Cohen, abrupt of speech, almost repellant in his gesticulations, and mercenary in thought, but who, beneath all of this, is kind, affectionate, and sympathetic. Cohen seems possessed of two personalities. One, the mask, serves him as a business armor. The other, his true self, accounts for his many friends and noble generosity to those in need. William Wadsworth's work as Abe Cohen is as deserving of the word "perfect" as any voiceless impersonation of this eccentric character could be.

"Cohen's Luck," directed by John H. Collins, is a picturization of Lee Arthur's play of the same name, and is scheduled for release on the General Film Program in regular service on June 11. The action for the most part is farcical and very humorous. In the entire picture there are only one or two scenes which need toning down. The incidents connected with the household flood and Cohen's art of punch making might have been left out without harming the story. As they are now, however, they are too farcical to be repulsive.

The little bit of stern drama which the picture contains is well enacted by Viola Dana as Minnie Cohen, a "rose of the Ghetto," and Duncan McRae as Samuel Blumenthal, a sweatshop owner. Jesse Stevens is good as Kitty McGee, a good-natured Irish woman who refuses to let any one get ahead of her. Satisfying characterizations are given by Frank A. Lyon as Steve O'Roque, Edward Lawrence as Timothy Murphy, Henry Leoni as Laskey, Johnnie Walker as David Moss, and Lillian De Vere as Mrs. Cohen.

Abe Cohen and Kitty McGee, both employed in the same tailoring establishment, pool their money and buy a lottery ticket. After much dissension as to who should keep the ticket, it is decided to tear it in half. As Abe is president of the Buttonhole Makers' Union, Steve O'Roque, a politician, seeks his indorsement. Cohen's candidate is Timothy Murphy, and he tells O'Roque so. The latter, who has some hold on Blumenthal, Abe's employer, has him discharged.

Kitty McGee tells Murphy of O'Roque's action, and the rival politician starts Abe in the restaurant business. In the meantime Minnie Cohen has encouraged Blumenthal's attentions in spite of her parents' protests, and has become his wife—as she thinks, but the man is already married. A thief steals Kitty McGee's purse, securing her half of the lottery ticket. Abe is told that his number has won. In celebration he serves free dinners in his restaurant. Kitty McGee tearfully informs him of her misfortune. His first act is to clear out the free lunch poachers. His second to swallow his sorrow, and tell the woman not to worry about it. Generously, he forces himself to laugh over the loss.

As Blumenthal has kept the marriage license and ring, Abe does not believe that his daughter Minnie has been married, and he turns her out. Later he learns the truth and persuades her to forgive him and return home. By a clever trick Abe secures Kitty McGee's half of the lottery ticket from the thief, and he and the woman divide the fortune. As Blumenthal has a wife living, his marriage to Minnie is invalid. A big party is given in the Cohen home to celebrate Minnie's marriage to David Moss, her parents' choice.

"Guarding Old Glory"

F. O. NIELSEN, who presents "Guarding Old Glory," a five-reel feature picture dealing with Uncle Sam's army and navy, chose a most auspicious time in which to make his production, for right at this time every man, woman and child in America is thinking and talking of military affairs and considering the possibility that this country may soon be called upon in fact to guard its emblem.

The patriotic nature of the five-reel feature offered by Mr. Neilsen to state rights buyers became apparent with the first view of the first sub-title, for in a tasty border, which bears the announcement of the film producer and the title of the feature itself, is inset a square moving picture showing Old Glory fluttering in the breeze, and it is safe to say that applause will break out in every house in which the film is shown at this flash of the title itself.

The production depicts not only Uncle Sam's boys in blue engaged in drills, maneuvers and skirmishes on land, but also devotes a considerable part of its five thousand feet to the naval equipment of the United States, showing battleships in action, torpedo boats skimming through the water in pursuit of the mimic foe and submarines sinking beneath the waves right before your eyes, together with close-up views of the big guns being fired, of torpedoes being launched, exploding and hurling volumes of water hundreds of feet in mid-air.

Still another feature of Uncle Sam's equipment is demonstrated when the pictures of the aeroplane scouts in action are seen, and one beholds an aeroplane hovering high above the battle field and signaling, by means of wireless telegraphy, to forces both on the ground and at sea, thus enabling all branches of Uncle Sam's defenders to co-operate against the foe.

Photographically the production is splendid, though in one or two of the drill scenes the dust from the cavalry obscures the picture for a moment or two, but it soon settles and the interesting events continue.

Mr. Neilsen is to be complimented upon the wide and varied nature of his production and the incorporation in it of practically every defense in the employ of Uncle Sam. The scenes change rapidly from land to sea and then into the air, so that one is not satiated with fighting of any one kind, but thrilled and inspired by the patriotic nature of the subject he is witnessing.

Pathe's "The Telltale Heart"

CRAIG KENNEDY, the scientific detective, proves in the latest episode of the new "Exploits of Elaine," which is entitled "The Telltale Heart," that he has invented a crime detector that will record the consciousness of the slightest emotion in the most stout-hearted criminal. This instrument, known as the sphymograph, is demonstrated in this latest episode of the Elaine series.

Wu Fang, the master criminal of Chinatown, sends a handkerchief containing a spark of radium to Elaine by means of a female accomplice disguised as a gypsy fortune teller, the plan being for the fortune teller to command Elaine to bind her eyes with the handkerchief during some of the hocus-pocus of her fortune telling, thus blinding Elaine for life, since the operation of the radium, if left for even as long as three minutes, would surely have caused Elaine to lose her eyesight completely.

Fortunately, however, Jameson, Kennedy's assistant, follows innocent Inez, another of Wu Fang's confederates, to her apartment and later, after Jameson has been laid out by an iron bar that swings out from a wall behind a chair when a certain button is pressed, Kennedy arrives and learns of Elaine's peril.

The fortune teller traps Elaine.

Calling up Elaine at her home, he warns her of her danger and she removes the handkerchief, which already had been bound across her eyes. The fortune teller, frightened, escapes from the room, closely pursued by Elaine, her aunt, and the butler.

Jameson, meanwhile, has brought Innocent Inez to Kennedy's laboratory, and there they attach to her wrist the wires leading to the sphymograph and by questioning her record her emotions on the mechanical crime detector.

Knowing she is intimate with Wu Fang, the Chinese criminal, who resides somewhere on Pell street, Kennedy questions her about the number of the apartment, in the hope of learning it exactly, and ere Wu Fang climbs the fire escape and assists her to break away from the clutches of Kennedy and his assistant, the girl unconsciously permits the crime detector to register No. 14, thus giving Kennedy a clue as to Wu Fang's hiding place.

The film, ending at this exciting point, indicates that the following episode will contain thrilling situ-

EPISODE thirteen of the Universal serial, "The Black Box," seems to be a breathing place in the story, for the action as compared with that of the previous episodes lets down to a decided degree, though it seems certain that the following episode will be jammed with thrilling adventures for the story is near its close and much remains to be explained.

This particular episode depends for its punch on a burning bridge, across which Quest must ride in order to reach a certain railway station where he has an appointment with Craig.

The beginning of the reel shows Quest and Lenora swimming ashore after their fall from the bridge into the river and Quest's subsequent conveyance of his girl assistant to a cattle ranch, where she is placed under the care of physicians since she is suffering from a broken rib that will confine her to her bed for a week or more.

a quarrel between Jose, the Mexican, and his hot-tempered sweetheart.

Craig rescues the lady when her impetuous lover is about to slash her throat with a dagger, and the girl at once turns to him as a natural protector and at the same time a means of increasing the jealousy of Jose, her lover, though Craig refrains from returning any of her caresses.

Jose, insanely jealous of the girl's attentions to Craig, swears to be revenged on him and with the assistance of other Mexicans hatches a plot for Craig's undoing.

Meanwhile, Quest learns that Shorty, one of the cowboys, knows of Craig's whereabouts and when the professor receives a cablegram from England stating that his sister is dead and that her daughter Mary, his neice, is coming to New York to meet him, Quest, after reading the telegram, manages to have it conveyed by Shorty to Craig, using one of the black boxes as his hiding place for the message.

Quest follows Shorty into Mexico when he goes to deliver the message, though he is disguised in such a fashion that Shorty does not recognize him.

After Craig has read the message he declares to Shorty that if he were only a free man and not hounded by the police, he would tell his life's story and expose the villain who had brought so much dishonor to his name. The words are no sooner out of his lips than a man at the adjoining table casts aside his disguise and exposes himself as Quest.

Quest declares that if Craig will go to New York on the 7.10 train the following morning and meet him there he will guarantee that Craig will not be hounded further by the police, an offer which Craig readily accepts.

The same mysterious hands that have been seen in a number of other episodes of this story set back Quest's alarm clock in the hope of preventing his meeting Craig at the station, but by a fast ride Quest arrives barely in time to see Craig on the train, despite the fact that to reach the station he has to cross a bridge which has been set afire by Jose and his men in the hope of injuring him.

As the episode ends, Lenora, who has arisen from her sick-bed to follow Quest, arrives at the bridge and falls senseless on the burning structure.

Simone Leaves Centaur

Charles Simone has resigned his position as secretary and supervising director of the Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, N. J., in order to devote his time to directing productions.

Mr. Simone had been with the Centaur Company, of which David Horsley is the founder, since its inception over six years ago. When Mr. Horsley began producing Nestor comedies Simone went along with his old employer, acting in the capacity of general manager for the Nestor Company. With the reorganization of the Centaur Film Company about two years ago Mr. Simone became secretary and supervising director, which position he held until last week.

During the last year Mr. Simone has directed most of his attention to producing special feature pictures of a dramatic and educational nature, but inasmuch as the Centaur Company will not make any features, for the present at least, Mr. Simone decided to make a change to a place where he might carry out his plans.

He has received offers from several producing organizations to direct productions, but so far he has accepted none of them. It is quite likely, however, that within a few days announcement will be made of his connection with one of the big picture corporations.

New Selig English Offices

In order to accommodate its continental business which, despite the European war, is increasing, the Selig Polyscope Company has opened new offices and show rooms at 93-95 Wardour street, London, England. E. H. Montagu, the sole agent for the Selig Polyscope Company's picture plays in England, is in charge.

The building is in the heart of the city and was only recently constructed. It is built of stone, is four stories high and contains every facility and convenience for the exhibitors and others who visit it regularly to see and secure the Selig regular releases and the Red Seal Plays, both of which are very popular on the other side of the water.

Mr. Montagu and his force of assistants moved into their new quarters on May 17 and during the remainder of that week kept "open house" and acted as hosts to many visitors who dropped in to congratulate them.

Brevities of the Business

Theodore Wharton, Pathe producer, whose name is known wherever people see good pictures, is, like so many men in the business, a graduate of the "legitimate." He is a native of Milwaukee, but was raised in Texas, where for nine years he was treasurer of the Dallas Opera House. Feeling that life would be more interesting on the stage than "counting the house," he joined the Hopkins Grand Opera Company as an actor in St. Louis in 1895, and remained with that organization for two seasons, when he went with E. H. Sothern. His next engagement was with "The Sporting Duchess," after which he was transferred to Charles Frohman's Empire theater company, which at that time was famous for the number of stars it developed. In 1889 he joined Augustin Daly's famous stock company, and later managed "The Great Ruby." Then he became assistant treasurer of Hammerstein's Victoria theater, which position he held for five years, leaving it to manage Hanlon Brothers' "Superba." Wharton was first attracted to motion pictures in 1907 when he began writing scenarios, with what success was proven by his selling twenty-eight of his first thirty scripts to the Edison company, which then made him scenario editor and studio supervisor. When Pathe Freres established their American studio, he went with them and became their first director. Since that time with the exception of short intervals, he has been associated with Pathe, first as director, and now, with his brother Leopold, as producers for Pathe. Through the "Exploits of Elaine" the Wharton name has become known in every hamlet in the land. In Ithaca, where the Whartons have a fine studio property, Theodore Wharton is known as "the man who discovered Ithaca."

Thomas Jefferson, recently engaged by D. W. Griffith, is now at work with a company filming the forthcoming two-reel Reliance photodrama, "The Old Clothes Shop." Mr. Jefferson is the son of one of the most eminent of American actors, the late Joseph Jefferson.

Arrangements are now being made at the western Lubin studio at Los Angeles, California, to put on a series of military and naval dramas in which all the forces of the United States government, including land forces, battleships, cruisers, destroyers, submarines, aviation corps and every other branch of Uncle Sam's forces will be utilized.

Dave Morris has recovered from his recent illness and is back at the Keystone studio in his old time form.

One of Mack Sennett's recent acquisitions is Don Barclay, who joined the Keystone company last week. "Billiken" Barclay is one of the youngest stars in big eastern burlesque, having made a sensation in New York in "The Prize Winners" at the Columbia before the close of his first performance at that theater. The newspaper critics were unanimously in his favor, and now that Mack Sennett has taken him under his direction there is little possibility of his failing to become a world-wide favorite in picture comedy.

Jacques Jaccard has completed the production of his first picture since returning to Universal City. "Learning to Be a Father," is the title of the comedy drama, written by John Fleming Wilson.

Henry McRae and his company of 101 Bison players have left the Universal City studios for the Santa Barbara islands.

Jane Novak, whose previous work before the camera with other companies has earned her an enviable reputation, has joined the forces of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Universal City and will appear in productions made by Director Otis Turner.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the New York Strand Theater Company, has written W. H. Rudolph, general manager of the Eiko Film Company, complimenting the latter upon the German war pictures imported by the Eiko Company and which were made in Germany under the auspices and for the German Imperial Government.

Francis Ford and his company of special feature players are hurrying through the installments of "The Broken Coin," the next Universal serial.

Herbert Brenon, who has just completed the last scenes of D'Ennery's "Two Orphans," which for screen purposes will be called "The Hunchback," is now down at Atlantic City getting a lay on some good exteriors.

Dolly Larkins and William Ryno are the latest acquisitions to the producing force of MinA films.

During the past week almost all of the film stocks have been sluggish and the volume of trading exceedingly limited. The production of film footage is increasing at such an enormous rate during the past six or eight months that the stress of competition is now being felt in all of the companies and profits are, naturally, being affected.

Reliance Motion Picture Corporation—The common stock was freely offered during the past week and buyers were difficult to find.

World Film Corporation—One of the officials of this company states that he is going to recommend to the directors on June 27 an initial dividend of 3 per cent. He further states—the contracts closed for foreign rights will net his company over $200,000 per year, and that the profits from domestic business are sufficient to pay a large dividend on the outstanding stock. In the face of all of this good news, the fact that the stock remains practically stationary might be further explained by the ingenuous admission by the same official to the public press several days ago that his participation in the profits of the company amounts to $3,000 per week. That this company is aggressive and closing contracts no one doubts, but that its operating expenses constitute an item of very considerable proportions, will also account for the fact that the public is exhibiting more wisdom in the purchase of film stocks than hitherto, and looks at both sides of the ledger to get a proper conception of the financial condition of a company.

Mutual Film Corporation has continued weak and stock sold under 75. A number of reasons for the present level in the market will probably be forthcoming on or about June 15, the date of the annual meeting.

Mr. Aitken, president of the Mutual, and Messrs. A. Kessel and C. O. Bauman of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, have incorporated a new manufacturing company, to be called the "Fulton Feature Film Company." This concern will produce four and five-reel features and it is expected the productions will be released through the Mutual.

North American Film Corporation—"The Diamond from the Sky" continued to do a larger business in its fourth week in New York City than "The Million Dollar Mystery." The same is true in many of the larger cosmopolitan centers, but business in the western coast districts is below the average receipts registered in all other parts of the country. The gain each week and contracts in force has been steady and constant. The "story" value—rather than a mere series of stunts—probably explains why, when a contract is once secured, it "stays put."

Though the screen story back of "The Governor's Boss," which is starring ex-Governor Sulzer and Pauline Hall, does not follow the actual history of the impeachment, there is enough pre-election and after-election material in the picture to make it of tangible value as a recorder of facts. Interwoven among the fibers and strands that lead up to the impeachment, with its political intrigues, thrilling escapades, and surging election crowds, is as dainty a romance, delicately handled, as any poet's imagination could conjure up. These clever little touches put the real heart-interest into the film and make it of as much value as a human document, as it is a real account of political boss-ridden states.

The engagement of the first series of the "Dorsey Expedition" pictures at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, has been extended from one week to three weeks.

Billy Sheer is leaving for New York city this week, where he will enter the business end of the theatrical business by becoming assistant manager of a road show during the coming season. Baron Long is not the only one that hates to see him go.

Lionel Belmore, the Vitagraph director, has been selected to direct the Pageant of Lexington on June 21, 22 and 23, commemorating a century of peace between the United States and England. The celebration will be held in aid of the Red Cross.

Madame Yorska, the famous French actress and protegee of Madama Sarah Bernhardt, was the guest this week of D. W. Griffith at the Mutual studios at Hollywood.

Syd Chaplin has practically recovered from the illness which compelled him to rest quietly at home for a week.

Frank Powell, director of the Fox Film Corporation, and his leading lady, Theda Bara, at St. Augustine, Fla., making the production of "La Giaconda."

Arthur S. Kane, one of the best known and most successful film men in the east, with his family left New York the last of May for a four months' tour of California and the expositions.

Charlotte Walker is on her way to Lasky studio in Hollywood, California, where she will begin work on the picturization of "Kindling."

Just as the "Romance of Elaine" company and the Whartons were saying their farewells in the Pathe Studio last Saturday, lightning struck one of the chimneys. Some of the players were hurled to the floor and badly shaken up, but no serious damage was done.

Kate Toncray, one of the best and most effective actresses on the speaking and screen stages, became recently a member of the Reliance and Majstic group of photoplayers. As she had worked under D. W. Griffith in other days her new connection is a renewal of old associations.

At the request of the College of the City of New York Selden Warner, of the Edison laboratory, recently addressed a large body of students and professors in the Doremus Lecture theater on the use of motion pictures in the study of insect, plant life and microscopic study, as evidenced in the pictures which he took at the Edison laboratory.

Mrs. Brown is the name of a woman whose trials and tribulations are many at the Reliance and Majestic studios. She has charge of the "extra" girls used in the large scenes made at the Reliance-Majestic studios. The same observation as to troubles might apply to Mr. Rodgers, who is in charge of the men.

Wilfred Lucas, well known in motion picture circles both as an actor and a producer, has been engaged by D. W. Griffith to appear in a new Mutual Masterpicture now being filmed under the direction of John B. O'Brien.

Bryant Washburn received a letter from Manager Schmidt of the Atlas Amusement Company of Indianapolis, Ind., inviting him and other members of Essanay to be his guests at the races on Decoration Day.

Frank Daniels, the comic opera star, whose introduction to moving picture audiences will be in the title part of "Crooky Scruggs," the five-part feature which the Vitagraph company shortly will release, regretted that he had delayed appearing on the screen for so many years.

Raymond Hitchcock, the comedian, was a visitor at the Hollywood studios this week.

Charlie Parrott, who has been directing a company at the Keystone studios for the past two weeks, was formerly a musical comedy performer and spent a season as stage manager of a traveling organization.

William J. Kelly, who played Prince Dimitri, in "A Woman's Resurrection," will, before he appears on the screen again, be seen in the Lamb's Gambol, where he will take the part of Valor in George V. Hobart's allegorical skit.

Maximillian Foster, a well known contributor to the national magazines, is now busy putting "The Whistling Man," which is considered his best bit of fiction, into scenario form.

The New Orleans branch of the World Film Corporation has a new manager in the person of Mr. M. F. Barr, who succeeds K. A. Bugbee in that position.

The Lasky Feature Play Company has entered into a contract with Miss Marion Fairfax, the famous New York dramatist, who will leave for the studios in Hollywood this week. Wm. C. De Mille, who has charge of the scenario department, already has the assistance of Miss Margaret Turnbull, who is widely known as a dramatist of great success.

Mr. E. Auger has been assigned the management of the southern division of the World Film Corporation, with headquarters at New Orleans. Formerly Mr. Auger was in the employment of Pathe's, the General Film Company and the Mutual Film Corporation. He will have every opportunity of utilizing this valuable experience for World Film to the full, as this company is planning the biggest possible things for the future.

George DeCarlton is now associated with Jack Noble, one of the directors of the B. A. Rolfe Company.

Frank Powell, director of the Fox Film Corporation, has returned from St. Augustine, Fla., where he took many scenes of "La Giaconda."

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Harry Bernard is recovering from an injury which he received last week during the making of a Keystone picture. He was buried beneath a pile of struggling men in a scene that made a game of football look as peaceful as a knitting bee. When the scene was over Bernard was found at the bottom of the stack with a badly sprained ankle.

Vivian Rich, the pretty Mutual star, recently staged a thriller in her bungalow at Santa Barbara, where she was giving a chafing dish party. "It was entirely unpremeditated, though, I assure you," she says. The fun was at its height when Miss Rich screamed. Her gown had caught fire.

Bliss Milford, who is playing opposite Edwin Arden in Edward Jose's first venture as an independent producer, is minus a small portion of her beautiful blonde tresses. The action of the play calls for a lighted lamp to be overturned and balustrade to catch fire. During this scene Miss Milford's hair caught on fire.

James W. Castle, Edison director, prides a medal which he received, the medal having been pinned on his breast by General U. S. Grant of Civil War fame.

Miriam Cooper, of the D. W. Griffith group of photoplayers, has in preparation an article on the effects of theatrical make-up on the face.

Chester Conklin, the internationally known "Mr. Droppington," of Keystone comedies, purchased a new Buick roadster last week and up to the latest report is still avoiding the hospital.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 43—SELIG—MAY 31.—President Wilson, Secretary of Treasury McAdoo and Secretary of State Bryan attend Pan-American Financial conference at Washington; girls of Cambridge Lady Navy have outing at Waverly Oaks, Mass.; John D. Rockefeller, Jr., poses for motion pictures in Washington; homing pigeons are loosed in Washington for flight to New York; Miss Eva Booth heads Salvation Army parade in Washington; Italian steamer, Stampalia, makes preparation for voyage from New York to Mediterranean; British women start on route marches through streets of London; hundreds gather at funeral of Charles Frohman, theatrical man who lost his life when the Lusitania was torpedoed; American ship Nebraskan torpedoed in Irish waters.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 44—SELIG—JUNE 3.—Knight Templars arrive in Philadelphia for march in giant parade; Major-General Leonard Wood inspects Culver Military Academy at Culver, Ind.; girls of Industrial Institute of Columbus, Miss. give big pageant; Anti-death Penalty League presents petitions to save life of Leo M. Frank; Governor Brumbaugh of Harrisburg, Pa. joins hundreds of men who volunteer on good roads day; Italian Building at San Francisco thrown open; Dr. Foss, survivor of the Lusitania disaster returns to New York; German soldiers render grease and pour candles into cups to furnish light for men in trenches at Front in Russia.

The Tear on the Page—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 7.—Frank Newburg and Isabella Rea featured. Boyd, a wealthy bachelor, has long admired the work of Frank Forbes, a young painter, and the artist is invited to visit his country place. To his amazement Frank Forbes proves to be a charming young girl. He calls on his aunt to play chaperone and Frances mistakes his interest and falls in love with him. While hunting he fires at a deer and wounds Miss Forbes, and the doctor realizes that unrequited love is retarding her progress. The bachelor, thinking himself to blame, marries the girl. He gives the girl a commission to paint his portrait and later he proposes to her, but she tells him she could only marry a man whose soul was filled with art. Blink makes arrangements with Marinelli, a street singer, to play beneath Cordelia's balcony and sing a love serenade. At its conclusion the girl is greatly delighted and everything is all right until Cordelia meets Mrs. Marinelli and recognizes on her the scarf she had supposedly thrown to Blink. Mrs. Marinelli tells Cordelia that her husband gave her the scarf. She leaves her baby in Cordelia's care and rushes out to find her husband. Blink arrives at this awkward moment and the indignant young lady tells him to take his child. At this moment Mrs. Marinelli and her husband arrive. Satisfactory explanations are given and Cordelia is willing to become Mrs. Blink.

The Battle—Biograph—June 11.—Blanche Sweet and Robert Harron featured. The boy is a coward and is laughed at by the girl he loves. She implores him to go back with the army and fight. He manages to rejoin his company and about this time ammunition runs low and someone must take the hazardous journey to procure more. The boy volunteers and has a most thrilling run through the gauntlet of death. Several of the powder wagons are blown up and many of his companions in the adventure are killed, but he brings the last remaining wagon through and saves the day, and is rewarded by the light of love that glows in his sweetheart's eyes.

The Haunting Fear—(Three Reels)—Kalem—June 11.—Alice Hollister and Harry Millarde featured. Katherine runs away from home and meets Mace, a notorious man about town, and is fascinated by him. Dr. Busby, an insane physician, recognizes in Mace the man who had been the cause of his daughter's death. Shortly after Katherine realizes Mace's real character and stabs him. Believing she is a murdress she flees. Busby finds the wounded man and carries him to his home. Katherine flees from place to place and at last pours her tale into the ears of Father Richard, a priest, and at his suggestion she surrenders herself to the police and later takes the veil and enters the convent. Mace escapes from Dr. Busby's clutches and, frenzied by his experiences, he sets out to find Katherine, who is responsible for it. He confronts the girl, and Katherine, learning that she is not a murderess, folds her hands in prayer, weeps tears of joy and thanksgiving.

Cohen's Luck—Four Reels—Edison—June 11.—William Wadsworth, Viola Dana, Jesse Stevens, and Duncan McRae comprise the principals in the cast. Abe

Cohen and Kitty McGee pool their money and buy a lottery ticket of which each keeps half. Kitty's pocketbook containing her half of the ticket is snatched by a thief. Abe is sorry but sympathetic on learning of the misfortune. Further grief awaits him at home. Minnie, his daughter, has become married to Sam Blumenthal, who has kept the license and ring. Not believing Minnie's story, Abe turns her out of the house. Later he learns the truth, and persuades the girl to return. By a clever trick Abe secures the stolen half of the lottery ticket, and he and Kitty McGee divide the fortune. Minnie's marriage to Blumenthal being invalid, she marries David Moss, her parents' choice. C. R. C.

The Cornet—Lubin—June 11.—The husband's passion for his cornet is a source of trouble to his wife. In a fury of rage one day she enters his room, snatches it from his lips and stamps it into an unrecognizable mass. He leaves her and lives in a tumbled down shack. We later find his wife ill and the child has grown to a precocious waif of the street. One day the father sees a weeping child brutally turned away from a florist's. His heart is touched and he buys flowers with the money he had for a cornet. He goes home with the child, who turns out to be his own, and there a reconciliation follows.

Fair, Fat and Saucy—Vitagraph—June 11.—Kate Price and Hughie Mack featured. Prince Ali Aboul, a Persian, decides to go to America and bring back a fat American wife with him. At a reception he meets Mrs. Eaton, a very plump lady, her husband and their slim daughter. All the mothers try to interest the prince in their daughters, but he will have none of them, but pays much attention to Mrs. Eaton, whose husband remembering Jerry, the cook, is going to a masquerade dressed as a sweet young miss, introduces him to the prince. Jerry suggests to the prince that they visit a certain restaurant and here Mrs. Eaton and her husband come upon them. What Jerry does to the prince when the latter tries to kiss her isn't worth mentioning, and Mrs. Eaton is satisfied to have her daughter marry Bob.

Mallory, who realizes that she loves his brother, Alan. One day another girl came to the village and Alan forgot Pearl. The girl heard news of this and was heartbroken. David demands an explanation of his brother and Alan runs to the lady novelist and asks her to marry him. Next day the city girl's fiance comes and Alan sees him and with a revolver in his hand is disarmed just in time by David. To David's pleas on his brother's behalf Pearl was deaf, but simply remarked, "Speak for yourself, David."

McQuade of the Traffic Squad—Edison—June 12.—Pat O'Malley and Bessie Learn featured. This is an unusually thrilling picture for a single-reel subject. The story, by the director, Eugene Nowland, is substantial, and the acting pleasing and convincing. Pat McQuade of the traffic squad is in love with Nora Leary. Nora's brother, a chauffeur, is in league with a pair of daring thieves. A robbery is committed on McQuade's beat, and Officer Flynn, Pat's rival in love, reports that he saw McQuade talking to the occupants of the bandit's car. The truth is that Pat stopped the car to investigate, but, on seeing Nora in it, he concluded that everything was all right, and let the auto pass on. A coolness arises between the lovers. Later, when Pat captures the thieves after a thrilling chase during which he leaps from his motorcycle into the machine, the misunderstanding is explained away, paving the way for Pat's proposal which is readily accepted. C. R. C.

The Greater Courage—(Three Reels)—Essanay—June 12.—Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn featured. Gilbert is present when Peggy is insulted by George Duncan, a wealthy bachelor, but he does nothing. Stung by Peggy's taunts, Gilbert goes to the apartments of the bachelor to demand an apology, and at the same time Lawrence, his brother, goes to the bachelor bent on the same mission. Duncan is slain and Gilbert, who refuses to make a statement, is tried by his own father, convicted and sent to prison. Later, Lawrence is shot in a saloon brawl and confesses to Peggy that he killed Duncan. A pardon is granted to Gilbert and later he and the girl are reconciled. For further review see page 973, this issue.

The Pay Train—Kalem—June 12.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Tony, a Mexican, endeavors to kiss Helen, but the girl attracts the attention of O'Mally and Tony leaves vowing vengeance. He discovers that the pay train is due shortly and he and his accomplices plot to derail the train and steal the money. Helen is discovered overhearing the plot, is captured and thrown into a cattle car. She manages to get a revolver which one of the men has dropped and carefully leveling her pistol shoots at the wire controlling the semaphore arm, which swings up and the danger flag is flashed and Helen saves the train.

Nearly a Prize Fighter—Lubin—June 12.—Billy, a gentleman of taste for travel, arrives with his valet, Mike, in his private freight car. Arrived in town they hear a fight promoter excitedly explaining that the night's match can not come off because one of the contestants will not appear. Billy and Mike introduce themselves as pugilists and decide to fight the other man. The bout begins and in the ensuing lively round Billy gets the fatal jab from a spear which was meant for his opponent. He leaps over the ropes and never stops running until he reaches the freight car.

The Journey's End—Selig—June 12. Garland Grant has written a book. He returns from India and Ned Bradford, a hunter, visits him. Bradford tells Grant that he has often wondered why Grant had never married. Grant and Helen Gray are looking forward to meet each other after a long correspondence. Helen becomes ill and pines away. At the end of a month Bradford kills a tiger. The tiger's mate following the scent comes into the enclosure and leaps upon Grant, who becomes a victim to its teeth. Helen in an invalid's chair enters into a sleep which knows no awakening and the spirit of Helen meets Grant's approaching spirit.

Four Grains of Rice—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—June 12.—Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison featured. A slumming party, amongst whom are Ruth Grinnell, fiancee of Sidney Rance, visit Chinatown and the leader of "The Four Grains of Rice" is much attracted by the girl's beauty and quietly slips a ring into her bag. The next day the girl goes back to return the ring, but goes alone. A Chinaman belonging to the other Tong sees the girl go into the store and sees a way to be revenged for the death of their leader. He warns the police of the whereabouts of Ruth, who meantime is released by the Chinaman's white wife. Moy Wong is sent up for a long term and Ruth and her fiance are left in peace.

Mutual Program

The Baby Benefactor—Thanhouser—June 1.—The rich old man is very fond of his granddaughter. But when it comes to feeling sympathy for the poor children in the neighborhood, he cannot be moved. The pastor of his church sends him a letter urging him to help a young woman who is endeavoring to support herself and her brother. The appeal lays neglected on his desk. Little Dorothy signs it, and then starts out on her errand of mercy, raiding the pantry and carrying away the good things in a taxicab. The old man sees her disappearing in the cab, and, thinking she is being kidnaped, he has the machine followed. The captured driver takes the grandfather to the house where he left Dorothy. There the rich old man finds the child ministering to the wants of those to whose sufferings he had been wholly indifferent. After that, Dorothy and her grandfather make their philanthropic visits together. Helen Badgely and Sidney Bracy play the principal parts.

The Girl of the Sea—Thanhouser—June 1.—Mignon Anderson and Harry Benham featured. Emelyn Lewis, a reporter, while vacationing in an out-of-the-way seashore village, falls in love with Lydia Starr. The girl's guardian, widowed Martha Starr, decides that Lewis deserves to know the history of the girl he loves, and tells him the story of how Lydia was rescued from a ship wrecked a little ways out from the village. The story, revealing the fact that Lydia's parentage is unknown, in no way dissuades Lewis from his desire to marry the girl. Some time later Lewis accidentally comes across some clippings in the newspaper office which prove Lydia to be the niece of Goldsmith Tudor, a millionaire. Given the choice between living with her uncle, who is a scoundrel, and her aunt, an overbearing, society woman, and remaining Martha's daughter and Lewis' sweetheart, Lydia chooses the latter.

Truly Rural Types—Falstaff—June 4.—Boyd Marshall and Lorraine Huling featured. Gerald Leigh, famous playwright, tires of his search for types to play the leading roles in his new play, and goes to the country to forget work and rest. There he meets Phoebe Newell and William Sewell. After watching their courtship, he is convinced that they are the truly rural types he needs. On opening night in New York Phoebe and William make a great hit. Leigh's pride at having "discovered" two stars is greatly lowered the next morning when he learns that his proteges are a married couple, already famous as heads of a stock company in one of the smaller cities, whom, in his early search for types he had actually turned down. Leigh decides that types are not necessary when clever artists can be obtained.

A Freight Car Honeymoon—Thanhouser—June 6.—Florence LaBadie and Harry Benham take the leading roles. Dan Boynton and Alice Reed, both employed in the same railroad office, marry. On his return, after a brief absence, Boynton learns from his crusty, old boss, Bushkirk, that he is discharged. But Alice is very resourceful. She conceives a plan whereby the railroad must pay for their honeymoon, since it will not grant them a vacation. Dan and his young bride collect a few camping comforts, and make themselves at home in an empty freight car in the yards. After the train pulls out, the crew discover the newlyweds, but, learning of the romance, allow them to ride. At one of the stops, Dan climbs a telegraph pole, and, by means of a pocket telegraph instrument, he orders the station agent, in Bushkirk's name, to hold the car on the siding until further orders. The loss of the car causes Bushkirk no little worry. He makes a personal investigation, and is so taken with Dan's nerve that he appoints him his chief assistant.

The Right to Happiness—(Two Reels)—American—June 7.—Vivian Rich and Joseph Galbraith featured in a romantic drama concerning Joe Blaney, whose wife believes him guilty of theft when funds are missing from his office and he is accused of robbery. Despondent, he flees to the west, changes his name, and a year later on reading in his newspaper that his former wife has obtained a divorce, marries Elsa Dorgan, wife of a miner. Mrs. Blaney, however, has not accepted the divorce, though it was granted, and learning Joe's whereabouts sets out to effect a reconciliation. On learning he is married and father of a child, she decides he is entitled to his right to happiness, and steals quietly away without her name or mission, leaving Joe with his wife and baby. See review on page 974, this issue.

A Mother's Justice—Reliance—June 7.—George Shields, a drummer, becomes infatuated with Mary, Widow Morgan's daughter. The mother distrusts the man, and, after warning Mary against him, tells Shields never to come to the house again. The drummer, however, succeeds in meeting Mary, and persuades her to accompany him to his rooms at the hotel under the pretense of having a minister there to marry them. The next morning Mary learns that George is already married. He tries to buy her silence, but fails. Heart-broken, Mary returns home, and tells all to her mother. The widow seizes a revolver, rushes to the hotel, and shoots Shields, mortally wounding him. At the trial the mother refuses to tell why she shot the drummer, wishing to protect her daughter. Just before he dies, Shields confesses.

A Mother's Justice—Reliance—June 7.—This touching drama deals with the efforts of a traveling salesman to get into his power a young girl who finds her uncle's home and jewelry store a cheerless place in which to live and work. Her longings for irresponsible pleasure deliver her into the salesman's hands, but she discovers before it is too late that he is a married man. The arrival of his wife, as the girl's uncle, gun in hand, is about to make the salesman pay the penalty for his trifling, affords a thrilling climax.

The Redemption of the Jasons—Beauty—June 8.—A pretty and wholesome comedy featuring Webster Campbell, Neva Gerber, Frank Cooley and Ray Berger. Alice James, apparently deserted by her husband, and with a new born babe to care for, abandons the child on the doorstep of the Jason brothers, two bachelors, and when these helpless gentlemen advertise for a nurse to care for the child, Alice applies for and is given the position. Later, Tom, her husband, who had been prevented by an accident from returning home, arrives to seek out his wife, and is seen on the street conversing with her. One of the village gossips makes this fact known to the Jason brothers, who draw cuts to see which is to marry her. On proposing they learn with surprise that the man talking to Alice was her husband, and that the baby is her own. All ends happily when the two bachelors arrange to employ both Tom and Alice, thus keeping the child within their own home.

Dirty Face Dan—Majestic—June 8.—This is "Little Dick's Second Case." Olive's ambition for wealth prompts her to plant a coin, looking forward to its becoming a money tree. In spite of the fact that she leaves her dog to guard it, the coin is missing when she returns. Plenty of clues can be found. Dogs', cats', and boys' footprints can be seen all over the place. Dick, called in by Olive to solve the mystery, unravels it like an experienced sleuth.

The Six Cent Loaf — Thanhouser — (Two Reels)—June 8.—Mary Quinn, a plucky factory girl, supports her little brother and sister. When John Rapley, head of the Associated Baking Companies, sees fit to raise the price of bread to six cents a loaf, Mary is more than handicapped in her efforts to provide for herself and the children. She stints herself so that Joel and Norah will not have to go hungry. Her brave sacrifice tells on her, and she is discharged from the factory. Rapley lavishes gifts on his wife and children, little realizing that he is the cause of Mary Quinn's starved condition. One day, outside his bread shop, he finds a girl faint from hunger and ill. She tells him the tragedy of bread at six cents a loaf. Rapley has Mary and the children taken care of. Realizing now that his taking advantage of war conditions to clear a big profit may be effecting thousands as it has Mary, he removes the extra cent charge on bread.

The Soul of the Vase—American—June 9.—Robyn Adair and Beatrice Van are featured in this one reel production, which concerns Jason, the potter, who subordinates everything in life to to his ambition to make a perfect vase. His wife, neglected, is attracted toward Clark, who expresses his admiration for her. The potter falls asleep and dreams that his wife offers him her soul if it can help him attain the perfect vase. He imagines that when the soul of his wife is placed within the red hot kiln and passes into the vase, the perfect result is more than achieved, though on opening the kiln the air reaches the beautiful vase and crumbles it to dust. At that moment he awakens to discover that love for his wife is, after all, worth more than his art, and breaking the real vase, which is still far from perfect, he clasps his wife to his breast.

The Tavern Keeper's Son — (Two Reels)—Broncho—June 9.—Juan Capella runs away from home, and strikes it rich in the gold country. His father, a tavern keeper, is obliged to mortgage the hostelry. In spite of the designing charms of Carmen, a dance-hall girl, Juan remains true to Dolores, his old sweetheart. A year later, he sets out for his old home. Meanwhile, Capello, the elder, and his wife, in desperate straits, determine to rob the first rich stranger who stops at the inn. Juan, on his arrival, is not recognized by his father and mother because of his heavy beard and rich clothes. They plot to rob him that night. Later, however, the old people have a change of heart. Juan shaves off his beard, and surprises his parents. The mortgage is lifted from the inn, and Juan and Dolores marry. Frank Borzage and Estella Allen play the part of the lovers.

Payment in Full—Reliance—June 9.—Moreland Ellington swindles Willard McCourtney into buying some worthless land. Unable to locate Ellington, McCourtney is forced by poverty into taking a position as waiter in a cafe. One night Ellington's daughter enters with a man whom McCourtney recognizes as a white slaver. The waiter is happy in the vengeance which he is about to wreak upon the swindler by allowing his daughter to be drugged. While he is still gloating over it, he receives a message that his wife has given birth to a little girl. Suddenly he sees his own daughter, grown up, in the predicament in which Ellington's girl is placed. He rushes into the private room, and knocks the glass of drugged wine from her hand. Ellington, arriving in search of his daughter, attempts to reward the waiter, whom he does not recognize. McCourtney refuses the money. The swindler drops his wallet, and later, missing it returns to the cafe. On opening it, he finds that much of the money is missing. In answer to his accusation McCourtney hands Ellington a receipt for the amount which he has extracted to make up for the fraudulent land investment.

The Strike at Centipede Mine—(Two Reels)—Domino—June 10.—John Daly has struck it rich in the Centipede mine. He is still, however, "one of the boys," and continues his visits to the cabin of his friend Bill Foster, there to play cards and court Foster's pretty daughter, Hope. Jim Foley, a rival for the hand of Hope, caught high-grading, is fired by Daly. In revenge, he stirs the rougher element in the mines to strike. Foley then tries to commit a dynamite outrage. This is frustrated just in the nick of time. Foley taken into custody, the strike is broken. Daly and Hope are married.

His Guardian Auto—Falstaff—June 11.—James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, and Ethel Cooke are the principals in the cast. Billy Budd is an exceedingly fast youth. Everybody says so, cafe owners testify to it, and he admits it. His only guardian is his automobile, but it proves itself a most capable chaperon—after a spree. It happened like this. Billy stops at a roadhouse for some gasoline for the car and some wine for himself. As the gasoline is all gone, Billy substitutes it with champagne. The stunts that that reeling car goes through are wonderful. In the morning, when Billy wakes up, there is the car beside him. Outside, he invites Flossy Footlights to take a ride. Just as she is about to step in beside Billy the auto whizzes off, headed for the country, and stops before a pretty farm girl. Billy reforms and marries his new acquaintance.

The Pathway from the Past—Kay Bee—(Two Reels)—June 11.—Molly Kane's brother, Jim, falls in with a gang of toughs. The leader, Spider Lewis, takes a liking to Molly, but she repulses him. Lewis plots to get even with her. He and his gang are captured during a raid on a ship in the harbor, and Spider is offered his freedom if he will turn informer. He tells the police that Molly is a member of the gang, and has loot concealed in her apartment. The police search the place, and find plunder in Jim's room. Molly is arrested and sent to prison. On her release she obtains employment in a general store in the country. Ames, the proprietor, falls in love with her, and they become engaged. Lewis, now employed by a crooked brokerage concern, attempts to interest Ames in some worthless stock. Molly tells Ames her history, and warns him against Spider's crooked proposition. Crestfallen, Spider returns to the city where he meets Jim, Molly's brother. Jim fires on Lewis, who returns his shot. Both fall dead. Thomas Chatterton, Estelle Allen, Jerome Storm, and Jack Nelson comprise the cast.

The Ten O'Clock Boat—Reliance—June 11.—Howard, a counterfeiter, dies in prison. His wife brings up their daughter, Ruth, ignorant of her father's true occupation. Years later, Carey, an old pal of Howard's, forces Mrs. Howard to become his accomplice in circulating counterfeit bills, threatening to tell Ruth all. The girl is now twenty years of age and the sweetheart of Walton, employed in the Secret Service. On a certain morning, as Mrs. Howard is leaving the house, she tells Ruth that she is going to take the ten o'clock boat for Staten Island, intending to visit some friends there. After passing several counterfeit bills, Mrs. Howard is followed by Walton to Carey's house, which is raided. The detective does not recognize his financee's mother, until they reach the police station. She tells him of her efforts to shield Ruth from the knowledge that her father was a criminal. Meanwhile, the ten o'clock boat has been sunk. The mother persuades Walton to let Ruth believe that she is one of those lost. Walton and Ruth marry.

An Unlucky Suitor—Royal—June 12.—The Smiths have living with them a niece who attracts many suitors, among whom are a young broker and an absent-minded Jap. The young broker and Smith, also a broker, take opposite sides of the market on a certain stock.

They need money badly. Mrs. Smith loans her niece's sweetheart her diamond necklace. Smith, thinking to raise money on his wife's necklace, receives only a paste imitation. The Jap becomes embarrassingly implicated in the substitution of the cheap imitation for the priceless string of jewels. Calamity is averted by the young broker's returning with the necklace and the money which Smith lost on the exchange.

Unwinding It—KOMIC—JUNE 13.—Featuring Fay Tincher. Fay and Roderick have a misunderstanding over Margy. The latter buys some silk stockings at Fay's counter. A shoplifter steals the bill which she lays down, and slips it into a pair of cheap stockings which he buys. Fay and Margy quarrel over the missing bill, and in the excitement, the shoplifter and Margy exchange parcels. Thrilling complications follow. Eventually the lovers are reconciled; and the shoplifter is handed into the custody of the law.

The Burned Hand — MAJESTIC — TWO REELS)—JUNE 13.—Marietta's father and mother are divorced. The court refuses the father his request for his daughter, so he kidnaps her and takes her to another state, where he becomes prominent in politics. A young college graduate, Billy Rider, is in love with Marietta He and two companions trace her. In stealing his sweetheart from her father, Billy burns his hand with a hot poker. The father uses this as a means of following Rider. One of Billy's pals, to save him from arrest, burns his hand with a poker. The father is now unable to identify the young man who stole Marietta. He leaves the place, realizing that he has lost Marietta forever.

Through Edith's Looking Glass — THANHOUSER—JUNE 13.—Edith Davis, on receiving an invitation to a ball, insists on having a new dress for the affair. Blinded by selfishness, she does not see that the family cannot afford the extravagant expenditure. After much coaxing her father finally consents to buy her the new dress. Exultant, she goes to her room and gazes in the mirror. Reflected there, she sees a scarred, haggard figure—her own conscience. One scene after another passes, showing the many sacrifices made for her by her father and mother, and her unfeeling acceptance of everything. Edith emerges from the room a changed girl. She helps her mother with the housework, and tells her father that her old pink dress is good enough for the ball. That night, when she goes to her room, in place of the wrinkled old woman a fair little girl appears in the mirror.

Should We Eat Pie?—POWERS—JUNE 3.—Jane Lee steals a piece of pie from her mother's pantry and feeds herself and her pet monkey with it. Going to sleep, she dreams that the monkey has come to life as Alexander the Great; he eats in splendor, smokes, skates and rides a bicycle. Then the dream ends. The picture succeeds in showing off the monkey, "Alexander the Great," and all his tricks to advantage.

How Billy Got His Raise—JOKER—JUNE 7.—Billy believes in hypnotism and practices it on the boss' wife and the stenographer, compelling the stenographer to make love to the boss in the presence of his wife. Billy promises to square the boss with his family if he grants the desired raise. The boss promises. Billy brings the boss' wife out of her trance; she imagines she has had a nightmare and Billy gets his raise.

Daughter of the Nile—(THREE REELS)—VICTOR—JUNE 7.—To the capitol comes Anainoe, the beautiful Egyptian known as "the Sphinx." Among the many men who are at her feet, Troubetskoi, the Russian, is favored. Stanley Claverton, on his entry into diplomatic service, receives a commission to Egypt and is entrusted with valuable state papers. Then he meets "the Sphinx" and is fascinated by her. She becomes interested in the boy, and Troubetskoi vows revenge. His infatuation has turned Stanley from Madga Sherborne and he seems to forget her entirely. Madly in love with "the Sphinx," he determines to return his commission. He meets the Russian; they drink together. The Russian drugs his wine, takes his valuable papers and sends the supposedly intoxicated boy home in a taxi. Stanley regains consciousness and goes to "the Sphinx" with his story. The Russian arrives and Stanley hides. Troubetskoi shows the papers to "the Sphinx" and tells her they are the price of the return of her affection for him. Stanley springs at him and is getting the worst of the fight when "the Sphinx" stabs the Russian. She tells Stanley to return to the girl who weeps for him. The next day, Stanley, en route to Egypt, reads of the suicide of "the Sphinx," who at last had cared for someone, but cared too well.

Their Friend, the Burglar—NESTOR—JUNE 8.—Father and mother choose Mr. Smart to be their daughter's future husband, but pretty Billie has a choice of her own, and it points to Neal, a rising young bookkeeper. At an outing at which Mr. Smart plays the star part, Billie slips away from the crowd, and joins Neal, who is hiding near by. Father follows them, even when they board the roller coaster. The daughter is captured after the race through the clouds, and the family sets out for home. Neal and the girl have arranged for an elopement that evening. Their plans are almost broken up by the unexpected advent of Basement Jimmie, a thief, but in the end Jimmie's presence proves a real benefit, as it keeps father busy while the young lovers make their escape.

The Struggle—REX—JUNE 8.—Pauline Castleman, granddaughter of a deceased officer of the Confederate army, is loved by Buck Milligan, a rather uncouth railroad man. The girl and her grandmother go to the cemetery on Decoration day and there meet General Wood, president of the L. & P. railroad, who was a friend of her husband's. At this time the railroad employes are on a strike and the officials of the road will do nothing for them. While talking with General Wood, the fact is mentioned that Mrs. Castleman had pleaded with General Wood for peace. Pauline straightway goes to the hall where the railroad delegates are assembled and there pleads with them to settle the strike. The strikers plan an attack on the hall and, arriving there, find Pauline making an eloquent speech. The strike is broken up and everyone joins in an immense barbecue.

From the Shadows—LAEMMLE—JUNE 9.—Ferris Sims, reformed crook, keeps in ignorance of his past, his daughter, who is to marry Vincent, a rich young man. "Spider," a former associate, visits Sims and falls in love with Helen, Sims' daughter, but the latter refuses to introduce them. Spider starts for the home of Vincent to kill him, and Flo Summers, whom he had previously liked, 'phones Sims of Spider's intention. Sims reaches Vincent's home and confronts Spider. Vincent apprehends both, and in the tussle that ensues Spider and Sims are killed. Vincent and Helen live in ignorance of the past of Sims.

Bill's Blighted Career—(TWO REELS)—L-KO—JUNE 9.—Bill's wife went to a studio to look at painting. Bill followed a good-looking model thither and the model's husband also came. Bill tried to tickle the model's toes and hubby showed his displeasure. Bill disguised as a gladiator, but a policeman arrested him for indecency. Confusion for the four resulted and hurrying from trouble, all but Bill fell into a ditch, and Bill covered them up with sand.

In His Mind's Eye—Big U—June 10.—Peter von Helm, a blind beggar, sits on the street corner and mentally reviews his life. He recalls the death of his wife, his care for his baby daughter, and then his marriage, contracted through sympathy, with the gay Miss Winton. A lapse of eighteen years shows Von Helm a figurehead in his own home, while his wife entertains, flirts and leads an altogether gay existence. His daughter arrives after years away at school and Von Helm's wife maliciously introduces her into her own fast set. Von Helm turns upon his wife one day in anger at what she has encouraged in his daughter, and his wife throws a lighted alcohol lamp in his face. Blinded for life, he becomes an outcast and loses track of his daughter. The latter has also become an outcast. She approaches the blind beggar on the corner, places some coins in his cup and speaks to him. He recognizes her voice and the two are reunited. She takes him to her tenement rooms, hastily smooths down her hair and removes her cheap jewelry, then kneels at her father's feet. He passes his had over her smooth hair and thanks God that his daughter has been kept clean.

The Sign of the Sacred Safety Pin—Powers—June 10.—The formula for the making of the new explosive Noiselessite, is desired by foreign spies. Lady Baffles attempts to secure it, but fails. The general and secretary of war celebrate this event by becoming intoxicated. Detective Duck tries to prevent the spies' stealing the papers, but is himself captured by them and bound to the mouth of the cannon, to which a slow fuse is lighted. The spies search the war office, and Detective Duck lands in their midst, being shot in by the cannon. He is their prisoner again. Two of the spies impersonate the general and secretary and secure the box of papers, which turn out to be counterfeit, the clever Detective Duck having concealed the original formula and returns it in safety to the secretary.

The Valley of Silent Men—(Two Reels)—Rex—June 10.—Davis, a drunken sot, arrives home one night and finds there a little baby, whose presence sort of stuns him, and he goes out to think the matter over. He goes to the docks and while there is divested of his hat and coat and shanghaied on a ship, which is just leaving port. His clothes are found and his wife, thinking him a suicide, marries Lestrade, a wealthy man. Some time later Davis returns. He goes to his wife and, realizing that she is happy, and after she tells him that she thought him dead, he takes his farewell of his little son and returns to the "valley of silent men."

A Strange Disappearance — (Three Reels)—Imp—June 11.—Andrew Blake, a rich young New Yorker, is in love with his cousin Evelyn. His father however threatens to disinherit him unless he marries the daughter of his partner. Young Blake goes up into the North woods to consider the matter and there puts up at the home of the Hoenmakers, who plan to rob him. Luthia, the daughter, warns Blake and he and the girl make their escape. He places the girl in a convent, fearing for her life, if her father or brother see her after her warning him. The elder Blake is taken ill and finally tells Andrew that he will leave him his fortune if he will marry any girl but his cousin. Andrew goes to the convent and there persuades Luthia to marry him. John Blake loves his daughter-in-law, but Evelyn comes and a cloud settles over the household. Later Luthia leaves and is finally rescued by Andrew, just as her father is going to kill her. They are reconciled but Andrew's father has died.

Mumps — Victor — June 11. — Helen Wright receives instructions from her editor to write a story telling how two young people can fall in love within a month. Knowing nothing of love, the young woman inserts an ad in the paper for a young man as secretary, for one month. Harry Smith, a wealthy young man, answers the ad for fun, and is accepted. They immediately fall in love with each other and not much work is done in writing the story. The last day is up and the manuscript is finished, but owing to the fact that Helen's maid has the mumps, no one is allowed to go out of the house. Harry finally manages to get out, but returns and goes in to see Helen, who now has the mumps. He calls the minister and the two young people are married. The minister insists on kissing the bride, and he gets the mumps also.

The Circus Girl's Romance—(Two Reels) — Bison — June 12.—Patsy, the daughter of a circus veteran, is sent away to school, after refusing the attention of Fischer, manager. She meets Bruce Barton, who falls in love with her. She refuses him because she has determined to return to the circus. Meanwhile, Fischer has arranged to ruin Patsy's father financially, and schedules a riot which is to break up his show. Patsy, followed by Barton, arrives on the night of the disturbance and Barton, after Fischer has attempted to do way with his rival many times, forces the circus manager to sell him the mortgages on the circus, and Barton is owner. Patsy, realizing her love for Barton, refuses Barton's gift of the circus, unless he becomes part of the gift.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss—Joker—June 12.—Hank, in love with Susie, a country girl, receives a legacy. An adventuress and her pal come from the city to relieve Hank of his money, and in the novelty of the woman's love-making Hank forgets about Susie. Securing Hank's wallet, the adventuress and her pal hurry to the train. En route, the wallet is dropped at Susie's feet. She hurries to return it, but the couple have already boarded the train. Then she realizes the wallet is Hank's and does not return it to him until after he has confessed that the city people have "taken him in." There is rejoicing when Susie produces the wallet and Hank's attentions to her are resumed.

She applies for a divorce, but quickly withdraws her application when Scott threatens to drag her sister's name into the affair. Rather than bring disgrace upon Bess, Anita sentences herself to a grim and dismal future as the wife of a man whom she loathes. C. R. C.

The Japanese Mask—(Three Parts)—Pathe.—Superstition is here carried out in fact. An officer shows his roommate an odd mask which he procured in Japan, explaining that there is a tradition that no one who looks at the mask will die a natural death. Later, the two men become rivals in love. The one who, according to the tradition, is marked for a tragic death, takes an unfair advantage of his roommate, and induces his sweetheart to marry him. He allows his vices to rule him, and the next meeting of the two former friends, is one of hunter and hunted. Not until after the criminal's death does the officer recognize the fulfillment of the tradition. C. R. C.

The Police Dog—Pathe.—This is a cartoon comedy from the studios of J. R. Bray. One of the police dog's greatest tasks is that of keeping his human companion out of trouble. Here the policeman gets mixed up with an organ grinder and his bank-robbing monkey, and the police dog takes the struggling trio to the police station. A split reel. C. R. C.

The Vanishing Cinderella—Pathe.—Florence Kingdon, a reporter on a newspaper, is assigned the task of interviewing the famous author, Tom Watson, a hitherto unaccomplished feat. She asks Watson for an interview, threatening to trick him into one should he refuse. This puts the author on his mettle, and he challenges her to secure an interview with him. Florence obtains an apartment above his, starts a fire in the waste basket, and succeeds in having Watson rush up and carry her, "unconscious," into his apartment. The author's fiancee calls, and he hides Florence in the next room. But she is seen by Susie's mother. They leave in a huff. Watson is dumfounded to find Florence gone on entering the other room. His next story is called "The Vanishing Cinderella," and is about Florence's visit. Watson learns her identity, calls on her, and loses no time in proposing. Of course, he is accepted. C. R. C.

Lonesome Luke—Pathe—This is a short comedy from the pen of the famous cartoonist, Tad. Lonesome Luke, a resident of the village jail, is promised his freedom if he will don a bear skin and dance with a lion at a political function. Luke agrees, but changes his mind when he sees the lion. A long and ludicrous chase follows his escape. On the same reel with "A School in New Guinea." C. R. C.

Picturesque Caucasia — Pathe.—A beautifully colored scenic on the same reel with "The Apple Industry in the State of Washington," also finished in natural colors. C. R. C.

Universal Special

The Black Box—(Episode Thirteen)—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal.—Quest rescues Lenora from the waters of the river and later manages to convey a message by a cowboy to Craig, who has sought refuge in old Mexico. Craig promises Quest that he will reveal everything to him in his New York office a week later, and Quest after a wild ride across a burning bridge arrives at the station in time to see Craig off for New York. Lenora, who has been following Quest, falls senseless on the burning bridge, as the episode ends. See review on page 979, this issue. N. G. C.

Vitagraph Special

The Goddess — Vitagraph—(Chapter Four)—Produced by Ralph Ince, and featuring Anita Stewart and Earle Williams. After Stilleter and the Indian, with Celestia under the psychologist's influence, have passed out of sight, Tommy hurries back to the cabin, dons the fur robe which he finds there, and sets out in pursuit. He arrives in the village too late, however, for Stilleter and the goddess have already boarded a train for New York where the girl is to reform the working class by teaching them a new religion. Tommy recovers his clothes from the Indian, and takes the next train to the metropolis. C. R. C.

World

The Builder of Bridges—(Five Reels)—World.—C. Aubrey Smith in the leading role. Story deals with the big heartedness of a wealthy engineer who is fooled by a girl into believing that she is in love with him. Her young brother has stolen $20,000 and her fiancee will not help her out so she decides to make the engineer fall in love with her and in this way get the necessary money. After getting the money from the engineer, she breaks the engagement with the other man and he tells the engineer of the girl's duplicity. The girl finally wakes up to the fact that she really loves her benefactor and they are finally reconciled. For further review see page 933, of issue of June 5. J. C. G.

Miscellaneous

Where Cowboy Is King — (Four Reels)—American Lifeograph.—A picture of real western life taken at Pendleton round-up. Daring skill of the cowboys and the stirring incidents of ranch life give a thrill to the picture. Among the interesting features of this picture are the cowgirls, who equal their brothers in bravery and expert riding. A stage coach race lends excitement to the picture and one of the chief charms of the production lies in the fact that the thrills are impromptu and the "big scenes" were as much a surprise to the actors as they prove to be to the audience.

They're After Flo—Hepworth-American.—Chrissie White is featured in this production, supported by Lionelle Howard, Tom Butt and John MacAndrews. Flo, who worked in the office, held a birthday celebration, which broke up in a fight. The little man wrote a boxing instructor, asking for lessons. The fat man bribed the boxing instructor to beat him up. The little man overheard the plot and got a champion to take his place, which resulted in the fat man "getting him" when he called to see the boxing instructor next day.

Bodiam Castle—Hepworth-American.—A scenic picture that is beautifully photographed by the new Hepworth stereo process, which makes it wonderfully lifelike. The old castle is pictured in all its beauty in this short film.

A Moment of Darkness—(Two Reels) Hepworth-American.—Alma Taylor and Stewart Rome featured in this production. Jess was trained to be a thief by her father and brother, and when caught at thievery in a jewelry shop is sentenced to three years in prison. Following her release she is taken as a companion by the lady from whom she had stolen, and falls in love with the lady's brother. Her own brother finds her and attempts to drag her back into her life of crime, but ere he can accomplish her degradation is shot. She explains all to her lover, who understands and forgives.

Chicago Court's Epoch-Making Decision

OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE WEEK

ONE of the most epoch-making court decisions affecting the film business that has ever been handed down by a judge, was given on Saturday morning, June 5, when Judge Fenimore Cooper in Chicago granted an injunction restraining the city from prohibiting the exhibition of the great Griffith masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," at the Illinois theater in Chicago.

The case was hard fought by Mr. Griffith in person and his legal representatives and advisors, and Judge Cooper's decision undoubtedly is a victory not alone for Mr. Griffith and his picture, but for the whole film industry as well, since, following close upon the New York decision of last week on "The Ordeal," it indicates conclusively that a wave of opposition to censorship in every form is spreading throughout the country.

The decision of the Chicago judge not alone permits the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," but strongly rebukes the narrow-minded censors for even thinking of refusing to grant a permit for the picture because a certain race or nationality took offense at that film. Judge Cooper's decision in full is as follows:

The city contends against the issuance of the injunction on three grounds—that the permit to exhibit the photoplay in question was not lawfully issued; that the permit issued was revoked and that the photoplay, if presented, will engender race animosity against the negro citizens of our community.

This last ground is based purely on assumption. To find that this is a good objection to the allowing of the injunction, this court will have to assume that our white citizens will not know or appreciate the fact that the days represented in the play were nearly in the first years of the last half century.

This court will have to assume that they who will witness the play will be so stupid that they will be unable to comprehend that the people represented on the canvas were of two or three generations ago, and that they do not and will not appreciate the fact that in the succeeding time the negro race has advanced almost immeasurably.

The court cannot assume that this will be so, when we know that there is universal recognition of the fact that no race has shown such great general advancement in from two to three generations as the negro race has done.

In our own great community the fact is recognized by all well informed citizens that we have in the various professions and higher lines of business members of that race who are ministers, dentists, lawyers, physicians, and business men of fine ability and business character, who enjoy the respect and confidence of our community.

This court is satisfied from the evidence that in this photoplay the good black man and the bad white man are equally prominent figures in the play. Every night in every fair sized community in this broad land where the stage instructs or entertains each and every play has its good characters and its bad characters portrayed, both of which are essential to a play in the rounding out of the moral of the play, and without which moral a play is of no educational value.

Every night in every theater there is produced the debased type of the white race of different nationalities, and if representative groups of the various nationalities so presented became acutely sensitive that such individual portrayal would cause them to suffer race hatred of their race, and all of the plays in which a villain had played were stopped on that account, the theater as an educator and entertainer of the people, would become a memory of the past, and there would be nothing to fill its place for the education and enjoyment of our people.

No one race or nationality has greater right under the law than any other has. Any race or nationality so offended can best give the lie to the bad characters so presented by continuing to conduct themselves as law abiding citizens who do not expect greater rights from the law than it allows all other men or nationalities.

If white men appeal to the courts to restrain the production of a play because one of its characters portrayed that of a dissolute white man whose acting would bring race hatred against the nation which his stage character assumed, their plea would be denied for want of law to support the same, and the law should be and is the same for black and white alike.

It is the duty of the courts to protect the individual in the enjoyment of his right of property. The complainant in this case is the owner or lessee of the play called "The Birth of a Nation." Under the ordinances of our city, if one who desires to present a photoplay or moving picture complies with the law and obtains a license honestly and in good faith, and the play has been censored by the proper authorities of the city, and he has paid his money for a fee, from that time on the owner of the play is vested with an individual property right, which neither the city of Chicago, nor any official, be he mayor, general superintendent of police, or be he judge, can arbitrarily deprive him of, without giving him his hearing or day in court.

The evidence in this case satisfies the court that this play was censored by the mayor's private secretary and by Mrs. Harrison, the wife of the former mayor of Chicago. Major Funkhouser admits that he received orders from the mayor's office to issue a permit for the production of this photoplay, and gave directions to that effect. A permit was issued first by James Gleason, general superintendent of police, and later on the present general superintendent of police, Charles C. Healey, issued another permit.

I am obliged to find under the law and the evidnce in this case that the complainant is entitled to the relief prayed for, and I will enter an injunction restraining the mayor, the chief of police, and the city of Chicago from interfering with the production of the play.

Despite the fact that the Griffith people have won such a sweeping decision it seems clearly evident that the obstreperous city administration is still longing for blood, and the corporation counsel as late as Monday of this week was still seeking columns of publicity in the newspapers in which to bitterly denounce "The Birth of a Nation" as a film that should never see the light of day, predicting that race riots and hatred would follow as a result of its showing, and generally making himself ridiculous in the eyes of the public.

At every performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Illinois theater, Mr. Griffith appeared in person on the stage to explain to his patrons the high motives that inspired the original making of the piece and made a strong plea for "a square deal for motion pictures." In his little talk, Mr. Griffith referred to the fact that censorship in one state has gone so far that an attempt was even being made to regulate the speaking stage and predicted that, if such a practice was allowed to continue, the time would soon come when the press, as well, would be called upon to undergo censorship and then the United States would become another Russia.

Mr. Griffith paid glowing tributes to Judge Cooper who had the manhood to render a fair and just decision even though he thereby laid himself open to much criticism from the negro vote of Chicago and likewise was incurring the denunciation of Major Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of police, and Assistant Corporation Counsel George L. Reker.

It is a notable fact that Mr. Griffith in all the cities throughout the country in which "The Birth of a Nation" has been played, has had to make his fight against censorship alone and unaided. J. J. McCarthy, manager of the film production, in an interview with a representative of Motography bitterly denounced the lack of support from film men as a whole, calling them "pikers who were so jealous of each other that they feared to make any sort of a struggle for the betterment of trade conditions, as a whole, lest a rival benefit." He considered it quite unusual that alone, and unaided, the producer and management of "The Birth of a Nation" had to make a fight against censorship, since censorship is a matter that should concern each and every film manufacturer, exchangeman and exhibitor.

On the opening night of "The Birth of a Nation" in Chicago five municipal censors attended the performance and made a report which will be used in the city's court proceedings on an appeal which it is understood will be taken from Judge Cooper's decision. Affidavits made by these censors, it is expected, will be presented to Judge Cooper in an effort to have the injunction dissolved, though the management of the film has little fear that now that a permit to show the picture has been obtained such a permit will be revoked by any court in the land.

New Big Combination

Los Angeles newspapers are vieing with Dame Rumor to give publicity to a story to the effect that D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett are all to be united in a big motion picture combination now in the making. The Record of Los Angeles under date of June 5 says: "It is reported around photoplayers' row that D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, three of the most progressive men in the picture industry, propose to form a stupendous new moving picture producing company somewhere in the neighborhood of Los Angeles. It is said that the Thomas H. Ince Company has been formed already and that Griffith is due in Los Angeles about the middle of June, and then it is declared things will be stirring in the local film world."

An attempt was made to see Mr. Griffith in Chicago to obtain from him either a denial or a confirmation of the story, but he was out of the city and his local representatives could say nothing about his future plans.

The Grand Opera House of Washington, Indiana, broke all their house records with the showing of the "New Exploits of Elaine" May 17. The paid attendance for the evening was 1,453.

A Charity Worker

Rosemary Theby, the pretty Universal star, recently asked for a raise, to enable her to carry out her charity work. Miss Theby, the wearer of the latest creations of fashion, one of the most popular motion picture actresses, a lover of expensive boots and lace lingerie, and a constant driver of her big new automobile, does not wish to satisfy her own cravings, but because she has a great big heart she wants more money, so that she may go into the homes of the poor people and there aid them. She helps the down and out men to get positions, by clothing them neatly so that their chances of securing employment are more certain. The poor people, according to Miss Theby, are not given enough thought by those who are able to help them out, and she is always most willing to feed some hungry family, get work for the older members and give them a start in the world. When asked about her own people, Miss Theby assures you that they are very comfortably situated in St. Louis and do not come to her for money at all. She uses practically all of her salary to help the needy.

Pennsylvania Convention

Reading, Pennsylvania, was this week the scene of one of the most enthusiastic gatherings ever held by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, for the 1915 state convention assembled in that city on June 7, for a three-day session.

Ben H. Zerr, president of the state organization, is in charge of the convention, and has collected a number of valuable prizes which will be distributed to those who show proficiency in many varied lines of endeavor. A number of the big film companies are represented at the convention and many of them sent players to represent them at the ball, held on Tuesday, June 8.

Rajah Temple was the scene of the gathering and much of the floor space was devoted to exhibits of film accessories, gaily decorated booths offering displays of the newest in all styles of equipment. The program for the week was as follows: On Monday, June 7, the convention was called to order at 10:30 by President Ben H. Zerr, following the registration committee appointments and the signing of the register by many visiting exhibitors. At 1:30 in the afternoon the committee of registration made its report followed, at 2 o'clock, by an address of welcome by Ira W. Streator, mayor of Reading, which was responded to by G. W. Sahner, of Pittsburgh, first vice-president of the state league. This, in turn, was followed by reports of the legislative committee and other committee reports and at 6 o'clock a Dutch luncheon was served to all.

Tuesday morning was taken up with a general discussion of business conditions and a number of addresses. The afternoon was devoted to an automobile parade which broke up with a number of sight-seeing trips for the visiting exhibitors, and at 9 o'clock in the evening a grand ball was staged under the auspices of the Reading local.

Wednesday morning a business session open to all exhibitors, exchangemen, dealers in moving picture accessories, manufacturers and other allied interests of the film industry was held, and before adjourning a selection will be made for the next convention city. The afternoon was devoted to a sight-seeing tour through the beautiful surrounding country, together with a number of mountain railway trips and the convention came to an end Wednesday evening with a grand banquet at the Hotel Berkshire.

Dressler Comedy Being Filmed

Bubbling over with fun and "pep" and keeping everyone in roars of laughter, the irresistible Marie Dressler has been romping through scene after scene in the Lubin studio this week in her new five-reel comedy, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise."

The new comedy, which is a riot of merriment and new ideas along comedy lines, was written especially for Miss Dressler by Acton Davies, widely known as an author and dramatic critic, and is one of the best vehicles she has ever had to display her unique ability as a comedienne. The production will be one of the most elaborate ever made in the Lubin studio.

Howell Hansel will have charge of the production, and will be assisted by Albert F. Mayo. The company supporting Miss Dressler is headed by John C. Rice, who has made an international reputation for himself as a comedian. Most of the interior scenes for the comedy will be filmed in the big Philadelphia studio and the exteriors will be taken at the Lubin ranch at Betzwood, Pa., where a large force of artists, propertymen and others have been working for the past three weeks making preparations for the arrival of the Dressler company.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the newly organized Penn Yan Film Corporation of Penn Yan, New York, the following officers were elected: E. R. Ramsey, Penn Yan, president; Henry E. Stohldrier, New York City, vice-president; William J. Tylee of Penn Yan, treasurer and Jerome O'Keefe, Penn Yan, secretary.

Rock Shows Latest Release

On Saturday morning, June 4, John Rock, Chicago manager of the Vitagraph Company, staged a private exhibition of the V. L. S. E. release "The Island of Regeneration" at the Ziegfeld theater on Michigan avenue, for the benefit of Chicago exhibitors, exchangemen and members of the trade press.

Despite the fact that the print shown was one out of which Major Funkhouser clipped a few notches, the picture went over in a big way and was warmly praised by all present. Photographically it is a masterpiece, while the story is so interesting as to hold one spellbound until the very end.

Edith Storey as Katherine Brenton and Antonio Moreno, as John Charnock, Jr., are really wonderful in their interpretations of these difficult roles and though many of the scenes under less capable direction would have resulted in nothing but cheap sensationalism, the Vitagraph producer and his capable players have allowed suggestion to cleverly carry the film over the thin spots and what would have otherwise been questionable scenes are most delicately portrayed. S. Rankin Drew is entitled to praise for his splendid impersonation of Valentine Langford, the "heavy," while the rest of the supporting cast is adequate. A complete review of this picture appeared on page 875 of the May 29 issue of Motography.

Beginning the same afternoon as the private showing, "The Island of Regeneration" went on at the Ziegfeld theater for an indefinite run.

"Salvation Nell"

"Salvation Nell," one of the most famous plays ever shown on the American stage, is soon to be adapted, on a markedly pretentious scale, to motion pictures. This highly interesting bit of information emanates from the headquarters of the California Motion Picture Corporation in San Francisco. The above firm, through a special arrangement with Edward Sheldon, author of the play, has already begun active work on the production and announces its final completion for an early release.

Like so many of the other celebrated dramas, "Salvation Nell" offers opportunities to the motion picture camera that can never be realized in the more cramped limitations of the stage. Another feature of "Salvation Nell's" adaptation to motion pictures that bespeaks it an immediate favor with the public is the appearance of Beatriz Michelena in the leading role. Here all the art that she has displayed in her various roles of the past—her Salomy Jane, Mignon and others—must be combined in one.

Attention Major Funkhouser

Major Funkhouser, Chicago's second deputy superintendent of police and head of its censor board, who took several "hunks" out of the Vitagraph serial "The Island of Regeneration," will doubtless be interested in a press story coming this week from the New York office of the V. L. S. E. Inc., which explains in detail the taking of some of the particular scenes to which Major Funkhouser objected.

The esteemed, so to speak, major, will doubtless revel for instance in the fact that though Miss Storey looks awfully comfortable in her next-to-nature garb, part of these scenes were taken on Labor Day on the beach at J. Stuart Blackton's estate on Long Island, the weather being pleasant at the time, but those scenes taken in the pool in the cave were not completed until winter was far advanced, and consequently had to be staged in the Vitagraph studio when the thermometer was hovering around the zero mark. The Vitagraph pool happens to be entirely open, so to make things comfortable for Miss Storey, a steam pipe was placed in the pool which, however, only succeeded in warming the water in spots, and when the lady, nearly in the nude, swam out of the warm spots and struck water that was about ready to freeze, she found it difficult to smile pleasantly at the camera.

The interior of the island cave was taken in a tent pitched on the studio grounds in order to get the proper light effect, and the thermometer being extremely low at this time also, the two refugees of the island had nice little charcoal stoves scattered about the side of the tent and made quiet exits to warm up between scenes, care being taken in speaking their lines in order not to have the vapor from their breaths register on the film. Apparently it's a gay life being an actor of these near-to-nature roles and we feel quite sure Major Funkhouser will chuckle with glee when he learns the particulars of the scenes to which he took such violent objection.

Official War Pictures

Pathe is showing the first official war pictures to reach this country from France, and judging from those already exhibited, they form a series of extraordinary interest. The pictures have been approved and censored by the French military authorities and edited by the French Cinematograph Chamber of Commerce, with a view to their being as widely shown throughout the world as possible.

The first pictures received show Lord Kitchener, General Joffre, President Poincare, Marshal French and Minister of War Millerand in conference—the first time that such a number of celebrities have been shown together in a war film. Others picture the French army in the new "invisible" gray uniforms which are taking the place of the well known red trousers and blue coats. In fact, each of the pictures has possessed a marked human and historical interest. It is promised that they will get better and better.

Bray's Method Patented

Following the outcome of a suit brought by J. R. Bray, maker of the Pathe-Bray cartoon comedies, against certain other cartoonists for infringement of his patents on his process for producing animated cartoons, the impression seems to prevail that Mr. Bray's patents should not have been granted, since his methods of work had been previously used by other cartoonists, but the holder of the patents contends that this is a mistake, as he has invented methods of simplifying the work so as to make the animated cartoon commercially practical, and spent thousands of dollars and years of time developing his process to a point where, instead of spending six months on one film, he is now able to produce several films each week.

Mr. Bray, in his interview, states that he plans to carry on a co-operative system by which cartoonists of ability who are able to do high class animated cartoon work may take advantage of his patented process, thereby saving a vast amount of work for themselves and obtaining a higher rate than if they attempted to produce the cartoons independently.

Will Stay in Boston

A notable victory was won in Boston, Mass., on Wednesday, June 2, by "The Birth of a Nation" management that has been presenting the play at the Tremont theater in spite of the determined opposition of a group of white and colored agitators. The opponents of the play jammed through the legislature the previous week the so-called "Three-Men" censor bill, which provided that any play could be stopped without any reason being assigned and simply at the pleasure of two out of the three following officials: The mayor, the chief justice of the municipal court, and the police commissioner. The bill was promptly signed by Governor Walsh and the opponents joyfully looked forward to the end they had aimed at, namely, the driving of the Griffith spectacle out of Boston.

Mayor Curley, Chief Justice Bolster and Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara decided to see for themselves the object of the attacks. They visited "The Birth of a Nation" at different times individually. Then on Wednesday they gave a hearing to the counsel for the negroes and the counsel for the theater. John F. Cusick, the sole theatrical counsel, was faced by former United States Assistant Attorney-General William H. Lewis and Butler R. Wilson, colored lawyers, and J. Mott Hallowell, representing the white protestants. The hearing lasted two hours, after which the board of censors went into executive session.

After a short session, Mayor Curley, in behalf of the board, issued a statement: "Having witnessed the performance, heard counsel and having given full consideration to the entire subject, we have decided that the license of the theater should not be revoked or suspended."

Laura Sawyer's Contract Finished

It will be of great interest to the many admirers of Miss Laura Sawyer to know that this well known screen artist has just completed her contract with the Dyreda Art Film Company and expects to announce at a very early date her association with another leading motion picture production company. Miss Sawyer is a most versatile actress and her experience, both in the legitimate and the silent drama is extensive. Her connection with the Famous Players has made her one of the most noted actresses on the screen. Under the banner of the Famous Players Miss Sawyer took part in "A Daughter of the Hills"; played opposite the well known actor, Henry Dixie in "7750," also in a "Woman's Triumph." Her latest success is "A Daughter of Millions" with the Dyreda Art Films Company and she has taken part in other successful dramas.

Some of the beauties en route for California on the "Universal Special."

Universal Beauties Trip Begins

The dining room on the "second floor back" of the Manhattan Hotel was the scene of much gaiety and more beauty on Friday, June 4, when a number of the winners of the Universal beauty contest assembled there for luncheon preparatory to boarding the Chicago-bound two o'clock train in the Grand Central Terminal across the street.

The mid-day repast, at which were also present the Universal officials, chaperons of the party and representatives of the press, came as the end of a sight-seeing tour about New York; the automobiles carrying the girls being decorated with explanatory banners and pennants. More than one man was seen to stop in his tracks and move over to the curb for a better look as the beauty-laden machines swept along Broadway.

Nor can they be censured for their appreciation of the charms that be, unseemly though their staring may have been, for these girls were honest-to-goodness good-lookers. Heralded beauties do not often survive the gauntlet of criticism to which they are invariably subjected, but the consensus of opinion, gleaned from the bashless and complimentary remarks of the bellboys and hotel guests who lined the stairway and entrance as the girls passed out on their way to the train, was that the Universal Film Company exercises most commendable judgment in choosing fair ones.

Taxi drivers, cabmen, pedestrians and even the traffic policemen paused for a gaze as the girls, preceded by Carl Laemmle and escorted by Joe Brandt, Nat Rothstein, Paul Gulick, Bert Adler, John B. Clymer and Bob Doman, crossed Vanderbilt avenue and made their way into the station to start on the first lap of their journey to Universal City. Only the eastern states and Brooklyn were represented in this party, a special train and the Middle States' delegation awaiting their arrival in Chicago. Farewells were said, repeated, and thrown from the back platform of the last Pullman, and the trip was begun.

The Universal Beauty Special arrived in Chicago on Saturday afternoon and immediately went to the Sherman Hotel. They were accompanied by Carl Laemmle and his wife and a brass band led the party in automobiles to the hotel. That evening the beauties were taken to the Grand Opera House and there after the performance was over, Miss Margaret Anglin held a reception for them on the stage. After the theater the party went to the College Inn and were there given a sumptuous banquet, at which Carl Laemmle was presented with a chest of silver spoons and each of the girls was given a half dozen of the Mary Fuller souvenir spoons.

The entire party then retired to the ball room of the Hotel Sherman and there danced until 3 a. m. Sunday morning the girls all went to church at nine o'clock and spent the rest of the day in "seeing Chicago" in automobiles. The Universal Special left Chicago at 6 p. m. Sunday evening.

The tour, which began at Grand Central Station, continues with sight-seeing pauses at Kansas City, Newton, Kans.; Pueblo, Colo., Colorado Springs, Las Vegas, Lamy, Albuquerque, N. M.; Grand Canyon, Ariz.; Ashfork, Ariz.; Los Angeles, Universal City, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Monterey, Santa Cruz, San Jose and San Francisco.

New Vitagraph Star

The latest recruit from the legitimate stage to join the ranks of the Vitagraph players is the international comedienne, May Robson, who has been engaged to appear in a picture version of her latest comedy success, "A Night Out." Miss Robson in her career as an actress has won the hearts and tickled the risibilities of millions of people all over the world by her inimitable mimic art, and hopes to repeat her success in the silent drama. Miss Robson will bring to the Vitagraph with her, Mr. Paul Decker, who has been her leading man during the five years of her former stage success, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," and also in "A Night Out," and will add materially to the success of the picture because of his knowledge of Miss Robson's characteristics.

St. Louis Office Open

Announcement is made by "The Big Four" of the establishment of a St. Louis office in charge of S. W. Hatch, who is favorably known to most of the exhibitors in the middle west. The V. L. S. E. St. Louis office is permanently located at 3630 Olive street, and exhibitors in St. Louis and its immediate territory will obtain all of their booking through this new office.

Sets of Great Depth

In the production of "The Broken Coin" serial, Francis Ford has made use of sets with greater depth than anything the Universal has ever before attempted in the matter of scene construction. The buildings along one of the streets of the city have been erected to resemble the style of architecture familiar to Balkan tourists and those who have traveled between the covers of novels of the order of "Graustark" and "The Prisoner of Zenda." At one end the street has been cut off at a distance of about one hundred yards from the cameraman's platform. Beyond, on the hill which rises in the background of the city, other buildings have been erected, however, to serve as a background for the scenes taken in the street. Altogether the set stretches for a quarter of a mile from the carmera to the last building that shows in the picture. This does not mean that the quarter mile is one solid mass of buildings, but it does mean that buildings have been constructed at varying intervals along that distance.

An Important Announcement

The American Film Manufacturing Company, producer of the famous "Flying A" dramas, American "Beauty" films and American Master Pictures, offers Canadian exchanges an opportunity to obtain exclusive provincial rights to the releases above mentioned.

Beginning with the releases of June 14 and thereafter, these regular American releases will not be distributed by the Mutual Film Corporation, as has been the custom for some time past. The Mutual, however, will continue to distribute "The Diamond from the Sky," the American's continued photoplay, and any other special material for which the Mutual may contract.

The regular American releases affected by this announcement are as follows:

A two-reel "Flying A" drama every Monday.
A one-reel American "Beauty" every Tuesday.
A one-reel "Flying A" drama every Wednesday.
A one-reel "Flying A" drama every fourth Friday.
American Master Pictures, as announced in trade press after June 14.

Application for territorial rights in Canada on these regular releases should be made to the American Film Manufacturing Company, 6225 Broadway, Chicago, Ill.

John R. Freuler, first vice-president of the Mutual Film Corporation, explained the new arrangement as follows:

"It must be borne in mind," Mr. Freuler asserted, "that the Mutual Film Corporation will continue to distribute 'The Diamond from the Sky,' produced by the American Film Manufacturing Company. Also the Mutual will contract for special productions and distribute them as heretofore. The Mutual exchanges in Canada will continue operations, distributing the vast amount of valuable stock on hand. The change affects only the regular American releases and the American Master Pictures subsequent to June 14."

Lady Mackenzie Film Opens

When the Lyceum theater, New York, reopens on Monday evening for its spring and summer season, it will be with the first public presentation of Lady Mackenzie's big game hunting pictures, with which she has just returned from East Africa after a year's thrilling experience in the jungle. Lady Mackenzie, who is known among big game hunters of this country and Europe as "the foremost woman hunter of the world," succeeded in bagging specimens of every known animal in that part of Africa, not only with her rifle, but with the moving picture camera as well.

Although highly educational, the pictures are more than that, in that they show the bravery of this modern Diana in a most exciting lion hunt, in which the great king of beasts charges straight at Lady Mackenzie and her man hunter; and the only rhinoceros charge ever filmed. The huntress has also some remarkable views of herds of buffalo and zebra, of elephants, giraffes and baboons, of wild dogs and the other rare fauna of the country.

New League Formed in Utah

The motion picture exhibitors of Utah, Idaho, Wyoming and Nevada are now banded together in the Inter-mountain States Exhibitors' League, to work for the improvement of motion picture standards, to contest local censorship and to otherwise promote the interests of the moving picture industry.

The league was organized at a business meeting held at the Hotel Utah in Salt Lake City, which was attended by exhibitors from four states, and all were enthusiastic over the plans for the future. H. A. Simms of the American Star theater, Salt Lake City, was chosen president of the new league; Clifton Pierce, of the Star theater, Springville, Utah, first vice-president; C. N. Stringham, of the Manti theater of Manti, second vice-president; H. J. Carrigan, of the Empire theater, Salt Lake City, secretary, and A. L. Stallings, of the Princess theater, Provo, treasurer.

Jack Noble a Jonah?

Jack Noble thinks he is a Jonah. The hard luck jinx has followed Jack since he started putting on "Fighting Bob" out in Los Angeles. Out there it just rained, and rained, and rained, but the silver lining shows some very fine, and intensely realistic battle scenes, taken during the downpour.

When he returned to New York and began working on "The Right of Way," a screen version of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, the jinx was there too. In the big saloon set, where a knife duel was being staged, William Faversham, the star, was stabbed in the hand, laid up, and the production had to be delayed until the star was well again. Now that Mr. Faversham is back in the fold, Jack is hard at work and has hopes of presenting one of the biggest films of his career.

The new civic auditorium at San Francisco, where the National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held.

The Fifth Annual Convention

The fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is to be held in one of the most magnificent auditoriums in America, as shown in the accompanying illustration. The convention chamber seats 2,000, and though it is larger than any hertofore used, from present indications additional floor space will be needed.

There will be elaborate displays of all equipment and supplies used in any and all branches of the motion picture industry and three miniature theaters will be operated continuously each afternoon and evening, showing the latest and best in pictures and their projection.

The convention closes Friday night with what is planned as the greatest ball in motion picture history. The dance floor in the auditorium is 197 feet square, and is entirely unobstructed by pillars or posts. The galleries have a seating capacity of 5,000. Seventy-five film stars will be brought on a special train from Los Angeles studios to attend this dance.

You can visit the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco and the San Diego Exposition; also the great motion picture studios of the Pacific Coast without extra expense. An opporunity like this will never be repeated in a lifetime.

Hotel rates are very reasonable. The convention committee is making reservations and guaranteeing the rates. Accommodations may be secured as follows: One person in single room, without bath, $1.00 per day up; with bath, $1.50. Two people, with bath, $2.00 per day up. Address requests for hotel accommodations or information to Convention Committee, Room 306, 948 Market street, San Francisco.

Static Club May Dance

The May dance given by the Static Club of America added another pleasing event to the credit of this well known organization's social achievements. The large dancing room was tastefully decorated and cinematographers were here, there and everywhere, introducing the guests and making everyone welcome. The reception committee was ably assisted by Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Rutherford. Miss Pauline Bush, star of the Universal Company, honored the occasion by leading the grand march with Lon Chaney, director of the Warren Kerrigan Company. Altogether the affair was pronounced the most delightfully interesting dance of the season.

Added Blue Ribbon Feature

The five-part Blue Ribbon feature, "Hearts and the Highway," that has been added to the June releases of the V. L. S. E. is a picturization of the Rev. Cyrus Lillian Walker in "Hearts and the Highway."

Townsend Brady's historical novel of the same name. It was produced under the direction of Wilfred North, with an all-star cast that includes Lillian Walker, Darwin Karr, Donald Hall, L. Rogers Lytton, Charles Kent, Rose Tapley, Charles Eldridge, Ned Finley, Harry Northrup, Charles Wellesley, Anders Randolf, and William Gilson.

The action takes places during the reign of King James II of England, and is a vivid presentation of the plots, counterplots, and intrigues that marked that eventful period in the history of England.

During the run of this feature in the Vitagraph theater in New York City, it attracted capacity audiences, and by virtue of its rapid action, sustained interest and the popular nature of the subject, it well merits a place among the V. L. S. E. releases for this month.

The Only World Standard

In an address delivered before the University Club, Washington, D. C., C. Francis Jenkins stated: "The commercial motion picture ribbon is the only unit that is standard in every country. Railway gauges, for example, vary in different countries, uits of value, volume, weight, and of length differ, but the motion picture film is the same the world over."

Teddy Sampson

Teddy Sampson, one of the many petite Reliance-Majestic leading ladies, was born in New York City twenty years ago. When she reached the age of fifteen, Miss Sampson made her theatrical debut in a Gus Edwards vaudeville act, and then joined a musical comedy. Her next engagement was with Blanche Ring in "The Wall Street Girl" and she remained with Miss Ring until she again joined the Gus Edwards Company.

Teddy Sampson.

It was while Miss Sampson was playing at the Palace theater in New York that she was introduced to Mr. Griffith and she was then engaged by him to become a member of the Reliance-Majestic Company. Later when Griffith took his company to Los Angeles, Miss Sampson went with them and for the past two years has been appearing in these pictures and is considered very clever. Her instantaneous success is due to her earnest application to the work assigned her. Miss Sampson has been under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham for the past two months and her parts have been well suited to her style of acting.

Next Morosco Release

As its next release, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces "The Wild Olive," a picturization of the celebrated Basil King novel, with Myrtle Stedman and Forrest Stanley in the leading characters, supported by an exceptional cast. Miss Stedman is one of the most widely known motion picture stars in this country and her popularity among the "fans" has been repeatedly indicated by contests held in various publications, in which she has come out the winner. Forrest Stanley, whom Oliver Morosco loaned for the photoplay company's production, is the leading man at Mr. Morosco's famous Burbank theater stock company in Los Angeles, rated the greatest stock organization in America. Mr. Stanley's success in theatricals is well deserved, and according to those who have seen his work in this film, his success on the screen will soon equal that of the stage.

The international scope of the subject presents a spectacular series of scenes extending from the pines and lumber camps of the Alleghanies to the plazas, mansions and steamship docks of gay Argentine. The romance between the wealthy mountain girl and the dashing college man has been pronounced one of the most sympathetic in modern fiction. Experts who have already viewed this artistic photo drama from the laboratory standpoint pronounce the visions one of the finest pieces of dissolve work ever produced upon the screen. The release date of this production is June 24.

Al Jennings in "Beating Back"

"Beating Back" is the five-part film dramatization of Will Irwin's famous serial in The Saturday Evening Post, telling the remarkable life story of Al J. Jennings. Jennings himself plays throughout the five reels the part he once enacted in real life, as lawyer, bandit, convict and recent candidate for governor of Oklahoma.

Jennings, it will be recalled, was a young attorney in Oklahoma some twenty years ago, the point at which the film narrative begins. His father was a circuit court judge. His three brothers were respected members of the community. Al Jennings was the most adventurous of the family in a land where daily existence was itself an adventure. A feud existed between Al's brother Ed and a man who shall be nameless. While Ed Jennings awaited his brothers Al and John one night, he was shot from behind by this man. Al reached his brother's side just in time to receive his parting injunction to revenge him. All of Al's efforts, however, to have his brother's slayer punished proved empty; he was freed by a jury that, rumor said, was "fixed."

Scene from "Beating Back," with Al Jennings.

From this moment on—and the film version of "Beating Back" shows all these exciting adventures in Jennings' life—Al was suspected of many outbreaks against the law because of his open threats to do that which he felt the law had failed to do. With a price put on his head by the Oklahoma authorities, Al turned bandit in earnest. He became chief in brain and hand of the Norman gang.

The film version of "Beating Back" shows all the high spots in Al Jennings' adventurous career. Jennings is supported by an all-star cast consisting of Morris Foster, Frank Farrington, Albert V. Froome, Mignon Anderson, Fan Bourke, Madeline Fairbanks, and many others noted on the screen.

To Film "The Galloper"

Pathe has secured the picture rights to Richard Harding Davis' novel, "The Galloper," and Donald MacKenzie will shortly begin to make a feature from it. He promises a cast of more than ordinary merit.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

COLOR PRINCIPLES.

WE have already learned how the various colors or "hues" that combine to make white light may be separated and spread out in a band or ribbon showing all the colors of the "rainbow." This is commonly done by means of a glass "prism." A narrow "pencil" of white light (as from the sun, and coming through a narrow slit in a dark window shade) is arranged to pass through the prism. When it comes out from the other side and falls upon the dark (painted white) wall, it will not be a narrow white spot as we might expect, but a wide band of many colors.

It will also be in a different place from the place where the narrow white spot would form if the prism were not there. One end of the band or "rainbow" is always dark red, and the other end dark violet. The red end will be nearest the place where the white spot will fall, and the violet end farthest away.

This is because the violet rays are more "refrangible," which means that they are "refracted" or bent out of their normal path more than the rays of other colors. The precise reason for this is very obscure, but since we know that the "waves" of violet light are much shorter than those of the other colors, it must be that short waves are somehow "impeded" by the glass more than the long ones. At any rate it always comes out the same way, and in making photographic lenses these differences of refraction are necessarily taken into account and allowed for with great exactness.

What we have just done artificially with a simple prism, nature does in millions of different ways, and uses an infinite variety of substances, the result being the world as we see it.

One of the least common but most spectacular of nature's exhibitions is the rainbow itself, and while a complete explanation of how it is caused would consume too much time and tax your patience, we can arrive at a fairly accurate notion by considering the effect which a drop of water has upon a ray of light.

In Fig. 42 is shown a drop of water W, enlarged many times. The ray of light coming from the sun is first refracted slightly on entering the drop (which also disperses it, somewhat like a prism) and then when it strikes the other side of the drop it is parly reflected, not only once but twice, for the inside surface of the drop being curved, the path of the ray will be something as indicated by the arrows.

Now when the ray emerges again it will again be "dispersed" or further split up into constituent colors, so that when it reaches the eye of the observer it would show him all of the colors, but for one very important thing. That is that the observer's eye would have to be very large to take in both ends of the "spectrum" caused by the "dispersion" of the ray.

How then do we see all of the colors? Simply by viewing a great many "spectra" at once. You see, the drops are exceedingly small and numerous, and we see red coming from one bunch of drops, and green from another, and blue from a third, these being the actual sensations in the eye. However we think many colors or hues besides these three, for the reason that the brain has a way of blending the three sensations to produce an infinite number of hues, as well as tints and shades.

For instance when red and green enter the eye at once, each impresses its particular set of nerves, but the brain blends the two sensations into what we call yellow. If more red enters than green we call the effect orange. Similarly red and blue entering together cause us to see purple, or magenta, or crimson, according to the relative proportions of the two primary colors. If there happens to be a large amount of undispersed white light entering the eye at the same time the effect will be a "tint" which means a hue mixed with white. For instance, lavender is a reddish blue tint, composed of nearly one-half white, and nearly half blue, with just a little red. On the other hand, maroon is a bluish red "shade," being composed of about two-thirds black, the other third consisting of red and blue in the proportions of three or four to one.

In the case of the rainbow, we see a hazy, whitish arch seemingly comprising a series of hoops one within the other but all blended together, and sometimes within this arch there is another smaller arch, with the order of colors reversed. This is simply because the drops in different positions receive the sun's rays at a different angle, so that some rays enter the drop at the bottom and emerge from the top after two reflections, (W) while others enter at the top and emerge from the bottom after one reflection. (W')

SIMPLE DISPERSION.

In Fig. 43 a pencil of rays from the sun passes through a slit in the wall of the room, and thence through the prism P, which refracts and disperses the various rays so that when they reach the opposite wall H, they have been spread out into the color band r, o, y . . . v. If the prism had not been there the pencil of rays would of course have remained white and struck the floor at K. Now there are several ways of making this experiment still more striking and conclusive. One is to pass the light through another prism having its base down instead of up. This second prism will reunite the color rays, and we shall have white again.

Still another way to unite the dispersed rays is to arrange a series of mirrors as in Fig. 44, so that each will reflect the rays which strike it to the same spot on the ceiling, where they will all be "superimposed" and the eye of the observer will therefore be impressed by the combination, and he will see white. Seven divisions are shown to correspond with the popular notion of seven colors, but in reality there are three colors, and an infinite number of hues, each due to some combination of the three "primary" colors (scarlet, green and blue-violet).

Now to get back to nature's methods of splitting up the light of the sun into the myriad hues which we see all about us. She is not confined to any one method, but has so many that we shall not even refer to all of them, but will pick out a few of the commoner processes by which the objects which we see every day are colored and tinted and shaded the way we observe them.

Take the greens of vegetation, such as grass and the leaves of the trees. Now the color of grass is almost pure "spectrum green," and the way nature colors it is by making it of such a surface texture and quality that it will "absorb" practically all of the scarlet and blue-violet from the light which strikes it. Thus from white light there is nothing left but primary green, so that is what you see when you look at grass. The leaves of some trees are about the same color or hue, but usually foliage seems to be a sort of bluish green, which means that the leaves have the quality of absorbing all of the scarlet, and nearly but not all of the blue-violet, leaving spectrum green and a little blue-violet which enter the eye of the observer togther, causing him to see the familiar blue-green of foliage.

Other processes besides "absorption" by which nature controls the appearance of objects, are called variously "diffraction," "iridescence," "interference," "phosphorescence," "polarisation," "fluorescence," etc., by all of which the "vibrations" of "incident" light rays are constantly being altered, either as to their character or direction, or association, with the result that this world is far from being the dull gray prospect that most motion pictures would lead one to surmise.

The delicate pinks of the half-blown rose, the gorgeous reds of the autumn sunset, and the azure blues of the summer sky are but a few of nature's offerings which burst in splendor upon the dull senses, and duller sensibilities of her slowly developing audience.

What are we doing to aid the development of such portions of that audience as wander in for a quarter's or a dime's worth of enlightenment? Do we help along the beautiful work of nature by showing to all who care to see, the glorious scenes which she so often reveals but to a few and on rare occasions? Are we as particular to record faithfully the harmonies of color, as some of us are (very properly) to see to it that each story is historically and geographically correct?

The answer can only be that we should like to, but the present limitations of photography make it impossible, so the best we can do is to put red all over the fire and sunset pictures (or perchance to "double-tone" some of them so as to get effect rather than likeness), and blue-tint the moonlights, and green-tone the landscapes, possibly tinting the sky besides. Very striking, perhaps, for broad effects, but very far behind nature, who, when she pours moonlight on milady's cheek, does not turn it the color of cold and senseless clay, but leaves just enough of the delicate flesh-tints to remind us of the wonderful harmony of pink and white and gold which nature herself has blended.

Keystone Announces Changes

From the executive offices of Kessel & Baumann, New York, heads of the Keystone Film Company, comes the announcement that all single reel and semi-monthly releases will be discontinued after the week ending June 12. After that date all efforts of the Keystone organization will be concentrated on making Mack Sennett two-reel special features to be released twice a week.

The Mack Sennett Special Keystone Features will be released through all of the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. The big comedies of the Sennett brand will be all star casts featuring Mabel Normand, Ford Sterling, Raymond Hitchcock, Roscoe Arbuckle, Syd

Facts and Fancies About a Man You Know or Ought to Know

TRAINED in the rare art of combining accuracy with human interest; equipped to apprehend the full measure of motion picture possibilities slightly ahead of his fellows; competent to grasp the complex details of an intricate and swiftly moving business; broad enough to shift the responsibilities of a far-reaching organization, accounts partially for the tremendous achievements of Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago. Long ago Mr. Selig learned that it required just as much judgment to make ten dollars as it does to make ten thousand dollars. Both transactions hinge on courage, in relative proportions. And if there is one man who fairly radiates courage, that man is Wm. N. Selig. Travel about with him over his properties and you will discover this predominating trait of courage. There is never-ending proof. His faith in himself and in his business is monumental, and you will have no trouble to discern his monuments. With rare exception, Wm. N. Selig pinned his whole enthusiasm for and belief in the motion picture far in advance of all other American manufacturers. He foresaw the future. His plan contemplated the larger things. His was the ability to think and act in big units.

William N. Selig.

This isn't an inventory of the Selig properties. The dopester cares for that! Wm. N. Selig, the man, has finally been dragged out into the limelight. He is nearly the last of the really big men of the film business to give up his photograph. Little about him has appeared in the trade papers. There has been much about his company; his great family of player folk; his animals; his world-famed zoo. This will be about William Nicholas Selig, unadorned—fifty-one years young. He is stocky; broad-shouldered; of average height and weight; is inconspicuous in a crowd because you rarely find him there. His features are regular; his complexion fair, but swarthy, and his eyes clear and penetrating—eyes easy to determine because they never wabble. Mr. Selig looks right into you. It has been said that his face never betrays emotion, but that must have been a mistake. It would be hard to imagine that his smile was merely a physical demonstration—a part affected by politeness. Mr. Selig affects nothing. He is very real. His smile is genuine. It doesn't stop at the curve of his lips. His eyes, cheeks and forehead join in that wholesome smile of his. It doesn't differ a great lot from his laugh, and if you want to get down into the matter, tell him your story and watch for results. Even when he suffered the intense pain of a gun-shot wound in his arm, he could smile. Incidentally, that bullet wound threw new light on the fearlessness of the man. He rarely has concern for himself. Rather, he thinks for the other fellow. When one of his Japanese employees went raving crazy in October, 1911, and succeeded in assassinating Francis Boggs, it was Wm. N. Selig who threw himself in the path of the bullets in an effort to save his friend. One of those bullets struck Mr. Selig in his right arm, passed through it and lodged in his coat lining. It is one of his cherished pocket-pieces!

Wm. N. Selig hasn't any voice in this story. He isn't sponsor for it, nor will he be permitted to exercise a censor's prerogative with it. If he had his way, the shooting incident would be stricken out. It is characteristic of men of truly large affairs to duck publicity. They intuitively adopt the slogan, "By their fruits ye shall know them." You will never really know a film man by his works. You may know all about the Selig Polyscope Company and not know Wm. N. Selig. And yet here is the one man responsible for the whole institution—a man who must have that credit, whether he wills it or not.

The film business, due to its newness, requires a presiding genius who knows all about all of it. Wm. N. Selig applied himself to photography when he was only about so high. He clung through it for years and years and became its master. "Who's Who in America" credits him as "actor and theatrical manager, 1888-99." He is an inventor of many appliances used in motion picture taking and making. He was the first film manufacturer to produce a long, historical photo-drama; first to introduce wild animals in motion pictures. His establishments are of high order; builded for permanency; anticipating growth. He has financed numerous expeditions into foreign lands, sending Prof. Frederick Starr to the interiors of Africa, Korea, Japan and the Philippines; Dr. E. B. McDowell into China, Africa and India; Emmett O'Neill into South America. He sends his money after all things that will help to enlighten mankind for he has found the light for himself to the thirty-second degree.

When he introduced wild animals into motion pictures, he went the limit. He bought specimens of all the animals of all the countries. They were formerly divided between Los Angeles and Chicago, but now Chicago is merely a point of entry—a clearing house where the newest addition first forms acquaintance with its owner. The Selig zoological gardens of Los Angeles houses the most complete privately owned collection of wild animals in America.

Mr. Selig's great passion lies with his animals and birds. He fills his pockets with dainties to the exact liking of the various kinds and species and makes the rounds. He has kind words and caresses for all of them and they welcome his coming. If he has any other hobby it has never cropped out. He doesn't attempt anything more strenuous as diversion than motoring. He loves the companionship of friends and relishes a good meal. And like all film men, he is a fiend for work. Mr. Selig reads and approves or rejects all the scripts that come to his desk. His skill in judging the picturization of novels is never questioned. His capacity to read is marvelous. It is not uncommon for him to mull manuscripts when riding to and from his home or factory or office. He seldom travels to New York or Los Angeles without a bundle of scenarios. His library is full of books that are his to do with as he pleases regarding the filming. In keeping with his far-sightedness he began buying book rights before the market appeared. Mr. Selig has the film rights for several hundred famous stories—probably more than he will ever undertake to make. He is prepared for that mythological "rainy day" that is expected some day to hit the film business.

William Nicholas Selig was born in Chicago, March 14, 1864. He received his education in Chicago's public schools. He married Miss Mae H. Pinkham of Stockton, Cal., September 7, 1900. He is a member of the Chicago Athletic Club, Chicago Automobile Club, Republican Club of New York and Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Irwin Outlines Policy

The internal policy of V. L. S. E. Inc., as revealed by General Manager Walter W. Irwin's address to the employes of the company, is one that reflects great credit on the heads of the Big Four organization, and should serve as a model for other film companies. Mr. Irwin in outlining the V. L. S. E. organization attitude toward its employes, lays as much emphasis upon the company's obligations, as he does upon the duty expected of its selling and clerical forces. He points out that politics will occupy no place in the conduct of the business, and that merit alone will be the sole judge of ability and the gauge by which salaries will be measured.

Mr. Irwin considers each employe a member of the family—the Big Four family, and his address to them, as printed in the company's private publication runs in part as follows:

The policy of this company is founded upon two principles; first, integrity; second, merit.

The first ought and must exist in the family relations, as well as in our relations with the exhibitor.

This means that the V. L. S. E. organization is and will continue to be, absolutely devoid of politics.

It also means that the home office will not play politics with any of the manufacturers, nor with any individual or group of individuals in this organization.

Nor shall any individual or group, ever feel it necessary or desirable to play politics with the home office, or with the manufacturers.

As the success of a salesman largely depends upon the degree of confidence and reliance placed in him by his customers, so too, the success of sales organization must rest upon the reliability felt by each part of it in the whole, and vice versa.

In short, this company purposes to perform but two duties:

(1) To get the utmost results for each manufacturer, without fear or favor, consistent with fairness to the exhibitor.

(2) The square deal to each representative.

Necessarily, it follows, that merit shall be the sole test of recognition and consequent advancement.

And merit, as applied to our product, plus confidence in the organization, and honesty with the exhibitor, must make for success.

Gerda Holmes

"The Victory of Virtue," a five-reel feature of the United Photo-Plays Company, in which Gerda Holmes and Wilmuth Merkyl will be co-stars, is to be released within the next three weeks. Miss Holmes has the part of Penelope, a young girl in Washington society, who falls a victim to the wiles of the soft-spoken man-about-town. The play, in part, is allegorical and deals with the strong combat of conscience with sin.

Gerda Holmes.

Miss Holmes, who is a native of Denmark, has been appearing on the screen for about five years. Before that she was on the legitimate stage. Her ambition was to be an opera singer. While studying voice, she attracted the attention of a dramatic producer, who induced her to appear in one of his productions. She became acquainted with the late Charles Hite, president of the Thanhouser Company. When Mr. Hite was filming "Robin Hood" he asked Miss Holmes to take a part in the play. She did, and this was the beginning of her film career. From Thanhouser she went to the Essanay Company, where she was a leading lady for three years.

New Buildings for Griffith Features

New buildings for printing, developing, washing, drying and cutting negatives and postives are now being erected on the Reliance-Majestic studio grounds in Hollywood, Los Angeles.

In the new buildings will be printed and developed all the prints of the D. W. Griffith features as well as the usual first prints of the Reliance and Majestic daily releases. When these new buildings are completed the capacity of these departments will be 200,000 feet of film per week. William C. Bitzer, head photographer of the Reliance and Majestic, has long since been compelled to increase his own quarters. The new factory gives him still more faciliites. He and Joseph Aller, who has been associated with Mr. Griffith for a number of years, believe that a new era of photoplay development will follow the installation of new devices. This installation has been made possible by the erection of the new buildings.

REVIEWED BY DAVID S. HULFISH

NO. 1,089,762. Intermittent Mechanism. G. V. J. Guilbert, Paris, France. In the Geneva starwheel, the radial slots are upon one face of the wheel, the locking arcs upon the other face, and a web of metal between, giving a strong construction to the elements.

1,090,128. Indicator. F. H. Avers, Portage, Wis. A small dial upon the feed magazine has an indicator arm riding upon the film in the magazine and indicating upon the dial the length of film remaining.

1,090,287. Safety Attachment. H. B. Cunningham, St. Paul, Minn. Knife blades are arranged to cut the film and close the mouth of the magazine. These are restrained by inflammable cords near the film window. The cords burn, the film is cut and the magazines closed, if the film in the window should blaze.

1,090,622. Lamphouse. C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C.

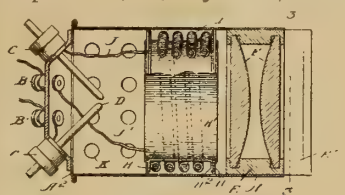

Fig. 1,090,622

A single casing contains lamp, condensers, and rheostat resistance, the casing being amply provided with ventilation.

1,090,679. Film Making. B. Borzykowski, Berlin, Germany. An endless belt runs over rollers; dissolved celluloid is sprayed upon the belt; heaters evaporate the solvent; pumps pump off the gases of evaporation and other rollers take off the resultant film from the belt.

1,091,343. Camera. C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C. The film moves continuously and lens and film move together during the exposure.

1,091,543. Shutter. A. D. Standeford, Kansas City, Mo. To open the lens quickly a shutter of narrow slats rotates each slat from flat to edge. The thin edges of the slats are out of focus for the screen and are not discernible.

1,091,864. Projector. G. E. Ripley and W. M. Gladson,

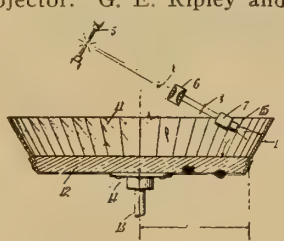

Fig. 1,091,864

Fayetteville, Ark., and R. E. Thompson, Heber, Ark. The film moves at steady speed. A ring of mirrors, forming the inner surface of a cone wheel, reflect the beam of light, producing a steady picture on the screen, without dark intervals.

1,091,662. Protective Device. W. J. Kerr, Smethport, Pa., assignor of part to T. E. Hungiville, Smethport, Pa. The magazines and the box of the motion head are connected by flues to an exhaust fan, and a guard is provided from the lens to the projecting window of the booth.

1,092,549. Magazine. C. H. Weise and F. A. McAuvie, Archbald, Pa. The upper magazine is for horizontal reel, feeding from middle of the coil of film, and guide rollers are mounted in the lid of the magazine.

1,093,646. Fire Shutter. John Oertly, assignor to New Jersey Patent Co., West Orange, N. J. (Application filed April 24, 1906.) The fire shutter is normally closed, but is opened by frictionally operating means upon the driving mechanism; in addition, it is possible to render the friction means ineffective so that the film drive may run with fire shutter closed.

1,093,933. Film Winder. C. F. Jenkins, Washington, D. C. There is in this improved winder an arm carrying two idler pulleys, one of which is a belt tightener for the take-up drive belt and the other is an idler in the loop of the film between the lower steady feed and the take-up reel. Should the reel drive too fast and reduce the film loop, the arm is shifted to loosen the drive belt.

1,094,147 and -8. Shutter and Color Screen. F. W. Hochstetter, assignor to H. P. Patents and Processes Co., New York, N. Y. A rotary shutter is associated with a reciprocating color screen, the two being driven in synchronism, producing the effect of a shutter having windows of transparent color plates for projection of color pictures.

1,095,096. Magazine. F. J. H. Fleck, Tamaqua, Pa. In a magazine for horizontal feed reel feeding from center of reel, the film is taken downward through the axis of the reel, instead of up, out and then down as usual.

1,096,284. Projector. W. A. Chapman, Smithville, Ark. A novel arrangement of motion head and slide projector in which the change from motion head to fixed slide is made by shutters and reflectors, not by sliding the lamp house or rotating the projecting head, as usual.

1,096,887. Film Cabinet. J. F. Blaski, Chicago, Ill. A fireproof box with hinged cover has a stirrup hung to the middle of the cover, so that when the cover is lifted the stirrup lifts the film rolls that they may be grasped easily for removal.

1,097,478. Framing Device. E. H. Sperberg, assignor to Oscar F. Foss, Chicago, Ill. In a motion head having the claw type of intermittent feed, a pivoted lever is interposed between the cam wheel and the claw, the pivot of the lever bing shiftable to adjust the film for framing.

1,098,031. Camera. A. C. Forsberg and H. C. Schlicker, assignor to M. M. Looram, New Rochelle, N. Y. To prevent static markings on the film in a motion picture camera, the air in the camera is kept humid by hot water. A water tank and flame for heating are provided, and an open surface of hot water is exposed to the air within the camera.

1,098,370 and 371. Color Kinematography. A. G. Donnelly, assignor to Quasapic Co., Inc., New York, N. Y. An improved camera for making negatives for subsequent projection in natural colors, comprising means for shifting the film and tubular shutters for the lens, with color filters within the central space of the tubular shutters.

1,099,356. Projector Attachment. J. Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., assignor of part to Alice F. Hayward, Bethel, Conn. An idler wheel over which the film passes on its way to the take-up reel is arranged to apply a brake to the take-up reel in case the reel, moving too fast, reduces the amount of film in the loop between the lower steady feed and the take-up; the same idler operates also to stop the motor and cut off the light in case the film breaks.

1,101,172. Cooler. Leon Frassier, Paris, France. In the cone of light at the condensers, a water chamber cools the light, the water having a circulating system with a radiator, of the fundamental principle of the water jacket and radiator of the modern automobile.

1,102,172. Method of Taking Motion Pictures. C. Sciamengo, Turin, Italy. The method of taking kinematographic pictures which consists in taking the pictures while moving the camera, mounted on a movable support, in a line the direction of which at any moment is at an angle to the optical axis of the camera at that moment, whereby there results at the time of projection an impression of relief, the movement being to such successive points of view as shall accord with the conditions of the scene.

1,102,237. Process of Making Celluloid Films. Emile Bronnert, assignor to Vereinigte Glanzstoff Fabriken A. G., Elberfeld, Germany. Viscose celluloid solution is conducted through a heated precipitating bath of salt of non-volatile alipathic oxacids such as lactic, glycolic, citric, with a quantity of the same free acid.

1,102,261. Camera. J. A. Golden, New York, N. Y. In this camera also, the lens and the film move together at the same speed during the exposure.

1,102,595. Composite Dramatic Production. H. Knight, New York, N. Y. The stage is divided, part for actors, part for motion pictures, and the two components progress in unison. Thus with part of the stage set for a house interior and the remainder set with a picture screen as though exterior to the house, the actress within the room tells the story simultaneously illustrated by the projector.

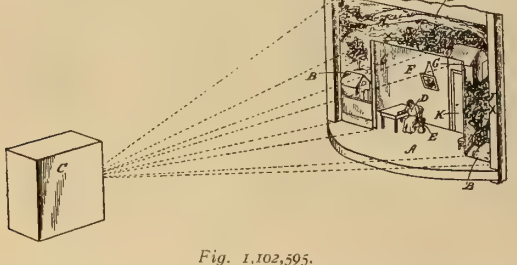

Fig. 1,102,595.

1,102,767. Shutter Adjustment. J. A. LeRoy, New York, N. Y. The shutter is adjusted by changing the alinement of the shutter shaft. The mechanism is such that this may be done during the projection of the picture.

1,102,878. Colored Film. S. Cocanari, Vieux-Dieu, Belgium. Positive kinematographic film colored before it is printed, the sensitive emulsion being laid onto an ordinary film coated with a colored sheet.

1,102,933. Intermittent Mechanism. J. E. Leonard, Portland, Ore. The intermitten sprocket is of large diameter, its radius about equal to the focal length of the lens, and the projected image is projected while upon the sprocket wheel.

1,102,988. Camera. J. E. Leonard, Portland, Ore. The intermittent device grips and pulls the film, without sprocket teeth.

1,103,057. Printer, S. Kucharski, Berlin, Germany. A printer for printing a motion picture positive film upon a wet sensitive surface. This makes possible the collodion positive instead of gelatine.

1,103,858. Safety Device. W. H. Anderson, assignor to Kino, Ltd., Wellington, New Zealand. The film passes between electric terminals, and conductors are carried at intervals by the film strip. By the breakage of the film strip the motor is stopped and a fire shutter dropped.

1,104,616. Take-Up. P. C. Brenner, Chicago, Ill. This inventor attacks an old problem from a new angle. The problem is to project a film repeatedly without rewinding. The well known method is to feed from the center of the feed reel. Mr. Brenner arranged his take-up to reel up the film with the leader on the outside of the reel. The take-up reel is a horizontal tray with circular wall, which revolves as the film is fed to it, and a suction current of air draws the film against the wall, thus winding upon the inside of the film coil and finishing with the tail end inside ready for projection from the outside of the reel as is customary in any projector.

1,104,873. Feed Mechanism. J. Butcher, Brooklyn, N. Y. The feed is by sprocket, the sprocket being driven by a spiral spring for power and an escapement mechanism to control the steps.

1,105,036. Feed. P. J. Mukautz, Chicago, Ill. The intermittent motion is applied to two belts between which the film is clamped. The film thus moved by friction clamp needs no sprocket holes.

1,105,163. Projector. Magnus Smith, assignor to Continental Motion Picture Co., Inc., New York, N. Y. The film moves continuously and a mirror is moved to follow the image and to keep it fixed upon the screen. There is no dark interval, the successive images fading into each other.

1,106,111. Screen. L. O. Rather, assignor to R. H. Waller, Nashville, Tenn. A projecting screen comprising a plate glass coated on the back with finely divided metal, whiting and adhesive.

Censorship Loses Again

THAT the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" might engender race animosity against negro citizens is a contention based purely on assumption. A license or permit to exhibit obtained honestly and in good faith vests the owner with an individual property right, which neither the city nor any official nor judge can arbitrarily deprive him of without a hearing in court. That is the nucleus of Judge William Fenimore Cooper's decision June 5, when he entered an injunction restraining the mayor, the chief of police, and the city of Chicago from interfering with the production of the play. Thus, in the long story of censorship, closes another chapter whose evidence shows that the world's sentiment is turning against the censors.

Sincerity, consistency and justice—these things the world demands even of censors. It is a hard order; for the very word censor is arbitrary, arrogant and exacting. That is why censorship is an un-American institution, and why the people are turning against it.

The history of the Chicago censors, especially, has not been a record of broad-mindedness or of "justice tempered with mercy." Always the apparent object of the board has been to stop every scene which offered any theoretical excuse for interference. We have always contended that abuse of censoring power would not stand the test of the courts; and now the record is bearing us out.

Our frequent criticisms of Chicago's censorial power has not been based on prejudice. Even the present case, full in the eyes of the world and the courts, continues to bear witness to the narrow arbitrariness of those who are delegated to the "regulation" of pictures. For Chicago's argument before the court was that "The Birth of a Nation" libelled the negro race. Observe, then, the sequel to the court's decision:

At the request of two negro institutes a picture entitled "The New Era" was prepared and arranged to run as a postlude to "The Birth of a Nation." This postlude shows the development of the negro race and the important part it is taking in modern civilization. Apparently the censors should have welcomed it—doubly so after they had been enjoined from interfering with the master film. Did they receive it in all sincerity as a solution of their difficulty? They did not. Those powerful and intelligent arbiters of the people's rights refused to allow "The New Era" to be shown, on the ground that it was not a part of "The Birth of a Nation" when a permit was granted for that film. And they refused to issue a separate permit for it. Is that judicial action, or is it small-minded retaliation for defeat? What better evidence can we ask of the quality of our "censors"—those vested with the sacred and responsible duty of protecting the public morals—than that they refuse to do a good act because they resent being caught in a bad one?

One decision against the censors might not mean a great deal. If that were all the testimony we had that the world is awakening to the injustice of censorship, perhaps jubilation were unwise. But when one decision follows another in widely separated cases, when the very newspapers that were themselves violently censorious not long ago now predict the downfall of the whole censor system, there is much hope for the freedom of the picture.

Standards of Ventilation

THE Chicago Ventilation Commission is a voluntary organization. It was organized on the initiative of the city health commissioner, by delegates from the department of health, the board of education, the heating and ventilating engineers, the Institute and Society of Architects, and the Society of Engineers. It works slowly; its first progress report appeared in 1911, its second has just issued, and its final report is expected some time next year. But as it has no official standing, no funds at its disposal, and no salaried officers it may well be allowed to take its own time in pursuing its very useful function. And, as it is not specially and peculiarly interested in picture theaters, we may safely assume that its recommendations in regard to them are uncolored by prejudice or bias.

The picture theater man who seriously considers ventilation, as every successful exhibitor must, is confronted by two problems. First, he must obey the dictates of health requirements and local ordinance whether his audience demands it or not. Second, he must observe the principles of comfort, if he would keep his patronage, even though the law does not require it. The commission has considered this part of the problem:

A temperature between 69 and 74 degrees is comfortable when the humidity is 28. If the humidity be 40 the borders of the comfort zone are at 66 and 72. Comfort lies between. At 50 humidity the temperature borders are 64 and 69. At 60 humidity they are 61 and 68. At 70 humidity they are 52 and 67.

The general subject of ventilation is covered in a series of resolutions which are really worth studying; for we cannot deny their practical value, and future legislation is apt to follow their suggestions:

Resolved, That carbon dioxide, as encountered in working practice, is not the harmful agent of major importance in expired air or air otherwise contaminated.

That the delivery of a certain volume of air per unit of time per occupant into a given space does not necessarily constitute ventilation.

That heating and ventilating are two distinct problems, and therefore the installation of heating and ventilating systems whether separate or combined, should be such that neither system shall interfere with the efficiency of the other.

That from the standpoint of health relative humidity is one of the important factors in ventilation.

That efficient air cleaning devices are desirable in all ventilating installations where the air supply is liable to be contaminated by dust or other objectionable matter.

That the bacterial content of the air is an important factor in all ventilation, and bears a direct relation to the source and quantity of air supply.

That when cold air for ventilation is introduced into picture theaters above the breathing zone, either (1) There will be an insufficient supply of air for proper ventilation, or (2) The occupants of the theater will be uncomfortably cold.

That upward ventilation in picture theaters is more efficient than downward ventilation; also it is more economical from the standpoint of operation.

That in the cooling of picture theaters in the summer time the system of downward ventilation is inefficient.

That air delivered into picture theaters for ventilation purposes should not be delivered at a temperature colder than 60 degrees Fahr.

That in the breathing zone the number of colonies of bacteria on a standard agar plate should never exceed fifteen after a five minute exposure.

That the relative humidity of the air when brought into picture theaters for ventilation purposes should not be less than 35 per cent.

That the velocity of the air delivered into picture theaters for ventilation purposes shall not be less than twenty-five cubic feet per occupant per minute. It shall be understood that in determining such quantity the maximum seating capacity shall be considered as the number of occupants of the room.

That fresh air registers in the floor of the aisles and lobbies of picture theaters should be prohibited.

It is quite certain that the majority of modern picture theaters check up against this tabulation in first-class shape. It is also reasonable to suppose that the few exhibitors who have somewhat neglected the important factor of ventilation, have done so because of a lack of definite and readily accessible information. Fresh air is such an intangible, invisible thing that one is apt to overlook its necessity until utterly deprived of it. Now that even the most humble exhibitor will concede the necessity of some ventilation, and so is willing to install ventilating equipment, it adds little to his task to put some study into it and have it right. The mere reading of this set of resolutions may furnish all the data the intelligent theater man needs.

Intelligence does not need censorship. The greater the insistence upon censorship the greater the denial that the community has intelligence. We know that if moving pictures accessible to the immature, unreasoning, impressionable parts of the city portrayed the success of criminal acts, revealing their perpetrators in enjoyment of life there would be an incentive to weak minds, and the public might suffer. But the question is always one of fact, and censorship, being in itself a denial of intelligence, or an acceptance of the fact that ignorance is impressionable, frequently proves that it itself is unintelligent.—The Chicago Tribune.

Before proceeding a step further with this Pinnacle of Persiflage, we must introduce to our readers Thomas C. Kennedy, the latest acquisition to our New York staff, whom we feel sure is going to make himself exceedingly popular with our Eastern friends. With a couple more like Condon and Kennedy 1022 Longacre building may be mistaken for Constantinople.

A POPULAR PLACE.

We are told a traffic cop became almost a necessity in the offices of the Selig Polyscope Company, last week, when the new lobby cut-outs depicting pretty little Grace Darmond in tights were first set up for display. Ben Beadell and Ed Gaylor were positively rude, the way they elbowed others aside in order to obtain a position in the front row. Bill Wright and Clarence Caine are said to have taken to wearing blinders since the "cut-outs" were put on display.

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

The World's Greatest Yarn.

By U. N. Derwood,

The World's Greatest Writer

Episode Seven: "Stay-At-Home Jane."

(PART ONE.)

"I'm called the world's most stubborn girl," declared Jane, the sixth of the Seven Suffering Sisters to visit the Jumbo Film Corporation's studios for the purpose of telling her story. "You see I'd always been a quiet, stay-at-home type of girl from earliest childhood. I was born at home. While still in long dresses I yelled lustily whenever my nurse attempted to take me away from home. As a little girl I constantly stayed at home and so when I grew up and Ted Horner insisted upon marrying me, I looked forward with dread to leaving home. The wedding over and our honeymoon nicely started, I suddenly determined to return home and slipping off the train during a momentary pause I met Wilbert Sly, the Man with the False Mustache, and aided by him stole back home. Ted was naturally frantic when he missed me on the train but he never thought to look for me at home, believing instead that I had been kidnaped. He hastened to employ every detective in the city to seek clues as to my whereabouts, but I foiled them all with the assistance of Wilbert Sly, the Man with the False Mustache. How I did it I shall tell you next week."

Some Current Releases Reviewed

Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

CHICAGO obtained its first glimpse of that super-dreadnaught of all feature motion pictures, "The Birth of a Nation," on Saturday night, June 5, when, after a court decision of a sweeping nature, an injunction was granted by a Chicago judge restraining the city from interfering with the production.

Needless to say every man, woman and child who has attended the performance since its opening goes away amazed and awe-struck at the gigantic nature of the production and enthusiastic over its magnitude, fidelity to history and perfect direction.

It is hopeless to even try to compare "The Birth of a Nation" to any of the other feature films that have been shown, as it is so entirely different from all of the others. However, it is generally conceded that up to this time "Cabiria" may be referred to as the world's greatest production, and from the standpoint of stupendous grandeur, the number of supernumeraries handled, and the staging of spectacular battles and mob scenes, "The Birth of a Nation" in every way equals the great Itala production; and as an additional merit, the latter story, on account of its historical nature, is familiar to every school boy of the land; consequently it seems to have an even wider appeal and perhaps, therefore, merits the distinction of itself being called "the world's greatest production."

No review of the Chicago production would be complete without a special mention of the splendid orchestral accompaniment which undoubtedly adds much pleasure to the unreeling of the story. The music is so timed as to be exactly synchronous with the action of the film and weeks must have been spent in rehearsal to produce the perfect result obtained. The audience finds itself in the proper atmosphere immediately upon entering the theater, for the ushers are costumed in the quaint garb of the 60's, the girl ushers being dressed in hoop skirts and frocks of the period of 1863, while the male ushers wear Union and Confederate uniforms.

The story is so well known on account of previous reviews, at the time of its New York showing, together with feature articles that have appeared concerning its production, that it is needless to again describe it, and only necessary to mention the names of such stars as Messrs. Walthall, Aitken, Siegmann, Harron and the Misses Marsh, Gish, Alden and the other notable Mutual-Griffith photoplayers, to let every exhibitor know it is in every respect an all-star production.

Lubin's "The Sporting Duchess"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

THE Sporting Duchess, Lubin's five-reel feature, released through V. L. S. E., Inc., is a pretentious, spectacular production that does not fail to impress. The story, a strong drama, is well planned, though, perhaps, a trifle diffused. The final scene, the running of the classic derby, is most satisfactory, for in it Lord Desborough and his wife, Muriel, are reunited. This gives proof of the interest and sympathy created in the early scenes of the film.

Notable among the many dramatic situations, is that of the court-room. Muriel, torn from her husband by the machinations of the covetous Captain Mostyn, is granted a divorce. The custody of the child is given to the father. The scene is presented in a way that makes it convincing and thrilling without the shallowness of ordinary melodrama.

Rose Coghlan's part as the Sporting Duchess competes for the leading role with that of Muriel, interpreted by Ethel Clayton. George Soule Spencer is seen as Lord Desborough; Ferdinand Tidmarsh, as Captain Mostyn; Rosetta Brice, as Vivian Darville; Ruth Bryan, as Mary Aylmer; Joseph Kaufman, as Rupert Lee; Clarence Elmer, as Dick Hammond, the jockey; James Daly, as Mr. Aylmer; and Charles Brandt, as Colonel Donnelly. The cast as a whole deserves much credit for the excellent interpretation of the various characters. Added to this is clear photography, and fine judgment in the technical detail of the picture. Barry O'Neil directed the production.

The Desborough home is the scene of many magnificent entertainments. A prominent figure at these affairs is the countess, called "The Sporting Duchess" because of her love for horse racing and hunting. Captain Mostyn, whom Lord Desborough considers his friend, is Desborough's rival for the hand of Lady Desborough. Mostyn is still in love with Muriel, and seeks to bring about an estrangement between her and her husband. With the aid of Vivian Darville, an adventuress with whom Desborough had an affair when he was in India with his regiment, Mostyn finally succeeds in causing the break between Muriel and Desborough. Lord Desborough's racing stable which includes Clipstone, the Derby favorite over Mostyn's King of Trumps, is to be sold at foreclosure. At the sale the Sporting Duchess outbids Mostyn and becomes the owner of Clipstone. Rupert Lee, who has been living with Vivian, overhears a conversation between her and Mostyn. He learns they have made all the Desboroughs' trouble, and that he has been their dupe. This decides Rupert to expose Mostyn to the Desborough, which results in their reunion. The final scene is at the Derby and the Sporting Duchess enjoys, completely, the victory of Clipstone over King of Trumps.

"The Patriot and the Spy"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"THE PATRIOT AND THE SPY," the Thanhouser Mutual Master-Picture to be released this week, is a gripping four-part drama which depicts a spy's treachery and a patriot's heroism. James Cruze is the patriot, who, owing to the fact that he is lame, will not be taken into the army, portrays his intensely emotional role splendidly. Marguerite Snow, as the wife of the patriot, does most convincing work, and Alphonse Ethier, a new arrival on the Thanhouser staff of actors, is exceedingly clever and takes the part of the spy very well.

Many people are engaged in this stupendous production and the photography throughout the picture is excellent. The night pictures, which show "bombs bursting in the air," the soldiers attacking the fortress and finally their wild dash which results in the capture of the fortress, are especially worthy of mention.

This picture will undoubtedly prove itself a great drawing card, not only because of the splendid work done, but because of the fact that "war" is now the topic of the day.

In a certain continental village the wedding festival of Blanchette and Pietro is being celebrated.

Johannes returns from the camp of the enemy.

Johannes, a rejected suitor, vows vengeance for the slight he has suffered.

The happy marriage is blessed with years of contentment and two children are born into the family, and an ever-deepening love grows between the husband and wife. One day the little girl is seen playing in the road, when a great touring car sweeps around the curve. Her father reaches her just in time to snatch her from the monster's path, but he is knocked down and the machine passes over his foot, which leaves him a cripple for life.

About this time war is declared. Pietro is humiliated when Johannes calls on the family on his way to war and tells him that they do not want such men as he to enlist. He tries hard to get into the ranks, but on account of his lameness they will not take him in.

Some time later Johannes, who is at the head of a scouting party, is captured, and after being in prison for a time, finally consents to take the part of a spy and go to his own home town. Johannes arrives in the village and after telling the people of how he made his escape from four armed men and his wild dash for liberty, is lionized by them and then goes to the home of Pietro and Blanchette and tells them the same story.

The spy makes advances toward Blanchette, and although she repulses him, he continues to annoy her. One day he whips out his knife and severs his wrist in order to have Blanchette bandage it up, and as he knows she is alone in the house, thinks he can take advantage of her. Meanwhile, Johannes has sent word to the enemy that the village is defenseless, unless the peasants destroy the bridge over which they must cross to enter the village. He then goes to Pietro and tells him that the enemy are approaching and that there is but one way to save the town, and that is to blow up the bridge. He also tells Pietro where he has hidden some dynamite, and the patriot, feeling that in this way he can prove his love for his country, leaves to blow up the bridge.

Pietro is captured and the enemy are in the act of hanging him from the bridge, when he jumps into the water and escapes, and reaches his home just in time to find Johannes embracing his wife. He kills the spy and later, when the army drives out the enemy, Pietro is hailed as a brave patriot.

Essanay's "The Little Deceiver"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

"THE LITTLE DECEIVER," the three reel Essanay release of June 15, from the pen of H. S. Sheldon, is a study in character types, for both Bryant Washburn and Edna Mayo, who have the two leading roles, are so disguised that the fans will be puzzled for a long time as to their identity.

Mr. Washburn, in particular, so loses himself in the character he is playing that it is doubtful if one in a hundred will recognize him as old Henry Bisbee, uncle of Frances. Once in a while in a close-up scene Washburn forgets himself for a moment, and if you happen to be in the secret of who he really is, you might recognize him at that time, but aside from these momentary lapses he literally lives his role throughout the entire production. Miss Mayo readily adapts herself to the walk and mannerisms of a boy and with a hat on is most convincing.

As the story begins we learn that Frances Bisbee, left an orphan by the recent death of her mother, is to be sent to Henry Bisbee, her uncle, provided he will agree to care for her.

Henry, a crabbed old miser, is amazed when he is called upon to care for the child of his brother, but reluctantly sends a message that he will accept the trust if the child is a boy, though he refuses provided it is a girl.

Reading this message Frances determines to disguise herself as a boy and go to her uncle in the hope of in time winning him over so that she can remain, even though her real identity is disclosed.

When "Frank" arrives his uncle Henry gives him a rather chilly reception, particularly after he discovers that the boy is so polite and gentle mannered, that he regards him as a "sissy." Still later when the boy brings flowers, potted plants and novels into the house, Henry is all but determined to put the boy out, though Dick Truesdale, son of an intimate friend of Henry's, pleads for the lad and finally induces Henry to permit the boy to remain.

"Frank" arrives at his uncle's.

Dick, in order to make things easier for the boy, assures him that his uncle Henry is a good deal of a bluff and that at heart he is really growing fond of him. Dick startles Frank by telling him that in order to insure their becoming real pals, he is going to spend a week or two as his room-mate and endeavor to make him a bit more manly.

Horrified, Frances flees to the sitting room, curls up in a big arm chair and prepares to spend the night there.

Almost at that moment a window is opened by "Jerry the Rat," a sneak thief. Just as Jerry is in the act of opening the safe in which Henry has a small fortune concealed, Frances rises from her place of concealment in the big chair, secures "the rat's" revolver and covers the man with it.

As Jerry tries to dodge out of range of the pistol, Frances fires, wounding him in the arm, and when later, uncle, Dick and the butler arrive to capture the thieves, Frances faints away.

The excitement all over and Frances once more restored to consciousness, Henry tells the story of his past, explaining that both he and his brother had loved a girl, but that he had been fortunate enough to win her. Being called away to Europe on business, his brother had taken advantage of the situation to make the girl his wife and had spread such stories concerning his character that the girl had believed Henry a thorough cad.

As Henry finishes the story, Frances determines to reveal her real self and hastening to her room removes the boy's clothing she has been wearing and appears as the winsome girl she really is. Henry, amazed at the likeness of his former sweetheart, warmly receives the transformed "boy" and as the film ends is giving his consent to "the little deceiver" becoming the wife of his friend, Dick Truesdale.

American's "His Obligation"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THIS two-reel subject to be released June 14, and featuring Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood, who by their splendid work have won great favor with the motion picture fans, is a story in which there is a strong moral lesson, and the photography of the picture is excellent.

This story deals with the woes of an innocent little country girl who, through absolute ignorance of the ways of the world, allows herself to be made a plaything of by a rich male parasite. Miss Greenwood says of the play: "I name 'His Obligation' as a moral guidance, because of the power which lies in the story as the author wove it. It has a plot—a very common, everyday plot—and the lesson it teaches is strong.

The city chap at the country girl's home.

My advice to everyone is 'go see it,' then think it over."

Ralph Moore, a rich young society man, quarrels with his fiancee, Ailene De Lane, at a dance one evening and drowns his anger in drink. He then leaves the party and starts to walk home, when a friend of his hails him and asks him to ride out into the country with himself and a couple of young lady friends.

The party start out and get into the country, when the girl who is in the back seat with Moore becomes annoyed by his persistent advances toward her. She finally tells the man in the front seat to stop the car, and Moore is forced to get out, and he finds himself on a lonely country road. He is staggering down the road when a young boy runs up to him and tells him that an old deserted house not far down the road is haunted, as he has seen someone there.

Moore stumbles his way into the old shack, and there a voice asks him if he has a match, as she has used her last one. He is surprised, but finally gets down and lights the fire in the old grate for her.

The blaze flares up and Moore turns to look at the mysterious girl, and both are taken aback at seeing the other one. Moore recognizes a little country girl, whom he had met a year before and, after spending a few happy weeks together, had left her and returned to the city. A faint cry is heard and Mary, the outcast, lifts a tiny form from the floor and tells Moore that it is his child. She then tells him her story.

After patiently waiting for him to return and claim her as his bride, the girl, rather than reveal her secret and bear the humiliation, had left home. She then went to the city, where her child was born.

She tried to get another position, but owing to the fact that she had a child, could secure no place, and finally, in desperation, had wandered off into the country. She ends her story by telling Moore that the last place she had gone the man told her that no one wanted a girl with a child, and she guessed that no one wanted her. Moore balances Ailene De Lane, with all her wealth and love of society, and Mary with her beauty and goodness, in his mind and, realizing his obligation to the girl, tells her he wants her.

Selig's "The Sands of Time"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

COLIN CAMPBELL, author and director of the Selig three-reel release "Sands of Time," which will be first shown on Thursday, June 24, has chosen for the theme of his story the apparent neglect of a wife by her husband, a famous physician, and the woman's attempt to find happiness with another man, though she realizes when it is too late that the doctor loved her more than life itself.

Occasionally throughout the screen story an allegorical bit is introduced, when an hour glass is flashed on the screen showing the fleeting sands of time. The allegory is brought to a fitting close in the last ten feet of the picture when the last bit of sand drops from the upper half of the hour glass into the lower and is succeeded by a fluttering tallow dip, spluttering as the wick dies out. A hand appears and snuffs out the final spark.

Harry Lonsdale is cast as Doctor George MacGregor, who has achieved fame and fortune as a surgeon, and who finds it never too early or too late for him to go to the aid of the suffering, though often times in alleviating the pains of others he is compelled to cause pain to his wife by his apparent neglect. Mr. Lonsdale makes the most of every scene and yet his playing is always subdued and restrained. Martha Boucher, a new star in the Selig Company, plays Enid, the neglected wife, and is particularly good in the more emotional bits, while Wheeler Oakman, always a capable player, wins new laurels in the role of Doctor Gordon Blake, the "heavy" of the production.

Doctor MacGregor, well along the pathway of life, finds time to woo and win the beautiful Enid, though shortly after their marriage his profession requires all of his time, and as a result theatrical and dinner engagements are repeatedly interrupted when MacGregor is called to minister to the sick.

Doctor Blake, the handsome young assistant of MacGregor, who is exceedingly popular with the ladies, notices that Enid is suffering from the neglect of her husband and carefully cultivates in her mind the thought that her elderly husband is becoming indifferent to her. He finally convinces her that her husband could spare more time to her social comforts if he only wished to do so.

Doctor Blake continues his love-making to Enid and finally induces her to elope with him, leaving behind a note explaining to MacGregor the reason for her decision.

As time passes, Enid MacGregor applies for and secures a divorce and is overjoyed one day when she receives a certificate of legal separation which makes it possible for her to marry Doctor Blake. It is then she discovers to her horror that Blake is not willing to give her his name and acknowledge to the world that she is his wife.

Stunned by the awful discovery and finally realizing in full what she really is, she leaves Blake, to wander in the streets, for she cannot humble herself to again seek the support of Doctor MacGregor though she has learned ere this that MacGregor really loves her.

Thoroughly desperate over her unhappy state Enid leaps from a bridge into the river and is rescued by the police just as Doctor Blake is passing in his automobile with a lady friend. Blake is overcome as he gazes upon the lifeless form of the woman whom he had tempted to sin, and for the first time realizes the enormity of his own crime.

The Doctor meets his future wife.

A day or two later Doctor MacGregor stands in the dissecting room prepared to conduct a clinic before several hundred medical students. A body covered with a sheet is rolled into the pit by the attendants and Doctor MacGregor, with scalpel poised, removes the sheet from the face of the lifeless form and then stands spellbound with horror, for in the face of the beautiful woman lying before him he recognizes Enid, his wife.

With a despairing gesture he dismisses the students and attendants, and falls on his knees beside the lifeless form of the one he had loved so well.

YOU have seen the Stanley heirloom, the precious "diamond from the sky," in many odd and strange places. In chapter eight, or "A Mind in the Past," you are taken into a most peculiar and unthought of place, and there find the diamond which has proven so elusive.

The part of Marmaduke Smythe, the barrister from London, England, solicitor and agent of the estate of the Stanleys, who returns to America to notify Arthur Stanley that he is the Earl of Stanley, is taken by Orral Humphrey, and the part is played very well, and in his clumsy, serious way he adds touches of humor whenever he appears.

Despite the fact that your feelings toward Blair

Stanley are anything but congenial, you cannot help but admire him for his courage and nerve in securing the "diamond from the sky" for Vivian Marston, the woman he loves.

As the story unfolds itself we see Blair Stanley's mother return to the room where she had left Hagar and there, to her astonishment, she finds her son has escaped and Hagar disappeared. She starts to leave the room when a muffled moan is heard, and upon investigation she finds Hagar lying in the secret room. The blow Blair had given the gypsy woman has deprived her of all reason for the present. Hagar goes home, and there Esther is astonished at her actions. She calls continually for "her little baby" and stretches out her arms for a form which she imagines she can see.

Luke Lovell has told Quabba to leave Hagar's home, but he refuses to go and goes to the front door just as Marmaduke Smythe comes to inform Arthur Stanley of his being heir to the earldom. Smythe, upon being told Arthur has gone, goes to Mrs. Stanley and tells her that Blair is now next in line for the earldom. He then leaves for Richmond to seek Blair.

Blair again proposes to Vivian Marston.

Meantime, Blair Stanley has escaped to Richmond and there again proposes to Vivian Marston, who tells him that she will marry him on the condition that he get her the precious diamond, and, being very desirous of getting the jewel, she has gone to Bloom Brothers and they, in turn, call in Detective Blake to aid them in the search for the jewel.

Back in the country a tramp happens along and sees the little colored boy playing with "the diamond from the sky." He manages to get the jewel away from the boy and places it in his pocket and is seen disappearing in the distance.

One night a few days later, Vivian Marston, Mrs. Randolph, Blair and Detective Blake decide to take a trip through Chinatown. Upon their going into one of the chop suey houses, they notice that the proprietor is very much exicted and does not want them to go into a certain room. They push past him, however, and enter into the room, where sits a Chinese idol. There, to the amazement of all, they see "the diamond from the sky" glittering on the breast of the Chinese god.

The tramp had gone to the chop suey house, which has in connection with it a dope joint, and there, being under the influence of dope, had lost the jewel and the Chinamen had placed it upon their idol. After bargaining in vain for the gem, the party leave the restaurant. Once outside, Vivian Marston and Mrs. Randolph leave Blake, who goes to the office of Bloom Brothers to tell them of his discovery, and Blair, who climbs up the fire escape, breaks the glass and puts his hand through the broken window and takes from the neck of the idol "the diamond from the sky."

Just as his hand is disappearing, Blake, the Bloom brothers and Lung Hi, the proprietor, come into the room. With a howl of rage the Chinaman seizes a sword and makes a dash for the hand, but in doing so severs the head from the idol. Another slash and the altar lights are hurled to the floor, the silken curtains take fire and in a moment the place is a roaring blaze of fire.

"The Working of a Miracle"

AN ODD problem confronted the filming of "The Working of a Miracle," a three-reel Edison picture for release on June 18. The story has plenty of heart-interest and meets with no difficulty in absorbing one's attention; yet, it in itself cannot put over the climax. In most stories of this type after a group of situations is established, they automatically come to a climax and work themselves out to the conclusion. But in this drama the developments of the plot merely afford a frame-work for the acting which drives home the main point of the plot. Were this "punch," as it it generally termed, to fail in getting over, the key to the story would be lost.

To Edward Earle is intrusted this vital delineation, and his successful performance testifies to the study, earnestness, and personal magnetism which he puts into his work. Pictures are not often made or condemned in one scene, but this production hinges upon the outcome of the close-up in which Mr. Earle, as Ray Conover, a non-believer and paralytic, is seen straining against his affliction for freedom, securing it, finally, by a prayer, silent and but six words in length, but uttered from his heart.

Carlton King completely loses himself in his characterization of the sanctimonious Jason Kent, a religious fanatic whose hatred for Conover, aroused by the latter's aversion to attending church services, leads him to commit an assault on the young fellow which only purest fortune prevented from becoming a mur-Ray Conover's life at college and in the city has but one bad effect upon him—he does not believe in going to church. It seems that everyone in the village is immediately cognizant of this upon his return home. Jason Kent, religiously insane, strongly objects to the friendship which springs up between Mary Murdock, his ward, and young Conover, and goes so far as to openly threaten Ray for trying to lead Mary into sin. As his attentions to the girl are prompted by true love, Ray merely smiles at the old fanatic.

Kent, who, despite his age, desires to marry his ward, determines to compromise her so that she must accept him. He recovers the use of his legs, rushes down to the railroad track, and sweeps up Mary just in time to avoid the speeding train.

THINGS go from bad to worse with Alene, the heroine of the Lubin serial "The Road O' Strife" in the tenth episode of that story, which is entitled, "The Unsparing Sword."

Alene's trial for murder forms the theme of practically this entire episode of the serial, three-fourths of the reel being taken up with scenes in and about the court room, though a portion of the first part is devoted to the method taken by Robert Dane to raise money enough to employ a famous criminal lawyer to defend the girl.

is greeted with laughter by the officials of the company after his departure, for they realize that the chemical formula was worth much more than they had offered.

Dane and Daisy then engage a noted lawyer to defend Alene and the attorney visits her in her prison cell, but is far from satisfied with the story she is able to tell him, and which must form her only basis of defense.

The trial begins almost immediately and the state is able to forge a strong chain of circumstantial evidence around the cup from which Gilbert Jerome drank just before he died. The lawyer engaged by Dane to defend Alene stakes everything on the personal appeal which his client may make to the jury, and when she takes the witness stand to tell her own story, she can only mutter "Everything was just as has been said, but still I do not know what killed Gilbert Jerome." From the faces of the jurymen one realizes that her honest indifference to Gilbert's fate is regarded as a demonstration of utter callousness and her weary bewilderment is construed as the blase indifference of a hardened criminal.

Accordingly the jury is absent from the room but a short time, and returns to render a verdict of guilty.

Dazed and bewildered Alene rises at the command of the court officials to receive her sentence, though she drops back into her seat stunned and amazed when the judge sentences her to be hung by the neck until dead.

THE fifth chapter of "The Goddess" finds Celestia trapped in the slums of the city. Most of the action is light and amusing, but serious moments and appealing situations form an important, though small part of the episode. A touching scene is where Celestia, in answer to the question of "the woman" tells her that she has been sent from heaven to save fallen women. The firm gaze of this innocent young girl terrorizes the woman and awakens within her a desire to be free from the bitterness of her evil life.

Tommy Barclay's efforts to have Celestia stay at a New York hotel are unsuccessful. The girl is perfectly willing to live there, but the hotel authorities are not willing to have her. Tommy tells her that they will not let a real angel in a New York hotel.

While Tommy is arguing with the clerk, Celestia goes out and enters a taxicab. A policeman orders the driver to move on, because of the crowd which collects about the cab, attracted by Celestia in her flowing gown. After going a short distance the driver stops the cab and demands his fare. A woman of the streets, seeing this, pays the driver and takes Celestia home with her. The bewildered girl is filled with gratitude and does not suspect this woman who has offered her a home. The next day Celestia overhears the woman offer her for sale to a white slaver. Struck by the girl's innocence and beauty, the woman gives her the money she had received for the girl and allows her to escape.

Tommy tells Stilleter that he has lost Celestia and the professor has detectives search for the goddess. Tommy locates the taxi driver and learns from him the location of the house to which Celestia was taken. Sweetzer, the man who tried to buy Celestia, orders his lieutenant, Freddy, "the ferret," to find her. The closing scene shows Celestia doing missionary work in the east side district.

Mackenzie Big Game Films

The Masai meet the first white woman they have ever seen.

The newspapers throughout the country have carried enough articles about the jungle invasions and daring hunting trips of Lady Mackenzie to make her reputation as the only woman big game hunter to have defied the dangers of Africa with its wild natives, animals, and diseases, familiar to everyone. These pictures, which are being released under the direction of Philip Mindel, were taken under the personal direction of Lady Mackenzie on her several trips into the wilds of Africa.

They are admirably reproduced, both as to the quality of the photography itself and the scope of the action taken in by it, and combine the thrills of the hunt, beauty of the scenery and edification of the life and habits of the natives and beasts with the comforts of the theater in forming an entertainment hitherto unequaled by pictures of this class.

The most spectacular thing in the film comes in its second part. It is a little drama in itself. A lion, located by the boys, of whom Lady Mackenzie's party included some two hundred or more, is driven out into the open by their shouts. Undecided for a moment as to whether to turn again to the shelter of the thick underbrush or charge the huntress and one of her guides who stand but fifty yards away, it determines upon the latter course. Covering the ground with big, ungainly bounds, it heads straight for them. Lady Mackenzie and Postma, the white hunter, spring aside, and the lion passes between them, to be brought down a minute later by a bullet from the woman's gun, which, it is unnecessary to say, she is an adept at handling.

In another part of the film an infuriated rhinoceros begins a charge similar to this, but Postma discourages him en route with a bullet, and Lady Mackenzie finishes him as he tries to make his getaway. Among the varieties of game seen in the pictures are elephant, lion, rhinoceros, zebra, giraffe, hyaena, baboon, wild boars, antelope, oryx and numerous species of wild fowl. Safari at play and on the trail, native dances, scenes of camp life, Thompson's Falls, and wonderfully distinct views of the waterholes with their cosmopolitan collection of four-footed visitors are other features of the pictures. At the close of the exhibition Lady Mackenzie was literally showered with flowers by her friends and the admirers of her intrepidity.

Universal's "The Black Box"

"A BOLT FROM THE BLUE," fourteenth installment of the Universal serial which is now drawing to a close, brings one nearer to the solving of the mystery which surrounds Craig and Professor Ashleigh.

A novel way of causing the mind of a person to be transferred back into the past is introduced in this episode by Quest, who has an electrical device rigged up in his study. A switchboard is placed in the wall and Craig is seated before a mirror. A metal band is placed around his head and Quest holds a long bar to the band, which is attached to the electrical switchboard.

Although you do not see anything but the arm and hands fixing the apparatus which comes near killing the detective and his party during an electrical storm, you feel sure that the professor is guilty.

Quest saves Lenora from death in the fiery furnace of the burning bridge and carries her back to the camp. He there receives word from New York that Craig and his niece have given the detectives the slip.

In New York Craig comes into the rooms occupied by himself and Mary, his niece, and tells her to prepare to leave at once, as he is being shadowed. They climb down the fire escape and find a hiding place in another small boarding house. Here Craig looks out of the window and finds that he has been followed. He gives his niece a paper, telling her that she will be taken care of, and then goes to keep his appointment at Professor Ashleigh's. The policeman who has followed Craig comes up to the room just after he has left and takes Mary to the police station, and here they find that the paper which Mary has been given by Craig is his will, in which he leaves her all his money and property on one condition—that being that she never speak or associate with anyone of the name of Ashleigh.

Quest arrives in New York and has his device for mind transferrence installed in his study. He receives word from Craig that the man will be at Professor Ashleigh's home that night. At the appointed time Craig goes to the professor's house and is in hiding. A fierce electrical storm comes up and a hand and arm are seen to place a large metal plate just outside the open window. A wire is run from the plate underneath the carpet to the top of a table in the professor's library, and then the arm disappears.

Quest explains the workings of the mind transferer.

Mary, meantime, knowing that her uncle has gone to Ashleigh's, manages to escape from the room in which she was seated and goes to the Ashleigh home. Here she is taken into the room by a plain-clothes man, and Quest, Lenora, Laura, Professor Ashleigh and Craig jump up from their seats around the table and rush out into the hall to see her. Just then a terrific stroke of lightining strikes the metal plate and the whole top of the table bursts into flames. Quest discovers the cause of the conflagration and tells Craig that he is the cause of this and tried to have them all electrocuted.

Craig refuses to tell his story as he had promised, because he says that he had told them he would keep his appointment with them, they had not believed in him, and that he had been shadowed ever since his arrival in New York. Quest then takes him to his home, seats him in a chair, places the metal band around his head and starts his experiment with the metal transferrer. Craig's mind goes back into the past and he tells Quest of how Professor Ashleigh had given him a little black box. Quest asks him what he did with it, but before he replies, the man falls forward in his chair and is pronounced dead.

The professor, at the beginning of Craig's story, had left the room, but we see him standing in the doorway looking into Quest's library with a quiet smile on his face.

SURPRISES galore greet one in the last of the new "Exploits of Elaine" which is entitled "Shadows of War," for ere the picture ends Craig Kennedy, the hero of both "The Exploits" and the "New Exploits of Elaine" apparently goes to his death in the waters of New York harbor, and as the chapter ends a new personage is introduced, when Lionel Barrymore makes his bow on the screen, followed by the announcement that he will play an important part in "The Romance of Elaine" which will continue the story still farther.

Wu Fang, the Chinese criminal is approached by secret agents of another government, who commission him to secure at any price the model torpedo invented by Craig Kennedy, which the detective can control by means of wireless apparatus.

Wu Fang learns that Kennedy is already completing negotiations with the American government for the sale of his torpedo to it and immediately sets several of his confederates to work to secure the model apparatus.

Kennedy having learned of Wu Fang's hiding place visits the apartments occupied by the Chinaman, in the latter's absence, and after overpowering the celestial found in care of the apartment, Kennedy and Jameson, his assistant, lie in wait for the coming of Wu Fang.

The latter, though slightly suspicious that something is wrong, enters the apartment, discovers Jameson and is about to stab him when Kennedy suddenly appears and effects the Chinaman's capture.

Wu Fang, badly wounded, is taken to a hospital, but there manages to escape by a clever ruse and leaves another Chinaman in his place.

Kennedy at Elaine's home is demonstrating the only other model of his torpedo in existence when government officials arrive from Washington to disclose to him the strange disappearance of the model submitted to the war department. While Kennedy is talking with these men another assistant of the Chinaman's secures the torpedo being demonstrated in the house, and fearing lest he may be captured with it in his possession, he conceals it in a huge flower pot and flees as the butler surprises him.

The chase of this man leads over hills and dales and finally ends on a long wharf where he meets Wu Fang, who has just escaped from the hospital. Kennedy is hot on his trail and comes to death grips with the clever Chinaman, the two plunging off the wharf into the waters of the harbor.

When Jameson arrives, accompanied by the police, the dead body of Wu Fang, the Chinaman, is floating in the harbor, a stiletto protruding from his breast, while Kennedy has apparently disappeared forever.

Returning to Elaine, Jameson breaks the sad news of Kennedy's death and gives Elaine a note written but a short while previously by Kennedy in which the girl is told that no matter what happens she must trust in Craig, her lover, for that all will yet be well.

As the story thus ends, a sub-title on the screen reads "Is Kennedy dead?" and a diver equipped to go below the waves is shown, which fades into the features of Lionel Barrymore, who is to play a prominent part in the continuation of the Elaine story, the new series to be known as "The Romance of Elaine."

Getting and Holding the Crowds

By H. F. Thomas.

What are you doing to win and hold the people who drop into your theater to see a show? Are you letting them alone to come and go as they please or are you doing something to make them come back again?

You know the average picturegoers like to have some attention shown them. They like to go to the theaters where the ushers are courteous and take particular pains to see that they receive seats somewhere near the part of the house in which they desire to be seated. Some people will not sit down in front and others cannot see if they are too far back. The greatest thing needed at the present time is education among the ushers in the majority of Chicago theaters. They are far too indifferent and the managers do not seem to understand that pleasing the patrons is the first essential in operating a play house.

The other evening the writer visited a theater on the north side. The usher, who happened to be the owner, did not rush one down in front, trying to fill up that part of the house, as so many do. Instead he asked us where we could see best, and when seats halfway back were requested, explained there were none, but if we would take front seats he would let us know as soon as any seats were vacant. And he kept his promise.

His method of persuading one to take front seats was such that none could take offense. He showed plainly that he was doing his best to see that his patrons were comfortable and pleased. Then during intermission, he stepped in front of the screen, and asked those who had no-admission-charged-children occupying seats, to kindly take them on their laps, as there was a crowd waiting out in front. He said, "Possibly you will be waiting out there some night and you will then appreciate what I am trying to do to make everybody comfortable." Immediately those with small children made room for about forty more people.

In another theater nearby a crowd waited out in front while there were single seats scattered all over the house. Instead of the owner urging people to take the single seats and get seats together in a few minutes, he let them stand and wait, becoming more impatient every minute.

Film fans demand comfort first of all; unless they are comfortable they do not enjoy the pictures. While it is true that at times the crowds are not courteous and annoy each other by pushing and shoving, yet that is no excuse for the theater owner not trying to remedy these conditions.

He should train his ushers and attendants to be courteous and attentive, to keep their eyes open for single seats and for those who occupy the same seat for hours.

Another good idea is to advertise the hours at which a new show starts. Some theaters are now advertising that their first show is at 6 o'clock, and urge their patrons to come early, while the seats are plentiful. They also advertise the last show as 10 o'clock, which relieves the crowded conditions between 7:30 and 9 o'clock.

The only way to cash in on the one-time patron is to place an attractive program in his or her hand to take home or advertise the program in the daily newspaper. You cannot expect people to come to your theater night after night unless you keep after them and urge them with announcements of the excellent pictures you are to show.

The theater that advertises "Safety First," should also start or give publicity to the "Courtesy Second" movement. Of course, the laws require that the safety of the audience be provided for, but only the theater manager himself can regulate the deportment of his employes. When theater patrons receive the valuable service of courtesy they are more appreciative than they are of safety or any sort of protection. Courtesy is something that adds enjoyment to their visit to the theater and it is something they do not forget easily.

Coming Lasky Features

The Lasky Feature Play Company announces that instead of diminishing the number of its releases through the warm months of the summer, even more and even better productions will be released through the Paramount program. On June 14, Edgar Selwyn's spectacular picturization of his own play, "The Arab," will be offered, to be followed on June 28 by "Chimmie Fadden" in which Victor Moore is starred, and this in turn will be succeeded on July 8 by the Blanche Sweet film, "The Clue," from the pen of Margaret Turnbull.

Charlotte Walker on July 15 will make her debut on the screen in "Kindling" through an arrangement with E. J. Bowes. On July 19 Laura Hope Crews will be seen in Belasco's famous production "The Fighting Hope." On July 29, Harold McGrath's "The Puppet Crown" will be the offering with Ina Claire, supported by Carlyle Blackwell, in the leading roles. On August 9 Blanche Sweet will appear in "The Secret Orchard" and on August 16 Fanny Ward in "The Marriage of Kitty."

New Stars for MinA

Four important additions to the West Coast producing force of MinA films were made last week by the engagement of Miss Goldie Colwell, Louis Fitzroy, George Ovey and Jefferson Osbourne to appear in forthcoming MinA releases.

"Clarence" a Notable

Roy L. McCardell has written in Quabba, the Italian hunchback in "The Diamond from the Sky," one of the most unique characters ever shown upon the screen.

The accompanying picture shows Mr. McCardell and W. J. Tedmarsh, the famous character actor who essays the role in the North American's $20,000 prize photoplay. Also, it shows "Clarence," the monk, the gently human antics of which have already touched the hearts of both youngsters and adults in the motion picture theaters throughout the country.

"Clarence" is a widely traveled simian, motion pictures being far from the apex of his career, for once he proudly trod the quarter deck of the Japanese battleship Asama, which went ashore on the coast of Lower California recently.

When the battleship touched an American port on its way southward, "Clarence," taken ashore, was lost, and fell into evil ways. Subsequently an Italian organ grinder picked him up in Pasadena, where the little mischief maker was sold to the daughter of a prominent Eastern railroad magnate, who, journeying to Santa Barbara in his private car, decided "Clarence" was not the right kind of a pet for a little girl. Then it was that S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, discovered his prospective simian star.

Violet Scores Again

Miss Violet MacMillan, star of the Oz fairy tales and later leading lady of the New York Motion Picture Corporation at Inceville, has joined the ranks of the Universal stars, and from now on will be seen in leading roles under the direction of William C. Dowlan, who will also play her leads. Miss MacMillan's rise in the film world has been exceptionally rapid, as she has been appearing on the screen less than ten months and already she has attained a place amongst the "famous forty" of the motion picture world. Owing to her petite blonde beauty, Universalites have given her the title of the "Universal Lady Dainty." Miss MacMillan has already finished two pictures—"Out of the Dark" and "Our Baby"—and is now working on a picture called "Dear Little Old Time Girl."

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brevities of the Business

Miriam Nesbitt, Edison leading woman, was the featured speaker recently at a meeting of the New York Pen and Brush Club, who asked her to address the members, many of whom are prominent writers and photoplaywrights, on what were the technical and artistic requirements of the photoplay.

Flavia Arcaro, well known in opera circles and with many stellar triumphs to her credit, has been appearing in some of the recent Edison films.

Margaret Loveridge has been engaged as a permanent member of the Mutual stock company. Miss Loveridge has been playing in pictures for a lengthy period. She is the sister of Mae Marsh, the Griffith player, and for her initial appearance is playing an important part in the three-reel adaptation of Ouida's "Tricotrin."

George Beranger, who has been with D. W. Griffith as actor and producer for a number of years, has one of the principal roles in the forthcoming Mutual Master-Picture adapted from Ibsen's "Pillars of Society." Beranger is from Australia and a skillful actor.

The old partnership which has existed for so long between J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes has been broken at last, for while it is understood that the daring lady who has made such a success as Helen in "The Hazards of Helen" will remain with the Kalem Company, her director, McGowan, is going over to the Lasky Studios where it is thought he will direct Fanny Ward in her first picture "Blackbirds." McGowan has been producing for the Kalem Company for years now and is one of the best known men in the profession.

Director John Harvey in his war camp at Glen Island, producing "The Patriot and the Spy," Thanhouser Mutual Master Picture.

"Bill" Clifford, who has been one of the chief players at the Universal studios for the last three or four years, has just signed with the new Quality, Francis Bushman company working, now, in the old Universal studios at Hollywood.

The second six-reel series of the Dorsey expedition pictures began their engagement at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, June 5. After Japan, China was the next stop of Dr. Dorsey and his party, and it is the pictures taken in this country which make up this second set.

Marshall Neilan who recently joined the Selig Company as a director, was made happy this week by a wire from New York City informing him of the arrival of a wonderful ten-pound boy at the Neilan home. Mrs. Neilan was formerly Miss Bambrick, a Biograph star.

"The Blindness of Virtue," by Cosmo Hamilton, is one of the strongest problem photoplays to be produced by Essanay. This will be one of the five-act features to be released through the V. L. S. E.

Lillian Drew, clever character actress with Essanay, has left for Chattanooga to join the company playing there.

Henry Otto, the American director, is back from his two-weeks' jaunt to St. Louis and Chicago and had a splendid time of it. He came back ready for another siege of work, and received a warm welcome from Santa Barbara folks.

Bess Meredyth, who scenarioized Louis Joseph Vance's stories for the "Trey O' Hearts" serial, and who has appeared in a number of Joker and Nestor comedies for the Universal in the past, has entirely recovered from the two major operations which confined her to a Los Angeles hospital for three months.

The Los Angeles Photoplay colony is mighty sorry to see Henry Walthall go, and it is not only because he is such a splendid actor, but also because he is such a genuinely loveable fellow.

Pauline Bush will remain with the Universal despite the rumors to the contrary. She has returned and is appearing in "Betty's Bondage," where a girl leaves the bondage of poverty to find worse bondage in higher life.

Charles Gorman is playing prominent roles in the Mutual's juvenile productions, in which six-year-old Violet Radcliff is being starred.

Frank Beal, another veteran of motion picture production, has joined the Selig forces on the coast. Mr. Beal became well known to patrons of the screen in the early days of the picture-story and at that time was a Selig director. This is the third time he has returned to the fold.

Hobart Henley, who recently left the Imp Eastern studios of the Universal to take the place of Joseph King as leading man to Cleo Madison under Charles Giblyn's direction, is making a name for himself on the coast and in addition is very popular around the studios.

Charles West, a Biograph leading man for six years, has rejoined D. W. Griffith at the Hollywood studios and will be featured in one and two reel Mutual releases.

Reliance Motion Picture Corporation has been weak; on small offerings of 10, 15 and 20 shares it has been difficult to get bids as there is little or no activity in the stock.

North American Film Corporation achieved a new high record in its bookings last week. The steady advance in contracts in force with no reaction would indicate there is now no uncertainty in the minds of exhibitors as to the success of "The Diamond from the Sky."

Mutual Film Corporation—Sales took place of the common at 70 and the volume of offerings has been considerable. The expected changes as now indicated are of a more vital nature than were surmised a week or so ago. It is now known that the innovation of producing "Mutual Masterpieces" has not been satisfactory—that is,—to all of the companies constituting the Mutual organization. That two of the companies—in both of which one of the chief executives of the Mutual company is personally interested—have had more than their share of the plums, no one will question—all of which indicates "There is a fly in the amber."

New York Motion Picture Corporation—Bidding was scarce and stock, while weak, did not yield in the same way as Mutual common. What the destiny of this corporation may be after this month, naturally hinges on the decision both on the part of the Mutual and the New York Motion as to the continuance of their contract.

Thanhouser Film Corporation—Trading in this stock has been sluggish for the past two or three weeks. That the asked price is higher than the earning power of the company would warrant seems to be the opinion of most of the stockholders.

Tom Mix, the iron man of pictures, emerged from the hospital within three days after a rodeo audience has declared him a dead man during a chuckwagon mixup.

James Arbuckle, who played the innkeeper in the Mutual Masterpiece, "Old Heidelberg," is a brother of Macklyn Arbuckle, and has the famous stage star's gift of humor.

Mlle. Pavlowa, the famous Russian dancer, accompanied by Manager Max Hirsch and other members of the company, were guests of William N. Selig during their stay in Los Angeles. Mlle. Pavlowa witnessed pictures filmed for the first time and expressed constant delight with the proceedings.

Montpelier may have a board of motion picture censors. There is nothing definite about selecting such a board, but the Board of Trade has the matter under consideration because of objection recently to a film, "The Lure," which was to have been shown in the Old Comique theater.

"His College Wife" is the third Beauty picture completed by Archer MacMackin. The story was written by Mr. MacMackin, in collaberation with Wallace MacDonald, who is now assistant director of this company.

One of the biggest log drives ever made in a Pennsylvania lumber camp has been photographed as a scene in "Sunday," which is being staged by George W. Lederer and will be released through the World Film Corporation.

Charles Marriott of the Morosco-Bosworth, who played for many seasons under Charles Frohman, was prominent in the Gamut Club's memorial service to the late manager who perished in the Lusitania horror.

William Desmond, now playing leads with the Morosco-Bosworth in the new picture, "Kilmeny," was the leading man Oliver Morosco chose for his first production in New York, "Judge and Jury."

Kathryn Adams, the young St. Louis girl who has been working toward the front in pictures for a year or more in New York, has been engaged by Marshall Farnum to appear in a new Fox Film Corporation production.

Edw. "Komic" Dillon is always having trouble of some sort. He came home late the other night to discover his home on fire.

Charles West makes his initial appearance with the Griffith forces in a two-reel Majestic melodrama, "The Woman From Warren." Mr. West, who has played more villains on the screen than any actor on the legitimate stage, was associated with Mr. Griffith in the days when both were making a start in the film world.

Mrs. Louis James, the actress, and Mizzi Hajos, playing a leading part in "Sari," were guests of Colonel William N. Selig at the Selig Jungle-Zoo, Los Angeles, this week. They were fortunate in being present when wild animals were performing in motion pictures.

Pliny W. Horn is now a field representative of the Mutual Weekly being made by the Gaumont Company, and has already secured several scoops for the animated news journal he represents.

Marguerite Loveridge makes her debut with the Griffith coast organization at the Reliance-Majestic studios in "The Housemaid." She is supported by Frank Bennett, Wilbur Higby and Mae Gaston.

Edward M. Roskam announces that he is now general manager of the Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc., of Lafayette avenue, Grantwood, N. J., whose New York office is located at 220 West Forty-second street. The laboratories do developing, printing and title printing, make industrial films and animated titles.

George J. Schaefer, the big, sprawling, but perfectly good-hearted blonde sales director of the World Film Corporation, has been given a step up by Mr. Selznick. He has been made eastern division manager of the World Film Corporation—a big job on a big piece of territory.

John Sheenan, the clever little Irish character actor, who made such a pronounced hit in the photoplays produced by "The Favorite Players," has accepted an engagement with the American company at Santa Barbara, and will fill the post of principal comedian.

W. R. Scates, central division manager of the World Film Corporation, is in New York, from Chicago, where he makes his headquarters.

Harry Spingler, who received such glowing praise from the reviewers for his treatment of the role of Dick Townsend in "The Plunderer," has been selected by the Fox Film Corporation to portray the magnificent role of Michael Sunlocks in "The Bondman," picturized from Hall Caine's widely read novel of the same name.

Myrtle Stedman will be seen opposite Cyril Maude when that famous English actor appears on the screen, and he will be in Los Angeles soon and be located at the comfortable Bosworth-Morosco studios.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Wedding bells are reported soon to ring for two of the American favorites. No secrets have been given out as yet.

Charles Clary has recovered from his recent illness and is once more rehearsing at the Mutual's Hollywood studios. Mr. Clary is the type that refuses to be ill even though he should be.

A fortunate group of American actors and actresses attended a trout supper at Eugenie Forde's bungalow. Miss Forde, famous for her playing of Hagar, the gypsy mother, in "The Diamond From the Sky," caught the speckled beauties herself in a clear, cold mountain stream scarcely a stone's throw from the "Flying A" studios.

Lee Moran is just recovering from a bad attack of the croup.

Ed Coxen, who plays the lead in "His Obligation," is organizing a mountain camping party among fellow American players.

At the big Trinity Auditorium in Los Angeles, last Sunday evening, a fair haired, beautiful woman held a huge congregation while she sang Gounod's "Divine Redeemer." The lady was Miss Myrtle Stedman of the Bosworth Inc.

Edgar Lewis, before beginning on the production of "The Bondman," took a few days off and visited William Farnum at the latter's country place on Long Island.

A Romance of Old California—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 14.—Mary Malatesta and Victor Rottman featured. The blind son of the wealthy don loves Chiquita, the peon's stepdaughter. The don's brother, a physician, says he can cure the blind boy of his affliction, and Chiquita, fearing that her lover will not deem her pretty enough when he can see, buys a string of beads to enhance her beauty. His sight restored, the boy goes to Chiquita, but she has become delirious and wandered away. The doctor finds her and carries her back home. When she opens her eyes she finds her dream has come true and her father consents to their marriage.

Whose Was the Shame—ESSANAY—JUNE 14.—Beverly Bayne featured. Camilla Lohem's picture is painted by Reuben Hewitt, who falls in love with the girl. Hewitt's father has slaved for him on the farm for years and Reuben is a bit ashamed of the old man. Luke Pelham, his friend, suggests that Camilla be invited to the farm, where she may see the old man and decide for herself. He does so, and the girl becomes a great friend of the old man. Reuben confesses his momentary feeling toward his father and she tells him her father sold her to a man who was not fitted to meet a woman. She tells him that she is not only glad to have his love, but also the love of a real father.

When the Mind Sleeps—(THREE REELS)—KALEM—JUNE 14.—Myrtle Tannehill and Henry Hallem featured. Roberts inherits an estate on condition that he care for Bess, who, although eighteen, possesses the mind of a child. After often attempting to make love to Bess, Roberts plans to get rid of her. Tom, who ekes out a living by playing his violin on the street, is attracted to Bess, and Roberts tells him he can have her. Hall, one of Roberts' friends, is attracted by the girl's beauty and tells Tom that he must not marry her, as she is not in full possession of her mind. A Dr. Carlson, who is head of an institution, sees Bess and believes he can restore her to her normal mind. The operation is performed and Dr. Burke, his assistant, falls in love with Bess. Carlson falls madly in love with Bess, and this pleases Laura, who is in love with Burke. It is found that the girl cannot keep her normal mind unless she is given a liquid. Burke dies and the formula for the liquid is lost. The girl decides to go back to the cabin in the forest and Tom.

Letters Entangled—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—JUNE 14.—John Wilson and Grace Livingston are sweethearts. John leaves for the city and there writes to the girl and tells her to keep their secret and that he will return and marry her soon. Grace goes to the city and her aunt returns John's letter to him. A little daughter is born to Grace. Sixteen years pass; John is a successful lawyer and engaged to a wealthy society girl, while Grace is a fashionable modiste. One day she delivers a dress to the home of John's fiancee and there meets John. He clasps her in his arms and then the other woman comes in. John follows Grace home and she points out his daughter to him, but tells him that she cannot marry him, as she had told the girl that he was dead. J. C. G.

Mr. Jarr and the Ladies' Cup—VITAGRAPH—JUNE 14.—The Dill Pickle Bowling Club notifies its members that they are to bowl at the Cheese Hill Inn. The same night the inn holds a dancing contest, offering a cup to the best lady dancer. Mr. Jarr is dragged to the contest by his wife and her friends, and he has his troubles in dancing and bowling. At the same time, Gertrude, the Jarrs' maid, entertains her fireman friend. Jarr invites the whole crowd to his place to wind up the evening, and Gertrude and her fireman beau beat it out the back door to the dance hall. As there is nothing in the house to eat, the guests stay but a little while and then leave. The next morning Gertrude turns up with the ladies' cup, and Mrs. Jarr's wrath subsides and Gertrude is forgiven.

Mrs. Van Alden's Jewels—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 15.—Marian Ross is the social secretary of John Van Alden and his wife, a wealthy couple, who have advertised for a valet and choose one named Davidson from among the applicants. Marian recognizes the man and at her earliest opportunity tells him she thought him dead. Mrs. Van Alden sends the girl to the safe deposit company to get her jewels. Davidson leaves a note under her door demanding that she get Mrs. Van Alden's jewels for him. She refuses and goes to a pawn shop to get a revolver in order to protect herself. As she is putting the jewels away, Davidson enters the room and wrests from her the card bearing the combination of the safe. Mrs. Van Alden, hearing the struggle goes into the library and just as she enters, a bullet passes through her heart. Davidson escapes and Marian is held for trial. She tells the story of how she had married Davidson and then found out his true character. Her testimony is dramatically confirmed by a newsboy who, selling a paper to Davidson in a saloon, finds his wallet containing Mrs. Van Alden's card with the combination written on it and a note making an appointment at a pawnshop to dispose of the jewels. Davidson is arrested, and before dying, substantiates Marian's story.

The Little Deceiver—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—JUNE 15.—Edna Mayo, Richard Travers and Bryant Washburn are featured in this splendid drama, Mr. Washburn and Miss Mayo being particularly clever in their character work. Frances Bisbee, an orphan, has to disguise herself as a boy in order to be taken into the home of her uncle, Henry Bisbee, upon her mother's death. Ultimately she proves to be a real hero by apprehending a burglar, and then after learning the sad story of her uncle's love affair she reveals herself as the daughter of the girl he had loved and lost. See review on page 1011, this issue. N. G. C.

Capturing Bad Bill—Lubin—June 15. —Peter Pepper, who owns a restaurant, takes the job of sheriff in response to the mayor's advertisement. Bill defies the new sheriff and sends an undertaker to measure Pete for a coffin. Pete's wife is so pleased by this that she buys a widow's cap and weeds. On the outlaw's next visit to the restaurant, Pete manages to quietly drug his coffee. Picture Pete's triumph when he delivers Bill, unconscious and neatly bound in clothesline, to the disgruntled townsmen. Pete then goes home and kicks Mary's mourning out of the window. On the same reel:

Caught with the Goods—Lubin—June 15.—Jim Moore has little peace in his home, as Samanthy, his wife, does not like his conduct and she objects to his one pleasure, a quiet game of poker. She discovers a game is on in a vacant building and sojourns next door to witness the raid. The boys escape by jumping into the very room where Samanthy is watching. They are captured, including Samanthy, but Jim escapes and goes to his office, where he is justice of the peace. The boys are found not guilty, but Samanthy is found carrying money and chips in her pocket and is given thirty days by her husband.

The Heart of the Sheriff—Selig—June 15.—Grace Martin, the adopted daughter of Sheriff Martin, is in love with Buck Gibson, to whom the sheriff gives his consent to the girl's marrying. That night Buck and some other fellows rob the bank. Sheriff Martin is notified and organizing a posse gives chase to the robbers and finally overtakes them. Buck Gibson is killed by the sheriff and he has to tell the girl of Buck's death.

The Little Doll's Dressmaker—(Two Reels) — Vitagraph — June 15.— Lillian Walker and Evart Overton featured. June, a sixteen-year-old girl, who is lame, spends most of her time sewing for her sister, Nance, a chorus girl. John Lincoln, a young writer, lodges with them and gradually a tender love develops between John and his little lame friend. Nance steals from an elderly lodger and accuses June of stealing the money and she is sent to a reform school. She comes under the notice of the directors and the old surgeon and he pronounces her lameness to be curable. Nance is taken sick and confesses on her deathbed the theft for which June is paying the penalty. At the old surgeon's sanitarium June grows strong and beautiful. The sanitarium gives a fair in which dolls made by the inmates are put up for sale. June, dressed as a doll, poses on a pedestal with the sign "Not for sale," but John Lincoln, now a successful author, sees her and offers her a loving heart as the purchase price, which she accepts.

Cartoons in the Parlor—Edison—June 16.—Mrs. Waite chaperones her daughter and her sweetheart. Finally cartoons are shown in the parlor and the chaperone for a time forgets her daughter. The first cartoon deals with the nightmare of one Hicks and his wife. The second cartoon shows a chaperone seated between two lovers, who finally turns into a fierce dragon, which sits and glares at the couple. The real chaperone sees the picture and takes the hint.

The Corporal's Daughter—Edison—June 16.—Kate, the corporal's daughter, has a disagreement with Lieut. Garrison, and returns to him the engagement ring. Some time later she and her father go to a new location and here Kate is attacked by the Indians and rescued by Tom, a government scout. The meeting results in the couple's marriage. A new consignment of troops arrives at the fort with Garrison in command. The troops are sent out to quiet the Indians, who have just been massacring, and the men are trapped. Tom and the men draw cards to see which one should escape first, and Tom, thinking that his wife still loves Garrison, draws two cards. Kate remains with him, though, and word is brought to them that Garrison is dead.

Dreamy Dud in the Swim—Essanay—June 16.—Dud and Wag, his dog, eat a lot of jam and swell up to an enormous size. They shrink just as quickly and become so small that Dud just can look over the top of a tea cup filled with milk. He balances on the top of the cup and takes a high dive. Just then Mr. Cat comes along and Dud climbs to the floor and the cat plays with him as it would with a ball of yarn. Mr. Cat goes back to the cup and drinks the milk, leaving Dud high and dry in the bottom of the cup. Mr. Cat is about to swallow Dud when he wakes up to hear his mother scolding him for eating the jam.

The Vanishing Vases—(Two Reels)—Kalem—June 16—Marin Sais and Arthur Shirley featured. Marie and Mears receive word that two priceless porcelain vases have been stolen from the museum. An hour later Weston, a crook, is arrested as the result of a saloon brawl, and a card bearing Harding's address is found in the crook's pocket. At Marie's suggestion, he is released and he is followed to Harding's home by the girl and Mears, where they find Harding bound and gagged. The sleuths find the collector in the act of begging Mickey Weston to keep silent. Rendered desperate at the thought of what awaits him, Harding attacks Mears before Marie can interfere. Mickey, however, leaps upon the unscrupulous millionaire, although he realizes he faces a long term, and he is delighted when Harding's wrist is shackled to his own.

The Insurrection—(Three Reels)—Lubin—June 16.—Ormi Hawley and Earle Metcalf featured. Lolita, a South American, is in love with Lieutenant Charles Hubbard, and her father, professedly a doctor, is really an active head of the revolution and sees a way to embroil the United States in his quarrel. Lieutenant Hubbard is captured and Lolita pleads for her sweetheart's life, but thinking there is no hope, resolves to die with him. She steals some poison pellets from her father's office and secretly visits her lover in prison. Learning a massacre of foreigners is planned for the night, Hubbard tells the girl how to signal the fleet. She is captured and confined to her room, but as a beam of light strikes full upon her face she frantically signals. The message is brought to the admiral and the town is shelled. Hubbard's prison shack is struck by a shell and he staggers out. He goes to Lolita's home and arrives just in time to prevent her from taking the poison tablets.

A Tragedy In Panama—Selig—June 16.—Joe Green is stricken with fever and is being nursed by Grace McGuire, whose mind is reverting back to the past, she and her husband living happily together, when Joe Green came to visit them and how she had succumbed to temptation and left her home to come into the jungle with Green. McGuire has never forgotten the despoiler of his home and after a long search comes upon them, as Grace is nursing the man. He appears upon the scene and siezes his wife, but Green rises and fires at McGuire, but the shot pierces the heart of Grace.

Philanthropic Tommy — Vitagraph — June 16.—Naomi Childers, Charles Eldridge and Lucille Hammill featured. The joy of Tommy's birthday is taken out when she finds that she will have to eat alone. Her sister, Edith, is planning to elope with Walter Pierrepont, a society profligate. Tommy is just about to sit down and eat when a messenger boy arrives with a note for Edith. It is a note from the man with whom she is to elope, postponing the hour of the rendezvous. Tommy invites the little boy to her party. During this time Edith, tired of waiting for Pierrepont, returns home. Mr. Moreland telephones his wife to meet him at the house at once, and their arrival breaks up Tommy's party. Pierrepont arrives and Tommy exposes the rascal's villainy. He leaves the house forever and the Moreland family is happily reunited.

His Ward's Scheme—Biograph—June 17.—Mr. Wise places his young ward in a select finishing school. He imagines himself in love with the girl, and on her return from school announces he has invited many of the girls to come to the house, and also some young men. Mr. Wise proposes to his ward and the girl tells him he could not satisfy her happiness. One of the young men hangs around the house and the girl tosses him a note which reads, "Meet me in an hour and we will do some shopping." When Mr. Wise comes back he is on the point of bestowing a ring on his young ward, but when he sees the shopping she has been doing, he realizes that he could never support a girl with such extravagant taste.

The Broken Pledge—Essanay—June 17.—Wallace Beery featured. Three young girls pledged to spinsterhood go camping in the woods. Three boys unpledged to anything save fun and the joy of living go camping and pitch their tents not far from the girls. The girls spurn the boys' advances and the boys retire in order to plan a new campaign. They play Indian and try to frighten the girls, who, in their exictement, one of them fires a gun, which strikes one of the boys, inflicting a slight wound. He sends word to the camp that he is wounded very badly and needs the ministrations of one of the girls. Womanly sympathy gets the upper hand and they go to the boys' tent. Cupid does the rest, and the play ends in a triple love-making and prospective marriages.

From Champion to Tramp—Lubin—June 17.—Featuring Romaine Fielding with an all-star cast. Shirley Christy, a tramp, finds himself in the mountains of Arizona. His thoughts take him back to the years when he was champion mile runner of the world and to that moment when the entire course of his life entirely changed. He sees his enemy, Anderson, strike down his running mate in an international meet, and Shirley, falsely accused, is tried and barred for all time from every athletic meet. In his wandering he strikes a new mining camp and here encounters Anderson, the man responsible for his downfall. He is given a position by the mine owner and falls in love with his daughter. Shirley succeeds in wringing a confession from Anderson which reinstates him in the regard of the world, and he feels now that he has a right to declare his love for the girl.

A Mix-Up In Males—Mina—June 17.—Pop Rounder receives word that his wife will return home that night at midnight. He and Jim and another club member go out to a cabaret and cabaret life agreed with Pop so well that about eleven thirty it was necessary to force him into an automobile. Jim went out to hire a couple of huskies to help him get Pop home, but Pop, in the meantime, returns to the cabaret. Jerry, who is being chased by the cops, jumps into Pop's machine, dons Pop's overcoat and hat and just then the huskies come along and carry him off to Rounder's house. Here Pop's wife comes home and goes to bed and does not notice that her husband's place is filled by Jerry, until she strikes the pillow. Much excitement results and finally Pop arrives and manages to make peace with his wife.

To the Death—Vitagraph—June 17.—Alfred Vosburg and Jack Mower featured. Jim Warren and Joe Darby are the only remaining members of the two families who are sworn enemies and engaged in a deadly feud. Jim gets a job at a ranch where Joe is employed and their old hatred is renewed. They are seen fighting by an old hermit, who tells them that they think they hate each other and that he will put them to a test. He takes them to his cabin and shows them a box containing a rattlesnake. He has them cut cards, and the first one to turn up an ace must thrust his hand into the box. Joe turns up an ace and immediately he plunges his hand into the box. He takes his hand out of the box and is horrified at seeing a little red spot on his arm. For a while Jim gloats over his enemy's fate, but gradually his look changes to one of pity and he grasps Joe's arm in an attempt to suck out the poison. The old hermit tells him that the snake is perfectly harmless, and they turn to find Joe has died from fright.

Love in an Apartment Hotel—Biograph—Reissue No. 2—June 18.—Mae Marsh, Blanche Sweet and Henry Walthall. The maid is loved by the bellboy, but she adores the wealthy bachelor, whose room is on her list at the hotel. He has a charming fiancee who comes to call on him, and one night, upon entering the room, he hears a muffled scream from the closet and out stumbles the maid, bound and gagged. His fiancee misunderstands the situation and sweeps haughtily from the room. The maid explains her presence by saying that a burglar had shut her in the closet. After a tussle the burglar is overpowered and arrested and his fiancee gives him the reward of a hero and the maid wisely turns an attentive ear to the bellboy's pleas.

The Eagle Owl—Essanay—June 18.—A picture showing how the owl is used as a decoy for crow shooting, how the crows make an attack upon the captive eagle owl and showing how deadly is the feud waged between this outlaw and other fowl.

Rival Waiters—Kalem—June 18.—A deadly feud exists between Gustave and Alphonse. Gustave heaves a cream puff at Alphonse, but it hits Mae, who is eating at Gustave's table. Alphonse beats a retreat and lands in Mrs. Junker's lap. The next moment he is hurled into the kitchen and collides with Pasquale, the chef, who anoints him with a plate of hot soup. This he follows up with an attempt to make the waiter a target for an egg which travels until it is stopped by the face of Wild Ike, a wild and woolly westerner. Gustave and Alphonse take refuge under the table. Their fear breaks down the barriers that exist between them and they cling together for mutual encouragement. On the same reel:

The Bridge of Sighs—Lubin—June 18.—Robert Jarvis, a young bridge contractor, loves Rita Gray, daughter of Banker Gray, who objects to the match on the grounds that he is not able to support Rita. Riley, an alderman in search of a hard-up contractor who will come through with the spoils, calls on Robert and in time a contract is awarded to him. Gray agrees to the marriage of Rita and Robert if the young contractor makes good. Robert discovers that the bridge proves more costly than anticipated, and Riley at this time demands $10,000 for delivering the contract. Robert at last is forced to come through with the money and determines to insure himself a profit by using an inferior grade of cement. On the night of their marriage, Robert buys a newspaper extra in which he sees that the Brockton bridge has collapsed. He goes to his office and ends his troubles with a bullet.

A Mistake in Typesetting—Vitagraph—June 18.—Flora Finch and Jay Dwiggins featured. Mulvina has one pet, Fido, and she puts an ad in the paper in the hope that someone might undertake to care for him. Mrs. Murphy, a hard-working Irish woman, advertises for someone to take care of her daughter's child. Miss Minchen lives at 298 West Sixty-fifth street and Mrs. Murphy at 298 East Sixty-fifth street. The typesetter gets the type wrong. Mr. Jamieson, a kind-hearted man, sees the dog ad and goes to investigate. Mark Pulham spies the baby ad and resolves to adopt it. Pulham calls on Mulvina and, after a joyful meeting, offers to care for her and her child, supposing her to be a widow. After some time matters are finally cleared up and Mulvina, now Pulham's wife, shares her husband's affections with Fido.

The Way Out—Biograph—June 19.—Claire McDowell and Harry Carey featurned. The young school teacher, upon leaving home for the country, where she is going to teach, discovers that one of her rings is broken. Her father volunteers to have the ring mended and bring it to her. On the first day of school the motherless daughter of a resident who personally escorts the child is enrolled. The acquaintance thus begun ripens into love. Her father writes that he is coming to visit her, but instead of that he is brought in dead by some mining men, who found his body on the trail. When the girl assumes her school work again, her lover's daughter brinks her a token of sympathy. It is the ring her father was to bring to her, and the child tells the teacher she found it on the table of her home. Hardly daring to think, the girl goes to her lover, who confesses to her that he had been a bandit, but resolved to go straight for her sake. A shot is heard and his dead body is found. The girl leads his orphaned daughter to her own home.

Vain Justice—(Two Reels)—Essanay—June 19.—Richard C. Travers, Lillian Drew and Edward Cobb are featured in this Essanay drama filmed in Tennessee. Mr. Travers is well cast as Captain Rutledge, a union officer, who pauses with his company at the home of Betty Pendragon, a southern girl, just at the time when Lieutenant Pendragon, her brother and a confederate officer, is concealed within the house. Later Rutledge and Pendragon fight a pistol duel in which both are injured. Betty, believing her brother has been killed, swears vengeance, and she compels Rutledge to draw cuts with her to see whether his life shall be hers or hers his. He loses, and is about to commit suicide when her brother unexpectedly returns, and she then nurses Rutledge back to health and eventually promises to marry him. N. G. C.

Near Eternity—Kalem—June 19.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series featuring Helen Holmes. Hume, a quarryman, is saved from a terrible death by Melen. The following day he is knocked down by the arm of a mail crane and believing this to be the result of carelessness on the part of Billy, the mail clerk, the quarryman attacks him, but the boy is rescued by Helen. Intoxication brings about Hume's dismissal and he blames this on Billy and resolves to secure revenge. He steals several sticks of dynamite, climbs to the top of the mail crane and ties the explosive to the mail bag. Helen sees what is taking place, climbs to the arm and unties the dynamite. With the passenger train a short distance away, she hurls the explosive away, which lands near Hume and a terrific explosion occurs.

A Safe Investment—Lubin—June 19.—Mr. Hoppington discharges the servant girl because she is not good looking, and his wife is forced to prepare breakfast. In the meantime his wife telephones for a new servant, and when she comes she proves to be good looking. Hoppington hangs around the house and commences a flirtation, with the result that the girl is fired by his wife. Mrs. Hoppington is always accompanied on her shopping tours by her husband, who, although loaded with bundles, seizes every opportunity to flirt. She finally cures him and he is now head of the house.

The Angel of Spring—Selig—June 19.—Betty, a young society woman, marries Jack, a bookkeeper. Betty is supremely happy, but dislikes children and has a horror of becoming a mother, but the time comes when she must enter the "twilight sleep." During the "twilight sleep" a beautiful spirit, "the angel of spring," appears to Betty and leads her to nestlings of jungle mothers nursing their young. Back in the home they hurry the new-born babe from the room, fearing it will have a bad effect on Betty's disordered mind. However, a great change has come over the young mother and when she awakens she stretches out her arms and asks for her child.

Miss Jekyll and Madame Hyde—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—June 19.—With an all-star cast featuring Helen Gardner. Madeline Jekyll discovers that her father has promised her hand in marriage to Daggerts, who will expose Jekyll because he has forged Daggerts' name to a note, unless he gets Madeline's hand in marriage. To save her father, she stops Daggerts with the demand, "What is your price?" He tells her that she is his price, and she agrees to marry him. When Jekyll learns of his daughter's sacrifice, he dies of a broken heart. Madeline dreams that Daggerts loves her for her purity and innocence and that she must become the antithesis of this—hard, sophisticated and reckless. Baron Stana, a sinister man, takes her to a luxurious dance saloon, where Horace, a young man of leisure, falls in love with her. She and Stana continue on their way until she sees herself old, dissipated and forlorn, Awakening from her dream, she learns of her father's death. Daggerts and Stana quarrel and Daggerts drops dead when Baron Stana says, "I am Satan and you are mine," leaving Madeline and Horace to their love and happiness.

Sands of Time—(Three Reels)—Selig—June 24.—Colin Campbell is both the author and the producer of this story that concerns Doctor MacGregor, who marries Enid, a woman many years his junior. The wife, feeling neglect on account of her husband's attention to duty, elopes with young Doctor Blake, his handsome assistant, and when the latter refuses to marry her she commits suicide by jumping off a bridge. Days later her lifeless form is taken to the hospital where Doctor MacGregor is to perform a clinic before the assembled medical students and there her husband recognizes her as he is about to dissect her lifeless body. See review on page 1012, this issue. N. G. C.

Mutual Program

Hearts United—(Two Reels)—Reliance—June 12.—Featuring Billie West. After a quarrel with her husband, the wife leaves him. A clubman who has been making love to her, follows her and when she finds he is on the train, she leaves it. A station beyond the train is wrecked and she is mourned as dead by her husband and daughter. Later they are all reunited.

Bud Blossom—(Split Reel)—Falstaff—June 13.—Helen Badgley featured. Bud Blossom does not like the meals his grandfather cooks. He makes it his business to be very sweet to a woman he knows to be a fine cook. At Bud's suggestion she prepares a dinner for Bud and his grandfather. After eating the meal, the grandfather decides that, for Bud's sake, he should no longer live alone, and marries the lady.

His Obligation—(Two Reels)—American—June 14.—A story with a strong moral, featuring Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood. It tells of how a young country girl is deserted by a city man, and rather than bear the humiliation he has subjected her to, leaves her home. She later meets the man and he realizes his obligation to her and marries her. For further review, see page 1011, this issue. J. C. G.

The Old Batch—Reliance—June 14.—The story deals with the pranks of two adopted children, who finally hide the old man's money. This fits in nicely, for when burglars visit the house they are delayed just long enough to enable the children to get the police. Paul Willis and Mildred Harris featured.

Pirates Bold—Majestic—June 15.—Juvenile comedy featuring Violet Radcliff. Waldo and baby go on an outing with their nurse. Nurse wanders off with the chauffeur. This gives Bob and Tilly their chance. They put out to sea with baby. Their craft is a leaking motor boat. They are rescued by an old fisherman. Baby is brought back to the distraught nurse, and Bob and Tilly lose no time in making their getaway.

The Mollycoddle—Beauty—June 15.—Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell featured. Betty is in love with Jimmy Sterling, but her father insists that she marry Alex Smart, a rich pork packer. A professor calls him a mollycoddle. Jimmy goes to Betty's father and he tells the boy that if he will live in the woods for thirty days attired in nothing but a bathing suit and come out at the end of that time respectfully clad and in physical condition he can have Betty's hand in marriage. Jimmy goes into the woods and manages to live. Alex Smart scents a rat, goes into the woods, and here Jimmy makes him take off his clothes, don the bathing suit and be his servant until the thirty days are up. He emerges from the woods at the end of the thirty days and is given Betty.

The Country Girl—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—June 15.—Starring Florence LaBadie. Phyllis grows to womanhood without ever having seen any young man. At the age of eighteen, the old squire, her guardian, takes her to London, where she is to become his wife. In London Phyllis meets and falls in love with young Belville. Phyllis and Belville elope. And by a clever ruse win over the squire and he finally blesses their marriage. It is an adaptation of David Garrick's famous comedy.

Her Musical Cook—American—June 16.—Nan Christie, Wallace and Lucille Ward featured. Wallace, an ambitious young author, is trying to grind out a story when he is disturbed by a rasping voice of a would-be singer and the tinkling of an off-key piano. Nan, who lives in the apartment across the hall with her faithful cook, receives an invitation from her uncle to visit him at his country home. She and Wallace meet on their way to the summer resort and Nan promises to become Wallace's wife. He returns to the city ahead of her, not knowing her city address. Nan returns and finds Wallace is her neighbor. After a time matters are settled when it is found out that Nan's cook was the cause of the disturbance. J. C. G.

The Housemaid—Reliance—June 16.—Featuring Marguerite Loveridge. The plot concerns itself with on old widower's objection to his son's love for the pretty housemaid. When father suddenly marries a young woman who does not get along with his son, the interest is amusingly heightened. A series of events causes the father to consent to his son's marriage to the housemaid.

Ebenezer Explains—(Split Reel)—Falstaff—June 18.—Featuring Riley Chamberlin. How Ebenezer bought the picture of an actress during a visit to the city and the amusing events that occurred in consequence and led, strangely enough, to Eb's nomination for the legislature, are told with skill in this comedy.

The Secret of Lost River—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—June 18.—Pierre Vignol, an artist, spending the winter in Arizona, is bitten by a snake and becomes dangerously ill. Tom Hornby takes him into his home and cares for him. Tom finds, in Lost river, a metal tube containing a beautiful painting. Padre Francisco tells him that the painting, a famous one, was thrown into the river to save it from destruction when Indians attacked the mission. Pierre takes the painting to New York and sells it for a big price. He shows his gratitude to Tom by giving the full sum to Mrs. Hornby, who, with her child, was too poor to join her husband in the West.

In the Valley—Thanhouser—June 18.—Pauline, a mountain girl, persuades her mother to let her go to the city. In the city she gets a position in a factory. She meets a society woman who cultivates her. The woman invites her to go for an automobile ride. Pauline accepts, but when she sees that the owner of the factory, Waterman, is to be a member of the party, she refuses to go. Waterman shows that Pauline's suspicions of him were correct. She goes back to her home in the mountains and is wooed and won by an old sweetheart.

The Old Clothes Shop—(Two Reels)—Reliance—June 19—Thomas Jefferson featured. Mina, whose grandfather is the proprietor of an old clothes shop, absorbed in a novel and allowing herself to live in the world of her imagination, is suddenly interrupted. She sees Bert Wells, a wealthy westerner, stop a runaway and rescue a woman. The westerner immediately becomes her hero. Through an interesting series of events she meets and finally marries her hero.

Not a Ghost of a Show—Royal—June 19.—Howell and Rant decide to produce Shakespere. They make up their cast with amateur talent, which includes a laundress, a waitress and the grocer boy. The fun starts at the rehearsal. Three weeks later they play to a crowded house; the performance ends in a riot.

Where Breezes Blow—Komic—June 20.—Featuring Fay Tincher in her prize bathing suit. How Fay wins the bathing suit contest and the admiration of all the men who see her is amusingly shown in this comedy.

Universal Program

Fanchon the Cricket—Imp—June 7.—Fanchon, the fascinating little grandchild of Mother Fadet, is avoided by the neighbor's children, because they believe Mother Fadet is a witch. Landry Barband, the son of a well-to-do land owner, is in love with Fanchon and asks her to marry him. Fanchon will not marry Landry unless his parents consent. Fanchon accepts an offer to go to the city, so that she will be away from Landry, whom she now loves. In her absence Fanchon's grandmother dies. Upon Fanchon's return to the country, Father Barband, realizing that his son's happiness depends upon Fanchon, himself suggests their marriage.

The Riddle of the Silk Stockings—Imp—June 14.—Featuring King Baggot and Jane Gail. King Cole takes the girl he loves to visit his parents in Elmyraville. When they arrive there they find that King's parents are away on a visit. King meets an old friend who has come to Elmyraville to sell hosiery. King helps his friend, Spangler, arrange the hosiery display. The villagers become quite excited when they see so many legs wearing gay colored stockings. From their limited view the hosiery display-forms look like the real thing. Great is their surprise, when, intent on driving these undesirables from Elmyraville, they break into Spangler's room and see the cause of their excitement.

The Oyster Dredger—(Two Reels)—Victor—June 14.—Featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, Vera Sisson, and William Quinn. Vera, an heiress, meets and admires Jack, a handsome oyster dredger. Taking a fancy to his mode of living, she proposes, through her lawyer, to change places with Jack. Finally agreeing to the plan, Jack is installed in the wealthy girl's home. The lawyer tries to force Vera to marry him, as he has control of her property and possessions. Vera refuses. Jack, tired of idle life, decides to go back to his oyster dredger. In a saloon, he overhears the lawyer make an insulting remark about Vera. Jack is about to attack him when the lawyer steps backward and falls into the sea. Jack and Vera are reunited.

A Duke for a Day—Joker—June 14.—Shultz is in love with a young widow whom he meets at a seaside hotel. Lillian and Tom are engaged, and are stopping at the same hotel. The affairs of these four happy people go along smoothly until the arrival of a new guest, a royal duke, accompanied by his flunkey. Both the widow and Lillian lose their hearts to the handsome duke. Shultz and Tom are neglected, and they plan to get the duke out of the way. Their method of accomplishing this, while a trifle rough on the duke, is none the less effective. The final scene shows the four happily married people.

In the Shadow of the Pyramid—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—June 15.—Featuring Princess Ibrahim Hassan, in the third release in the "Under the Crescent" series. The Princess, Stanley Clyde, and Zohra, make their escape from the Mosque. They take refuge in a tomb in the Pyramid. Their hiding place is discovered by the Prince Tousson, who is given a limited time in which to recover the documents which make possible the Christian massacre. The fugitives are recaptured, and the documents sent to Said Pasha, who decrees the death of the infidels. Tousson's caravan, with his prisoners, sets forth upon its desert journey.

On His Wedding Day—Nestor—June 15.—With Neal Burns, Billie Rhodes, and Harry Lyons. The boy is an automobile salesman, and engaged to be married to the girl. The date is set for three in the afternoon. On the day of the wedding the boy is asked to demonstrate the car to a prospective customer, a woman. Thinking that he will be back in time to get married, he does not tell the girl. But the customer, delighted, urges him to go on and on, with the result that they are arrested for speeding. The wedding is about to take place. In fact, the only thing missing is the groom. When the girl reads, next day, that the boy and a woman were arrested for speeding, she decides that there will be no wedding. The chum decides that there will, and sees that the wedding takes place, much to the happiness of all concerned.

The Snow Girl—(Three Reels)—Laemmle—June 16.—Gregg, an invalid, and his daughter, Nell, live in the great North Woods. Romaine and his agent, Harry Drake, try to do Gregg out of his property, which is valuable timber land. Their plot is exposed by Nell's sweetheart, Ned Early. Romaine tells Drake to win the confidence of the girl, hoping to get possession of the property through her. After winning the confidence of Nell, Drake proposes marriage and asks Nell to elope with him to Canada. She is on the point of consenting when she thinks of Ned, and refuses Drake. Drake lures Nell to a cabin in the woods. Ned, who is in search of the Indian that made an attempt on his life, and who did so at the order of Drake, hears Nell call for help. He reaches the cabin in time to save her from Drake. Drake gets away and makes a dash for Canada. Romaine is run out of town.

The Last Act—Rex—June 16.—Featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, and Jos. W. Girard. Herbert Harwood writes a play which is accepted by Hilary Herndon. Herndon meets Janet, Harwood's wife, and greatly attracts her. Janet leaves Harwood and goes to the city with Herndon. Harwood follows and tries to induce Janet to return with him, but his efforts are met with sneers by Herndon and Janet. In one of the scenes of the play Herndon, seated alone in his apartment, is served with a drink by his man servant. Harwood, having free access to the stage, assumes the part of the man servant, and in this scene hands Herndon a poisoned drink. Herndon, unsuspecting, drinks part of the contents, and hands back the glass to Harwood, who raises the glass to his lips and drains its contents. Both die.

The Second Beginning—Big U—June 17.—Edna, formerly employed in a factory, does her best to learn the ways of the friends of her wealthy husband, Robert Granville. Edna attends a bridge party and not knowing that she was playing for money, finds at the end of the game that she has lost a large amount. Fearing to ask her husband for the money, she accepts the offer of Herbert Conroy to pay her debt. Her husband, mistaking her attentions, leaves her. Granville, still greatly in love with Edna, goes back to her. He arrives in time to see Edna about to enter Conroy's car. Edna changes her mind at the last moment, and when she refuses to enter the car, Conroy attempts to force her. Her husband rushes to her aid, and she and Granville return to their home determined to begin life anew.

The Panzer Troupe—Powers—Split Reel—June 17.—Novelty, featuring the Panzer Troupe and the famous midget. The troupe perform a series of humorous and novel aerial tricks which have made it a headline attraction in vaudeville for many years. The midget attracts a great deal of attention in his various tricks, one of which consists of his being popped from a large champagne bottle.

The Downfall of Potts—Nestor—June 18.—Featuring Eddie Lyons and Victoria Forde. Potts, star detective of the force, friend of the commissioner, and suitor for the hand of the commissioner's daughter, has no time for Eddie, a newcomer to the force. Eddie and Vic, the commissioner's daughter, have a hard time of it, as both Potts and the commissioner are opposed to their love affair. They plot and bring to a successful conclusion, the plan which finally brings about the downfall of Potts and the upclimb of Eddie, who wins the star position on the force, the hand of Vic, and the friendship of the commissioner.

The White Terror—(Four Reels)—Imp—June 18.—Featuring Hobart Henley and Frances Nelson. Eleanor Boyd, daughter of Emerson Boyd, who controls the manufactories of Every-town, urges her lover, Matthew Brand, a rich idle young man, to go into some business and make something of himself. He calls on the editor of a newspaper which has attacked Emerson Boyd on account of the insanitary conditions existing in his factories. Brand, investigating the charges, finds them to be true, and, when Boyd brings political influence to muzzle the paper, decides to buy the paper and carry on the fight against the awful conditions existing in Boyd's mills. Brand tells Eleanor that he is the owner of a paper which is working to wipe out tuberculosis. Boyd, hearing this, orders Brand from the house. Shortly after, Eleanor is taken ill and the doctor informs Boyd that she is suffering from tuberculosis. Eleanor begs her father to send for Brand and listen to him. This Boyd does. Brand convinces him that his mills are breeding places for this terrible disease, from which his own daughter is suffering. One year later we see Boyd's mills in model condition. Eleanor, now cured, is engaged to Brand.

One Man's Evil—(Two Reels)—Bison—June 19.—Harvey Cley, called "The Stranger," because of his unknown past, is very popular with the young people of Boulder, but is looked upon with suspicion by their parents. Lucy Kent, after meeting "The Stranger," slights Bert Daley, whom she had encouraged in his love for her since the days of their youth. Bert overhears Cley urge Lucy to elope with him, and accuses Cley of evil intentions. In the struggle that ensues Bert takes Cley's gun. Later, Bert comes upon Lucy and Cley. Crazed, he shoots at Cley, but the bullet strikes Lucy. Bert drops the gun, and flees to his sister, who helps him escape. Cley is accused of shooting Lucy. Bliss, unknown to the sheriff, secures the keys of the prison and liberates Cley. Bert returns, intent on making a confession. On his arrival he learns that Lucy, only slightly wounded, is rapidly recovering. The story closes with their marriage.

Her Own Blood—Big U—June 20.—With Adele Lane, Harry Linky, and Edward Sloman. Jane and her brother, Tom, a member of the Northwestern Mounted Police, live in the North Woods. Tom discovers that Jane is in love with Jim, a ne'er-do-well, and warns his sister. Jane does not believe this of her lover. Tom receives a summons to arrest a murderer. Jim, the guilty man, goes to Jane's home and begs her to help him escape. Tom enters the house while Jim is there, and tells his sister of the crime. Tom and Jim struggle, and Jane takes Tom's gun and intends holding him until her lover can escape. Jim draws his knife and is about to attack Tom, when Jane, obeying the strong call of her own blood, shoots her former lover.

At the Bingville Barbecue—Joker.—With Max Asher, Gale Henry, and William Farney. Indigestio, the famous Spanish chef, accompanied by his wife and helper, arrives to officiate at the Bingville Barbecue. Indigestio falls a victim to the charms of Lillian, the town belle. His wife, seeing him strolling with Lillian, goes after him with a knife. In the chase that follows much opportunity for comedy is offered, and is used to good advantage.

Feature Programs

Fox

Wormwood—(Five Reels)—Fox.—An adaptation of Marie Corelli's novel of the same title, with Ethel Kauffman, John Sainpolis and Charles Arthur featured. Through a family arrangement, Gaston Beauvais, a French aristocrat, is engaged to Pauline De Chamilles, Gaston really loving her, while Pauline loves Silvion Guidel, and her love leads her into a serious indiscretion. When Guidel is compelled to leave Paris suddenly, Pauline, facing the ruin of her good name, confesses to her fiance her guilty love for Silvion, and out of his great love for her he promises to marry her, but, later, drunk with absinthe, he renounces her at the altar as unchaste, and when her father spurns her likewise, Pauline becomes an outcast in the slum quarters of Paris. Gaston meets Silvion when he returns to the city, strangles him and casts the body into the river. Pauline's father dies from the shock of his daughter's disgrace, and Pauline, after meeting Gaston, who boasts of having killed her lover, hurls herself into the river and Gaston himself expires in the horrors of delirium tremens.

Metro

Her Own Way—(Five Reels)—Popular Plays and Players.—Florence Reed featured in this adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play of the same name. Steven Carley is an unfortunate speculator and at the suggestion of Sam Coast, gambles away the fortunes of his wife and his daughter, Georgiana. Coast loves Georgiana, but the latter prefers Richard Coleman. On the eve of Lieutenant Coleman's departure for the Philippine Islands, Coast tells him that Georgiana is engaged to him, and months later the lieutenant writes Georgiana how Coast had prevented his seeing her before leaving. Mrs. Carley engages in an indiscreet flirtation with Grand Duke Vladimir, and Georgiana makes her brother believe that it was she and not his wife who had been indiscreet. Coast, knowing the truth, threatens exposure unless Georgiana marries him. Just as the ceremony is to take place Coleman returns from the Philippines to claim Georgiana. See review on page 967, issue of June 12.

Mutual Masterpictures

The Patriot and the Spy—(Four Reels)—Thanhouser.—A dramatic story telling of the war in which a spy, who is slighted by the wife of one of his countrymen, determines upon revenge. He manages to have the husband of the girl he had loved captured by the enemy, in order to marry his wife, but the patriot escapes and saves his village from destruction. For further review, see page 1010, this issue. J. C. G.

North American

A Mind in the Past—(Chapter Seven of "The Diamond From the Sky")—(Two Reels)—North American.—Mrs. Stanley finds Hagar, whose mind has been impaired by the blow from Blair, in the secret room. The diamond finds its way into the hands of a tramp, who then goes to a dope joint and there the diamond is taken from him. Blair Stanley, Detective Blake and Vivian Marston see it on a Chinese idol and Blair succeeds in getting it. As the chapter closes we see Blair's hand disappearing with the diamond in its grasp. For further review see page 1013, this issue.

Paramount

The Dawn of a Tomorrow—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS.—The film is adapted from the celebrated play of Frances Hodgson Burnett, which features Eleanor Robson on the legitimate stage, and the lead is played by Mary Pickford. Mary is seen in the wonderful character of Glad, the beautiful and ragged girl of the London slums, whose unfaltering faith and heroic courage even starvation and deadly peril are unable to quench. How the ignorant little slum-girl by her beautiful faith in the mysterious power she but vaguely comprehends, is enabled to save her lover's life from the gallows, provides her benefactor with a new hope and meaning in life, and awakens his reprobate nephew to a better manhood are vividly related in the drama of human suffering and sacrifice that gives many despairing souls a new inspiration to bear the trials of today in the expectancy of tomorrow's dawn.

Pathe

Shadows of War—(LAST EPISODE NEW "EXPLOITS OF ELAINE")—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—Wu Fang, the Chinese criminal, steals a torpedo which Craig Kennedy has invented and sold to the American government. Later, when Kennedy is demonstrating a similar torpedo at the home of Elaine, this weapon is also stolen by an accomplice of Wu Fang. Kennedy and Jameson, following the man, engage in a death struggle with Wu Fang himself, and both the detective and he dive into the waters of New York harbor. Later the Chinaman's dead body is found floating in the water and Kennedy seems to have disappeared. See review on page 1018, this issue.
N. G. C.

Nick Winter and the Masked Thieves—(THREE REELS)—PATHE.—Nick Winter, celebrated detective, is retained by the directors of the bank which has been robbed. Nick tackles the job with all the sincerity and zeal of the great detective that he is. He fastens the crime on Braix, one of the directors, but Professor Van Ryck proves that Braix was visiting at his home at the time of the robbery. Therefore the mystery for Nick to solve is, how could Braix be in two places at once. With the aid of much elaborate paraphernalia, bold and daring strokes, Nick succeeds. Braix has a twin brother. T. C. K.

Man to Man—PATHE.—An interesting drama in natural colors. The unfortunate man is driven by poverty to crime. He breaks into the house of the fortunate man, and when the man refuses to give him money points his revolver at him, but cannot bring himself to kill one who is defenseless. The fortunate man calls him a coward and taking the gun aims, but finds the same difficulty. Convinced that the unfortunate man was driven to the attempted crime by dire need, he gives him money and tells him to go. T. C. K.

Today and Tomorrow—PATHE.—Eighth in the "Who Pays?" series, by Balboa. The workers at Monroe's oil wells threaten to strike unless they are given better food. Monroe sends Lee Payne, his daughter's lover, to the city to get provisions. Julia Monroe selfishly detains Lee in the city. When night comes and the promised food does not arrive, the men set fire to the plant, and besiege Monroe's office. An armed guard arrives in time to save Monroe; but the plant is destroyed. Lee is cast out by Monroe. Ruth Roland and Henry King featured. T. C. K.

Select

The Alien—(NINE REELS)—INCE.—George Beban is featured in this nine reel photo drama and a one act play in which he appears in person. The story is adapted from the famous vaudeville act, "The Sign of the Rose." Phil Griswold induces his friend, Robbins, to steal from his employer in order to finance a night of revelry in celebration of the reading of the will of Griswold's father. Next morning Robbins' employer plans to start for Europe and the stolen money must be replaced. Griswold in the will of his father is left penniless, and finally appeals to his elder brother, William Griswold, but on being refused a loan, and having noted the visits of an Italian, Pietro, to the home of William, he is led, in desperation, to write a black-hand letter, demanding ransom for Dorothy Griswold, whom he kidnaps. Dorothy's father immediately suspects the Italian who had called, and lays a trap for him in his flower shop. At this point the pictured story fades and the acted drama begins, Mr. Beban appearing in person as the Italian, to stage the vaudeville act with which everyone is familiar.

Universal Special

A Bolt From the Blue—(FOURTEENTH EPISODE OF "THE BLACK BOX")—(TWO REELS)—UNIVERSAL.—Lenora is saved from the burning bridge, and she and the detective start back to New York to hear Craig's story in Professor Ashleigh's house. A contrivance has been placed in the professor's library which nearly results in the death of Quest and his party. Craig refuses to tell his story because of his being shadowed, and is taken to Quest's home, where he drops dead. For further review see page 1017, this issue. J. C. G.

Vitagraph Special

The Goddess—(CHAPTER FIVE)—(TWO REELS)—VITAGRAPH.—While Tommy is arguing with the hotel clerk who has refused to admit Celestia, her taxicab is ordered to move on because of the crowd which collects about it. Later a woman pays the fare which the driver demands of Celestia, and asks her to come to her home. The next day the woman offers to sell Celestia to Sweetzer, a man about town. The woman at the last moment is struck by the innocence of Celestia and allows her to escape. Tommy locates the taxi driver and is taken by him to the home of the woman, but arrives too late to see Celestia. The goddess visits the East Side of the city, where she engages in missionary work.
T. C. K.

Sins of the Mothers—(FIVE REELS)—VITAGRAPH.—This story is filmed from the prize winning scenario of the New York Sun scenario contest, won by Elaine Sterne, and features Anita Stewart and Earle Williams. The story deals with society evils, showing how Mrs. Raymond drives her husband to financial ruin and suicide through her extravagance and bridge debts. Her daughter, Trixie, educated in a convent, on entering society, becomes a victim of the gambling mania. Her mother is secret proprietress of a gambling house, and Trixie, after marrying Norris Graham, a district attorney, becomes heavily involved in debt through her passion for gambling. The mother sells her interest in the gambling establishment to Anatole De Voie, and Trixie, as a member of a slumming party, entering the place loses $3,000, for which she gives De Voie a note. Trixie's husband, the district attorney, raids the place of De Voie while Trixie is in the private office of the proprietor, and she is killed when De Voie fires his revolver through the door in an effort to kill the district attorney.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

The Sporting Duchess—LUBIN—(FIVE REELS).—Captain Mostyn is in love with Muriel, and finally, by means of a villainous scheme, causes a separation between her and her husband, Lord Desborough. Desborough, in financial difficulties, loses his racing stable, which includes Clipstone, the favorite over Mostyn's King of Trumps, in the coming Derby. At the foreclosure sale the Sporting Duchess outbids Mostyn and becomes the owner of the mighty Clipstone. In the final scene at the Derby, Muriel and her husband are reunited. Clipstone is victorious over King of Trumps. T. C. K.

World

Little Miss Brown—(FOUR REELS)—BRADY.—Vivian Martin is seen in this adaptation of Phillip Bartholomae's sparkling comedy, as Betty Brown, an impulsive girl. She is undecided between two suitors. The one who appears most persuasive at the moment suggests an elopement and she promises to meet him at Hartford. Her troubles begin with her arrival at the station and continue throughout the following night, for the hotel clerk sends a man to her apartment, believing him to be her husband. When the mix-up is over and the many complications have been finally straightened out, Betty decides that, after all, she prefers the other suitor.

Miscellaneous

The Bogus Earl—(TWO REELS)—KO-KO—MAY 31.—A film company advertises for a comedian. After many have applied the successful applicant is hired at a salary of $100,000 a year. Then the big show comes on and Mr. Pincus Rainbow takes the lead in their first production, "The Bogus Earl," which is a story of a poor nobleman who comes to America to seek the hand of an American girl. While en route to the country estate of a sausage manufacturer his automobile is upset, and he is removed to the hospital. Two tramps come along in the meanwhile, find his credentials and decide to masquerade as the earl. This results in many complications and the climax is filled with laughter.

It's a Proposition which Thanhouser Established—Long Ago!

—That "feature" does not mean length.

—That one and two-reel films of the right kind are just as big as six reelers; they mean as much to the box office.

—That to advertise Thanhouser Films is a guarantee to an audience.

—That every actor in good pictures is a feature actor.

State Censorship Hangs in Balance

OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE WEEK

AS MOTOGRAPHY went to press on Tuesday night the battle against state censorship in Illinois was still being hotly waged and the outcome could not definitely be predicted.

George Magie of the Universal organization was in charge of the fight, and putting up a game battle with every resource at his command, though, unfortunately, Mr. Magie had not been backed up in the manner he had anticipated by the various Chicago film concerns, having to wage a great part of his fight almost alone and unaided.

In the East, J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship was sending wires and otherwise busy in an effort to combat the objectionable legislation, while General Manager Irwin of V. L. S. E., Inc., joined in the fight with a broadside telegram to Governor Dunne of Illinois, and Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation of New Rochelle, also brought up reinforcements in the way of another telegram addressed to Governor Dunne.

It was noticed at an early stage that the bill as drawn carried no appropriation clause providing for the payment of censors after the bill had created them, and, accordingly, the efforts of many were devoted toward having the appropriation clause included in the bill ere it reached its second reading, the expectation being that when the legislators discovered the enormous sum necessary for the support of the censorship board many of them would hesitate to incur such an expense in view of the already great debt which the present session of the Illinois legislature has rolled up, resulting possibly in killing the entire measure.

Mr. Magie, in talking with a representative of MOTOGRAPHY on this matter, said, "The appropriation for the censor board will be taken care of in a general omnibus bill that provides for a number of other salaries and necessary appropriations."

So those who anticipated killing this bill by a special appropriation clause seem doomed to disappointment.

Through the Universal exchanges Mr. Magie arranged to have every exhibitor in the state of Illinois booking Universal service send letters and telegrams of protest to their representatives in the house, the result being that ere the bill comes to a vote some three or four hundred telegrams of protest will have been received by the legislators and consequently many of them will hesitate about voting in favor of the measure.

Mr. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., Inc., on being advised of the unjust bill being contemplated by the Illinois legislature, wired Governor Dunne as follows:

We protest with all the earnestness that we possess against the passage of Senate Bill Number 382, pertaining to motion pictures, on the ground that it is fundamentally unsound, unjust, unfair, discriminatory and therefore un-American. The industry which it attacks is the fifth largest in this country. This industry years ago caused itself to be consored by establishing a National Board. No other case is on record of any other industry thus recognizing that its interests and the interests of the public are one and the same. By gladly and willingly co-operating with the National Board it has raised the standard of pictures until they are now of great educational and moral benefit to the community. It is less than two and one-half per cent of pictures that is not submitted to the National Board. Legislation ought to be confined to this two and one-half per cent. A great industry employing thousands should not be attacked without cause. Two of the biggest manufacturing plants are located in the city of Chicago. Your consideration of these facts is respectfully requested.

VITAGRAPH, LUBIN, SELIG, ESSANAY, INC.
Walter W. Irwin, general manager.

Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, put on his fighting clothes and sent off the following wire to Governor Dunne:

We respectfully submit that motion pictures are now a potent force for good in any community. We recognize this as being due to public favor. Bill No. 382 will limit motion picture usefulness in Illinois to only the few whom such drastic legislation will not retard. Your veto will retain for your people the unlimited enjoyment of the best productions the world affords. EDWIN THANHOUSER.

Metro to Maintain Standard Set

That the directors of the Metro Pictures Corporation are fully aware of the importance of maintaining the standard of quality of production throughout the hot months, is amply proven by the announcement that during the months of June, July and August the Metro Program will attain its highest form.

Metro Pictures, during the seven weeks of its releasing activities, has achieved remarkable results. General Manager Richard A. Rowland, speaking for the eighteen participating exchangemen who control the destinies of the concern, announced in a form letter to his various distributing branches that business in every territory was satisfactory and the volume done from week to week and on an average was far greater than was anticipated when the concern opened two months ago.

"We would have been content," said Mr. Rowland, "to shoulder some slight losses while introducing the program, but to our surprise we are 'on velvet'. Of course our overhead expense is at a minimum, nevertheless we are now, where we thought it would require a year to put us. And we owe our success to nothing but the excellent quality of pictures given us by our producing allies."

For the month of June Metro, beginning with Orrin Johnson in "Fighting Bob" which was released June 7, will present four other well-known plays with Broadway stars in the leading roles. Dorothy Donnelly and J. W. Johnston in "Sealed Valley" will be seen June 28, while during July, these four plays will be sent forth over the Metro route. July 5, William Faversham in Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way," July 12, Mme. Petrova in Clyde Fitch's "The Girl with the Green Eyes," which in its screen form will be titled "The Man and Woman." On July 19, the first production of the newly formed Quality Pictures Corporation will be seen on the Metro roster. Quality Pictures contain the prominent screen star Francis X. Bushman, supported by Marguerite Snow and an all-select cast and the first production, now in its final stages, will be Charles Frohman's former stage play, "The Second in Command," which Mr. Bushman personally selected for initial release from forty available plays. In addition to Bushman and Miss Snow, the cast of "The Second in Command" will contain Messrs. Clifford and Cuneo and Misses Dunbar and Moore.

The board of directors of the Metro Company are undecided as to the fourth July release, but in all probability it will be George Ade's great southern play, "Marsa Covington" in which Edward Connelly, original star of the stage version, will play the title role.

For August another strong quartet of plays and stars are aligned. Ethel Barrymore will play in her present stage starring vehicle, "The Shadow." Emmet Corrigan the virile American actor will appear in Frank L. Packard's tale "Greater Love Hath No Man." Ann Murdock will be seen in Frohman's "A Royal Family" and Edmund Breese will appear in his second Robert W. Service take, "The Spell of the Yukon."

Joseph N. Engel, treasurer of Metro and one of the directing heads of the Popular Plays and Players is in direct communication with the famous operatic star Mary Garden, with the hope of securing her for appearance in the title role of "Barbara Fritchie." Mr. Engel, through Hugh Massie, of London, is trying to induce the temperamental songbird to appear for seven weeks in the spectacular production contemplated of this historical masterpiece. If successful, work will begin August 15 and the picture will be released during November. "Barbara Fritchie" will be staged at Frederick, Maryland, with the help of the city officials and a number of state historians.

Startling Innovation Inaugurated

When Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay incorporated for the purpose of booking their big features direct, they expressed the intention of helping the exhibitor to a proper return on his feature exhibitions. They promised a new era in picture play showmanship and a policy of fair dealing.

Startling things were promised and one of the first steps comes now with the announcement that "The Big Four" are classifying their productions; they say, that while each feature on their program represents the utmost allowed by the subject in dramatic values, artistic photography and construction, some plays do not register in their estimation, as high as others; and such subjects, while they must be plays of superior merit, to get a place on the V. L. S. E. program, are rated as Class B.

Class B subjects will have a lower rental valuation. A maximum charge is placed upon them and no representative of V. L. S. E. will be permitted to accept a higher rental, no matter how strong the competition for service may be in his territory.

The first instance of the application of this new system is applied to "Hearts and the Highway," the added release on the June schedule, and the attitude of the company is reflected in a general letter, sent to each branch manager, by General Manager Walter W. Irwin. In this general letter, Mr. Irwin quotes a letter from A. E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, and president of the V. L. S. E., which reads as follows:

My Dear Mr. Irwin:—

We are putting out an extra feature in the V. L. S. E. service, "Hearts and the Highway."

We are afraid that because of the success of "The Juggernaut," and "The Island of Regeneration," you will be tempted to ask high prices for this extra feature, and because of the success the exhibitor has had with the two previously named, he will agree to paying a price equal to the first features issued.

We therefore desire to impress upon you that, while we consider "Hearts and the Highway" a good five reel feature, it is not in the class of "The Juggernaut," or "The Island of Regeneration," and we, therefore, wish to put a maximum figure of fifty ($50.00) dollars per day on this subject.

Albert E. Smith.

Continuing his circular letter to the branch managers, Mr. Irwin says:—

Since the receipt of this letter, I have talked with Mr. Smith and therefore am at liberty to add that the Vitagraph Company considers "Hearts and the Highway" to be a class "B" picture, as compared with "The Juggernaut" and "The Island of Regeneration," and for this reason alone the maximum price is fixed at $50.00 in cities of 20,000 or more inhabitants.

Accordingly, it must be made clear to the exhibitors that this must not be taken to indicate that we are lowering our prices, for such is not the case; but merely that while "Hearts and the Highway" is a good picture, yet by comparison, it is considered by the Vitagraph to be in class "B"; and that the Vitagraph does not desire to perpetrate any imposition upon the exhibitors by leading them to believe that it is equal in merit to "The Juggernaut" or "The Island of Regeneration."

Walter W. Irwin.

Will Film "Via Wireless"

George Fitzmaurice, formerly Pathe scenario editor, and later a director for that company, has returned to the scene of his first motion picture work. He will film one of the first of a long line of popular novels and plays, which have been bought by Pathe for picturization—the famous play "Via Wireless," which had a remarkably successful run on the New York stage, and later for two years on the road. The original New York production will be remembered as a "thriller" from start to finish, and was played by Edwin Arden (now with Pathe), Muriel Starr, and John Mintern. It was written by Winchell Smith and Paul Armstrong. Among the striking scenes are an iron foundry casting a gun, wireless rooms on battleships, and the blowing up of a steam yacht at sea.

Mr. Fitzmaurice left Pathe at the outbreak of the European war, and since then has been a Kleine director with such pictures as "Stop Thief," "The Commuters," and "The Battle" to his credit. He made two very successful pictures for Pathe,—"The Quest of the Sacred Gem," and "The Bomb Boy."

Blackton Discusses Future of Films

While it is generally believed that feature films are an outgrowth of the moving picture business and a new departure in this field, the first feature picture of more than two reels in length was released more than five years ago by the Vitagraph Company of America. It is a peculiar thing that in searching for material all of the stage and modern books were passed over and a part of the bible taken. "The Life of Moses" was the subject of the picture, which was in five parts.

J. Stuart Blackton.

At about the same time "Les Miserables" was produced. This work was taken from Victor Hugo's story and at the time it was feared that it was too radical. Since then, however, it has been declared that it was an absolutely true representation of the facts. It was probable that this also was the forerunner of the present serial for the picture was released one part at a time, mainly because it was believed that an audience would not care to have the major part of the program taken up with one subject.

The production of this length of picture was regarded as unusually daring, and in some quarters it was believed that it would not be a success. However, J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, executives of the Vitagraph Company, persisted in the production and were more than rewarded by the demand for additional films of this length.

"We made a careful analysis of the situation," said Mr. Blackton in discussing this phase of the business, "and decided that conditions had not adjusted themselves to a steady production of feature films. From time to time, though, we did release films of several reels, but we were always condemned for what was then considered poor business policy.

"Our choice of subjects ranged in every direction. We had an absolutely untouched field and we selected only the subjects that we felt would have a wide appeal, for in those days moving pictures were not accepted as widely as they are at the present time, and there were not such magnificent places in which to show them as now."

Together Mr. Smith and Mr. Blackton worked on the problem of the production of long films, for they felt that this was going to be the demand of the public in the future. There were certain limitations that had to be overcome, and it required a great deal of daring to invest a small fortune in a picture, particularly when such a move was being generally condemned on all sides.

"One of the greatest tasks that we faced was to convince exhibitors that the public would be interested in seeing a long subject worked out, whether two or ten reels were required for the proper showing of the picture. They were frightened and insisted that audiences demanded a variety of subjects that told a story quickly and jumped into the next idea. Those who did take a chance were surprised by the wonderful results that were obtained and of the insistence of their patrons that more pictures of the same kind be shown.

"It is hard to predict just what the future developments of the field will be. I firmly believe that the possibilities of moving pictures have not been touched upon. Although it has been only a short time since anything was attempted in producing scientific facts, there has been a cordial reception given our efforts in this line.

"According to the census bureau in Washington the motion picture industry in the few years of its life has climbed to fifth place in volume of business, and its rapid strides forward, will, I am sure, make it a contender for first honors in volume within a short time.

"It is generally agreed that the educational features of motion pictures have not been touched upon as yet. I am positive that it will revolutionize the system of teaching now in vogue. Moving pictures to my mind, offer the one way of indelibly impressing on the minds of the young every conceivable fact that is now included in their training. Not only this, but going further, I am sure that subjects which the present limitations of books prohibit will be easily attainable by means of the moving picture business.

"That moving pictures offer the solution of educational problems is plainly to be seen by the impression that colored pictures or even the plain illustrations of books and paper make on the very young. The first thing that attracts the eye of a child is a picture. It can thoroughly understand that. Each picture speaks a universal language that books never can tell. I look for the introduction of the animated art in the kindergartens within a short time. This has been done in some cases and has proved more than successful."

Trading Stamps for Theaters

A trading stamp proposition for the purpose of stimulating business at the moving picture theaters of the country is announced this week by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in conjunction with the Robyn-Kander Movie Ticket Corporation.

As the plan is now arranged tickets are to be sold in quantity to manufacturers and packers of staples and retail dealers of all sorts of necessities by the Robyn-Kander Company. The manufacturers and retailers will distribute them with sales to customers, in whatever quantity they choose, and the customer will exchange them for tickets of admission to the picture theater at such houses as the exhibitor agrees to accept them in.

The ticket consists of a heading and twenty fractional parts, but when presented at the box office will be all in one piece. A gummed strip between the ticket fractions and the heading enables the user, after he has started his ticket with one set of fractions, to destroy the heading on the next set and attach these new fractions to the ticket already started, by using the gummed strip.

The exhibitor on taking in the tickets saves them until he gets as many as he wants, when he can send them to the nearest Universal exchange and redeem them for five cents apiece in cash, supplies, film or anything he wants. The Universal offers to give the exhibitor, at sight, a nickel in money for each ticket he sends in or presents, whether he uses Universal service or not.

Stereoscopic Pictures Shown

One morning last week Edwin S. Porter and W. E. Waddell held a private exhibition of their late invention, stereoscopic photography, at the Astor theater, New York. Mr. Porter, who is chief director for the Famous Players Film Company, one of the foremost producers in the film business, and responsible for more than one important invention in the past, and Mr. Waddell, whose reputation in the motion picture industry is also of long standing, have given much study to stereoscopic photography within the last few years, succeeding, after much experiment and no end of hard work, in bringing out the third dimension in motion picture photography.

The general public has not missed this third dimension or perspective in the past because the mystery of how to bring it out has not, until now, been solved. In time, when the people become familiar with the wonderful effect of stereoscopic photography in motion pictures, it is possible that the breadth-and-height pictures will be relegated to the background much as suggestion in daring feats and in scenic effects ceased to charm when it was proven that realism could be procured.

To enter into a full explanation of this newly discovered branch of the motion picture industry would require a knowledge of stereoscopic photography almost as great as that which enabled Messrs. Porter and Waddell to make it a reality. The art of bringing the third dimension, depth, onto the screen lies entirely in the camera. The film used is standard. It can be operated on any projection machine without any added attachments, and by any operator.

The camera contains two lenses—the pupilary distance apart being the same as that of our own eyes. On the screen, to the naked eye, the photography appears to be out of focus, a red and a green outline of each figure being plainly discernible. This was remedied by the red and green lens glasses given out at the door, the instructions being that the red glass was for the left eye and the green for the right. Reversing these glasses gives the pictures perspective, but makes one-half of the screen appear red and the other half, green.

By closing one eye the pictures are seen only with breadth and height as is the ordinary picture. Opening the eye immediately gives them depth, and, instead of the foreshortened view of a room which we ordinarily get in motion pictures, we see the room exactly as we would were we to see it in real life. The objects do not appear larger in stereoscopic photography, but if a chair in the foreground of a room is forty feet away from a table in the background, it appears to be that much closer to the spectator, and not as though it were leaning up against the table as the foreshortened view of the ordinary picture makes it appear.

The pictures shown were bits of late Famous Players releases and some scenic views. One of the latter, taken along the gorge at Niagara Falls, contained a number of trees in the foreground. The picture did not seem to be on a screen, but instead, a view through an open window. The branches of the trees appeared to extend right out over the stage. To a person accustomed to seeing motion pictures frequently, this probably sounds like an impossibility, but it is a safe bet that there was more than one person in the orchestra who found it difficult to reconcile has mind to the fact that the lecturer could not have reached out and grabbed one of the branches with his hands.

Messrs. Porter and Waddell have already applied for a patent on their epochal invention, and hope to soon bring it to the point of perfection where the focusing glasses distributed at the door will be unnecessary.

Rafferty Series Making Good

Many were turned away from the Claremont theater, at Broadway and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, New York, last Monday, when the first of the Rafferty series of Irish comedy pictures was played there. The management lost no time in booking the entire series, for Manager Dollinger of the Claremont believes they are in a class by themselves as laugh producers, for it is many years since Irish comedy has been put on the moving picture screen in a clean and humorous manner. Charles C. O'Hara, the author of the series and president of the All-Celtic company, producers of the films, sees a great future for his pet creation. J. A. Fitzgerald produced them.

Interest Continues in "June" Contest

Although the "Runaway June" contest does not close until September and present state leaders may be upset, there are certain very definite indications as to what type of woman is most popular in a given state. This does not mean, however, that there is, as yet, any certainty as to the identity of the lucky women who go free to the Panama-Pacific Exposition and the San Diego Exposition, for the exhibitors, running the contest, report that results are close in their theaters, many leaders being neck and neck.

Miss Lottie Marguerite Bucklin is leading, at the present time, the state of Nebraska. She was nominated in the Empress theater, Fremont. Exhibitors will be interested in the fact that the Nebraska leader comes from a city of 8,718 inhabitants, thus demonstrating that the small city has just as much chance as the large city. It could not be otherwise, it may be noted in passing, for each balloting in a theater, whether large or small, counts one on the final result for the three women receiving the highest number of votes at that balloting.

In endorsing Miss Bucklin, Nebraska photoplay fans have established their preference for a number of things which mean much in American life. Miss Bucklin is an all-around athlete. She swims, skates, dances, is fond of rowing, and all forms of outdoor recreation.

The present leader in West Virginia is Miss Susie Boggs of Gassaway. Miss Boggs is having a hot fight, however, for Miss Mattie Campbell and Miss Browning are only one vote behind her, while Miss Jessie Lee is two behind Miss Boggs. Miss Boggs was nominated in Exhibitor James Paterson's Armory theater in Gassaway. Unlike the leader of Nebraska, Miss Boggs is a suffragist.

She, too, is musical and athletic, but her ambitions are not along these lines. She wishes ultimately to become an actress.

She Loves to Be a "Villyun"

Charlotte Burton playing Vivian Marston, the adventuress in "The Diamond from the Sky" is best described as "a natural heavy." Miss Burton is a young woman of exceptional charm, a blend of English-Spanish parentage. She just dotes, to use her own expression, on being a "reg'lar villyun"—in pictures, of course, for off the screen Miss Burton is quite mild mannered and not at all the person one would take her to be when she is playing Vivian Marston. But that shows her very exceptional dramatic ability, for in her work she absorbs all of her own personality and really is someone other than herself. When "The Diamond from the Sky" was being cast Miss Burton was selected immediately for the "heavy" role, a part to which she is admirably suited both by her appearance and her experience. She has in her just that touch of the villainous without in any way modifying a charming femininity—the true composition of a real "heavy" lead.

Universal Beauty Trip

After the Universal Beauty Special left Chicago en route to Kansas City each girl was presented with a beauty box consisting of forty varieties of toilet articles by Colgate & Co.; Einstein & Wolf, the big New York embroidery house, presented them with some real Irish linen napery and linen; the Victor and Edison companies set up rival phonographs in mahogany and mother-of-pearl cases; Doubleday, Page & Co. gave each girl a copy of Marjorie Benton Cooke's book, "Bambi," autographed by the author; Huyler gave each girl a $10 box of chocolates; Joseph Rosenthal, of the firm of Rosenthal & Son, the largest theatrical jewelers in New York, gave each of the girls a vanity case, and in addition unveiled the wonderful $500 cup which will be presented to the most beautiful girl of all at the conclusion of the tour, while dozens of other nationally known firms contributed to the surprises which popped out in the most unexpected places in front of each girl during the ride to Kansas City.

The party arrived at Kansas City at 7:30 A. M. on June 7. Here the prize-winners were joined by other beauties of the west. After Kansas City had given the girls a royal welcome all again boarded the transcontinental special for Denver at 3:30 P. M.

At every stop along the route the special and its precious human freight attracted much attention. Moving pictures of the crowd which gathered about the train at all hours of the day and night were taken while inside Joe Brandt spent his time reading the manuscripts of the many photoplays which have been submitted to him as vehicles for the fifty-odd beauties to appear in later in the month at Universal City. Mr. Brandt will feature the girls in a two-reel feature and the most beautiful girl of all will be starred in a one-reel production designed especially for her.

On June 8 the party arrived at Pueblo, Colorado. The train then passed on to Colorado Springs, the home town of Mrs. Annie Hamilton Pitzer, sister of Mrs. Champ Clark, one of the chaperons of the party. The beauties disembarked at the Springs and after a short visit climbed aboard the special, rather wearily, and were off to Denver, where they arrived at dinner time on the same day. At Denver a number of other beauties joined the party.

Denver gave the girls a reception they will never forget, for the Denver Post, who conducted the Colorado beauty contest, was determined to do the occasion "up brown." After leaving Denver the party made limited stops at Las Vegas, Lamy and Albuquerque in New Mexico and arrived at the Grand Canyon on the Colorado in Arizona at 7:00 A. M. on June 10th.

Officials at Universal City are planning an elaborate program for the members of the party which is scheduled to arrive at "the only moving picture municipality in the world," on June 11. It is very probable that the governor of California will be present on June 11 to present the most beautiful girl of all with a big loving cup and the Universal's offer to enroll her as a star in one of the Universal companies.

The city will be dressed in gala colors and American flags will be waving from every housetop and roof and window, as thousands of visitors from Los Angeles and other California cities will line the sidewalks to give the most beautiful girls in America a rousing reception. President Carl Laemmle will officially welcome the girls to the city and later will introduce the mayors of San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego, who have positively announced their intentions of being on hand to welcome the country's representative beauties.

Ellery's Modest, You Know

It was a big day for Director Arthur Ellery at the Thanhouser studio when the big scenes came on for "The Silent Co-Ed," in which Peggy Burke plays the captain of the basket ball team. Ellery is one of these men to whom the ladies simply represent names in the cast, and here he was with a good gymfull of pretty girlies. It was up to him to show them how to tackle each other in the game, and the fact that they wore bloomers didn't make him any more comfortable. The girls, some of them experienced players, pranced and capered about and when he finally found himself the center of a hot scrimmage he gave it up and called for assistance. Everybody in trousers volunteered and that's all that saved the day for him.

Warwick Praises Starkey

Buckley Starkey had to die near the end of "The Cub," in which photoplay he is now appearing. Just as he started to fall to the ground he espied an unlovely wheelbarrow directly in his path. If he fell in that the public would not get the right effect from his tragic end; if he dodged it too apparently, the scene would be unreal. He took the latter course and made his sidestep so natural that he elicited the remark, "You die like a leading man," from Robert Warwick.

New Pathe Serial

William Hamilton Osborne, author of the new Pathe serial, "Neal of the Navy," is one of the latest of the popular authors of the day to break into the moving picture field. "Neal of the Navy" will begin to run both on the screen and in newspaper columns about July 31. Mr. Osborne is a native of Newark, N. J., and resides there; he is a lawyer by profession and while it is true that there are a number of fiction writers and dramatists who have had a legal training, yet it is quite probable that he is one of the few lawyer-authors who keeps up the active practice of law. He maintains an office in Newark and another one in New York, being admitted to practice in both states. Fiction writing with him was an accident. Up to 1902 he had done nothing in that line. Obeying a sudden impulse to write a short story in that year he sent it to a magazine, and it was accepted. Since then he has had nearly four hundred and fifty short stories published by magazines, and has written four successful novels, "The Red House," "The Running Fight," "The Catspaw," and "The Blue Buckle." The last mentioned story is the subject of a contract with David Belasco who intends to stage it in the near future and "The Running Fight" has been dramatized for the screen. "Neal of the Navy" is a story of adventure pure and simple, built upon novel lines, and with the United States Navy as a strong background. The story will be filmed for Pathe by Balboa and presented by a most excellent cast, headed by Lillian Lorraine and Wm. Courtleigh, Jr.

All Set for Convention

The floor space in the exposition salon at San Francisco has been entirely subscribed, and the committee has been forced to arrange additional facilities. Several prominent manufacturers of accessories have doubled the floor space originally contracted for.

An attractive one-sheet poster has been printed and 5,000 of them have been distributed to be posted in every exchange, producing office, and film plant throughout the entire United States.

A very attractive souvenir badge has been ordered. The top piece of the badge is of metal and shows the famous tower of jewels at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, together with the word "San Francisco" and the date "1915." The usual space is provided for the name of the wearer, and the pendant is the official League emblem, which is of rose-colored metal. The ribbon is the official Panama-Pacific colors.

M. E. Cory, chairman of the committee in charge of the arrangements for the convention, is now in Los Angeles contracting for the presence of fifty screen favorites at the grand ball with which the convention closes.

Governor Johnson of California, an ardent motion picture fan, will welcome those present at the opening session of the convention. Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, another good friend of the pictures, will lead the grand march with one of the screen favorites, whose identity will be revealed later.

Requests for hotel reservations and inquiries indicate a very large attendance from the East. The committee is prepared to guarantee reservations at any price desired and wish to state that there will be no raise in the hotel rates.

Mabel Normand

World famous as a commedienne, Mabel Normand, known wherever films are known as "Keystone Mabel," couples her success with that of her great director, Mack Sennett. She first worked with Mr. Sennett in the old Biograph days, and when he left that organization to form the now celebrated Keystone company, she joined him immediately and they have worked hand in hand to accomplish the astonishing success of their special brand of film. Miss Normand's capacity as an actress is of a special nature. She astounds by her ability to play rough and tumble parts and at the same time preserve her immaculate femininity intact. How she does it is as much of a secret as the peculiar, unusual and essentially different type of make-up she achieves in each separate part she is called on to play.

Mabel Normand.

Miss Normand, whose picture career began before a Vitagraph camera and continued, after a few months with Biograph, in her association with the Keystone brand produced at the Edendale studios, has devoted herself entirely to comedy. The Keystone comic films captivated the public from the start. They have a character all their own. Mr. Sennett's fertile brain brought forth one novel plot after another, each more fantastic, more excruciatingly funny than the last. Miss Normand's contribution to these creations was not her appearance alone.

New Motion Picture Company

The Gold Nugget Motion Picture company, headed by Leon Livingston, has been organized and is now ready for taking films in the Pikes Peak region. Many of the first films taken by the new company will be street scenes and some thrillers are planned, among them a descent by a rope from the seventh floor of the Exchange National Bank building. The company will specialize in three-reel western dramas with Theodore Lorch playing the heavy parts.

More Stars for N. Y. M. P.

Katherine Kaelred, regarded as America's foremost character actress, and Orrin Johnson, the noted Broadway star, have just been signed, it is announced by the New York Motion Picture Corporation, to appear in big productions of the Kessel and Baumann organization under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Mr. Johnson is expected to arrive at the Santa Monica studios within the next six weeks, while Miss Kaelred will not begin work in the films until three of four weeks later.

Much is written in the annals of theatrical achievements about both these latest recruits to the N. Y. M. P. fold. Miss Kaelred scored her greatest triumph as "The Woman" in support of Robert Hilliard in "A Fool There Was." Later she placed herself under the management and direction of Winthrop Ames, appearing in many of the successful productions at the New Theater in New York city. Orrin Johnson long has been a favorite with Broadway audiences, where the greater number of his successes have been won. He will be particularly well remembered for his work as the priest in James Halleck Reid's drama, "The Confession," and as the tired business man in James Forbes' comedy, "The Commuters."

Selig Players Celebrate

The three Selig Companies of the Pacific Coast studios of the Selig Polyscope Company participated in a home-coming at the recently completed Selig Jungle Zoo this week. Several hundred employes, including the prominent actors and directors with their relatives and friends, were present to enjoy the beauties of the wonderful Jungle Zoo under its new night illumination, though the home-coming concealed a more important mission which was divulged after the festivities were well under way; this was the presentation of two splendid gifts to William N. Selig, president of the company. The Mission studio players and directors donated a magnificent loving cup suitably engraved, while the employes of the Jungle Zoo tendered to Mr. Selig a massive bronze piece of art showing an elephant attacked by two Bengal tigers. The gifts were presented to President Selig as a slight testimonial of the love and respect afforded him by his Pacific Coast employes. During the evening a banquet was served followed by music and dancing.

Rolfe Assumes New Duties

The entrance of B. A. Rolfe as director general of the Strand theater, New York City, Saturday night was commemorated by the officers and employes of the Metro Pictures Corporation, to which as a producer, Mr. Rolfe is an ally. A huge silver loving cup, fittingly engraved, was presented to Mr. Rolfe.

Among film managers and actors present were Richard W. Rowland, Joseph N. Engel, John B. Clarke, Max Karger and John W. Noble of the Metro Company; J. Searle Dawley, Charles Maddock, Emily Stevens, Olga Petrova, William Faversham, Orrin Johnson, Irene Warfield, Valli Valli and fifty members of the various Rolfe motion picture companies.

The cup stood forty inches high and was constructed by the International Silver Company. It bore a view of Rolfe's first motion picture production, "The Three of Us," and a view of the front entrance of the Strand.

How Motion Pictures Came to Las Vegas

As a matter of fact, motion pictures didn't go to Las Vegas at all, but, like Mohammed, Las Vegas went to motion pictures. The enterprising metropolis in New Mexico has long believed that every environment possible to put the punch into motion pictures could be found right there in that garden-spot of the world. The trouble was that Las Vegas couldn't induce the motion picture man to see it. He either went through that locality and viewed it from a Pullman or passed it by on the other side.

Then one Phil H. LeNoir, secretary of the Las Vegas Commercial Club, went to the front. Recently arrived he really perceived things that the oldest residents had been looking at for years, but had never really seen.

"Advertise your climatic and scenic wares," he said. "Advertise them just like any other merchandise. Tell the motion picture producers all about Las Vegas and its wonderful scenery through the motion picture trade journals. In other words: 'It pays to advertise.'"

Finally the energetic young man was granted the munificent sum of $50 per month to "spend judiciously." He proceeded to spend it judiciously in motion picture trade journals. He had to spend it judiciously because a $50 monthly advertising appropriation will not go so very far, you know. And then, according to Mr. LeNoir, there followed the deluge.

"To make a long story short, we dropped the advertising and tried the personal work. Nothing doing and so we returned to printer's ink. And then, lo and behold, printer's ink accomplished its work. An agent for William N. Selig visited Las Vegas. He viewed the wonderful scenery and he interviewed the people. The result is that Tom Mix, the western Selig star, and his company, are coming to us to produce a series of western pictureplays and perhaps remain permanently in our midst. We are tickled nearly to death. The silver cornet band is rehearsing. Advertising pays!"

A party of Commercial club officers, city officials and newspapermen were recently shown through the grounds and buildings of the newly organized Tulsa Motion Picture company by General Manager H. A. Mackie of the T. M. P. company, and C. P. Alexander, prominent Tulsa citizen, who is interested in the concern.

New Lubin Comedian

Tom McNaughton, the famous English eccentric comedian, has become a photoplayer. This interesting announcement was made this week by the Lubin Company, which has secured the services of McNaughton for an indefinite period. It is understood that McNaughton's salary is one of the largest paid any man in motion pictures. The funny Englishman will make his screen debut with Marie Dressler in the Lubin feature comedy "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," written by Acton Davies, and now being produced under the direction of Howell Hansel.

Tom McNaughton.

McNaughton has achieved an international reputation as a comedian. He came to this country about eight years ago with his brother Fred to play a special vaudeville engagement of six weeks, and their eccentric act, with its burlesque boxing bout and duel, made such a hit that the brothers remained here for some time.

About five years ago Fred McNaughton returned to England, but Tom liked it so well in this country that he remained and went into musical comedy. He was with "The Spring Maid" for nearly three years, in which he originated the role of Roland the actor. It was in this production that he did his now famous recitation, "The Three Trees." Following "The Spring Maid" McNaughton was in "Sweethearts," "Suzi," and "Fads and Fancies."

A. Danson Michell Passes

Arthur Danson Michell, well known in the trade through his former connection with the Motion Picture News, died at Trudeau Sanitarium, Saranac, New York, on Friday, June 4, after an illness of nine months. Mr. Michell left the staff of the News about a year ago to take charge of the advertising and scenario departments of the Excelsior Feature Film Company. Shortly after commencing work at their studio at Saranac Lake he became seriously ill and was forced to seek recuperation at the sanitarium. The same friendliness and generosity which made many friends for him in the film business marked his valiant fight for recovery. He lost, but more like a conqueror than the conquered. The operation itself was successful, but his constitution was not strong enough to bear up under the strain. Mr. Michell was buried on Sunday, June 6, in the cemetery at Saranac.

George Kleine announces the issuance of a handsome new catalogue of educational film just off the press. This volume is 162 pages in size and contains exhaustive descriptions of one of the largest and cleanest stocks of educational pictures offered for rental purposes in this country.

Who's Who in the Film Game

Facts and Fancies About a Man You Know or Ought to Know

AMONG his friends who are everywhere on two hemispheres, J. A. Berst is credited with having a larger knowledge of films and of film manufacture and distribution than any other man. And yet, Mr. Berst would be the last one among all film men to take claim for such a broad statement. He has chosen America for his home since 1904, but his experience with the film industry predates that. His earlier training was with Pathe Freres at Paris and included all the years between 1894 and 1904. He entered the sales department of Pathe Freres when he was nineteen and inaugurated a sales system that was entirely new to that vast organization. His activities led him all over continental Europe. This early training affords substantial evidence that Mr. Berst's opinion relating to foreign film conditions would carry considerable weight. In the formative days of larger film distribution in America, his judgment was much sought. For it will be remembered that not longer ago than 1908, Pathe Freres handled and controlled two-thirds of the film business in America. That was after Mr. Berst had been here only four years. From this it is easy to infer that something of the foreign methods applied to American conditions would score on the right side of the ledger.

J. A. Berst.

Jacques Albert Berst was born in Paris, October 9, 1875. He attended school until he was seventeen years old, finishing at the National College at Lemans. He then went to Driesen, Germany, where he studied photography for a year, after which he returned to France and applied himself to mechanics. Instruction in those countries was attended by practical application in the shops. Manual training in this country is only another name for it.

When he had been with Pathe Freres three years, a large conflagration virtually wiped out of existence the motion picture department. At the time Mr. Berst was given full charge of the reconstruction. During this period every detail came under his personal supervision. It will be observed that all these factors lend emphasis to the contention of his friends that none excel in equipment to produce and manufacture films.

Landing in New York at the age of twenty-nine as the representative of his great firm, he was handicapped in the lack of knowledge both of the language and our business methods. He had enough of English to make his wants known and he devoted every spare moment to a mastery of that. Depending on the safety of cash in advance, for six months he applied that rule. He then devised the first dependable credit scheme for film rental. Since his coming to America he has acquired familiarity with the language and speaks it perfectly.

In 1907, Mr. Berst was elected vice-president of Pathe Freres and it was about then that he assisted materially in the formation of the two associations of film manufacturers known respectively as Edison and Biograph licensees. The great power of Pathe Freres under Mr. Berst's capable management was further recognized at the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company. Mr. Berst is given credit for the plan that was eventually adopted. Pathe sales had reached the enormous total of twelve million dollars a year. During the nine years he represented his company in America he built the first American film studio and factory at Bound Brook, N. J., where two hundred people were employed. He was the first American manufacturer to establish a showroom where exchangemen and exhibitors might see the pictures before buying and booking.

In December, 1913, Mr. Berst resigned his office and laid down his duties with the firm with which he had been identified for so many years. He became identified with the General Film Company and has been honored with its high offices, serving as president, treasurer and director where his advice and counsel offered strength to that worthy institution.

One incident may show something of the character and tremendous business ability of Mr. Berst. Prior to the formation of the Patents Company, observance of credit was purely personal in its scope. When exchanges required lots of film and paid lots of money things moved along. Nobody bothered. One day it developed that a certain New York film exchange owed him more than $18,000. So he made a call at this place to discover other large creditors.

Instead of rushing into court to recover his claim, he proposed taking over the business, allowing the owners fair compensation for doing nothing, provided that they keep their hands off till he could hand them back their exchange free from debt. In less than five months under Mr. Berst's management, more than $65,000 of liability had been adjusted; all creditors were satisfied; Mr. Berst had played no favorites, and the bankruptcy court was cheated of a client.

J. A. Berst is the president, vice-president and general manager of Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago. He has severed all his New York connections and is living with his wife at Hotel La Salle. His duties require all the knowledge of his vast training in the film business and much traveling between New York, Chicago and Los Angeles.

If there is any one thing more than another in which he may be highly proficient it would apply to mechanics. Mr. Berst may be induced to show you his highly prized mechanisms that he made himself, later to see them play title roles in the production of films. He is also probably the greatest efficiency expert in the film industry. His well-ordered mind grasps the ever recurring problems instantly and his solutions have proved practical and sane.

He is a life member of the Chicago Athletic Club and pins his affection to a Peerless car as a trusted servant.

Sarah Bernhardt at Home

A. M. Gollos, president of the Photoplays Releasing Company, Mallers building, Chicago, announces the purchase of the two-reel feature de luxe "Sarah Bernhardt at Home," which was made in France and photographically is up to the high standard set by all foreign productions. The Photoplays Releasing Company will shortly offer for sale state rights on this superb feature film, arranging to deliver the prints to the buyers of the state rights in ample time for the purchasers of territory to reap a harvest from the wide advertising campaign that will be inaugurated in the newspapers throughout the United States upon the occasion of Bernhardt's visit to this country in September of this year, when she will play the vaudeville theaters from coast to coast.

The great American public is tremendously enthused over the art of the great tragedienne, but the great majority of people are woefully ignorant of the intimate home life of the celebrated star, and the film should consequently become a great box office magnet, since it pictures in detail the private life and recreations of the noted Bernhardt.

To Sell His Theaters

F. O. Nielsen, who recently disposed of his Parkway Theater, in Chicago, to H. Tipton Steck and father, now announces that the Stevens and Kimball theaters, both of which he owns, are also for sale. It is Mr. Nielsen's intention to invest the money realized from the sale of these houses in a big loop theater. He is now located at 611 Schiller building, where rights on "Guarding Old Glory," a five-reel patriotic feature film, are being sold to state right's men, and where he bids fair to establish a regular feature film exchange following his return from New York City, where he has gone to look over such features as the market affords.

Mme. Pavlowa with Universal

Carl Laemmle and George E. Kann, after several months of steady working, have secured a contract with Mme. Pavlowa, the wonderful classic dancer, and her well-known Russe Ballet. They will appear in an eight reel film production scenariorized by Lois Weber, famous author and co-producer with Phillips Smalley of "Hypocrites," and lately of "Scandal." Miss Weber will also direct the picture. "The Dumb Girl of Portico," Auber's grand opera, which was put on at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York about twenty-one years ago, is the vehicle selected for Mme. Pavlowa to make her initial appearance in motion pictures. Pavlowa's full company will be used when the interior sets are started in Chicago about July 3, simultaneous with her appearance in a theater here. From Chicago a special train will be taken to Universal City, where the rest of the picture will be taken.

Changes at Universal City

Among the changes which have taken place at the Universal studio are dismissals of Lee Bartholomew, chief cameraman and Billy Foster, chief of laboratory, on Saturday, June 5. They have been succeeded by James A. Crosby, for many years with Selig, who withdrew to start the J. A. C. Laboratories, and whose studio was used by the Famous Players, The Albuquerque Film Company, and others.

Marshall Stedman, a thoroughly competent director, has been placed in charge of production. Don Meany, whose experience and ability fit him for the work excellently, and C. V. Henkel are assistant managers of production. These three men will pass on everything which has to do with production of a picture.

D. W. Griffith Stays with Mutual

Rumors have been current in times past that David W. Griffith, the master director of the Mutual companies, was to leave that organization to enter the field as an independent factor. The same story was gossip of film circles in the last fortnight. Arthur James, publicity manager of Mutual Film Corporation, is authority for the statement that during the past week Mr. Griffith was asked point blank by a newspaper reporter if he contemplated leaving the Mutual.

"I shall never leave the Mutual," replied Mr. Griffith, "so long as Harry E. Aitken is connected with it and you can quote me to that effect."

New Screens Installed

The St. Louis office of the Minusa Cine Products Company report the shipment of five Minusa Screens to as many different exhibitors in Tennessee. All of the screens were rush orders and went forward on the same day. The screens went to the Dreamland and Gem theaters at Maryville, the Vaudette at Lenoir, the Bijou at Knoxville, and one to H. C. Jackson, who is building a new house at Morristown.

Owen Davis' famous play "The Woman Next Door," is being filmed by George Kleine in his New York studios, work on which was started last week. Irene Fenwick, the dainty star of Kleine's "The Commuters" and "The Spendthrift," will be seen in the leading role with a supporting cast of Broadway players engaged especially for the feature.

Recent Patents in Motography

REVIEWED BY DAVID S. HULFISH

1,108,838. Color Camera. V. L. Duhem, assignor to Vim Motion Picture Co., Oakland, Calif. The camera has two lenses, one above the other. Each lens has its permanent color filter, the film passing both lenses and receiving the color images in alternate order.

1,109,917. Printer. A. F. Gall, assignor to New Jersey Patent Co., West Orange, N. J. A negative is moved in steps in one direction, another negative is moved in steps in the opposite direction, and by projected light a single composite print is made from both the negatives.

1,111,229. Projector. H. L. Momyer, Dallas, Tex. The film moves with a steady motion from feed to take-up and the whole projecting system moves downward at the speed of the film during projection, returning between the successive pictures.

1,111,767. Safety Device. D. O. Seaman, Des Moines, Iowa. The projector is stopped and the fire shutter operated in case the upper feed loop becomes taut.

1,114,730. Projector. J. Butcher, Brooklyn, N. Y. The projection is from an opaque picture strip.

1,115,196. Shutter. Lucien Hermand, Rouen, France. Two disk shutters rotate in opposite directions and are connected by an idler bevel gear. By adjusting the position of the bevel gear an adjustment of the shutters is attained.

1,115,538. Shutter. F. W. Hochstetter, assignor to H. P. Patents and Processes Co., New York, N. Y. The shutter is a vertical slide and is driven by a cam of irregular design.

1,115,586. Rewinding Device. W. R. Schwab, assignor to Cameragraph Co., Kansas City, Mo. The feed reel of a camera has a stop device which will operate to stop rewinding when the rewinding has equalled the amount just unwound. The film leader cannot be brought back into the feed box.

1,116,453. Synchronizing System. S. Lubin, Philadelphia, Pa. A disk and an indicator hand are driven by the talking machine and the projector at the same speed. They carry electric contacts which close an alarm circuit whenever the speed of the two parts is not the same.

1,116,580. Unwinder. E. B. Feaster, assignor to Byron Chandler, New York, N. Y. The film is unwound from the center of the feed reel. The novel feature of this device is that a sprocket wheel within the feed magazine engages the film inside the reel and unwinds it positively at the desired speed, the film being subsequently turned in direction and brought to the motion head.

Reissue 13,824. Film Feed. W. J. Symons, R. J. Boyle and W. A. Blaind, Belleville, Ontario, Can., assignors of parts to H. O. Stewart and S. R. Burrows, Belleville, Can. (Original No. 987,506.) The film is fed from the center of the feed reel. The feed reel is horizontal and is positively driven by the motion head driving mechanism, the ratio of gear being automatically changed to give the feed reel the proper speed.

1,117,239 and 1,119,115. Treating Motion Picture Films. Nicholas Power, Brooklyn, N. Y. The method of treating motion picture films which consists in subjecting the marginal parts to a heat sufficient to melt all matter fusible at a temperature to which the film is subjected in a projecting machine, yet keeping the picture portion of the strip comparatively cool.

1,117,659. Fire Shutter Latch. A. F. Gall, assignor to New Jersey Patent Co., West Orange, N. J. The fire shutter may be latched out of the way while the film gate door is open, but the act of closing the door unlatches the fire shutter.

1,118,289. Screen. P. A. W. Jurschewitz, St. Petersburg, Russia. For producing plastic or stereo projection, the screen is a rapidly revolving wheel, the picture being seen upon the spokes and the background being seen beyond. The spokes are adjustable as to width.

1,118,512. Indicator. Nicholas Power, Brooklyn, N. Y. The door of a fireproof magazine has a revolving indicator hand which is driven by the reel within; the hand thus shows whether the reel is moving.

1,119,451. Safety Attachment. Nicholas Power, Brooklyn, N. Y. A closed guide extends from the lower steady feed sprocket to the take-up magazine, protecting from fire, and so restricting the film that the sprocket pushes the film into the magazine.

1,119,489. Take-Up. G. W. Bingham, Shelburne Falls, Mass., assignor to The Bingham Mfg. Co. The film is wound into the take-up magazine with its leading end outside, winding inwardly toward the center, the film being guided positively against the inner wall of the growing reel, and the take-up magazine reel being turned by the push of the incoming film.

1,122,192. Screen. P. L. Clark, New York, N. Y. A screen for picture projection, comprised of plates, each plate containing a large number of small curved reflecting elements.

1,122,455. Color Motography. M. L. Wohl, New York, N. Y., and Max Mayer, Brooklyn, N. Y., assignors to Panchromotion Co., Inc. The pictures are taken upon a strip of film with four color screens in rotation and are projected similarly with four color screens in rotation. The color screen has the four colors arranged in two dissimilar sets of two colors each, each set being composed of complementary colors, the colors of the one set overlapping those of the other set and extending over a different section of the spectrum.

1,123,185. Talking Pictures. W. B. Featherstone, Washington, D. C., assignor to Arthur Brown, trustee, Kansas City, Mo. The projector and the talking machine are located together in the projecting booth and the talking machine speaks to telephone transmitters which then transmit electrically to loud-speaking telephones located behind the picture screen. A number of loud-speaking telephones are used, located behind different parts of the screen, and a distributor for the electric telephone circuit switches the current to that particular loud-speaking telephone which is just behind that part of the screen from which the sound should emanate. The voice of an actor thus is made to follow the image of the actor, and different actors on the screen are made to speak from their different locations, adding to the illusion of the production.

1,123,664. For Improved Framing Mechanism. Issued to George W. Bingham, New York, N. Y. In a projecting machine where the film shift is of the "beater dog" or any similar type, the shift is attained by a device without sprockets which drags the film down by a distance along the film in the film window which is exactly equal to the amount of film which has been taken up by the lower, steady-feed, take-up sprocket. To accomplish the framing in the mechanism of this patent, Mr. Bingham arranges his crank handle so that it may be pushed inwardly or pulled outwardly while being turned at a steady speed of revolution. By pushing the handle toward the body of the motion head, the speed of the take-up sprocket is increased and the film is drawn downward through the film window in longer steps, thus framing the picture; by pulling the handle out while turning, the film is framed in the opposite direction. The claims are twenty-eight in number and cover the feature of crank-handle control of framing.

1,123,456. For a Projecting Machine. Issued to Earle M. Wooden, New York, N. Y., assignor of part to A. B. Cavanagh, New York, N. Y. The object of the invention is to provide a partial illumination of the screen during the usual dark interval of the picture shift, with a view to reducing or eliminating the flicker. This object is attained by making the film window a little larger than the film image, so that light may pass at the margins; then the shutter is so shaped that it interrupts the light from the image but not the light through the margins.

1,123,689. For improved Feed Sprocket Detail. Issued to C. D. Condon, Boone, Iowa. This improvement has to do with the handling of the film as it passes over the upper steady-feed sprocket. The sprocket is shown at B. The guide roller a guides the film to the sprocket. The presser roller C holds the film upon the sprocket, and a "take-off" roller D lifts the film from the sprocket. A novel feature is found in using the same pivot screw for supporting the rocking bracket of the presser roll C and for a spindle for the "take-off" roll D.

1,123,665. For Improved Framing Mechanism. Issued to George W. Bingham, New York, N. Y. The film shift is of the type wherein the film is grasped by a clamp device and pulled down, the sprocket holes not being used for alignment of the shift or for framing. Two rollers, normally not revolving, pinch the film between shifts to hold it firmly and motionless in the film window. These rollers may be turned by hand of the operator to frame the picture, being disengaged from the film while the film is shifting by the intermittent mechanism, and framing it by moving it during its intervals of rest.

1,124,253. Lens System for Color Photography. Issued to Maurice Audibert, Villeurbanne, France. Not specifically designed for motion picture color photography, but it is of interest to all experimenters in color photography. The lens system comprises a large negative front-lens and then several smaller positive lenses behind it for forming several images, each through a color screen.

1,124,367. Slide Holder. Issued to Clarence W. White, North Bennington, Vt. The invention covers a slide holder which may be rotated a quarter turn. This is of particular value in projecting the so-called "foreign" slides, which are square and are likely to get into the slide holder on the side. Other advantages are for showing special slides, and for lecture work.

1,124,635. Lighting of Motion Picture Auditoriums. Issued to Frank G. McPherson, Beaver Falls, Pa., assignor to Shadolite Manufacturing Co., Inc., Beaver Falls, Pa. Lamps for illuminating the auditorium are mounted upon the ceiling, and are so protected by shades that the screen is shaded, and the angle of light upon the floor of the theater is limited, the object being to light the room without direct light upon the picture screen or into the eyes of the patrons.

1,124,971. Moving Picture Projector. Issued to E. J. Swedlund, Williston, N. D. This machine projects a picture from a steadily moving film strip. The lens is composed of two parts, a stationary negative lens and a sliding positive lens. The positive lens slides vertically, moving upward at the front of the projecting machine as the film image moves downward in the film window, and as the one image passes beyond the window the positive lens drops quickly to pick up the next image for the rays upon the screen, thus effecting the shift from image to image by a sudden movement of the lens rather than by a sudden movement of the film strip.

Volume XIII CHICAGO, JUNE 26, 1915 Number 26

The Illinois State Censorship Bill

DOWN at Springfield the Illinois legislature is wrestling with the final reading of the state censorship bill as we go to press. All that a woefully small number of earnest motion picture men could do to protect this big industry against its passage has been done. If the bill is defeated, those few workers for justice will be entitled to a large vote of thanks from the apparently indifferent and complaisant majority who have been content to let others do their fighting.

While legislation was still pending at the Illinois state capitol for the establishment of a state censor board, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals uttered a decision upholding the right of an Illinois city to do its own film censoring. Some authorities hold that this finding did much toward discouraging further action by the state. That attitude prevails in Chicago, which, being the biggest city in the state, is strong for home rule and resents any attempt to curtail its local power.

Other influences have worked also for the discouragement of the bill. Besides the campaign if film interests against it, it was subjected to some political criticism because it placed the power of appointment in the hands of the secretary of state instead of the governor, and because of its inadequate provision for extra employes of the proposed board. The necessity, following the court opinion, of permitting any city of over one hundred thousand population to do its own censoring, with the resulting double taxation feature, cast further doubt upon the act; and at a late hour the legislature seemed to evidence a loss of interest in the whole matter. Municipal censorship, for the moment, seems to have the edge on state censorship.

We have frequently found good occasion to protest against the Chicago censor board and its more or less crude methods of reaching decisions. But we would prefer to see the Chicago board continue in full power rather than experiment with a state body, for which the bill under discussion has made but inadequate provision. A known and familiar evil is always preferable to an unknown and experimental evil.

Unquestionably the circuit court's decision will have further effect. Either it will operate to kill these state bills and permit the local board to proceed on its merry way until public opinion finally destroys it, or else it will set up every city in the state in the censoring business plus the state itself. In that case we shall have a mess, but one so ridiculous that it could not be harmful for very long. Too many cooks spoil the broth, and too many censors would make a quick end of censorship.

Getting Away from the Arc

PROBABLY every exhibitor who has watched his operator adjust the arc in his projection machine has wished there were some other and more convenient source of light. No other part of the machine has made so little progress in the way of improvement as the lamp.

Experiments with the new focus-type gas-filled incandescent lamp, however, while they have yielded nothing as yet that is of value to the motion picture exhibitor, give promise that they may eventually supply an efficient substitute for the carbon arc. A special one-thousand-watt lamp has already been made which is eminently successful in use with home projectors and stereopticons.

The incandescent lamp has many advantages over the arc for projection work. Epitomized as safety, simplicity and convenience, they really deserve analyzing beyond those three much-used words. A machine equipped with an incandescent projection lamp is practically free from risk. The heat concentrated at the focal point of the condenser lens is inconsiderable as compared with that of an arc. It is absolutely steady and noiseless, and once the switch is closed it requires no adjusting or attention whatever. It may be made to suit any available voltage, which is impossible with the arc; and its efficiency may be still further increased by the use of a spherical reflector back of it.

The sole virtue of the arc has been its concentrated point of light, which is confined almost entirely to the focal point of the lens. The new arrangement of the filament in the focus-type gas-filled incandescent is nearly as concentrated as the crater of the arc; and it is only a matter of making the filament of sufficient current-carrying capacity within that small space to compete in actual brilliancy with the arc.

Such lamps, of course, are not yet available; but the fact that the biggest lamp manufacturer in the country reports favorable progress toward an incandescent lamp wholly suitable for commercial use in motion picture projectors, in direct competition with the present arc, leads us to look with expectation for a perfected lamp before very long. It will doubtless prove very popular with exhibitors and their operators when it does come.

A Consistent Business Policy

TO attempt to run both program and features in the same house is not consistent with business policy. It is not justified even by the most liberal interpretation of the "show business." That time has gone when it was proper and profitable to give, under the name of entertainment, a heterogeneous collection of everything calculated to amuse the patrons after the fashion of the dime museum. Entertainment covers a broad field, which not only can be, but must be, subdivided into classifications.

These classifications have existed for a long time. Quite a few years ago we had, as we now have, "legitimate," vaudeville, concerts, lectures, circuses, side shows, athletic events, and motion pictures. In its time that listing was all right. But now we recognize motion pictures not as one subdivision in a list of entertainments, but as another means of reproducing any kind of entertainment. Thus we may, and do, have drama, variety, lectures, circuses and athletic events, all in motion pictures. What was originally only a certain kind of amusement has swallowed up all the other kinds and made them a part of itself—or itself a part of them, as you choose. Film circuses and lectures and athletics are not important enough, or not common enough, to form classifications. But we still have film legitimate and film vaudeville as separate and distinct classes of entertainment.

The exhibitor who has not realized the trend of the times is still inclined to run all the varieties of show in one theater. He does it because he can; and he can because all film is alike mechanically, whatever its subject. Even if he owned a hippodrome, he would never dream of running a circus tonight, a vaudeville show tomorrow, a wrestling match Saturday and a legitimate play on Sunday. Yet as the owner of a projecting machine and a screen he does just that with films.

The problem would straighten itself out a great deal quicker if feature films and program films were not made on the same size stock. But as that is impracticable, the only hope of a proper division of picture theaters into feature and program houses lies with the progressive exhibitor, who must realize before long that such division is necessary for the dignity and growth of the master entertainment.

Municipal Theaters in Norway

[Frankfurter Zeitung, May 1.]

The Norwegian Diet recently passed a law providing that the licenses of all motion picture theaters in the country shall expire in 1916. The municipalities will then be at liberty either to renew the licenses or to establish municipal theaters. A number of smaller Norwegian cities, as, for example, Vardo, Tromso, Fredrikshald, and Notodden, have already determined to municipalize their motion picture houses, and larger cities are now considering the question. It is not a partisan question, for while the proposal to municipalize these theaters in Christiana was made by the socialists, in Trondhjem a like proposal originated with the party of the right.

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

The World's Greatest Yarn.

Episode Seven: "Stay-At-Home Jane."

(PART TWO.)

"Ted Horner's detectives hunted high and low for me," Jane resumed her story at the Jumbo studios, "but whenever they found a clue to my whereabout they learned that I had just departed. Learning at last that I had determined to stay at home, Ted sought by every inducement to coax me to accompany him to matinees, dances and entertainments. He tried persuasion, bribery and once even resorted to an attempt to kidnap me, but Wilbert Sly, the Man with the False Mustache, foiled all his efforts. Ted at last grew deeply suspicious of Sly and ordered his sleuths to shadow the Man with the False Mustache instead of me. It was due to that fact that he finally learned I was leaving home and journeying far out into the suburbs of the city each day. Sly, discovering that he was being shadowed, one day met Ted face to face and promised him that if the detectives were withdrawn he would himself reveal to Ted the reasons for my strange determination to stay at home. Ted agreed, and the following day Wilbert Sly called for him in a taxicab and took him out to the Sly Motion Picture Laboratories, where my husband learned to his astonishment that I had become a film star. I had refrained from informing him of my intention lest I lose his love, but when the first fifteen reel feature in which I acted was at last completed Sly saw no further reason for deceiving Ted as to my chosen career. It being no longer necessary, therefore, for me to appear as Stay-At-Home Jane, I became a normal wife and Ted and I have lived happily ever since." As Jane completed her tale with a sigh Sue Brett told the others that the following day she would bring to the studio Helene, the last of the Seven Suffering Sisters, to tell her story.

Pete Schmid, chief bull artist of the Bosworth-Morosco interests, comes through this week with a unique photograph of one of the stars of his organization that comes pretty near being a prize winner. Actors and actresses have had their photos taken in every conceivable fashion. They have had stills made of their prize winning bulldogs, their diamond tararas, their bathing suits, their brawny muscles, their unique feet, their automobiles and their bungalows, but probably never before has an actor's soul been photographed. Pete therefore jumps immediately into the Hall of Shame by submitting a close-up view, looking East, of Owen Moore's sole. The picture, needless to say, was taken during a siesta which Owen was enjoying while waiting for Elsie Janis, his leading woman, to makeup for the next scene in "Betty in Search of a Thrill." We're now anxiously waiting for another pupil of Caward's Art Scollege to submit a photo of an actor's vanity or a leading woman's temperament.

TO have the inborn gambler's spirit, is to be a gambler. Of this one is convinced after seeing "The Sins of the Mothers," Vitagraph's five-reel V. L. S. E. release, featuring Anita Stewart and Earle Williams. The ability of the cast, artistic settings, and clear photography combine to make the picture distinctive and wholly entertaining. The story revolves about a girl whose inherent love for the exhilaration and excitement of gambling leads to her tragic and untimely end. The interest aroused in the early scenes of the film is carried right through the five reels, and the many dramatic situations are well presented and convincingly acted.

Anita Stewart gives a wonderful performance as Trixie Graham, the girl who, reluctant to leave the convent where she has been brought up, is taught to play bridge by a friend of her mother's. With true beginner's luck she wins consistently in the first few games she plays, and with this luck comes the fascination for the staking of money on a chance. Her mother's heavy losses at cards ruined her father. The mother courted the game of chance—the daughter was courted by it. Earle Williams is seen as Norris Graham, and his ease and excellence in the part is most pleasing. The members of the balance of the cast in which are Julia Swayne Gordon as Mrs. Raymond; Lucille Lee as Alice; Mary Maurice as Dovey; and Paul Scardon as Anatole De Voie, fit their characters well and interpret them splendidly.

Trixie Raymond's mother, left penniless when her husband committed suicide because of financial ruin brought on by her heavy losses at cards, is the owner of an extensive gambling establishment. Trixie, now wife, and begs her to give it up. She does her best, but the temptation is too strong. Her many broken promises are forgiven by her husband, who realizes how hard she is trying to overcome her weakness. Finally Trixie is introduced into the gambling resort, formerly owned by her mother, and now being run by Anatole De Voie. There she loses heavily and gives De Voie her note to cover her debt.

Graham, now district attorney, determines to close up all of the gambling houses in the city. He is told of De Voie's place, and prepares to raid it. De Voie learns of the planned raid and telephones Trixie that she may have her note if she will come for it. When the police break into the house De Voie locks her in his office. He gets into an argument with Graham and draws a gun. In the struggle the gun goes off. The bullet pierces the door behind which she is standing, and kills her.

"Up from the Depths"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

DIRECTOR Paul Powell has made a splendid picture out of "Up from the Depths," the story written by Robert Stoddart and Charles Battell Loomis. One's interest increases as the story proceeds and a real climax is reached in the fourth reel of this Mutual Master-Picture.

Courtenay Foote is cast as Davids, the hypocritical evangelist, while Gladys Brockwell appears as Daire Vincent, the girl who was so unfortunate as to fall in love with the revivalist. Thomas Jefferson makes a lovable character out of Father White, the kindly priest, who finally hears Daire's life story and ere the picture closes succeeds in bringing her at last on the first step "up from the depths."

Deeper stage settings have seldom been seen than the ones which depict Mozart's dance hall, for it is literally hundreds of feet apparently from the point where the camera is stationed to the stage at the other end of the dance hall, and yet so perfect is the photography that one notes the slightest movement of any of the characters.

service in a small country town, persuades Daire Vincent, a pretty country maid, to elope with him. Later, in the city, the girl discovers that the man does not intend to make her his wife and within a year she learns that he is about to leave her to seek a new field for his grafting ability.

In New York Davids changes his name and by widely advertising himself and his evangelistic services succeeds in making a small fortune.

Daire has a child and after spending all her meager funds, in desperation, becomes a singer in a low dance hall in order to support her child.

Still later the girl by her beauty wins a position in the famous Mozart dance hall in New York.

Just at about this time the evangelist, in order to still further advertise himself, plans a spectacular raid on this dive, in order to secure columns of publicity in the newspapers. Through an assistant of her husband's, who is sent to the dance hall in advance, to secure evidence against the character of the place, Daire learns that the evangelist is really the man who deserted her several years before, and thereupon she proposes to trap him.

Davids has taken unto himself another wife, who, as this point of the story is reached, is discovered dying, childless. Daire calls at the apartments of the evangelist in accordance with the promise made to the revivalist's assistant and while the two are recalling the past, Daire's little son wanders into the adjoining room where Davids' wife discovers him.

The sight of his own son, whom he cannot claim, stirs Davids deeply. Davids' wife, overhearing Daire's accusation that Davids is her husband and the child their own, dies from the shock.

A few days later at the request of the Purity League Davids orders a raid made on the Mozart dance hall and in its toils Father White, a slum worker, and Daire are seized in the drag-net of the police. During the raid Davids is shot by a gunman and, dying, expresses a wish to honorably marry Daire, the girl he deserted.

At first she scorns his proposal, but when Father White tells her that a marriage would legitimatize the child, she consents and with his dying breath Davids takes the marriage vows as the picture ends.

Essanay's "Braga's Double"

Reveiwed by John C. Garrett.

THE Essanay Film Manufacturing Company has started on the work of releasing the film series of "The Adventures of Dominica," written by Henry C. Rowland.

Nell Craig in the character of the highly educated girl associated with thieves, Dominica Meduna, does excellent work as the dashing and daring girl. Sheldon Lewis, who in the first of these releases "Braga's Double," which is to be released June 22, takes both the part of Senor Emelio Braga, the saturnine-faced Argentino, and Lemuel Taylor, his double, a mining man from Texas, portrays both of his characters splendidly and his work is always without fault.

There are some very good interior settings used in this production, amongst them the Moulin Rouge and an underworld cafe, wherein a most realistic fight takes place between Taylor and three ruffians.

Emelio Braga receives a note from one Gaston LeGrand threatening him with exposure lest he give him 5,000 francs. As he is trying to devise a scheme to get out of paying the money Dominica Meduna comes into the room. He tells the girl of the note and that he is going to kill LeGrand. LeGrand comes to get the money and Braga says that he will be at a certain cafe that night at 10:30 and will there give him the money.

After LeGrand has gone Braga tells Dominica that she must go out and find someone that resembles him to take his place that night and be seen with her at the Moulin Rouge at 10:30.

The girl starts out and meets with Lemuel Taylor, a man from Texas. She pretends that she thinks he is her husband with whom she had quarreled and later manages to meet him. Finally he asks her to go to the theater with him and she tells him if he will only wax his mustache he will be the exact double of her husband and people will think it is her husband she is with. Meanwhile LeGrand has one of his assistants shadow the girl and he comes upon her and Taylor in the Moulin Rouge and thinks that the man is Braga. The girl notices the man watching them, tells Taylor

Braga is stretched out upon the top of a wall and as LeGrand passes he makes a lunge at him with a dagger, but his blow has no effect as his dagger hits the brick wall and is broken. LeGrand gives chase and a revolver fight ensues in which LeGrand is partially blinded from pieces of the brick wall which fly into his eyes when bullets from Braga's gun explode against it.

LeGrand returns to his associates and there the man who had followed Dominica comes in and tells him that he had seen Braga and the girl at the Moulin Rouge. Dominica goes to see Braga next morning and tells him that she feels more than a passing interest in

Dorsey's China Pictures

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett

THE Dorsey pictures on China, which are being shown in six reels at the Studebaker Theater of Chicago, are amongst the most interesting of their kind ever shown to the public. These pictures, which were taken by Dr. George A. Dorsey of the Field Museum of Chicago, and which are being released by the Universal Film Company, are one of a series of travel pictures. Splendid photography is apparent throughout the whole production.

For centuries the Chinese people were a hidden people. Guarded by their great wall, which was unsurpassable, and the almost impassable mountains, no other nation was able to reach their country. Dr. Dorsey takes us first through the city of Peking, where many strange sights greet our eyes, amongst them a wedding procession showing the bride on her way to marry the man, whom she has never seen. We next see the manner in which the people of this city live; their outdoor restaurants, barber shops, shoe repair shops, and chair manufactories. One good thing we note in passing along these streets is the elimination of the sale of opium.

Amongst other interesting scenes we are shown while in the city of Peking is the street pantomime, in which imitations of the rich are given. The foreign legations, which are also situated in Peking, are all large, well built places and with beautiful surroundings.

We are now taken along the great wall of China, where we see the magnificent tombs of the Ming emperors and the giant stone warriors guarding the valley of the tombs. Later we are shown the results of the missionary workers in China.

Selig's "The War O' Dreams"

A STRONG and most convincing argument against war and all of its horrors is presented in Selig's three-reel release of July 1, "The War O' Dreams." Just at this particular time, when all foreign nations are engaged in bloody strife and the possibilities of our own country being called upon to defend her flag are uncertain, war pictures are amongst the popular releases.

The photography in this Red Seal production is excellent, most realistic battle scenes, and a well chosen locale. Edwin Wallock as Arthur Ensign, the old inventor, who discovers by chance a wonderful life-destroying chemical, takes his part well and is ably supported by Lillian Hayward as his wife and Bessie Eyton as his daughter, Bessie.

Arthur Ensign and his wife, an elderly couple, who have scraped and saved in order to send their daughter to school, receive word from her that immediately upon her graduation she is going to marry Lieutenant Lewis. Ensign writes back to his daughter telling her that she has their blessing and as he has just completed a wonderful invention they will all soon live in luxury.

By chance the old inventor happens upon certain chemicals which, when mixed, will explode when brought into contact with ether waves. About this time his government is in need of something which will enable it to destroy its enemies. They call on Ensign, his new discovery is tested, proven successful, and arrangements are made to buy the formula from him.

While the government men are with Ensign, spies from the country of the enemy see the test being made and decide to get the formula from Ensign. They steal into his home one night, take some of the chemicals and prepare to make the test with them. When the government officials call on Ensign next morning he tells them of the theft and immediately one of the men goes to the ether wave machine, pushes the lever back, and then the scene changes. We are shown the home of the spies, which has been blown up, killing them all.

Ensign some days later falls asleep and dreams. He sees a battleground where the enemy are overpowering his army when he is called upon to use his invention to destroy their lives. The lives of many men are lost and one of two scenes in particular show where the toll of death has been enormous. Ensign uses the chemical in one of the trenches just as hundreds of the enemy are fighting in it, a terrible explosion occurs and the men are instantly killed.

The old inventor then leaves his quarters to go over the battlefield, where horrible sights meet his eyes. He finally comes upon the dead bodies of his daughter and her husband. Then the scenes change and his daughter in white garments comes to him pleading for the lives of human beings.

The old inventor wakens with a start and his daughter, who has just been married, comes in and a happy reunion takes place. When the government officials come

"The Diamond from the Sky"

CHAPTER nine of the North American Film Corporation's thrilling romantic novel "The Diamond from the Sky," which is entitled "A Runaway Match," is almost as thrilling and exciting as was the third chapter, when Irving Cummings, the hero, dropped the automobile over the cliff edge.

Cummings again takes his life in his hands in this last chapter when he rides a broncho alongside a speeding train, and leaps from the back of the horse into the car window. A few minutes afterwards he is hurled from this same train and rolls head over heels down a steep embankment, though how he escapes with his life seems hard to comprehend.

William Russell as Blair Stanley also performs several hazardous feats in chapter nine of the story, the last of them being his escape from pursuers, a hasty marriage with Vivian Marston and, following that, a flight aboard an outgoing passenger train. He and Vivian Marston have to climb over the observation platform in order to make the train as it pulls out

As chapter nine begins Blair Stanley, who has stolen "The Diamond from the Sky" from about the neck of the Chinese idol in the previous chapter, brings it to Vivian Marston, the girl he loves, and begs her to marry him. She only agrees to do so upon condition that he will present her with "The Diamond from the Sky."

Blair immediately conducts Vivian to the home of a minister and the ceremony which makes them man and wife is just concluded when others who wish possession of the jewel burst into the room. Blair is handcuffed, but with superb strength he overcomes his jailors and escapes with his bride.

Vivian disguises herself in the clothes of a boy and the two manage to board an outgoing train. Meanwhile Luke Lovell turns against Hagar, the gypsy queen, and urges his gypsy followers to make him ruler of their clan. Quabba and Esther discover his faithlessness and Esther finds in the battered tin box, kept by Hagar, the document which is to be opened in case Arthur Stanley is found unfit as the heir to the Stanley name and fortune.

Meanwhile Arthur Stanley, under the alias of John Powell, has sought his fortune in the West and one day while riding over the countryside hears some bandits plotting a train robbery. In a wild effort to foil the crooks, he boards the moving train at the risk of his life by jumping from his speeding horse.

His story is not believed and instead he is suspected of himself plotting robbery and hence pushed from the flying train. He falls down a steep embankment and his seemingly lifeless body is seen at the foot of the grade as the story nears its end. Mae is the niece of Colonel Nutt, a bug hunter, and is loved by Robert, a young man of considerable means, but little muscle.

While the two are riding one day Mae's horse loosens a shoe and they stop at the village blacksmith's to have the damage repaired. Ben, the herculean wielder of the blacksmith's tools, makes an instant hit with Mae on account of his tremendous strength, for with one effort of his mighty hand he is able to move heavy wagons, with a simple twist of his finger he is able to bend iron bars, and expanding his huge chest he seems to almost dwarf his surroundings. Mae is strangely impressed and that night dreams that she is a maiden of a prehistoric age and that Robert, her puny lover, and Ben, the giant blacksmith, fight a life and death struggle over her and because of his powerful strength Ben overcomes Robert. Waking to discover it all a dream, she is so deeply impressed by Ben's prowess that when Robert calls next day she gives him back his ring.

Robert appeals to Uncle Nutt, and uncle, being a wise old geek, tells Robert that the simplest way out is to let Mae carry out her own wishes and to prove his theory unkie invites brawny Ben to become his guest at his home, much to the delight of Mae, who is considering eloping with him.

GERTRUDE McCOY is seen in the dual role of play-wright and leading lady in the new four-reel Edison drama, "Through Turbulent Waters," to be released June 25. The story is of a girl whose strange career as an actress is shaped by the magnetic influence of a dissipated and unprincipled actor, and whose way to happiness is finally paved by an avenging father. This picture will appeal to the great majority for its strong, interesting plot has received full justice in having true atmosphere, a cast of players who portray their characters convincingly, and photography that is above the average in its clearness and depth.

A humorous moment in "Through Turbulent Waters."

This is the first Edison film directed by Duncan McRae, and Mr. McRae has set a high standard to live up to in his future productions. A great deal of the action takes place in a theater, realism being assured by staging the scenes in a Broadway showhouse. The lighting effects in these scenes are unusually fine. Frank Farrington, whose name and work have long been familiar to the public, engaged to play the male lead, Paul Temple, and his interpretation of the part is most satisfactory. Gertrude McCoy, clever and of pleasing personality, is seen to advantage as Alice Robinson. Duncan McRae as Dinsmore and Edward Earle as Frank Wentworth have important parts and do commendable work in them. The balance of the cast consists of Bessie Learn as Jane Dinsmore; Helen Strickland as her mother; Maxine Brown as the maid; Robert Brower as Mr. Montrose; and Frank McGlynn as Bill Ford.

Jane writes to her father telling him of the wretched conditions under which she is living with her husband, Paul Temple, an actor. Dinsmore goes to visit his daughter, but she dies a few days before his arrival. He learns of Jane's persecution by Temple, and swears to avenge his daughter. Alice Robinson is a member of a second-class stock company. Temple, on arriving in New York, changes his name to Delaney. He meets Alice and promises to make her a great actress. The girl is greatly impressed by Delaney, and consents to marry him. The ceremony, however, is only a sham.

James Montrose, a producer, and Frank Wentworth, his lawyer, decide to engage Delaney for their new play, and through his efforts Alice is retained to play the lead. After being coached by him Alice makes a great success in the part. The big scene is in the last act, when she fires at Delaney as the curtain falls. Dinsmore, who has come to New York, sees a photograph of Delaney and is directed to the theater where he is appearing. He secures an entrance to the stage, replaces the blank cartridges in the "property" revolver with real bullets, and as a result Delaney is shot to death by Alice. She is arrested for murder. Dinsmore reads of the arrest, telephones Wentworth, now handling Alice's case, and confesses that he is responsible for the killing. Alice is released. Dinsmore, feeling that there is nothing more to live for, commits suicide. Wentworth, having long since shown an affection for Alice, is now accepted by her.

American's "Peggy Lynn, Burglar"

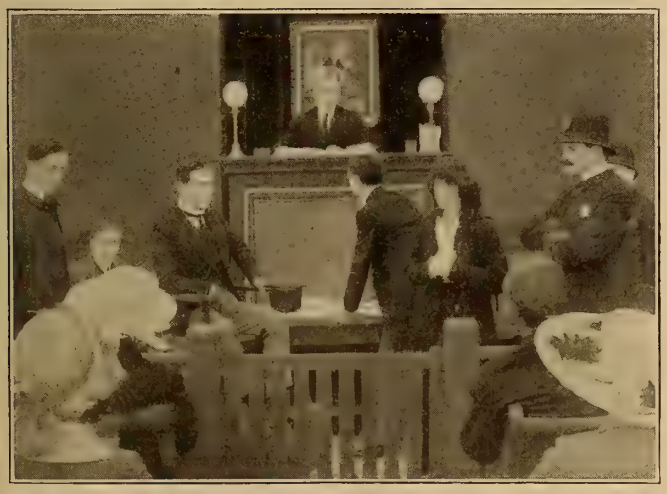
VIVIAN RICH and Joseph Galbraith, those two sterling players of the American Film Company, have an excellent chance for splendid work in the two reel drama, scheduled for release June 21, which is entitled, "Peggy Lynn, Burglar." The story is unique in itself and highly dramatic in several of its scenes, thus affording the excellent cast which interprets the production a wide scope for its abilities.

Particular credit is due the director of the production and the technical superintendent of the American Film Company for the splendid lightning effect that appears in the first reel of the production, when a storm is raging just outside the stage settings. The stroke of lightning which puts the telephone out of commission is realistic in the extreme. In fact, it falls little short of being marvelous.



Terrill testifies for Peggy.

Miss Rich appears as Peggy Lynn, who enters the home of a band of desperate crooks when she becomes an orphan with the death of her father, and under whose evil influence she spends the next fifteen years of her life, befriended by no one except Andy, a littl hunchback, who grows to love the very ground on which Peggy walks.

The arrest of Big Lew.

As the story opens, Peggy, who has become an expert safe-cracker, is commanded to visit the home of millionaire Terrill for the purpose of robbing his safe. Reluctantly she goes and on effecting entrance to the house learns with surprise that the millionaire is critically ill and alone, all his servants having deserted the house when they learned that their master has been attacked by smallpox.

The doctor, who calls to attend him, is struck down by a bolt of lightning, taken to a hospital, and Peggy nurses the sick man back to health. When the doctor returns to consciousness, two weeks later, he orders the health authorities to quarantine the house and on their visit they learn the patient is suffering only from chickenpox and is already well.

Peggy on returning to the thieves' den is set upon by the crooks, who refuse to believe her explanation as to the cause of her absence. The police interfere at this time and Peggy is arrested and brought to trial.

Terrill, who happens to be in the court-room, is the means of freeing the girl and later when she learns that Big Lew, one of the crooks, means to revenge himself on Terrill, she goes to Terrill's home to warn him, arrives barely in time to open the vault in which Big Lew has imprisoned the millionaire and then faints away. The police arrive just in time to revive Peggy, watch her open the vault and free the millionaire and take Big Lew away to jail, while Peggy is clasped in the arms of the man she has befriended.

Universal's "The Black Box"

UNIVERSAL'S serial, "The Black Box," which has been released at the rate of one episode a week for fifteen episodes, is now finished. The mystery of the black boxes is cleared up, the deceased Craig has been exonerated from all the crimes perpetrated, and the culprit has been discovered and punished.

It has been with a sort of smoldering hatred that we have been considering Professor Ashleigh throughout the last five or six episodes of this serial, as we felt almost certain that he was the guilty murderer. Now that matters are all straightened out, our hatred is turned to pity as we realize the conditions under which the professor had been existing.

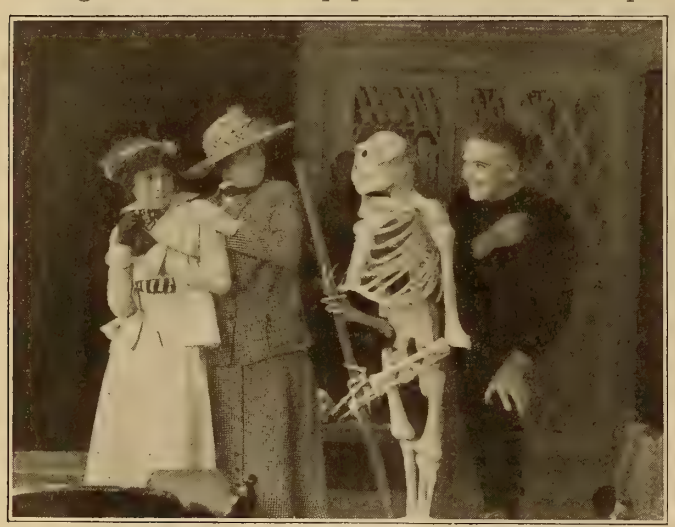
Ashleigh injects poison into his arm.

The end of the story sees Laura perfectly happy in the embrace of Inspector French, while Lenora and Quest leave his home, going to the minister's to get married.

In the last episode we left Craig dead, and as this episode opens Quest and his assistant come to look for the black box at Ashleigh's house, and after a thorough search find it hidden in a secret place in the wall. They open the box, finding therein a piece of paper which reads, "See page 62, January number, American Medical Journal, 1905." They immediately go to the library, find the book, but upon opening it discover that the article mentioned has been cut out.

Ashleigh is seen just before Quest's arrival cutting out this article, and he escapes through a secret panel out into the yard and goes into the garage to hide. Quest discovers the secret panel and is passing through when he finds the missing clipping which Ashleigh had lost. The paper tells of how the professor had been bitten years before by an ape, hydrophobia had developed, and ever since that time he had seemed possessed of all the cunning and brutality of a wild ape.



Quest demonstrates the invisibility of the velvet suit.

Back in Quest's study, Lenora comes upon a diary which had been lost by Craig and which she takes to Quest. Upon opening it they discover that Ashleigh had invented a black velvet suit which left only his arms and hands exposed. By a belt which had a switch on it he could become invisible all but his hands and arms, which explains the mysterious hands and arms which have played such a great part in all of the past crimes.

After a short time Ashleigh is captured and taken to Quest's, where the electric thought transferer apparatus is placed upon his head and then upon the mirror in front of him appears all of the crimes for which Craig had been hounded from continent to continent. Quest removes the band from the head of Ashleigh and asks him to write a confession. The cunning man asks for his own pen which he carries with him, writes a confession, which clears Craig, and then injects the point of the pen into his arm and as he sinks back dying he asks Quest if he does not remember "the poison of the desert."

Laura says "yes" to the inspector's proposal and Quest and Lenora leave for the minister's to be married.

"The Romance of Elaine"

THE Pathe Company is off on its new serial "The Romance of Elaine," which continues the adventures of the pretty heroine in "The Exploits" and "The New Exploits of Elaine," and the first episode of the new serial which is entitled "The Lost Torpedo" was shown to Chicago exhibitors last week. The new serial features Lionel Barrymore in the role of the hero, in the place of Craig Kennedy, who as exhibitors will recall evidently went to his death in the last episode of "The New Exploits." Pearl White still enacts the part of Elaine, Creighton James is still playing Jameson, assistant to Kennedy; and the villain in the new production is a mysterious gentleman whose identity has not yet been revealed.

Action of the same vivid kind that made the previous "Exploits of Elaine" so popular with both exhibitors and the public seems likely to mark the new serial, for the first episode is jammed with thrill and shifting complexities of plot, together with the use of scientific apparatus, as were the former serials.

As the story begins a submarine rises from the depths of the ocean, and a fisherman, concealed behind a rock on the shore, is amazed to note a tall young man leaping from the conning tower of the submarine into the waves and swimming ashore. Later, this same young man, a distinguished looking foreigner, registers at a prominent hotel in New York as Marcius Del Mar, and his card announces that he is a special investigator.

The foreigner goes out on business of some sort, and in his absence a gray haired old gentleman in silk hat and frock coat breaks into his apartment and searches all the belongings of the strange Del Mar. After examining all the drawers, the book-cases, and even the upholstery of the furniture in the apartment, the old gentleman pockets a certain paper with evident glee and then departs.

Meanwhile Elaine and Jameson are visited at Elaine's country home by the distinguished looking foreigner who reveals himself as a secret service agent from Washington and begs for information with regard to Kennedy and the lost torpedo, which the detective had invented and which was stolen after it had been sent to Washington for purchase by the government.

Del Mar and Elaine are shot.

Elaine's dog unearths the torpedo, which in the last episode of "The New Exploits of Elaine" was hidden in a flower pot by one of Wu Fang's assistants. The dog carries the model of the torpedo to a room in the upper part of the house and there conceals it in a closet, shutting the door with his forepaws after dropping the torpedo.

Del Mar, who finds a tiny section broken off from the propeller of this model and discovers Elaine in the vicinity instantly suspects the girl of making way with the weapon that he had come to seek.

About this same time the mysterious old gentleman who had overcome Del Mar's servant makes his way stealthily into the grounds of Elaine's home and is there surprised by assistants of Del Mar's who have surrounded the house. Finding himself cornered, the old gentleman rushes madly from one room to another and then finds refuge in the library.

There he is confronted by Del Mar and Elaine and shoots them both with bullets containing a deadly gas, which temporarily puts them both to sleep. The old gentleman hastily doffs his frock coat, slips on a but-ties of the great office which the people have conferred upon him, and whose faithful discharge of those duties incurs the enmity of the political boss, which results in his being stripped of his office. The picture has many realistic scenes, notably those of the campaign speeches, the polls on election day, and the court of impeachment. Besides Mr. Sulzer, the cast includes Pauline Hall as Mrs. Morton; Edward P. Sullivan as the Boss; Miss Anna Logan as Ruth; Edward F. Roseman as Fordyce Manville; Miss Elsie Balfour as Edith; Bert Tuey as Archie Tally; Dorothy Kingdon as Grace Ferguson; Sidney D'Albrook as Fox; and Frank Tinney as a policy seller.

The governor refuses to appoint the boss' man to an important office which has the jurisdiction of large state funds. The boss threatens to have him removed, but the governor remains firm in his decision. Boss Tally then holds many conferences with his political lieutenants in which they frame up evidence on which to impeach the governor. The clerk in Tally's office tells his friend Ruth of the plot. Previous to this Ruth was engaged to Archie Tally, but his father's vigorous protests finally persuade him to break the engagement.

Ruth sees in this an opportunity to square accounts with the boss. With the help of her friend she succeeds in securing pictures of the conspirators and a dictagraph record of their conversation. Ruth then informs Fordyce Manville, the governor's secretary, of the evidence which she has secured. He warns her to be sure to be present at the trial with her evidence. The trial is rushed through and the court orders a ballot taken. Manville, acting as the governor's lawyer, asks for a postponement because of the expected arrival of an important witness. The request is denied. Ruth, who has been detained by some thugs in the employ of the boss, arrives too late. The governor is impeached on the first ballot.

Lubin's "Road O' Strife"

the cup that caused the horrible death of Jerome when he drank wine from it?

All of these questions, which are foremost in everyone's mind who is following the interesting Lubin serial, "Road O' Strife," are near a solution when chapter eleven or "The Valley of the Shadow" is brought to a close.

Alene is sentenced to be electrocuted and Robert Dane hearing of this, determines that he must solve the mystery of the silver drinking cup. He therefore goes to the district attorney's office and there asks to be shown the cup. The attorney shows it to Dane, but refuses to let him take it. Dane, therefore, starts to take the old silver cup from the attorney and grapples with him until an officer comes in, forcing him to leave without the cup.

Upon leaving the office of the district attorney, Dane goes back to the village and there secures some of the water which is claimed to be undrinkable. He carries this to his rooms in the city and prepares to make a test with it.

That night Robert Dane goes back to the building wherein the district attorney has his office, slips past a sleeping officer and is in the act of leaving with the cup when he is discovered. The officer whips out his revolver, fires three shots at Dane, one of them finding its mark.

Although he is wounded, Robert manages to escape by jumping onto the steps of a passing automobile and rides to his home. Meanwhile the officer calls in a detective and the district attorney and the latter tells them that Dane had come that afternoon to borrow the cup.

We last see Robert preparing to make the test with the undrinkable water which he had brought from the village and the old silver drinking cup, which had been the cause of Jerome's death.

Two New "Rafferty" Pictures

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE humor which followed in the wake of "Rafferty Settles the War" and "Rafferty Stops a Marathon Runner," the first two releases of the All-Celtic Film Company, is more than doubled in their next two offerings, "Rafferty at the Hotel De Rest" and "Rafferty Goes to Coney Island." The comedy in these pictures lies in their true-to-life character portrayals.

Primarily, of course, they are Irish comedies, dwelling at length upon the adventures of one Rafferty, a financially comfortable son of Erin, who, despite his old age, has a half-grown boy's propensity for getting into trouble. His readiness at paying for the damages involved and his willingness to forgive, earn for him the name of "Peaceful Rafferty." Charles C. O'Hara, president of the All-Celtic concern, writes the stories which are produced under the supervision of J. A. Fitzgerald. Joseph Sullivan is featured as Rafferty, and receives valiant support from a willing cast headed by Peggy Shannon.

The first of the two new pictures, now ready to be released through the World Film Corporation, "Rafferty at the Hotel De Rest," deals with Rafferty's infatuation for a pretty, but fickle, young miss. He becomes acquainted with her while waiting, with several others, in the ante-room of a doctor's office. While Rafferty is undergoing the physician's rather strenuous examination, the "several others" also make the girl's acquaintance. Consequently, when the whole group is consigned to the Hotel De Rest, there is much rivalry for the fair one's affection. One night the nightgowned suitors mistake the loudly spoken "Fire!

Fire!" of an orator for an alarm. Their unceremonious entrance into the lobby causes so much laughter that they leave the next day.

Here "Rafferty Goes to Coney Island" picks up the story, and injects considerable excitement and stern, but romantic, experience into the lives of the love-sick trio. Rafferty follows his good-looking feminine friend to Coney Island, and, after a harrowing auto ride that would dishearten anyone but a lover trying to fight competition, the other two also succeed in reaching the amusement grounds. Rafferty learns of their arrival from a fortune teller while the girl, in the next booth, is told of how she will eventually scorn her three ardent suitors and meet a handsome and wealthy young fellow. The latter prophecy comes true, and Rafferty and his two rivals bury their enmities in the common cause of praying that they may never be afflicted with love again.

Vitagraph's "The Goddess"

CELESTIA enters a veritable nest of misfortune in the sixth chapter of the Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess." Having no home, she decides to live with the family which she saved from eviction. During the first hour of her visit she convinces an angry father that kind treatment and confidence in his son has a more uplifting effect on him than brutal chastisement; she revives in a girl's heart the affection which she should have for her mother, and moves her to give up her immoral life and reform; saves an old couple from suicide; and awakens honor and respect in a youth who has previously known only the wicked inclination to kill and steal.

These various problems which Celestia solves with a disarming smile and a few kind words of advice have arisen from a bad combination of demoralizing environment and poor financial circumstances. The poverty-stricken district which she takes under her protective wing is exactly the field in which the financial triumvirate meant her to propagate the new reform doctrine when they had her released from the cave, which she had been led to believe was Heaven.

The end of the last chapter found Celestia administering to the poor on the East Side. She saves a family from eviction, and, not having any home herself, asks to be allowed to live with them. The mother, father, and Nellie, a sweatshop worker, consent gladly. Several times during the evening meal Celestia's attention is caught by angry voices and sounds of a struggle coming from the hall. Each time she starts to investigate, but the others advise her to continue eating as she is liable to hear most anything in that tenement house.

The sounds growing louder, Celestia rushes out into the hall to find an enormously large man beating his son whom, he claims, stole some money from him. The goddess induces him to give the young man another chance. Thinking that the dingy tenement may house others who are in need of a little inspiration and encouragement, Celestia visits other apartments.

In one of them she succeeds in turning a girl from a life of shame to the obligation and affection which she owes to her mother. She enters another apartment just in time to prevent an aged and discouraged couple from committing suicide. As she is about to re-enter the apartment which she has chosen as her home, she is confronted at the door by Freddy, "the Ferret." His first intention of striking the girl is overcome by her innocent stare and child-like confidence in him, and he follows her into the room, a faithful convert. In the meantime Stilleter has learned of Celestia's East Side residence. He informs Barclay, Tommy's father and one of the financial triumvirate, and is told to let her continue with her work, so that they can see how her teachings are being received.

"Silent Bill" Haddock is a native of Portsmouth, N. H., and received his education in the Boston schools, including Burdette College. He got the name of "Silent Bill" because nobody could hear him while cannons were being fired in a big battle scene. He is one of the earliest moving picture directors, having been with the Edison Company at the time of the famous "Casey" series. He was active in amateur dramatic work in Boston in his youth. His first professional engagement was with the Castle Square Stock Company of that city. After two years with that company he went on the road, and also put in several years with stock companies, playing many sorts of parts. For four years thereafter he was with Edward E. Rose as stage manager and assistant. For the past three years he has been president of the Actors' Society. He is also a member of the Masons, the Elks, Odd Fellows, Screen Club, and Sons of Veterans. He was with the Edison Company for two years, then joined the Melies Company for a similar period, after which he went with the Eclair for about the same space of time. For the All Star Company he directed "Paid in Full" and for the Life Photo Film Corporation, "The Banker's Daughter." Recently he has been with the Kalem Company and is now directing for the Gotham Film Company of New York.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago branch of the V. L. S. E., is quite an "old-timer," as time and film history are now reckoned. He has been active for more than a decade in Chicago motion picture circles; first as president and general manager of the American Film Service, which he organized in 1905, and then as manager of the three Chicago offices of the General Film Company, with whom he remained until his present connection. Mr. Van Ronkel has been continuously engaged in the film business since the days when a dozen reels and a desk constituted a film exchange. He has been a participant in the rapid strides of the industry, and is, therefore, well equipped for his new undertaking. Mr. Van Ronkel says: "I have noted with a great deal of satisfaction, the retirement of inferior films, and the introduction of the magnificent productions as represented by the features being released by the Big Four. My highest ideals have been surpassed and most visionary dreams realized in the subjects now offered by the V. L. S. E. combination. The high standard they have set will give the moving picture industry a new impetus. They will meet the demands of the critics who have been clamoring for more art in film production."

The most radical departure in motion pictures yet attempted has been announced by the Vitagraph Company of America, through the engagement of David Bispham, the noted opera concert singer and composer to appear in pictures. The engagement of Mr. Bispham, whose first appearance on the screen will be as Beethoven, in the opera "Adelaide," is intended to be the first of a series of a similar nature.

J. C. Hackett who plays the role of confidential secretary to Richard Ward (Cyril Keightley) in George Kleine's splendid film version of Porter Emerson Browne's "The Spendthrift," for release June 21, enjoys the unique distinction of being the only American actor who ever led a Chinese cruiser into action.

Oscar A. C. Lund is still in San Francisco where he is engaged in staging Chinatown and waterfront exteriors in the production of his first five-reel Universal feature, "Just Jim," a story of Chinese smuggling.

The Ogden, Utah, newspapers are devoting extended space to the forthcoming visit to that city of the Selig Exposition Flyer which leaves Chicago, Ill., on Thursday, July 8th, for a seventeen days' tour of the West. The attention of the city officials of Ogden have been called to the approaching visit of the Selig party and arrangements will be started at once for a reception and an extended trip through the canyon.

Buckley Starkey has gone to Bear Mountain, New York, with the company producing "The Cub" for the Peerless Feature Film Service.

A star part that has been a sort of a family heirloom—that of playing the child star in "The Poor Little Rich Girl"—has yielded up to Edison one of the cleverest little leading ladies on the stage in the person of Leonie Flugarth who is with that company again.

In order to broaden the scope of its work and carry out the big producing plans ahead, the Lubin Company will open another big studio plant in Philadelphia within the next few weeks, to be known as Lubin Plant No. 3. The new studio is situated at 17th street and Glenwood avenue, a short distance from the Lubin main headquarters at 20th street and Indiana avenue.

North American Film Corporation—From the best available figures that can be obtained, the following table will give an interesting comparison between the first five weeks' progress of the most successful of all serials—the "Million Dollar Mystery" and "The Diamond from the Sky," produced by the North American Film Corporation, which promises at this stage to be at least the second most successful. Necessarily, the figures are somewhat approximate as the contracts in force at any one particular date are difficult to determine in terms of definiteness. Contracts in the mail and those being returned, owing to requested changes of date and extension or contraction of schedules representing negotiations not concluded, make these figures—while not absolutely correct for the reason above given—sufficiently so to indicate in a very decided way the unusual success which the North American Film Corporation is scoring:

	Release Date	2 Weeks After Release	5 Weeks After Release
"Million Dollar Mystery"	$325,000	$440,000	$525,000
"Diamond from Sky"	355,000	550,000	690,000

Mutual Film Corporation—That a general shakeup in the Mutual organization is bound to occur will be definitely proven this week. The expected changes will not only affect the policy, but officials as well. Earnings are lower and there have been sales of the common stock as low as 66 as against 88 not many weeks ago. If the hoped for program is put through, while the pressure of stock offered will carry quotations somewhat lower, we predict that the stock will ultimately reach as high a figure as it has ever commanded.

Reliance Motion Picture Corporation—Stock is offered freely, but it is difficult to get bids.

Irene Fenwick, star of this season's greatest Broadway success, "The Song of Songs," and featured in the George Kleine film productions of "The Commuters" and "The Spendthrift," last week finished her long engagement at the Eltinge Theater, New York, and for the rest of the summer will devote her talents entirely to the forthcoming Kleine Features.

The genial S. M. Spedon planned a trip to Pennsylvania to attend the exhibitors' convention of that state. To Mr. Spedon falls the task of spreading the good fellowship of the Vitagraph Company and it is in capable hands, according to all reports.

One hundred and fifty delegates to the National Young Men's Christian Association annual conference at Asilomar, near Monterey, California, drove over from Los Angeles recently to Universal City and inspected the plant from zoo-town to the new post-office.

Ruth Stonehouse has returned to Chicago from Chattanooga, tenn., where she joined the Essanay southern company to take the lead in "The Dignified Family," a three-act photoplay.

Since his removal from the hospital to the home of his mother in Hollywood, J. Warren Kerrigan, the popular Universal star, is reported to be recovering much more rapidly from the effects of his recent operation than before.

"For the Honor of the Crew," a four-reel comedy drama of college life which the Vitagraph Company of America is producing, will serve to bring before the public William P. S. Earle of the Vitagraph forces as a director and also as an author. Work has been started on this feature with Antonio Moreno and James Morrison in the leading roles, supported by Muriel Ostriche.

E. H. Calvert and the company of Essanay players at Chattanooga, Tenn., have begun the production of the famous Tish stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Marshall Neilan is "papa" now. Gertrude Bambrick is the party of the first part. A wonderful ten-pound boy is announced in a wire from the little mother, now in New York, to Papa Neilan, director at the Los Angeles studios of the Selig Polyscope Company.

Phroso, known to vaudeville as "the mechanical man," and as one of the highest-priced stars in the business, has just finished his first picture for the Universal Film Company.

Mr. Harry Mestayer, the notable star, who has been taking leading parts in Selig Red Seal Plays will leave next week for Los Angeles, California, where he will join the Selig Pacific Coast stock companies. Mr. Otis Harlan, the famous comedian is expected in Chicago soon, where he will take the leading character roles. Mr. Harlan's first appearance in Selig Red Seal plays will probably be in Hoyt's "A Black Sheep," to be directed by T. N. Heffron.

Margaret Loveridge has settled down in California and become a permanent member of the Mutual stock company at Hollywood. Her first appearance was made in the one-reel drama, "The Housemaid."

Herbert Rawlinson, the handsome leading man (Sanford Quest) in the "Black Box" serial, plays the "heavy" in "Homage," a feature production which will soon be released by the Universal.

Monday marks the departure for South Bethlehem, Pa., of Robert Edeson and a company of Vitagraph players for the filming of scenes in the steel works there. Mr. J. Stuart Blackton arranged with H. C. Frick for the pictures to be made.

A new star has joined the American forces—Helen Rosson—she is only seventeen years old. A great future is said to be in store for her.

George Larkin, recently star of the "Trey o' Hearts" series, has been engaged as leading man at the Selig Jungle Zoo.

Mae Marsh, the Mutual actress, is back at Hollywood after a visit to the San Francisco fair with her mother, and, among other things, reports her first speaking stage appearance. While away Miss Marsh attended a showing of "The Victim," a Mutual Masterpiece in which she and Robert Harron are starred. After the picture had been shown a spot light was turned on Miss Marsh and the applause was so great that Miss Marsh had to climb to the stage and make a speech.

Beatriz Michelena had a narrow escape from serious injury last week while acting before the camera at San Rafael. She was riding bare back in one of the final scenes of "A Phyllis of the Sierras," when her horse began suddenly to buck. The leading lady was taken entirely unawares and, although an expert horsewoman, was thrown from the mount before she could adjust herself to the animal's unexpected lunge.

Sir Gilbert Parker, who was made a baronet on the occasion of King George's birthday, has consented to the filming by the Reliance company of his novel, "Jordan is a Hard Road," and it will be made into a Mutual Masterpicture at the Hollywood studios.

Harry Myers, Comedy Director of the Universal Film Company located at the Coytesville studios, received a rather pathetic letter recently from one of the soldiers in the Allies' trenches in Belgium asking him to forward some of his comedy pictures. Mr. Myers turned the letter over to Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, with the result that a cablegram was sent to the London Exchange ordering them to supply all such films gratis. A Powers projecting machine was procured and now when the first line men are relieved and are marched to the rear for the customary three days' rest, the monotony is relieved by these pictures and Mr. Myers will no doubt receive an expression of gratitude in the near future for the interest he has shown in the matter.

Fred Dobson, one of the oldest and best known camera men in the business, has been engaged at the Morosco-Bosworth studios. "Dob," as he is popularly known, started with the motion picture industry in 1898 with the Biograph and put over some big things for this concern.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the new Rialto Theater at 42nd street and Broadway, announced yesterday that he had placed under contract as organist for the new theater, Alfred G. Robyn, the well known composer and director.

George O. Nichols, who recently joined the Selig Western Stock Companies as a director, has enjoyed fifteen years in the theatrical business as an actor and stage director.

Earl Sibley, rated one of the three leading experts in all pertaining to the scenic and carpentry departments, has joined the Morosco-Bosworth as technical director.

Charles H. Prince, for a number of years with Cohan & Harris, Klaw & Erlanger and Shubert Productions and who is now playing his third picture engagement with the B. A. Rolfe Company supporting William Faversham in "The Right of Way," has been engaged by the Gotham Film Co. for their next release.

Carl Anderson, who, for the past year has been acting in the capacity of business manager for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, resigned his position with that concern last week and started with the Metro Pictures Corporation this week in the same official capacity.

Jack Conway formerly a leading man at the Reliance-Majestic studios has been made a director. He is now engaged on his first effort, a two-reel Majestic, "The Old High-Chair."

Mack Sennett is himself playing an important role in the first of the pictures in which Raymond Hitchcock is appearing. Mabel Normand, Owen Moore, Mrs. Davenport and other Keystone stars are in the cast.

Rajah Singh has joined the staff of Mack Sennett, famous producer of screen-comedies.

Wilbur Highby, best known on the speaking stage as the creator of types of eccentric character, has been engaged for prominent character parts with the Griffith players at the Reliance-Majestic studios.

Among the important releases of the Metro Pictures Corporation during the forthcoming hot months will be four of the most important yet made by that concern: William Faversham, Mme. Petrova, Francis X. Bushman and Edward Connelly will be seen respectively in "The Right of Way," "Man and Woman," "The Second in Command," and "Marsa Covington."

The recent exhibitors' convention at Reading, Pa., proved to be an unusually fertile field for the representatives of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, of 1478 Broadway, New York. Besides making a number of sales on the floor, they had an attractive display booth, and succeeded in interesting many of the most prominent exhibitors in the state in the value and efficiency of their product, a ticket seller which cannot make mistakes and which cuts the cashier's labor in half, doubling the ease and speed with which large crowds are handled.

The Globe Feature Picture Booking Office, Inc., of 1564 Broadway, A. J. Duffy, general manager, announces that it can guarantee one thousand days' booking in the United States and Canada, to any four, five, six or seven-reel feature photoplay it accepts.

Edison Director Richard Ridgely, has just completed another big five-part feature subject which is slated for release this month and which is claimed will prove a sensation as it introduces some new and startling lighting effects heretofore unknown to pictures.

E. C. Wolf has resigned the assistant managing editorship of the Ladies' Home Journal to take an interest in and become secretary-treasurer of the Dyer Film Co., with headquarters in New York City.

Mr. Kaufman, the photographer who took pictures for Dr. George A. Dorsey on his tour, has been gone from the United States nine months. During that time, he used up about seventy-five thousand feet or more of film on the countries of Japan, China, India, Ceylon, Borneo and Siam. He was entertained the night of his arrival in Chicago at a dinner at the Press Club where he told how the Maharaj Kumvar Bhupal Singhji came to see his first motion pictures last March.

J. Warren Kerrigan and a company of players will go to Honolulu this summer to film a series of pictures. Jacques Jaccard is to direct him. Previous to that, he proposes to go to La Jolla with his company to recuperate and also to work.

Philip Mindil, who conducted the wide-spread publicity and advertising campaign for Lady Mackenzie prior to the opening of her big game pictures at the Lyceum theater and under whose management that entertainment was presented, has severed his connection with the company.

Virginia Kirtley has returned to the Selig Polyscope Company after a short absence.

F. McMillan, head of the E. E. Fulton Company, the big motion picture supply house of Chicago, paid a visit of inspection to the St. Louis office and factory of the Minusa Cine Products Company last week. The officials of the

NEW YORK.

Howard Beach Estates has sold to Thomas P. Dunn and associates a business plot, 40x100, in Cramp place, near the Long Island Railway station, New York. The purchasers will erect a moving picture theater, which has been needed by the residents of this attractive shore front community on Jamaica Bay.

Cortelyou Amusement Company, Incorporated, Brooklyn—General motion picture business; capital, $75,000. Incorporators: A. H. Schwartz, 233 East 25th street, Brooklyn; B. Herman, 2941 Broadway; H. Stone, 136 Fourth avenue., New York city.

Announcement was made recently of elaborate changes that are to transform the present Hammerstein's Victoria theater, New York, a home of vaudeville for many years, into the Rialto, which the management expects to make the handsomest motion picture theater in the country. S. L. Rothapfel is vice-president and general director of the Rialto, and associated with him are Crawford Livingston and Felix Kahn, bankers.

The management of the Hippodrome theater on West Market street, York City, has announced the exclusive showing of only high-class films.

T. H. McHale & Sons, of Syracuse, are preparing plans for a moving picture theater for John M. Pitt and his brother, D. C. Pitt. The building will be two stories high, 40x120 feet, and erected on the Broomhall homestead at 29 West Pulteney street, Corning.

Stereo Projection Corporation, Manhattan—Conduct theaters, general motion picture business; capital, $100,000. Incorporators: M. Spiegel, E. Spiegel, H. Waterson, Strand Theater, New York city.

NORTH DAKOTA.

The Scenic theater in Libson will shortly be completed.

Progress is being made on the Lyric theater at Park River.

The Bijou theater, the first moving picture theater to be established in Fargo and which, since it started in April of 1906, has been owned and operated by J. F. Treat and Walter Treat, has been sold to the American Amusement Co., a corporation of Minneapolis. Beginning July 1 the new owners will rebuild the space now occupied by the theater and the Bijou candy mart, extending the building back to the alley and making of it the largest moving picture theater on one floor west of Chicago. The new theater will be equipped with all the latest and best that can be obtained. The seating capacity will be over 1,000.

OHIO.

Mrs. R. C. Howell has purchased the Olympia picture theater in Wapakoneta from the Starr & Whipple Amusement Company.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The opening of the Orpheum theater at Allentown as a motion picture theater was held on June 1.

A contract has been awarded to Rose and Fisher for the erection of a fireproof moving picture theater at Perrysville avenue and Taggart street, Pittsburgh, for Morris Einstein, the building to cost $15,000.

W. J. E. Collins, who owns and has operated a moving picture theater at Waynesboro for the past eight years, disposed of the business to Harry S. Lesher, a retired merchant.

An example of the care and attention that is given to every detail of the exhibition of motion pictures nowadays, is evidenced in the action of the Grand theater, of Williamsport, who have had an expert survey made of the projection possibilities of the theater, by the Ludwig Hommel Company, of Pittsburgh. A Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, size 13x17, made to order from the specifications of the survey, will be installed to meet the projection condition of the Grand.

James K. Bowen, manager of the Pergola theater in Allentown, recently purchased the Nedson theater on Allen and Tilghman streets. The house will be managed by D. E. Knorr. Plans are under way for many improvements to the playhouse, and the seating capacity will be increased two hundred and fifty.

Fire Chief George W. Miller completed his semi-annual inspection of fire extinguishers at all local theaters, picture shows and halls where public entertainments are held in Reading and found them all in good condition.

The motion picture theater located at Fourth avenue, near Sixth street, in Juniata, and until recently conducted by M. V. Orner, has been purchased by Silverman Bros., of Altoona, present owners of the Pastime theater. Isaac Slutzker has been installed as manager.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

J. Lee Stone, one of the proprietors of the Hub theater in Hickory, will open a moving picture show in the building occupied by Lowe and Company.

Columbia's newest motion picture theater, the New Pastime, had its formal opening June 1.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Valley of the Shadow—(EPISODE ELEVEN OF "THE ROAD O' STRIFE")—LUBIN.—Alene is sentenced to be electrocuted, and Dane determines to get the old silver cup and to find out what it is that had killed Jerome. He manages by a clever ruse to secure the cup, but is injured badly in his escape. We last see him starting to make a test with the cup and some of the "undrinkable" water from the village. For further review see page 1060, this issue. J. C. G.

The War o' Dreams—(THREE REELS)—SELIG—JULY 1.—Ensign, an old inventor, invents a chemical which has the power of destroying many lives. This invention is on the point of being sold to his government for use in the war when Ensign dreams of all the horrors that would result if he sold the formula to his government. When they come for the papers he tears them up. For further review, see page 1053, this issue. J. C. G.

Mr. Jarr and Love's Young Dream—VITAGRAPH—JUNE 2.—Jack Silver, Jarr's young bachelor friend, comes into a big fortune and the Cackleberry girls, visiting the Jarrs, draw cards to see who shall set their cap for the young man. Gladys wins and Irene, jealous of her sister, puts a few sprays of poison ivy in the rose bouquet for the wedding. The box of roses is delivered to Mr. Jarr, who takes the expressman around to Gus' Place for a treat. The cover of the box comes off and his friends all take a whiff of the flowers. The same thing happens at Jarr's home. Jack's best man has his troubles when he discovers that the groom is sick abed with the poison. He calls on the Jarrs and finds that all but Mrs. Jarr has fallen a victim to the poison. Irene arrives and confesses her guilt. The flowers are thrown out of the window and land on the head of Jabez Smith.

Rector's at Seven—VITAGRAPH—JUNE 2.—Kate Price and Hughie Mack featured. Professor Alonzo White invites his wife to dine with him at Rector's at seven. At the same time Hughey White, after a flirtation with Fifi Flutter, invites her to dine with him at the same place. Both men order private dining rooms, and Mrs. White, a big strapping woman, is ushered into Hughey's room, where Fifi is waiting. Much excitement results from this, and meanwhile Nick Hotstuff, Fifi's jealous lover, comes to Hughey's little supper and proves a veritable spectre at the feast. After much excitement things are finally settled and the magistrate unites Fifi and Nick in marriage.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 47—SELIG—JUNE 14.—Children of public schools swarm over the dreadnaughts at Brooklyn Navy Yard, New York; Miss Spokane pays a visit to Panama-Pacific International Exposition; midshipmen of the United States Naval Academy are given diplomas by Secretary Daniels of the Navy Department; exclusive fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; alumni of the Coast Guard Service, who become Revenue Cutter officers, return for reunion, New London, Conn.; German troops clearing debris from the streets of a town shelled and captured by the Teutons; Italians in London made happy because their nation has entered the war; Italian reservists sail for their own country to join army; William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state, resigns portfolio.

The Animated Grouch Chaser—EDISON—JUNE 16.—Raymond McKee and Jean Dumar are here seen as a young couple who try often and unsuccessfully to elude the watchful gaze of their chaperon. As a last resort, the young fellow gives her a book of Roual Barre's cartoons to look at. She becomes so engrossed in the animated caricatures that she forgets all about her daughter and her caller. The last sketch, a humorous conception of the usefulness of a chaperon, brings the mother to a realization of how unnecessarily domineering she is, and she leaves the couple alone. C. R. C.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 48—HEARST-SELIG—JUNE 17.—Memorial services held for fallen aviators at Mt. Tamalpais, Cal.; Brookline, Mass., high school pupils hold field day exercises; Mt. Lassen, Cal., only active volacno in United States, breaks into eruption; test made of armored motor at Kenosha, Wis.; Harvard crews train before annual races with Yale; Robert Lansing, secretary of state ad interim, poses with former Secretary Bryan; fashions, by Lucile (Lady Duff-Gordon); Thomas A. Edison greets Chinese Commercial Commissioners at West Orange, N. J.; Governor Whitman of New York at New York day celebration in San Francisco; cadets at West Point receive diplomas.

The Condemning Circumstance—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 21.—Charles Perley, Madge Kirby and Augusta Anderson featured. Theda Valencia reads a newspaper account of Charles Hall's engagement to Mae Allen. She sends him a note telling him she will give Miss Allen his love letters to her. He comes to her and says, "If you send those letters, I will kill myself." Her answer is "You can't frighten me with that revolver." Her Japanese butler overhears these words and later, when his mistress is found shot with Hall bending over her body, he repeats them to the police. Mae Allen visits her fiance in prison and determines to discover the truth. With a detective she visits the woman's home and there finds bits of a letter from a doctor wherein he had told her that she had an incurable disease. It is later discovered that the woman had killed herself of this malady.

Work—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—JUNE 21.—Featuring Charley Chaplin as an assistant to a paper hanger. He is called in to decorate a beautiful home, and is made to haul the wagon and in doing so blocks traffic, falls down a man hole, but eventually reaches the place where he and his boss proceed leisurely to work. They daub the rooms indiscriminately with paste and finally nearly wreck it. A flirt comes to call on the lady of the house and is discovered by her husband, who fires his revolver. The bullet goes through the floor and pings Chaplin. Finally they all rush downstairs just as a gas stove explodes. The walls in the kitchen are blown out and all buried in the debris. Chaplin opens the door of the stove and comes out smiling. J. C. G.

The Man Who Found Out—ESSANAY—JUNE 21.—Sydney Ainsworth and Beverly Bayne featured. The man while in a railroad coach dreams that his wife is untrue to him. He wakes up with a start and upon his arrival home in a nervous apprehension, and he misconstrues everything his wife does in suspicious circumstances. He throws open the bathroom door and there finds a man and he heaps accusations upon his wife, who tells him it is the plumber. The man begs his wife's forgiveness and he learns a lesson.

The Missing Man—(TWO REELS)—KALEM—JUNE 21.—Burke, a safeblower, is tracked by Detective Drydan to Benson, Arizona. Burke learns that a shipment of bullion is expected on the fast mail, and he arranges a holdup. Betty, the daughter of the operator at Benson, learns of the plot and flashes a warning to Joe, her lover, at the Benson station. Joe notifies the sheriff and both set out for the scene of the intended holdup. Here Joe saves Betty's life and the battle ends when the crook crashes against the corridor railing, which gives way, hurling him to his death. Joe and the sheriff then capture the other desperadoes. Elizabeth Baird and Fred Church featured.

The Kick Out — (Three Reels) — Knickerbocker—June 21.—Ralph Stuart featured as the mayor, who is suspected by a people who had been driven to desperation by the graft and cunning of the party in the lead. The mayor is neither to be pushed nor bought, but holds to a just investigation of the entire political situation. The Boss holds the city in his relentless grip, but the mayor wins out in the fight, through the assistance of his daughter and a newspaper man, only to have the people turn against him, believing him to be the real culprit, and he is attacked in his own home. A realistic fight follows and finally the reporter enters, faces the people and tells them that the mayor is their freind. The mayor, torn and bleeding, smiles on the union of his daughter and the reporter, a reward for the valor of the young newspaper man.

The Fortunes of Mariana — (Two Reels) — Selig — June 21.—Mariana, a little newsgirl, is seen by Northrup, a prominent attorney, and they become friends. Her brother Hinky one day is pursued by the police and comes to the house while Northrup is there, and the attorney and Mariana hide him and tell the police that they do not know of his whereabouts. Some time later Northrup gets his sister to give Mariana the position of maid in her home. The girl is happy there until one day her brother forces her to let him in and he steals from Mariana's mistress. Later she overhears a plot to ruin Northrup, outwits the plotters and saves Northrup's life.

The Girl Hater—Biograph—June 22.—Jack Mulhall and Irma Dawkins featured. Ralph Morgan's great desire is that his son, who declares he hates girls, marry his young ward. The father schemes with the housekeeper and when the girl returns from boarding school she is made help with the housework. John, the girl hater, feeling sorry for the slavey, comes to the rescue of beauty in distress, and marries her. His father waits till the knot is tied and then explains and John, aghast, stammers, "I—I forgot myself."

The Wives of Men—(Two Reels)—Biograph—June 22.—Alan Hale and Helen Bray featured with an all-star cast. The chief engineer from the Eastern office is sent to take charge of the construction work. He arrives and discharges the foreman. Upon the foreman's arrival home he maltreats his wife and cripple son, and his wife goes to plead with the engineer for her husband's job. The engineer's pretty young bride sides with her and the foreman is ordered to report for work. Some time later two little strangers come to the camp, one to the engineer's home and one to the ex-foreman's lonely shack, but with the first came the angel of death. When the engineer implored the humble mother to let his wife have her baby, the husband placed a horrible misconstruction upon the woman's visit to the engineer's home and he kills himself. The ex-foreman's wife had paid the price of gratitude.

In High Society—Kalem—June 22.—Bud tells Ham how easy it would be to rob the guests at the masque ball to be given by Gottrox, the pickle king. That night Ham and Bud find Golden, the Gottrox heiress, spooning with Dick, her sweetheart. Mrs. Gottrox is anxious to have her daughter wed Count Vodka, but Ham presently discovers that the count is really Raffles. Ham sees the count rob Mrs. Gottrox of a diamond pendant, and a few minutes later Ham steals it from the original thief. Bud eventually steals the jewel from his pal and, deeply smitten with Golden, presents her with the necklace Ham had stolen from her mother. The girl recognizes the jewel and cries for help and both Ham and Bud are set upon by the guests.

Father Said He'd Fix It—Lubin—June 22.—Mrs. Mattie Wash objects to the attention paid by Deacon Dark's son, Luke, to Lynthia, her daughter. The deacon's pride is given a shaking up by this and in a rage says that he will teach Mattie a thing or two. He goes to the widow's house and, instead of smoothing it for Luke, sets to work to win the widow for himself. Luke and Lynthia think their own marriage is a settled matter when the widow nods her consent, but the deacon says it must never be. Both couples plan an elopement on the same night and a typical negro wedding follows. On the same reel:

With the Help of the Ladies—Lubin—June 22.—Chief of Police Miles takes Green, his lieutenant, to his home. They dress in female attire and provide themselves with hand bags and sally forth to await the visit of purse snatchers. Hogan, the purse snatcher, pounces upon the hand bags, but when the ladies give chase the result is deplorable. The purse snatcher runs into Mrs. Miles. She grabs the villain and recognizes her gowns on the strangers. They are bundled off to the station and there their identity is discovered.

Braga's Double—(Two Reels)—Lubin—June 22.—Sheldon Lewis and Nell Craig featured. Braga, a saturnine-faced Argentino, is a criminal by instinct, and sends Dominica Menduna, a beautiful girl, to the cafes to find a double for him. Dominica finds the double in the person of Taylor, a mining man, and the complications which arise give them both much to do. Dominica conceives a feeling for Taylor that is just a little warmer than respect. Braga's jealousy is aroused and he is left in a rage and disgust by Dominica. For further review see page 1052, this issue. J. C. G.

With the Aid of the Law—Selig—June 22.—Lee Russell leaves the city for a vacation in the mountains. He is seen near a still run by Jeff Smith and Joe Butler and shot and badly injured. Under the care of Rose, Butler's daughter, Lee recovers from his wound and also finds himself in love with the girl. Jeff, who is also in love with the girl, notices this and tries to shoot Russell, but the girl prevents him and revenue officers, hearing the struggle, come in and arrest Jeff.

The Fable of the Search for Climate—Essanay—June 23.—Once there was a poor gloomer who had gone all over the globe to find a climate which would enable him to rise each morning fit as a fiddle. Yet from month to month his health didn't improve. He arrives back in the land of dyspepsia and got ready to motor to the north woods, and when his car skidded he went up in the air and alighted on a farm. Here he was deprived of rye and bourbon and after a week had elapsed was feeling great. He returned to the city and all his friends said he was looking fine, and he learned that while he was out in the country he had mislaid his thirst.

The Vivisectionist — (Two Reels) — Kalem—June 23.—Cries heard coming from the house of Dr. Jardine cause the police to investigate. Lila, connected with the detective bureau, calls upon the doctor, but he convinces her that the cries heard came from the animals he used in his experiments. She is dissatisfied, however, and plans to unravel the mystery. This she does, and to the amazement of all informs the police that human beings instead of animals are being used by him in his experiments.

The Life Line—(Two Reels)—Lubin—June 23.—Rolf Howard, a bachelor, becomes interested in Mary, his stenographer. He decides to try an experiment upon her—to endeavor to lift her to an apreciation of higher things. Mary is not bad and has successfully resisted the advances of Tom Moran, a married man who is infatuated with her beauty. She decides to give up her life of frivolity and remains at home to read Rolf's books. Her brother, Dick, has stolen $1,000 from Moran and lost it in the races. That night Mary goes to the office and forges Rolf's name to a check and mails it to Moran. Moran returns the note and tells her to come to him, threatening exposure if she fails. Rolf, concerned by Mary's absence, goes to her rooms, finds the note and reaches Moran's apartments in time to save the girl. Later Rolf finds a vast difference in Mary and she becomes his wife.

The Onion Patch—Selig—June 23.—Jane Darrow, a maiden lady, is left sixty acres of land and plants it in onions. Joe Boyce, a young fellow, secures work with Jane and she is so pleased with his work as a farmhand that she tells him that they will operate the patch on a sharing basis. Later Joe meets Daisy, a young schoolma'am, and falls in love with her, but realizes that Jane owns the onion patch, so proposes to her, but she hides her emotions and tells him to wait and see how the onion patch comes out. Joe's onions turns out well and he marries Daisy, while Jane finds happiness elsewhere.

An Intercepted Vengeance—Vitagraph—June 23.—Jack Mower and George Stanley featured. Jim Henson, bad man, decides he will marry Bess, the daughter of Willard, and tells him he will marry his daughter or bust him up in business. Upon discovering that Bess has taken a liking to Colby, Jim is furious. Bess and the young Easterner fall in love with each other. The Easterner receives a note from Henson saying that he will come to kill him at six o'clock. That afternoon a pony creates havoc in Henson's grainfield and the rancher kills the horse, and when Gray Antelope, the owner of the pony, demands payment Henson sternly tosses him a dollar and rides away. Gray Antelope swears vengeance, calls some of the other braves, captures Henson, ties him to the tail of the horse by a long rope, and the animal is lashed into a mad gallop. When he is dragged into town he is dead and the vengeance has been intercepted by the vengeance of the Indian.

Her Convert—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 24.—Claire McDowell and Harry Carey featured. The old inventor's daughter makes a convert of a young crook and is engaged to marry him. The inventor's plans are stolen by an unscrupulous manufacturer and the crook goes to the manufacturer's office to secure the plans, but is surprised in the act by the manufacturer. He dives through the window, followed by a shot, and later staggers into the girl's home and returns the plans to her father. His daring action wins the old man's confidence and he reaps the reward of his efforts and goes straight.

A Hot Finish—ESSANAY—JUNE 24.—Marjorie Reiger and Harry Pollard featured. The girl, after reading a magazine article on how to become an actor, goes out of the house and sits on a bench, takes her magazine and starts to read, and presently drops asleep. She dreams that an actor comes to her home, they elope, and become famous on the stage. She is rudely awakened by her father, who goes in search for her, and he tears up the magazine and she decides to become reconciled to farm life.

The Dream Dance—(THREE REELS)—LUBIN—JUNE 24.—Leon, a young vicomte, falls in love with Mignon, whose portrait he painted, and they are secretly married. His painting wins first prize at the exhibition, and he goes to the Moulin Rouge, where he meets Pepita, a dancer, and forgets about Mignon. Leon is finally ejected from his apartments and everything is taken from him, but a large portrait of Pepita, which he hides. Pepita spurns him when she realizes that he can no longer give her luxury. Some time later Leon has a wonderful dream, the picture of Pepita comes to life and lures him on in a wild dance, and as he is about to clasp her in his arms she darts back into the picture. He awakes as there is a knock at the door and Mignon and her child come to seek husband and father.

The Stolen Case—MINA—JUNE 24.—Jerry escapes from prison and in a nearby town meets Prince Flivver, who has come to visit the rich Simpkins family. He purloins the Prince's suit case, which bears in large letters the name of the owner. Jerry is seen by Simpkins, who notices the suit case, and is soon muffled in an automobile and on his way to the Simpkins' mansion. Soon the Prince comes in and the scene that follows ends with Jerry being placed in the custody of officers, but later escaping from them.

What's Ours—VITAGRAPH—JUNE 24.—Muriel Ostriche and Andres Randolph featured. Sylvia Chase applies for a position at the glove counter at a big department store. Mrs. Burke, wife of a millionaire, becomes interested in the salesgirl and the two become great friends. Burton Tremper, the son of wealthy parents, comes to New York and falls in love with Sylvia. One of his friends writes to his mother that she is in danger of losing her son to a salesgirl. The girl goes to Mrs. Burke for advice, but the woman tells her that if he really loves her nothing will keep him away. Meanwhile Mrs. Tremper argues with her son, but all in vain, and finally, in a fit of anger, disinherits him. He takes it bravely, for he has learned to work, and returns to Sylvia, who says "Yes" to his ardent proposal.

Fighting Blood—(BIOGRAPH RE-ISSUE No. 3)—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 25.—Robert Harron and Florence LaBadie featured. The son of an old soldier has a sweetheart in the settlement and is on his way to visit her when his father orders him to stay at home. He insists on going and on his return finds the door closed against him. Wandering away he sees an Indian war party making for the settlement. He rushes to save his sweetheart, and rides away to summon the patrolling soldiers and he is pursued by the Indians. Back at the cabin his father and several neighbors make a determined stand against the Indians, and just as the last defences are being swept away, the besieged garrison hears a bugle. When the father learns that his son had saved the settlement he embraces him and the boy is forgiven.

Honor Thy Father—(THREE REELS)—KALEM—JUNE 25.—Roger Dayton's parents send him to law school, though to do so they have to mortgage their home. When the mortgage comes due, they cannot pay it off and are cast out. He is appointed prosecuting attorney and when his father is brought into court charged with stealing he leaves the court room and refuses to rescue him. The old man is placed in jail and occupies the same cell with Fenway, the husband of Alma, who has Roger in her clutches. He overhears them plotting to ruin Roger, and when Mrs. Dayton calls imparts to her what he overheard. She goes to Alma's apartments and there a quarrel ensues. As the two are struggling Roger enters and upbraids his mother. As she is leaving Fenway enters and Roger discovers the truth. Finally his worthlessness dawns upon him and he vows to care for his parents the rest of their lives.

Their First Quarrel—VITAGRAPH—JUNE 25.—Sidney Drew and Mrs. Sidney Drew featured. The Newlyweds are at breakfast when they receive a letter from a friend asking them to meet the party at the station. Mrs. Newlywed notices a sentence in the letter which reads, "The beautiful Miss Darling—you remember her—is with us." She asks her husband who "that person" is, and soon they are both in the midst of their first quarrel. After the tornado of emotion has blown over Mrs. Newlywed tells her husband that she is going to return to her mother, and to her surprise he gets a

Exhibitors —— are you buying hot air?

Is the article the salesman is trying to sell or rent you advertised in MOTOGRAPHY, the Motion Picture Trade Journal?

Would you rather book "Shot in the Foot" by the Fako Film Co., an irresponsible concern that does not advertise or would you in preference book some V. L. S. E., Mutual Masterpiece or other splendid features advertised in MOTOGRAPHY?

The advertised product is the reliable product. The manufacturers who consistently advertise their program or feature releases have a belief in their product. This belief must be well founded or they wouldn't spend their money to stand behind these films.

It is worth your while as a good showman to investigate the product of MOTOGRAPHY'S advertisers.

They stand behind their goods.

Lathrop, inspector of shipping, not to condemn the boat Estelle. A few days later the Estelle makes an excursion trip, crowded with women and children. The

Jane takes her place, and still holding the paper before her face, has King wait upon her. She is hurriedly called back to the china counter and leaves one of her slippers. Later, when the hack driver receives the shoes ordered by the society lady and his shoes go to the lady, King is at a loss to explain until he sees the mismated shoes on Jane, who has borrowed an old one from the landlady.

A Peach and a Pair—Nestor—June 22.—The pair, Eddie and Lee, make brave efforts to make a hit with the Peach they meet at the seashore. When the Peach leaves for home the honors are about even between Eddie and Lee. They each receive a letter from her saying that the one who gets to her home first will receive good news. After a race filled with mishaps of every description, Eddie arrives at the girl's house and is given a letter by the maid. Lee comes in just as Eddie opens the letter, which in effect tells him that she has gone to marry "a real man."

For the Honor of a Woman—(TWO REELS)—GOLD SEAL—JUNE 22.—Adventure number four in the "Under the Crescent" series. During a terrific sand storm the Prince, who has regained power over the three fugitives, abducts Zohra's baby. He places it in a small cavity in the ground, where later it is found by a Bedouin chief, Zohra's father. By a jewel hung around the neck of the child, the old man identifies its mother. He swears to kill her. Meanwhile, the forsaken mother has gone insane from the loss of her child.

A Mountain Melody—REX—JUNE 22.—Nancy Briggs and Mat Martin are mountain sweethearts. Nancy meets George Denton, who is on an outing, and occupies a cabin near the house where she lives with her father. She and Denton become quite friendly, which arouses the jealousy of Mat. While she is in the cabin listening to him play the violin, she sees the picture of a woman and child. She speaks of it and Denton tells her that it is his wife and child. She rushes from the place in tears and he is at a loss to know the reason. She returns to her father and refuses to explain her sudden grief. Mat, believing he knows the reason, goes to Denton's cabin and shoots at his shadow on the curtain. When he returns the girl surmises what has happened when she sees the gun, and tells him the truth. They are horror stricken, but later they see Denton walking toward them; his shadow was reflected from a mirror. Nancy then agrees to marry Mat.

A Boob's Romance—(TWO REELS)—LAEMMLE—JUNE 23.—The boob, working in a country store, fights with one of his customers. To escape the wrath of the farmer, the boob runs out of the store and jumps into a passing auto. To him the girl driving the car is the lady of his dreams, but to her he is a boob. He secures a job as extra in a traveling show. The girl and her father attend the performance. A fire breaks out in the theater and he saves her life. The next day he receives a letter thanking him and enclosing a check. He spends the money to get a college education. After graduating he returns a different man, and the girl willingly accepts him.

The Tinker of Stubbinville—BIG U—JUNE 24.—Featuring Murdock MacQuarrie. Will Harvey, a traveling tinker, calls at the house of Mary Haskins. Mary has no money, but she wishes to help Harvey, so she gives him food. In return, he mends her wash boiler. That night her husband returns home intoxicated. His brother remonstrates with him and in the quarrel that ensues, John knocks his brother down with a chair. Thinking he has killed him, John rushes out of the house. Mary goes in search of help and meets Harvey and tells him of the trouble. He finds John hiding in a deserted cabin. He tells John that his brother is not dead and urges him to go home and stop drinking, saying that he was born a hunchback because his drunkard father abused his mother at the time he was about to be born. John, who expects to be a father soon, thanks the hunchback and returns to his home to lead a better life.

Larry O'Neill, Gentleman—(TWO REELS)—IMP—JUNE 24.—Larry O'Neill is taken into the home of Sloane and is entertained by Sloane's wealthy friends.

Sloane does this to prove his assertion that he could take an intelligent man from the mills and make a gentleman of him merely by giving him the advantages of money and good society. Larry is a hit with Sloane's friends, but when he wins the love of Mildred, a wealthy girl, he decides to put an end to the masquerade and goes back to work at the mill. By study and hard work Larry earns a responsible position with the company. Later Mildred and Larry are married.

The 18-Carrot Mystery—POWERS—JUNE 24.—Detective Duck is engaged to guard the valuable jewels of Miss Millun during her reception. Lady Baffles, the famous crook, gains admission to the house, and it is only by the use of great detective skill that he finally foils the light-handed Lady Baffles. Max Asher and Gale Henry featured.

Conscience—(FOUR REELS)—IMP—JUNE 25.—Dave Wilson is convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence, and is electrocuted. One year later James Sprague, the criminologist, becomes interested in the case, as his friend, the warden of the prison, mentions it in his argument against capital punishment.

Sprague finally runs down the real murderer. At the close of the picture, Benson, the murderer, is seen in prison.

The Test of a Man—(Two Reels)—Bison—June 26.—Jack Arnold is put in charge of the construction of a spur for the Lake View railroad. He is in love with Dorothy Paxton, whose father is superintendent of the road. Made penniless by the destruction of his father's factory, Jack realizes that he must make good or lose Dorothy. The job is a big one and must be completed within a certain time. He is greatly hampered by two dissatisfied workers, but finally overcomes the many obstacles and has the work finished before the expiration of the contract. Jack and Dorothy are married.

When Shultz Led the Orchestra—Joker—June 26.—Shultz is made leader of the orchestra at the Gaiety. Things go along pretty well until Shultz climbs upon the stage to talk to one of the actresses. The manager raves, but is powerless, and there is a grand mix-up until wifie takes a hand.

Eleven to One—Laemmle—June 27.—Frank Crane is being tried on a charge of murder. There is strong circumstantial evidence against him. Thomas Haig, a member of the jury, holds out for acquittal against the other eleven. After a long debate, the jury reports a disagreement. The judge instructs them to find a verdict. Haig, not wishing to be detained another day, flips a coin to decide his verdict; it falls heads and on this he decides with the other members to declare the man guilty. His daughter returns home after a long absence and informs her father she is married. Her husband turns out to be Frank Crane. Haig then confesses all to the judge. The judge is about to issue warrants for the rest of the jury when the real murderer is apprehended.

Their Secret—(Two Reels)—Big U—Daisy marries Billy Lawrence, whom she meets while at boarding school. She keeps her marriage a secret from her mother. At the end of the school term, Daisy leaves her baby in charge of Mrs. Gray and returns to her home. Her husband secures a job on the farm owned by Daisy's mother, hoping to gradually win her friendship. When Mrs. Brooks receives a report from the school she demands her daughter to tell her why she was absent for three months. When Daisy tells her mother that she is married to Billy, she is ordered to leave home, but when the baby is brought and placed in the arms of its grandmother, she changes her mind and asks the young couple to stay.

Feature Programs

Kleine

The Spendthrift—(Six Reels)—George Kleine.—Irene Fenwick and Cyril Keightley featured in this production. Gretchen Jans brings up her two nieces, Clarice and Frances, with iron discipline. Frances rebels and elopes with Richard Ward, who indulges her in every luxury that money can purchase. Years later, Ward, on the verge of bankruptcy, discovers that Frances has borrowed a large sum of many from Thorne, a wealthy clubman, and compels her to telephone to the man to come to her apartment at once, his plan being to kill him when he appears. When he arrives, Ward exclaims, "Men like you are not worth killing," and departs, leaving the man with his wife. Frances leaves home that night and becomes a working girl, and Ward's younger brother, Monty, obtains a job in the West, takes his wife with him and makes good. Aunt Gretchen comes to Ward's aid, re-establishes his business, and later Thorne learns of Frances' whereabouts, telephones Ward's lawyer and induces Frances to return to her aunt, where a reconciliation takes place between husband and wife.

Metro

Fighting Bob—(Five Reels)—Rolfe—Orrin Johnson and Olive Wyndham are featured in this production, staged by John W. Noble under the direct supervision of Mr. Rolfe. "Fighting Bob" Rensaler, while at college, receives a letter from General Braga, a friend of his father's who is president of Lorento, in which he learns that his father has died and that Marshall Mendoza aspires to the presidency and intends to proclaim himself dictator with the assistance of Laredo, a revolutionary leader. Dulcina Garnia, Bob's sweetheart, beloved by Laredo, is promised in marriage to him by Manuel Garni, her guardian. When Laredo learns that Bob is coming with Cyrus Brown and Comin Hartley, two of his chums, to aid General Braga, he kidnaps Dulcina and confines her in a monastery. Bob comes to rescue the girl, which results in a thrilling battle between the forces of General Braga and those of Laredo, the latter being defeated. Bob is made president at the end of the revolution and marries Dulcina.

Mutual Masterpictures

Her Shattered Idol—(FOUR REELS)—MAJESTIC.—A rip-roaring comedy, featuring Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and Elmo Lincoln. Mae, in love with Robert, a puny lad, meets Ben, the village blacksmith, and falls for his big muscles. Robert's ring is returned and Mae simply dotes on Ben and his strong-arm stuff, but when a wise old uncle, to aid Bob, invites Ben to spend a week as Mae's guest, things work out as anticipated and Ben proves an awful bore, disgracing both himself and his hostess. After an exciting elopement, Bob is able to convince Mae that he, after all, is the man she really loves. See review on page 1055, this issue.

Up from the Depths—(FOUR REELS)—RELIANCE—A four-reel picture adapted from the story of Charles B. Loomis, featuring Courtenay Foote, Gladys Brockwell and Thomas Jefferson. The story concerns Revivalist Davids, who marries Daire, a country girl, and later deserts her for a new field in which to graft. The girl, after giving birth to a child, becomes a dance hall singer, and years later encounters her husband, the hypocritical evangelist, when he raids the Mozart dance hall, where she is employed. Learning that he has married again, the girl confronts him in his own home with their child, thus causing the death of his wife and humiliating him. On another raid the evangelist is shot, and ere he dies, honorably marries the girl he wronged. See review on page 1051. this issue.

North American

A Runaway Match—(CHAPTER NINE OF "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY")—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—Blair Stanley gives "the diamond from the sky" to Vivian Marston as an inducement to make her marry him. When Blair is hounded by others who seek "the diamond from the sky," Vivian disguises herself as a boy and the two start on their honeymoon. Luke Lovell turns against Hagar at the gypsy camp and Quabba, the hunchback, rolls a huge rock down the mountain side, starting an avalanche which wipes out the entire camp. Arthur Stanley, under the name of John Powell, far in the West, learns of a planned train robbery, rides his horse alongside the train to warn the trainmen and leaps aboard it. As his story is not believed, he is hurled from the train as the episode ends. See page 1055, this issue, for further review.

Paramount

Jim the Penman—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS—John Mason is featured in this detective story. Jim Ralston forges two letters that cause the estrangement of Nina and Louis, who are engaged. He weds Nina and becomes a professional forger, operating with Baron Hartfeld. After robbing Louis of $75,000, he becomes notorious as "Jim the Penman," though nobody suspects his identity. Captain Redwood, a society detective, undertakes to capture the forger. Ralston decides to give up his crooked life after he succeeds in stealing the famous Drelincourt necklace, but when his daughter becomes engaged to the head of the old family he tries to stop the theft. Hartfeld gets the necklace and refuses to give it up unless he receives $75,000. Redwood, who overhears the conversation, recovers the necklace himself. He takes $75,000 from Ralston as "hush money" and turns it over to Louis as "a permanent loan." Ralston's wife discovers the trick which has robbed her of the man she loved and he dies of heart failure, being found dead by the guests who troop out from his daughter's wedding breakfast. Redwood captures the baron as the story ends.

The Arab—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY—Edgar Selwyn, the author, is featured in the production as Jamil, the son of the great desert shiek, who falls in love with the daughter of a Christian missionary and rescues the girl, her father and the children of the mission school when a massacre of the Christians in Syria is planned. The Turkish governor of the Syrian town is also in love with Mary, the missionary's daughter, and is much enraged when he learns that Jamil has interfered with his plans. The governor persuades the desert tribe of which Jamil's father is shiek to ride down on the town after the massacre, so he can blame them for the killing and thus escape the vengeance of the American government. The old shiek agrees to the plan, provided the governor will find Jamil and send him back to the desert, but when Jamil learns the motive of the governor's interest, he becomes a defender of the Christians on account of his love for Mary.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 47—PATHE—JUNE 12.—Great railway disaster at Gretna Green, England, 200 lives lost; cartoon; Pathe's American fashions; war pictures showing the Russians at the front; the Czar with the Grand Duke Nicholas, six feet seven inches tall, reviews the troops at the Austrian front; the Czar and the Archbishop of Poland walk over the ruins of a Polish village; at Washington, D. C., William Jennings Bryan resigns the secretaryship of state; the schooner George B. Cluett leaves New York, laden with fuel and provisions, for the frozen Arctic, in search of the McMillan polar expedition; thousands of children of Brooklyn, N. Y., celebrate the anniversary of the founding of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union.

The Lost Torpedo—(EPISODE ONE, "THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE)—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—This is the beginning of the new Pathe serial which features Lionel Barrymore in the role of the hero, Marcius del Mar, secret service agent of the American government. Del Mar calls on Elaine to learn what she knows of Kennedy and his torpedo invention, but in her home is overcome by a deadly gas from a bullet invented and fired by a mysterious old gentleman with gray whiskers, whose future relation to the story has not yet been disclosed. The old gentleman, earlier in the story, visits Del Mar's rooms in a New York hotel and there secures a document that he is seeking and successfully gets away with it, after overpowering Del Mar's servant. See review page 1058, this issue.

For the Commonwealth—(THREE REELS)—PATHE.—Ninth episode in the "Who Pays?" series, featuring Ruth Roland and Henry King. Ellis Mason, assistant to District Attorney Bell, raids a certain dive during Bell's absence. This place was run under the secret protection of the district attorney. Mason, for his fearlessness, is nominated for the office of district attorney by the Commonwealth Club. Bell and the men who own the dive pay Clarice Adair, a dancing girl, to lure Mason to her room. The girl accuses him of assaulting her and the case is tried in court. As a result of this, Mason's candidacy is discredited and the girl he loves is turned against him. T. C. K.

Woman and War—(THREE REELS)—PATHE.—The story of a woman who marries an officer in the army of a foreign country. Years later their respective countries go to war. Because of her husband's victory over her native land, she leaves him and returns to her former home. A year later they are brought together again by the serious illness of their child, and their political differences are forgotten. T. C. K.

The Heart That Knew—(THREE REELS)—PATHE.—A young girl is left a fortune by her uncle. In the event of her death, the will states, the money is to go to the nephew, her cousin. The cousin's lawyer is instructed by him to try to get her out of the way. The lawyer's opportunity comes when he accompanies the girl and her lover on a walking trip. He removes the danger sign from an unsafe bridge. The girl walks out on the bridge, it gives way and she falls down the steep embankment. She is rescued by a gypsy and taken to his camp. The lawyer believes the girl dead and accuses her lover of the crime and has him imprisoned. The girl escapes from the gypsy camp, and when the lawyer is confronted by her he breaks down and confesses. Her lover, who is about to be executed for the crime, is released. T. C. K.

Whiffles' Busted Alibi—PATHE.—Whiffles assumes the role of hairdresser to the woman he thinks so charming. He dresses her hair, but she resents his attentions and puts him out. He attends a reception with his wife and they meet the woman there. She tells his wife that he is the man she had to put out of her house. Whiffles has an alibi and his wife believes him—until her missing combs, brushes and other toilet articles are found in his handbag. On the same reel with:

Intimate Study of Birds.—Clearly photographed study of birds in their native haunts. T. C. K.

Universal Special

The Black Box—(FIFTEENTH EPISODE OF UNIVERSAL'S SERIAL, "THE BLACK BOX") (TWO REELS)—UNIVERSAL.—The mystery of the black boxes is at last cleared up. Craig is exonerated from the crimes committed, and Professor Ashleigh is found to be guilty. This episode ends with Laura saying "Yes" to the inspector's proposal and Leonora and Quest leaving for the minister's to be married. For further review, see page 1057, this issue. J. C. G.
